I go back to the case of Gary Slessor, Mr. Speaker—Gary Slessor, who was told to go to work in an area where he did not want to go; who as a result of going into this area passed out and who fortunately was picked up out of the water by a couple of fellow employees; who was faced with this sort of sickness, this same gas condition. I ask the Minister, would it be possible—a very simple request, Mr. Speaker, by the union—that if the men feel there is too much gas in a specific area, that they ask that a gas test be taken. A gas test is a very simple thing, Mr. Speaker; they have a unit and they take ten little whiffs of air with it and if the gas in the tube turns white it means that the level is not a safe level. This can be taken in front of the men very quickly.

If the concern shown by the Minister of Health was that genuine, what would be wrong with saying, "All right gentlemen, you have the right to demand that a gas test be taken if you feel there is too much gas in this specific area." That would not be asking too much of this government. It would not rectify the gas situation, Mr. Speaker, but it would at least protect the men from having to work in an area where the gas concentration was not healthy.

The hon. members heard the answer we got the other day—they were looking into the matter. When you get recordings of 300 parts per million instead of five, Mr. Speaker, I do not think much research has to be done. This whole thing has been gone through again and again, and 25 years of it has gone on and we cannot even get them to consent to this much.

Mr. Speaker, I have to compliment Inco and Falconbridge; they are not pikers when it comes to pollution, they are not satisfied with just air and soil pollution. They want to ensure that they are polluting the water in every stream in the Sudbury area; and, Mr. Speaker, I might say that this is not my finding but it is the finding of the Ontario Water Resources Commission in its report which was just tabled recently on the work that it did in June, July and August of 1967. Mr. Speaker, there is a tabulation of the places under the jurisdiction of the International Nickel Company, and I am quoting from the document:

From the table, and as discussed in the body of this report, those industrial operations which were capable of causing severe water impairment or contamination in the receiving streams were:

1. The pyrrhotite storage pond in Copper Cliff;
2. The Copper Cliff smelter;
3. The Stobie section of the Froid-Stobie mine;
4. The Murray mine;
5. The Totten mine;
6. The Crean Hill mine.

Those complexes requiring close surveillance by frequent sampling, or which required some improvements in the waste handling procedures, were:

1. The Garson;
2. The North mine;
3. The Creighton mine and mill;
4. The Copper refining division;
5. The effluent from the P and Q tailing disposal area in Copper Cliff;
6. The iron ore plant cooling pond overflow to Kelly Lake.

The operations not seriously impairing the receiving watercourses, as a result of the liquid waste effluents discharged, were:

1. The Levack mine;
2. The Froid section;
3. The Coniston smelter;
4. The MacLennan mine.

As a result of a trip that we made to the MacLennan mine area with two gentlemen from the Ontario Water Resources Commission, there is some reluctance now on the part of the commission to admit that maybe the MacLennan mine is not doing a good deal more than had been first anticipated, because there is not even any aquatic life at all, Mr. Speaker, in either one of these creeks; there is not even a bottom!

As I say, they are not pikers you know, they are not satisfied with soil and air, they want to get the whole bit. Mr. Speaker, let us just see what Inco is doing. I am going to relate these, Mr. Speaker, under four headings: The name of the area, the treatment provided, the receiving stream, and the comments of the Ontario Water Resources Commission as to what should be done, or how.

In the first one the name of the installation is Totten mine; treatment provided, very small settling pit; receiving stream marshy area to Victoria Creek; comments, improvement treatment required.

I must comment before I go on, Mr. Speaker, that the Ontario Water Resources Commission did a very good job. It is a case, of course, of the government moving these people, because if it does not, we have a committee in Sudbury that is going to.

Levack mine and concentrator; treatment provided, large settling and impoundment area; receiving stream, Grassy Creek to Moose Creek; OWRC comments, the mine water combined with mill tailings for settling in the tailings impoundment area; high winds affected the quality of the decant.

The Crean Mill mine; treatment provided, settling; receiving stream, small tributary of the Vermilion River; comments, the high nickel concentration should be reduced.

Garson mine; settling; receiving stream is Junction Creek; settling should be provided on a continuous basis.

Kirkwood mine; waste treatment facility under development.

Frood-Stobie mine; receiving stream is Junction Creek west branch; lime neutralization should be continued on a permanent basis.

Stobie section, treatment provided, settling; receiving stream is Junction Creek west branch; comments, neutralization and removal of nickel required.

Little Stobie mine; waste treatment alternatives under study.

Frood-Stobie concentrator; tailings were to be impounded in the central tailings area, an emergency tailing area on Nolin Creek was also to be used; receiving stream, ultimately Copper Cliff area from Nolin Creek during start-up and emergencies; comments, close surveillance of Nolin Creek and the discharge to Nolin Creek is required.

Next installation Murray mine; treatment, settling; receiving body, Nolin Creek—you notice these creeks really get it from both barrels—comments, neutralization and nickel removal facilities required.

Copper Cliff, north portion; underground neutralization and settling proposed; the receiving body—and these next 12, Mr. Speaker, are very interesting because the same creek receives effluent from the 12 different plants—the receiving body for Copper Cliff mine is Copper Cliff Creek; the nickel concentration should be reduced.

Copper Cliff concentrator; settling and impounding is the treatment. The receiving body is Copper Cliff Creek; comments—nothing.

Copper Cliff smelter; segregation and settling; receiving stream, Copper Cliff Creek; a larger clarifier was to be installed; the waste was very objectionable, containing high concentrations of suspended solids, copper and nickel and having a low PH value.

Copper Cliff refining division; the receiving body is Copper Cliff Creek; treatment provided, none; comments, the waste was of fair quality.

The storm sewer; treatment provided, none; Copper Cliff Creek was the receiving body; the copper content was high on the one grab sample, the PH was approaching low values.

Acid plant pond overflow; treatment, neutralization; receiving body, Copper Cliff Creek.

It is all leading to something I can assure the hon. Minister; I am leading up to something.

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister of Correctional Services): No, I was just—

Mr. Martel: I am not just reading for the sake—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The hon. member has me confused. I do not know which creek he is up.

Mr. Martel: I am up Copper Cliff at the present time.

Mr. W. G. Pitman (Peterborough): It is the government that are up this creek.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): At least he knows what creek he is up.

Mr. Martel: On the nickel content in this creek the comment was "high", Mr. Speaker.

Silver refinery; the receiving body is Copper Cliff Creek; the PH was very low during one sampling period and should be maintained at a higher level.

As fine a document as this is, the one word in here that disturbs me—disturbs me greatly—is not "must"; it is always "should". It is always "should" and this disturbs me.

Iron ore recovery plant; treatment provided, settling and impoundment in tailing area; receiving body, Copper Cliff Creek; the waste was of fair quality.

The pyrrhotite storage pond overflow; receiving body Copper Cliff Creek—

By the way, Mr. Speaker, Copper Cliff Creek is really what it says it is, a creek about 10 feet wide, maybe 15, and it is receiving all of this stuff so generously from the International Nickel Co.

Copper Cliff Creek pyrrhotite plant; this waste was of extremely poor quality.

The cooling water reservoir—well this is relatively unimportant.

The "P" and "Q" tailings impoundment area decant; treatment provided, none, receiving body, Copper Cliff Creek; oxidation of the sulphides in the waste to acid sulphates may be occurring after discharge to the receiving stream.

Mr. Speaker, there are six more areas of Copper Cliff concentration, and to cut it down I am just going to read the comments for each one. The comments: The water in Copper Cliff Creek was of very poor quality; the outflow from Kelly Lake was also of poor quality; sufficient pumping capacity to pump all wastes to the tailings disposal area should be provided; not must, should—the water leaving Mud Lake contained high concentrations of nickel; there may be a phenol pollution problem in Bowlands Bay—one I suggested earlier—investigations must be continued; and the last one, Coniston smelter, the waste was of fair quality, although the nickel concentration exceeded OWRC objectives.

Now, it really bothers me that we would allow one company to do this sort of thing. It is interesting, Mr. Speaker, that, in face of the study that was being done of International Nickel, as late as two months ago they started to dump in the Moose River—in the face of a study being done! I am told, and I have it written, that they are dumping directly into the Moose River at the present time.

How flagrant can you get? To them, the government does not exist! When does it stop?

Mr. J. W. Snow (Halton East): They pay taxes to it.

Mr. Martel: They do not even pay that. They do not even pay that.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Martel: Mr. Speaker, I want to read the summary; and as I say the job done by OWRC here is commendable. The one word throughout upsets me, and I am hoping that maybe we can get that word changed from "should" to "must".

Mr. W. Ferrier (Cochrane South): The hon. member for Wellington-Dufferin will see to that.

Mr. J. Root (Wellington-Dufferin): Mr. Speaker, would the member let me ask a question?

He realizes that many of these mines were started many years ago? There are two ways of dealing with the problem. You could lead people or you could drive them. Is he suggesting that we should get an injunction and close these mines down?

Mr. MacDonald: Well that is the old, old gag!

An hon. member: It may be old, but it is the truth.

Mr. Root: Mr. Speaker, I was asking a question of the member for Sudbury East before I was rudely interrupted by the member for York South.

We have a problem in the Sudbury area that is related not only to mining but to sanitary wastes. Hon. members are probably aware that the city of Sudbury is the dirtiest or most polluted city in Ontario; nearly 90,000 people pour raw sewage into the lake.

Mr. Speaker: This speech is being made by the member for Sudbury East, not by the member for the resources commission. If he has a question I will be glad to have him place it. If he has not, then he will make his speech at the appropriate time.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: It was an improvement though, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Root: Mr. Speaker, the question I wanted to ask is: Does the member want us to give mandatory orders to the mines and to the city or to accept a staged programme where we are gradually bringing this problem under control?

Mr. Martel: Mr. Speaker, I do not mind something staged for the city of Sudbury, but this company made $104 million clear profit in the first nine months of this year. That is $104 million in the first nine months!

Since 1955, when I worked at International Nickel, those earnings have never been under $86 million a year. It is time that we held the big stick, and that the rules of our tradition—

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Martel: Who is going to do it? They are not investing in the Sudbury area with the prospect of closing down tomorrow. And the profits they are making certainly justify forcing them to clean up and clean up immediately.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Martel: Mr. Speaker, have you ever heard anything so ludicrous!

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Martel: Well, Mr. Speaker, I could adjourn the debate but I am not finished, because I am going to be on in the 1969—

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Martel: You think I could adjourn it now and come back? You think the House leader would allow that?

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Martel: Well Mr. Speaker, in summary—and as I say I want to compliment OWRC for the fine job that they did in drawing this report together—the result of the industrial waste survey conducted at International Nickel Co. of Canada Ltd. in the Sudbury area reveals a number of industrial waste effluents that were unsatisfactory for discharge into natural water courses with respect to one or more constituents. In general, the characteristic of most importance was the low PH of many of the discharges. The acidity of these discharges was unusually high and indicated very little buffering action and the presence of mineral acids. This problem is not unique in the Sudbury area and may be attributable to the oxidation of the salt-soluble source compound. I am going to be a little generous and not read all that, just what—

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Martel: The last step in the waste control programme of the International Nickel Co. Ltd. would appear to be the company-wide adoption of a neutralized system at those locations requiring treatment. "Should" be, "must" be!

Not only would this form of treatment raise the PH to a more satisfactory level, but it would also be designed to precipitate all the metal values for subsequent removal from the waste stream.

However, it is emphasized that waste having objectionable characteristics should not be allowed to enter a water course at any time, particularly from new developments. I concur with this, but I say the old developments have to be cleaned up as well.

As I said, the one statement that does disturb me, and I want to read it into the records, is the company should also take all reasonable steps to minimize the effects of the material on the quality of water. And to that I take great exception, I cannot apply the word "must". And I do not think this government can afford to put the word "should" in there any longer.

In the end, Mr. Speaker, it is the people of Ontario who are going to pay for this. It is not going to be the International Nickel Co. It is going to be the taxpayers.

I want to go on the second part and I drew your attention to the fact that there are 12 areas of industrialization in the Copper Cliff complex that pollute Copper Cliff Creek. I have over the last year, on a considerable number of occasions, raised the fog condition. Of course, this is a joke to some people, but it is not to people that are getting killed. It is my people; 11 of them in eight years in 168 accidents. Maybe it does not matter to you people but it does to me.

We have been successful at last in getting a committee together made up the Ontario Water Resources Commission, a representative of International Nickel, a representative of the town of Copper Cliff and, of course, a representative from the Sudbury Conservation Authority.

Finally, after meeting, I was successful in getting a candidate on—and for a very good reason. I knew that if I did not get somebody on that committee who is going to have a little backbone, Inco would snow job this thing so bad it would not even be funny.

This is what, in the first two meetings, they have already attempted to do. At the meeting that we had this summer at the Ontario Water Resources Commission office it was decided that certain things were impractical. The Department of Highways had done the best they could do, and this was agreed by all. Then the idea of trying to lift the fog was eliminated. They came up with a new thing in Sudbury. A warning system—you know you get to ring a buzzer—and that will really solve the problem.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Martel: We are going to give the hon. member the job. He can be the official button pusher when they have fog.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Martel: I asked the Minister of Energy and Resources Management (Mr. Simonett) yesterday if we could get the dates on which International Nickel cleans out its waters. We never could figure out why it is polluted.

We did not have fog regularly; there is something that causes fog at certain times. We do not know what it is. But International Nickel dumps its water every so often, and the water is 212 degrees. Mr. Speaker, that is boiling water dumped into this 30 degrees stream. And when Mr. Falkowski asked International Nickel to provide them with a date on which they had cleaned the boilers in the last number of years—to see if we could relate the fog condition which exists on those days to the fact that the water was being dumped from the boilers—the International Nickel reply was, "That is confidential information".

Well, Mr. Speaker, I worked for the railroad and we dumped boilers and there was nothing confidential about it. What is confidential about the days you are going to have your boilers cleaned?

This is confidential because, Mr. Speaker—

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Martel: Let's not talk about something else I am talking about boilers.

Mr. Speaker, as sure as I am standing here, the day on which this company dumps those boilers—if we can get that information—we will find out that it is the same day that we have fog on the Copper Cliff highway. And that is only part of it, Mr. Speaker.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Martel: We are trying to build it up; hon. members opposite are trying to tear it down.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Martel: Mr. Speaker, there is one other interesting sidelight; no one ever thought about what might happen in this.

I was talking to an elderly gentleman not long ago, his name is Mr. John E. Nelson, and he tells me that when he was a boy, 12, 13 or 14 years old when he used to skate—you recall the article states that the creek does not freeze—but he used to skate from Copper Cliff down to Kelly Lake on the creek.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Martel: If hon. members do not mind, it is not an excuse for—

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Martel: Mr. Speaker, I really sympathize with you.

Mr. John Nelson—and I want this on the record—lived in the area all his life. He was born in Copper Cliff on Balsame Street. When he was 10, 11, 12 or 13 years old, back in 1913 to 1915, he skated on Copper Cliff creek, from Copper Cliff to Kelly Lake during the winter months. Mr. Nelson states that all the children did this because it was fun.

About 1929, when Inco built a big concentrator, he said, a lot of water was dumped into that creek and ever since that time it has not been used for skating.

Up until recently there was no fog; until Copper Cliff installed a sewage disposal plant—and that's 1959 I believe, 1958-59 that it went into effect—and we have been suffering from the fog condition since about 1960.

So, Mr. Speaker, the argument by the International Nickel Company that it is atmospheric conditions that cause this—well, why did the atmospheric conditions, on a certain given day, only start in 1960?

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Martel: Why does the hon. member not be a little sensible.

Mr. Speaker: Order, order!

Perhaps the hon. member would find a suitable place now in his address to move the adjournment.

Mr. Martel: Yes, I will just finish this section of about half a page, Mr. Speaker.

So you see, the water did freeze in the past, but dumping of water and pollutants into the creek has caused it to remain open year round. The fog is Inco's problem, even if it costs $1 million, and that is the answer. If it costs $1 million—their estimates have run this high to run a culvert over that creek—then let it cost International Nickel $1 million to culvert over the creek.

If they do not want to do that then let them clean up the pollution, but let us get rid of the problem once and for all.

I want to save the tax dollars—I direct this to the Minister of Revenue—and not one cent of expense for this should be charged to this province or the citizens of Ontario.

Hon. Mr. White: Listen now, is the hon. member not a little ashamed that he is knocking everything in northern Ontario?

Mr. Martel: Mr. Speaker, I am not finished; oh, I am not finished, Mr. Speaker. I might advise the Minister of Revenue I am not nearly finished!

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Martel moves the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. M. B. Dymond (Minister of Health): Mr. Speaker, in moving the adjournment of the House in the Prime Minister's absence, I am quite certain he would have me express to you, sir, and through you to the hon. members of this House, warmest greetings for the holiday season. I hope that when they return they will be in fine fettle.

Hon. Mr. Dymond moves the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Speaker: Before I declare the House adjourned, may I also, on behalf of the chairman of the committee of the whole House and myself, thank the members for a great deal of assistance, even at difficult times this session, and wish you and yours a happy Christmas-tide, a safe and prosperous New Year and a return reinvigorated on February 4.

The House stands adjourned until 2.30 o'clock, Tuesday, February 4 next, 1969.

The House adjourned at 1.00 o'clock, p.m.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 4, 1969

The House met at 2:30 o'clock, p.m.

Prayers.

Mr. Speaker: Our visitors today, in the east gallery, are students from Highland Heights Public School in Agincourt and Saltfleet District High School in Stoney Creek; and in the west gallery from Dalewood Senior Public School in St. Catharines.

Petitions.

Presenting reports.

Hon. R. S. Welch (Provincial Secretary): Mr. Speaker, I beg leave to present to the House the following reports: First, the public accounts of the province of Ontario for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1968; second, the Provincial Auditor's report of the province of Ontario 1967-68; third, the annual report of the Minister of Agriculture and Food (Mr. Stewart) on the Ontario Telephone Services Commission, 1967; fourth, the annual report of the Ontario Food Terminal Board for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1968; and fifth, the annual report for 1967 of municipal statistics of The Department of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): That will put the Minister back in first place—

Mr. Speaker: Motions.

Introduction of bills.

THE SECURITIES ACT, 1966

Mr. M. Shulman (High Park) moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend The Securities Act, 1966.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to require that shareholders of public corporations be notified of material changes in corporate affairs that may affect the value of their shares and that such notification be made within ten days of the beginning of the month following that in which such change occurred.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, on this my first opportunity in the resumption of the session I would like to extend to everyone a warm welcome back. I can see from the colour of faces that some people have had southern adventures since we last met; and some of us are carrying marks of other adventures we had during the Christmas break.

I was very interested to see, Mr. Speaker, when I looked at the list of questions today, that while the number has not been reduced, the hon. member for Grey-Bruce (Mr. Sargent) did not have any on the order paper. I was rather surprised to see him in the House when there were no questions from him.

However, no doubt he will rectify this omission as the days of this session go on.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Before the recess, Mr. Speaker, questions were asked of the government on several occasions as to what we might be going to do in regard to the problem of student unemployment. To forestall questions that will come in the future, I might just mention briefly that we have established a Cabinet committee to deal with this problem and we have done a good deal of work, since I last answered questions in the House.

It is a problem of growing magnitude for several reasons. One, the actual number of young people in our educational institutions is increasing; and two, the rate of retention in our educational institutions is increasing as well. Formerly the question of student employment was a benefit to those who wanted particular employees during the holiday season and it also gave our young people a chance to help finance their own education.

We are very anxious, as a government, to ensure that our young people, particularly in the post-secondary area, have opportunities for employment in order that they may participate in the financing of their own education; because as a government we do not support the principle of free education for everyone right through the educational system.

I would say to you that we have had consultations with many private groups in order that we may, in the first place, develop a consciousness of the problem among those who are in a position to employ students. We have had very close consultation with the federal government, which operates the manpower offices across the province. In due course we will be able to lay before this Legislature—prior to the time when these young people will be looking for work—a concrete plan to see if we cannot increase the number of employment opportunities.

In examining the government position as an employer, we do not think it is proper or wise that we should enter into any make work programmes; in other words just create jobs for the sake of having jobs. On the other hand, we have gone through every department to make sure that where there is an opportunity for young people to have a meaningful job—meaningful to them and to those for whom they work—we will as an organization employ as many as we can.

We think the other approach that might very well be taken is that if we can make the general public fully aware of the social implications of the problem then we can involve a number of employers. It may not be a great deal in terms of numbers for individual firms, but if you can get 10,000 employers to perhaps employ two people in the summer, you can go a long way to solving the problem.

I think the real answer to it will lie in creating among those who are employers an awareness of the fact that this problem is not going to just go away taking into account the educational institutions that we are creating as part of our system. Indeed the problem will not only not go away, but it will intensify in the years that lie ahead. Therefore we must take concrete steps.

As I say, I hope we will be able to impress upon those who have the means and the facilities to employ students, the seriousness and the need so that before the summer recess from school we will be able to lay before this House a more detailed programme than I am able to give this afternoon. But I want members to know that we are working on it very vigorously.

Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day I would like to table answers to questions 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 9, 10, 11 and 12 standing on the order paper. (See appendix, page 1005).

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker on a point of clarification as far as the Prime Minister's statement is concerned, I wonder if he can explain to the House whether the administration is looking forward to providing an agency to put these young people in touch with employers or whether they are looking forward simply to an education programme to enlarge the field of employment.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, the agency with which we are co-operating is the Canada manpower organization which has offices right across Ontario and which listed a great many students last year. There is no point in our attempting to set up an arrangement which duplicates that. These offices are strategically located across the province and we feel that by working in conjunction with them—and we have already had discussions with them—we can use their services for this purpose.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, I have two questions for the Prime Minister:

One—Has Ontario agreed to the revised agenda for the federal-provincial conference next week?

Two—Which probably is related to the first—will the Premier explain why he supports a move by western Premiers to have the constitutionality of the federal Official Languages Act reviewed by the Supreme Court of Canada?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, in answer to the first question: Yes, we have agreed to the agenda.

The Prime Minister of Canada wired me yesterday asking if it would be agreeable if he were to table the correspondence in the House of Commons, which I assume he has done this afternoon; and I will table copies of our correspondence dealing with the agenda here in order that this may be available for anyone who wishes to examine it. But in answer to your question we have approved the agenda.

I would simply say this, that I do not think our approval of the agenda necessarily constituted a hard and fast agreement as to the order in which the items in the agenda are listed. It is a rather full agenda, and like anything else it has to have a beginning. We made some suggestions which were automatically put on the bottom of the agenda as originally published, so that I do not think our approval of the agenda necessarily indicated that we agreed the items on the agenda would be taken in the order in which they appear.

We have no strong feeling about this. Probably the conference itself would make that decision when it convenes.

In answer to the second question concerning my support of a move by western Premiers. I got a transcript—this came out of a press conference I had yesterday, all of which was recorded—I got a transcript of what I in fact said.

It was not my intent to say that I supported the position of the western Premiers. As far as this government is concerned we do not think it would be necessary to challenge the constitutionality of this particular bill. On the other hand, what I did say was that if there is doubt in anyone's mind, in my personal opinion it should be resolved. In other words if there is a difference in legal opinion as to whether the bill is constitutional, it is such an important bill and it is going to have such an effect on this country, that in my humble opinion this matter should be settled so that we proceed on the basis that it is a piece of legislation that is in all respects constitutional.

I did say, and perhaps this is where the misunderstanding came in at the press conference, I said if the bill were challenged Ontario would, of course, be represented before the Supreme Court when the Supreme Court dealt with the bill. I did not say that we supported their position. I assure the House that as a government we would not institute a challenge to the bill on the basis of its constitutionality.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, if the Prime Minister would permit a supplementary question, I wonder if he has had advice from his own law officers casting some doubt on the constitutionality, and if there is going to be a review by the Supreme Court, would he have a participating brief in the review?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: It has been indicated to me that there might possibly be some doubt that could be raised. Now I believe—

Mr. Nixon: This is the Premier's own advice?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Yes. But the advice that I get from our own people is they do not think it is a strong ground. Now it seems to me, and I have read some discussion in the press, I believe Mr. Justice Thorson at some stage said that he thought it was unconstitutional—

Mr. E. W. Sopha (Sudbury): Not much authority!

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Well that is the opinion of the hon. member; that is his opinion of the judges of our courts.

Mr. Sopha: That is the Exchequer Court.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Is that not a court of Canada? In any event, I am not here to discuss the capabilities of Mr. Justice Thorson. I simply say that Mr. Justice Thorson expressed an opinion with which the hon. member for Sudbury does not agree, and that of course is his privilege.

I understand that the federal government has been advised that it is constitutional. I do not know what advice the western Premiers have had.

Mr. Sopha: Would the Premier's people present briefs?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: I am inclined to doubt that we would. I am quite certain if it does come before the Supreme Court this government will be represented there, but we will not necessarily take a position one way or the other.

This is our position, for whatever it may be worth. But my point is simply that if there is doubt and if there are opinions honestly and truly held by lawyers that there is some possibility that it is not constitutional, it is a very fundamental matter to our country and I would hate to see the whole thing started out on a base that could be considered by some people to be not constitutionally sound.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the hon. Minister of Energy and Resources Management, which I will ask in a moment after I question the Attorney General.

Has the Attorney General investigated the case of Michael Gordon Finnis with a view to providing assistance more humane than the due processes of the law in this case?

Hon. A. A. Wishart (Attorney General): Mr. Speaker, I received a very full report on this case from the Crown attorney for Metropolitan Toronto and I have perused the report which I have before me; I am entirely familiar with the circumstances.

I would like to point out, Mr. Speaker, at the outset, that a great deal of the delay, if it may be called delay, was due to our concern—concern of the Crown attorney, the concern of the court and the concern of counsel for the accused, about the condition of this man. It was our initiative actually which led, I think, to this matter being delayed so he might have a full psychiatric examination.

It has been noted in the press that three months of the delay were with the full agreement of the individual concerned and of his counsel, because that period was necessary to carry out the necessary psychiatric examinations. Those psychiatric examinations were directed by the court.

Upon the return of the accused man to the court in the late summer of last year, arrangements were made for the preliminary inquiry which was held on September 19, after which the accused was committed for trial. There was no further communication with the accused's counsel until the end of November of last year, and then the trial could not be arranged because of the grand jury situation—it was necessary to have the matter considered by the grand jury—in the matter of the indictment.

When the true bill was returned, counsel for the Crown suggested to counsel for the accused that the Crown would accept a plea of guilty to be included with the offence of theft. At that time counsel for the accused indicated that he intended to fight the case, or defend the case on its merits, and possibly was considering a plea of insanity.

Mr. Nixon: Was that on the charge of robbery or theft?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: They would accept a plea on a charge of theft, counsel for the Crown suggested the acceptance of a plea on theft. Counsel for the accused indicated that he intended to defend the charge on its merits and would possibly consider a plea of insanity.

It was pointed out by the Crown—and I make this point—that such a plea of insanity, if accepted, would result in this man probably being incarcerated in an institution such as the hospital at Penetanguishene for a long period of time.

When the man came to trial eventually, the plea of guilty on theft was accepted.

Mr. Speaker, having reviewed the matter to this extent it is my view that the matter did proceed with full and complete consideration of what was best for the accused; I would say having his best interest, considered by the court, by Crown counsel and by his own counsel.

As to the matter of bail, there was no application made by his counsel for reduction in the amount of the bail which was fixed on the original application. I would suggest that bail in the amount of $1,000 was a reasonable, usual amount of bail for a charge of this kind. No application was ever made to have it reduced. Had that been done I am sure it would have met with full consideration. It was never suggested that it be reduced.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I would like to say that sentence is to be passed in a few days' time. I think it will be our obligation—the obligation of all concerned—to determine the type of institution for this man who has to undergo psychiatric examination. It is a rather difficult complicated case, but in view of the circumstances there has not been undue delay.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, if I might put forward a supplementary question, and we can perhaps pursue this on another occasion—surely the Minister cannot agree that in the circumstances of this case, as they have been divulged, where the unfortunate chap with the mental age of seven or eight is the accomplice of a child in a stick up, and is so unsensible as to try a hold up with a toy pistol, that the humane approach has been to maintain the $1,000 bail and keep him locked up on charge for that period of time? I am talking about a humane approach. Surely our system could have done better under the circumstances?

It may well be when the judge brings down his findings and his verdict, that society, or some other department of government, will accept this problem; but I feel that The Attorney General's Department has been remiss in this, that they are treating it just the same as any other case.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: To the question, Mr. Speaker, I think—and this is my private opinion—I would perhaps partly agree with the hon. member, that in the particular circumstances of this case something might have been done in the matter of bail to let this man have some sort of freedom, perhaps in an institution so a psychiatric examination might have been continued. But I would point out on the matter of the delay that after the true bill was found, some time at the end of last year, it was not possible, largely through the inability of his counsel to find a new date, to fix a trial date for him until January 27 of this year.

Mr. Nixon: So his counsel was to blame!

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Well his counsel had a very full docket of cases on his hands and could not find a suitable open date. Furthermore, I think it is fair to say, and I did not say this in my first reply, that on January 27 this same defence counsel was speaking to and suggesting a further delay, to which Crown counsel strenuously objected.

Mr. Nixon: While this gentleman sat in jail!

Hon. Mr. Wishart: It was Crown counsel who insisted that this matter get on for trial.

Now I am prepared to say that, perhaps to agree, to some extent, something might have been done having regard to the circumstances in which the man was kept. But since he had eminent counsel; one would have thought he might have made an application for reduction in bail or tried some other means. That was not done.

Mr. Nixon: Last question, Mr. Speaker, to the Minister of Energy and Resources Management: Does the system of rotated work stoppages by the Hydro employees seriously threaten the supply of energy, in view of the fact that the unions have emergency crews available?

Hon. J. R. Simonett (Minister of Energy and Resources Management): Mr. Speaker, I will have to take the hon. member's question as notice. I will try to give him an answer in the morning.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, the Ontario Hydro has been making a number of statements with regard to this; surely the hon. Minister is aware of the facts of the case, or should be.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of the facts. I have some statements from both sides.

I might say that I was unable to get any of the officials after I received the question, so I would like to get it from the officials of the Ontario Hydro.

Mr. Nixon: Okay!

Mr. Singer: The lights could be going to go out and this Minister still does not know about it.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Mr. Speaker, I have two questions for the Prime Minister.

The first one: When did the province of Ontario sign a new tax rental agreement with the federal government, what period does it cover and how do its terms differ from the agreement in effect for the past two years?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, dealing with tax rentals per se, the first tax rental agreement was signed, I believe, in 1941, as a wartime measure. It lasted until 1956; payments on that tax rental agreement were on a per capita basis. That is where the provinces first lost control of their share of the field of direct taxation.

Then between 1957 and 1961 there was a second stage of this operation. It is not known as tax rental agreements, they are called the federal-provincial tax sharing arrangements. By the end of that agreement we were receiving an abatement of 13 percentage points. This is where the abatement approach began and by 1961 we were receiving abatement of 13 percentage points of the personal income tax and we passed legislation here to provide for a tax collection arrangement—the hon. member is, I presume, referring to the whole total of all these matters—which is the third phase.

The 13 percentage points of the personal income tax went on until 1961. Then we negotiated a five-year—well we did not negotiate, we were handed—a five-year tax sharing arrangement which covered the period 1962 to 1967. It was varied during the course of its operation, but by 1967 it had reached an abatement of 28 percentage points of the personal income tax.

In 1967 the arrangement was projected for two years only, if members will recall, in order that we could get the results of that ill-fated organization called the tax structure committee, which results were completely ignored by the federal government in the arrangements we made. So we undertook an extension for two years, which is to 1969.

Arrangements have not been changed since that time, so we are working under that latter arrangement now. We have no indication when or how we will get down to negotiate after this two-year period is complete which will be in this year, 1969. At the present time we have 28 percentage points of personal income tax being abated, and I believe 11 percentage points of corporation tax. Then of course, also in the agreement are all the arrangements for the federal government to collect those taxes and remit to us.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, do I understand the Prime Minister correctly, that the tax rental, sharing, collection agreement—whatever you want to call it—that has been in effect for the last two years is still in effect, or has a new one been negotiated in the very recent past?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: There has been a tax collection agreement to provide for the mechanics of tax collection, but on that portion of the agreement itself under which abatement figures are set up, we are still continuing with the arrangement that we established for a two-year period.

Mr. MacDonald: There is no change?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: No.

Mr. MacDonald: My second question to the Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker, is a three part question.

Is it correct that elevator operators and telephone switchboard operators were locked out from the Hydro head office, 620 University Avenue, this morning? Second, does this action by Hydro management represent government policy in the present labour dispute? Third, if not, what steps will the Prime Minister take to prevent similar provocative action by Hydro management?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, this is a new type of strike that is being conducted by the employees of Ontario Hydro. What happened in this instance was certain personnel that the member mentioned—I believe elevator operators and telephone switchboard operators—went on strike for one day and so Hydro, in order to maintain its service, replaced them. Then three hours before the next day was due to commence these people—the strikers—reappeared and said: “We want to work today.”

This is the rotating strike the union has developed to meet this situation.

Well of course Hydro was left with the employees that they had hired for the previous day when the strikers were not there and, given only three hours’ notice, they left the new people whom they had hired on the job. As far as I can understand, the other employees will come back when the replacements’ period of employment comes to an end, which I assume will probably be tomorrow.

That is in effect what happened. If the hon. member can call that a lock-out of the employees who went on strike one day and then wanted to come off strike and back to work the following day, I do not think the term “lock-out” is exactly correct.

The second question: “Does this action by Hydro management represent government policy in the present labour dispute?” I can only say, Mr. Speaker, that government policy in labour disputes, unless the law is broken, allows the two parties to work out their own arrangements—it is their dispute, they do not want the government to interfere and we do not want to interfere, so there is no question of government policy being involved in this; it is a question of the employer and employee dealing with the situation in which they find themselves in industrial disputes.

Thirdly, “what steps will the Prime Minister take to prevent similar provocative action by Hydro management?” Well, I can only say that we do not intend to interfere in this dispute unless and until the public interest is affected, and we hope that it will not be affected and that the usual processes of settlement of these affairs can be followed. We have no intention of interfering in the strike one way or another, other than offering the services of The Department of Labour and their mediation people in order to attempt to bring about a settlement. I think that covers the third question.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for York South has a question left over from the previous portion of this session addressed to the Minister of Financial and Commercial Affairs. It was mentioned in the House on December 20 and I have it marked: “Sent to the office of the Prime Minister”. It is in connection with Mr. Philip Wynn. Has that been dealt with in the recess and should it be withdrawn?

Mr. MacDonald: I think, Mr. Speaker, that it should be withdrawn, unless the Minister is in a position to indicate that he has developed tactics to cope with this character?

Hon. H. L. Rowntree (Minister of Financial and Commercial Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I would simply say that there is no provision in The Consumer Protection Act which would enable personnel in my department to enforce judgments.

However, the fact is, as all hon. members are aware, that the recommendation of the Ontario Law Reform Commission dealing with landlord and tenant relationships were tabled recently in the House, and these recommendations are under study by the government.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps if the hon. Minister has any other answers we will come to them at a later time. The hon. member for Sudbury has a point of personal privilege?

Mr. Sopha: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of personal privilege and with very deep feelings of anger to protest to you the scandalous treatment accorded to me as a member of this assembly. I speak as one of 117 members elected to this Legislature to attend to the business of the sovereign people of Ontario.

I rise, sir, to protest in the strongest possible language against the grossly inadequate facilities provided for me, presumably by you, sir, as custodian of my rights, and as the servant of all of us, to carry on my work as the elected representative of 80,000 citizens in the city of Sudbury.

I was simply aghast to find on my return to my legislative duties a few days ago that someone without any prior consultation with myself transported my desk, telephone, and personal belongings and papers from its previous location in the west end of this building to a narrow partially partitioned cell measuring 5 ft. x 7 ft. in the east end of the building. There I find myself herded in with sixteen of my colleagues who, like myself, are expected to do our executive work as legislators of this province.

I say to you, Mr. Speaker, that an inspection of the fire marshal of Ontario would probably have held you responsible for placing our very lives in jeopardy. I go further and say that the health authorities of the province, and I have drawn this matter to their attention, could only find that we are subjected to a dangerous health hazard. But above all, in giving your sanction, if you did so, to these squalid arrangements, we have been subjected to humiliation and insult. Is this the measure of our importance as members of the supreme body of this province that we should be committed to a space less than that usually allocated for the housing of sheep and cattle, while so inconsequential a person as an executive assistant to a Minister without Portfolio is provided with a private office?

After all, sir, I share one thing in common with you. We are both elected representatives of the people. The rest of us have exalted you to the role of servant of all. Therefore, sir, just contrast the surroundings and material comforts and secretarial staff provided for you with the miserable facilities provided for us.

Contrast the luxurious quarters provided for the Ministers across the way with wall-to-wall broadloom, private bars, and refreshment refrigeration with the rabbit warren to which we have been committed. It is a case of everything for the gentry and nothing for the commonalty. Contrast our facilities with the opulence of those provided for Milton Carmen of the arts council—the cultured czar of Ontario in the Britannica Building—with what has been foisted on us.

Contrast our quarters with the corner office suite and mini-skirted secretaries provided for Mr. William Kinmond, social engagements secretary to the Prime Minister. Indeed everyone of the Prime Minister's staff, and there are seven or eight of them have private offices. Contrast our quarters with the fancy and elaborate offices placed at the disposal of the free holders on the government side; pardon me, the freeloaders—there is a typographical error—the freeloaders. The Vice-Chairman of Hydro, the member for Dufferin-Simcoe, the member for Wellington-Dufferin, and many others, and indeed the Chief Government Whip, who without so much as a by your leave sequestered to himself what formerly served as a mere cloakroom for the use of all 117 of us.

Mr. Speaker, private offices are even provided for the ladies and gentlemen of the press. I say to you that these so-called offices assigned to us are simply the measure of the low esteem in which the Opposition members are held by the government. I want to make it clear to you and to the government that under no circumstances will I demean myself by accepting this humiliation. Under no circumstances will I risk my health and my life and above all my dignity in this prison-like environment, and I hope that the others will follow my example.

Mr. Speaker, there has been a great exodus from this building in recent days. The west end of the fourth floor, and a portion of the east end of the building has been vacated. Mr. McRuer, Mr. Leal, the solicitors of the Attorney General has been moved to luxurious and expensive offices down town. Why has not that vacant space been placed at the disposal of the members instead of providing additional private snuggeries for the Ministers?

By what right does the Minister of Social and Family Services claim another office in this building when he nestles in the lap of luxury in the new complex—two minutes' walk across the way? And the same goes for the Minister of Correctional Services—and the Minister of Labour, and the Minister of Agriculture and Food. Why should they have two suites of offices while we as private members are squeezed into a space 5 x 7 ft.? Why so much luxury for the mediocrity?

Mr. Speaker, only a few days ago the government broke into the press with the announcement that a further increase in members' salaries is in the works. It was further suggested by the ubiquitous Whip that all parties were agreed that there should be such an increase. Well, Sir, this is news to me because I was not consulted. I have said on more than one occasion from my place in this House that the matter of first priority with members is the provision of adequate offices and secretarial assistance in order to carry out efficiently the responsibilities entrusted to them.

I am in complete agreement with the editorial in the Globe and Mail of this morning which in its totality questions our importance. It is patent that we are of little importance because we are herded into a space 5 x 7 ft., and expected to carry out our duties in the prayer stall and not complain. If those quarters are the measure of our importance then perhaps we should give the tax payers a refund of our indemnity.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I say to you, with the greatest respect and in deference to you in knowing that you realize it full well yourself after the many years of experience you have in these Chambers, in knowing your deep affection for membership in this Chamber, that my first function in this House with the other 116 people with whom I have the honour to be associated doing the business of the second largest organization in Canada, spending more than $3 billions is to serve the interests of the people of Sudbury, and beyond them the whole of the body politic of Ontario. What has been done to me is the perpetration of an indignity upon those who sent me here and over the weekend I was made aware by almost all I came in contact with in my own constituency that they resented it. They know of me that in Sudbury I rent a thousand square feet of office space; that I pay $340 a month and I employ four people. I have adequate space and I am asked to come down here to conduct a $3 billion business in a cubicle 5 x 7 ft.

To conclude I charge upon the government a wilful and cynical attempt to demean and humiliate the Opposition and to downgrade the role of the private member. The government has in effect informed the citizens who elected us to this assembly that our status is below that of a junior clerk in the civil service, many of whom have quarters far superior to our own. Nothing, sir, will satisfy me less than being provided with office accommodation commensurate with the role that I play in the legislative process of Ontario.

I challenge the Prime Minister, and his colleague, the Minister of Public Works, that when they hold the gala event they have planned for February 17 next to mark the opening of the new buildings across the way, they invite all of those who attend, to walk over to this building to see what has been provided to Members of the Supreme Legislative body of Ontario. Those who respond to the invitation will draw the only conclusion that must follow from a view of those premises.

Mr. Speaker: Well I may say to the hon. member, and to the other members of this House, that the matter which he has raised is one that is not unknown to those of us who have been in this House not just in this Parliament but in preceding Parliaments, and that Mr. Speaker, as well as the officials of The Department of Public Works, are well aware of the situation.

I can assure the hon. member and all members, that insofar as space is available, it is being re-assigned and will continue to be re-assigned for the use of the members in this building.

I would also point out something which we all know; that it is not possible to do everything we wish at the time we wish it and whether we like it or not, we must progress at a rate which the accommodation services apparently can manage.

The matter is certainly, as far as Mr. Speaker is concerned, not closed. I took the occasion yesterday to go over the new quarters with the appropriate officials of The Department of Public Works and I have formed my own conclusions with respect thereto. I have discussed this with them, not with the Minister, but with his officials who are in charge of this problem. I have discussed it with the leader of the official Opposition and I shall discuss it with the leader of the government and I can assure the hon. member that there is a great deal of truth in some of the matters which he raises and that there are things which must be dealt with and which will be dealt with.

I would, therefore, respectfully, suggest to him and to the other members concerned in this particular move, that until Public Works are able to provide some better accommodation, this might usefully be employed by those who do wish to continue to work in the buildings.

Further than that, I have nothing at the moment, that I can usefully say. I will also take the opportunity of having the whole matter discussed by the Speaker's House committee, which I shall be calling to meet either this week or next about many matters. They have been kept in touch pretty well, I think, by Public Works with what is going on and I shall invite the department to send its representatives to this meeting so that the members, through their committee, may be informed as to not only future plans, but progress which is anticipated.

Mr. L. M. Reilly (Eglinton): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Sudbury has made mention of some things concerning the chief Whip and I think that it is only fair at this time that—he is not entitled to debate with the hon. member who has raised the point of privilege.

Mr. Speaker: Order. If the hon. member has a point of privilege he is entitled to speak;

Mr. Reilly: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would say, first of all, I would like to lend support to many of the statements that the hon. member for Sudbury has made. I think that most members in this House agree that the space that has been provided for members is inadequate.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member is now debating the point. He is not speaking to a point of personal privilege.

Mr. Reilly: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Sudbury referred to the elaborate and fancy premises that were occupied—and as a matter of fact, sequestered, he suggested—by the chief government Whip. What I would like to suggest, Mr. Speaker, is that there is nothing fancy or nothing elaborate about the offices of the chief government Whip.

Mr. G. Bukator (Niagara Falls): We will trade places with you.

Mr. S. Lewis (Scarborough West): These things are relative—

Mr. Reilly: Mr. Speaker, I doubt if there was another construction modification in this building that was as cheaply done as the chief government Whip's office. Do you know what is done in the chief government Whip's office, Mr. Speaker? The cheapest of materials—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order, order!

Mr. Reilly: Mr. Speaker, may I remind some of them who may know very little about construction materials, that there is gyproc sheeting used as a partition, seven feet high under 15-foot ceilings. If you want to compare what has been done in some of the Liberal offices with false ceilings, with flush lights—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

An hon. member: We have flush lights in the washroom.

Mr. Speaker: Order, order!

The hon. member is now getting into a debate again. I would be glad to listen if he has anything further to say with respect to the matter of privilege on his own quarters.

Mr. Reilly: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. What I was pointing out to the members of this House is that the lighting that you see in the chief government Whip's office you will see in most factories in Toronto, and the partitions that you see, instead of going to the ceiling, are only seven feet high.

May I suggest to you, as fair-minded members of the Legislature, who are interested in the economy and efficient use of space in the Legislature, that over there, there was room and accommodation for 117 members in the cloakroom. The attendants told me that there were approximately six to eight of those used by the members.

An hon. member: That is nonsense.

Mr. Reilly: All right, it is nonsense. Let me tell you that we have accommodation in the entrance to the west lobby right now, in which there is provision made for 30, but if you were to go out there now, six of them are in use.

Mr. Speaker: Order! I would point out to the hon. member that the Speaker's House committee and Mr. Speaker gave up that accommodation for the purpose of providing an additional committee room in these buildings and it was not so provided. However, the additional committee rooms are now being provided and it was upon that basis I presume that this change was made. I think this matter has been sufficiently debated. I do not think the hon. member has anything further that he can usefully add.

Mr. Reilly: Mr. Speaker, I know you want to be clear. As far as I am concerned, I had indicated to the hon. Minister of Public Works that we did not care where this space was, and we were not married to the space and we would move anywhere. But bear in mind there is a wall three feet thick between our centre office and the former cloakroom. This wall has a door opening through it leading into the adjacent premises and lends itself to "natural" expansion and is the business-like thing to do.

One other thing I would like to point out, Mr. Speaker, is that the hon. member for Sudbury has indicated that he had charged the government with a wilful and cynical effort to demean its members.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member may speak with respect to anything that impugns his privileges as a member of this House; he has done so. Now he wants to speak on the point that has been raised by the member, which may affect all of us, or all members of the government, if not all members of the House. I do not think it is in the order of things that the hon. chief government Whip should reply to that, at this time, in any event.

Mr. Reilly: Mr. Speaker, only to this point, that he involved me, and as I understand it, anything that comes before our caucus we discuss as a caucus. I know that anything that goes before the New Democratic members, they discuss as a caucus. I assume that the members of the Liberal Party discuss them as a caucus. If so, those things were approved by the members of the Liberal Party and if the hon. member for Sudbury was not there at the caucus, well, that is another matter.

Mr. F. Young (Yorkview): Mr. Speaker, I do not want to prolong this so-called debate unduly, but we have a House committee in this Legislature which deals with certain matters. It just seems to me that that House committee is the committee which should have allocated the space. Out of the remarks of the hon. member for Sudbury came the question as to how the Whip was able to appropriate this space for himself. We have not got that answer. Where did the permission come from? The House committee—

Mr. Speaker: Order! The hon. member is now attempting to debate or question a matter which is not before the House for purpose of debate. The only thing that is before the House is the matter of privilege raised by the hon. member for Sudbury, and the hon. member for Eglinton is quite within his rights to speak to the matter of privilege as his privileges were infringed, in his opinion, by the statement of the other member.

Therefore, at the moment, unless there is a point of privilege affecting any member at this time, this matter is closed.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, I have a question or point of privilege of the government and perhaps I can speak to that.

I recognize the difficulties the hon. member for Sudbury points out, and the members might be interested in the approach of the government to the overall problem raised here. Without going back into any ancient history, it is not so many years ago there were offices in this building for probably 12 or 14 members, and no more, out of the total number who sat in the Legislature at any particular time. As a backbencher, I did all my dictating from my seat right in this Chamber. That was my office. I recognize that things change, but it is not easy to provide—overnight—100 private offices with accommodation for secretaries.

The government's long-range plan—and we have been working on it for some time, although it does not have absolute, complete, supreme priority in everything the government may do in the area of providing accommodation—the plan to which we are working and why these changes have taken place and why civil servants have been moved out of this building, is that we will have enough space in this building to look after the interests of the members and of those who are associated with making this Chamber an efficient working body. Of course, these changes come about very naturally with the increase in the length of the session, and the increased workload individual members are expected to carry compared with former years.

Eventually we hope to take over the entire north wing, which used to house The Department of Education. We hope to be able to provide there, accommodation for the members a good deal better than that which presently exists. These plans are made and they will take some time to carry out.

Mr. MacDonald: But they were made and broken.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: I do not think they were made and broken. I do not wish to enter into an acrimonious debate; I know the hon. member for Sudbury had his opportunity to berate us and with that I am quite content. But I would point out that these plans were submitted to the leader of his party before the moves were made. If these places are unhealthy, we may reverse the whole situation and put it back where it was before.

What The Department of Public Works is in fact trying to do is to provide temporary accommodation in order to give more space to the members as fast as space becomes available. Perhaps they move too quickly, and if you do not want it that way, I suppose we can move everything back to where it was previously and we will wait until we can do it in a more orderly and a more permanent fashion. Because it was never the intention of the government that these offices—which the hon. member for Sudbury is complaining about, and I can understand his point, because five by seven feet is not very large although it might be better than three in one office—should be permanent. It is a temporary arrangement. If it is not suitable as a temporary arrangement, we will make some other arrangement.

The Department of Public Works is simply trying to bridge this gap until we can get sufficient space. It may be small consolation to those involved, but with a little patience I think we will work the problem out. I lay before you the fact that this government has long-range plans to provide what we consider adequate accommodation not only in this area but in dining facilities and things like that.

Mr. A. B. R. Lawrence (Carleton East): Mr. Speaker, briefly to come back to the point of privilege as originally raised, I would like no impression to be left in the minds of the media or the public from the remarks of the member for Sudbury that the Opposition situation or conditions are any different, as far as I can see, from those of a private member of the government side.

Mr. O. F. Villeneuve (Glengarry): Better.

Mr. A. B. R. Lawrence: In other words, I would like to have it clear to the public, certainly of my own riding, that our conditions are the same. We are not in more luxurious surroundings than the member for Sudbury.

Mr. Speaker: We perhaps will now return to questions before the orders of the day, and today we follow the list of the Ministers by their appointment. The first question is from the member for Yorkview, of the Prime Minister.

Mr. Young: My question of the Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker, is this:

In view of the Prime Minister's statement yesterday that he favoured a lower voting age, and in view of the refusal of the Conservative members on the select committee on election laws on two occasions to recommend lowering the voting age, will the Prime Minister comment on this apparent policy division at government level?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, I can say in the first place I am not privy to the deliberations of the election committee so I was not aware there had been two votes by the Conservative members one way or the other. I do not know whether he is referring to the previous election committee or the present election committee.

Mr. Young: The present one.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: But that is up to the committee itself, and I do not think it is a question of government policy or government position, whatever the committee may do, or even whatever it recommends. Committees make recommendations to the government; they do not originate legislation or policy, so that there is no connection between what any member of that committee might do and what the government might eventually decide upon.

I might say that I have altered my opinion. There was one stage when I had great doubts about lowering the voting age, and I have changed my mind at least to the extent I indicated yesterday on this question. It may be that some other members may have been in the same position, come to some conclusions some time ago and have changed their minds, but they are all free to have their own opinions. When the time comes to revise The Election Act, the government will have to make up its mind what it is going to do and stand or fall on that decision.

Mr. S. Apps (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, I would like to query the member for Yorkview in connection with his statement that there were several members of the election law committee who disagreed with the lowering of the voting age. I am a member of that committee and I do not know of anyone who has any disagreement with the lowering of the voting age.

Mr. Young: Mr. Speaker, this matter was thoroughly debated, a vote was taken and every Conservative member voted against the recommendation to lower the voting age to make that recommendation at this time.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order, order!

Mr. Apps: That is not correct.

Mr. Speaker: As hon. members see, this is what happens when a little leeway is allowed in these matters.

Mr. Apps: Well Mr. Speaker, I cannot let him get away with that statement.

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Will the hon. member resume his seat when the Speaker on his feet, please!

The hon. member for Kingston and the Islands asked if he could put a question to the hon. member; and of course what should have been done was that that permission should have been refused because it is not allowed by the rules. On the other hand, it seemed advisable to clear the matter up.

It has not developed into a debate, and I now rule that any further investigation of the matter at this time is out of order.

The hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville has a question of the hon. Minister of Health.

Mr. B. Newman (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, my question to the hon. Minister reads as follows:

In view of the fact that psychiatric facilities for children in the Windsor area are grossly insufficient and that plans to remedy this situation will be delayed for approximately two years, will the Minister reconsider the decision to postpone the implementation of a children's psychiatric unit in Windsor?

Hon. M. B. Dymond (Minister of Health): Mr. Speaker, I have not made any decision to postpone the development of a regional children's centre in Windsor. My staff will continue to promote the development and assist in the further development and expansion of this service as rapidly as possible.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Scarborough Centre has a question of the Minister of Financial and Commercial Affairs.

Mrs. M. Renwick (Scarborough Centre): A question of the Minister of Financial and Commercial Affairs:

What was the purpose of the Minister's recent luncheon at the Skyline Hotel; how many people were invited; what particular groups were invited; and how much did it cost?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Mr. Speaker, the luncheon on January 29 last at the Skyline Hotel was part of a one-day consumer protection conference sponsored by The Department of Financial and Commercial Affairs. The intent of these conferences and the reasons for inviting delegates to lunch or dinner are outlined in an answer given to a similar question on page 266 of Hansard under date of December 2, 1968.

The second part of the question: The luncheon was attended by 630 persons who represented 187 different organizations.

The third part of the question: The conference was attended by individual consumers, representatives of the clergy, consumer organizations, trade unions, service clubs, the judiciary, senior citizens, welfare organizations, credit unions, the automobile and credit industries, the banks, federal government agencies such the Canada Manpower Office, home and school associations, local boards and local government; and in fact interested persons from what could be described as a broadly-based cross section of community life in the west end of Metropolitan Toronto.

The answer to the fourth part of the question is $2,242.50.

Now Mr. Speaker, there is outstanding a question from the hon. member for High Park having to do with—

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member has a supplementary question, I think.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Mr. Speaker, would the Minister accept a supplementary question?

I was wondering if the $2,000 was for the overall conference? I was speaking, of course, only of the luncheon.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: No, there were other expenses, probably involving the rental of rooms and so on.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Then Mr. Speaker, may I ask of the Minister: The $2,240 was the cost of the luncheon?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: That is correct and that was the question asked of me.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. Minister has an answer to a previous question.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Now with respect to the Nairn matter and the question from the hon. member for High Park (Mr. Shulman): Let me say this, Mr. Speaker, that I am not empowered to intervene in the manner suggested by the hon. member.

Regulations under The Used Car Dealers Act provide for forfeiture of the $5,000 dealer bond: (a) where an offence has been committed under the Act; (b) where an offence involving fraud or theft or conspiracy to commit an offence involving fraud or theft has been committed; or (c) where a judgment based on a finding of fraud has been given against a registered used car dealer or where proceedings have been taken under The Bankruptcy Act.

Mr. Speaker, none of the conditions outlined were found to be applicable in the Nairn case. A judgment against Oakclair Motors Ltd. specified clearly that in the opinion of the court fraud was not evident. On November 22 of 1966, the registrar of used car dealers informed Mr. Nairn's solicitors with respect to the regulations covering bonding and the forfeiture of bonds. The registrar noted in writing that unless the dealer made an assignment in bankruptcy, the only methods through which the bond could be forfeited would be in accordance with subsection (b) of section 12, which involves the finding of fraud. Steps were not taken to put the dealership into bankruptcy.

It is only fair to point out that this is a rare case, which though regrettable does not lend itself to solution within the framework of existing regulations for forfeiture of bond.

Mr. Speaker, forfeiture provisions under The Used Car Dealers Act and other consumer related Acts are currently being studied and revised in the hope that even isolated instances similar to the Nairn case may be eliminated. There is an—

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Speaker, would the hon. Minister accept a supplementary?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Yes.

Mr. Shulman: In view of the letter that was sent by the registrar of used cars dealers, the first letter in which he assured the solicitor for Mr. Nairn that the bond would be held and the money would be made available to Mr. Nairn, would the Minister not agree with me that the good name of his department at least entails that he should make some effort to carry out the assurances of his department?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Efforts have been made, Mr. Speaker, to endeavour to negotiate a solution to this matter. To this moment they have not proven successful, but we have not given up our efforts toward finding a solution that would meet the situation.

I might say that there are some other factors involved in this case which, if the hon. member would like me to record them in this House, I would be pleased to prepare a further detailed statement which puts an entirely different light upon the matter, particularly with respect to the handling of the legal proceedings. I would be glad to do that if the hon. member so wishes.

Mr. Shulman: Yes I would, please.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Mr. Speaker, the last outstanding question has to do with one from the hon. member for York South (Mr. MacDonald). It has to do with reference to an arbitration board in the province of Manitoba dealing with used car repair bills. As I interpreted the question the inference was that it was an official arbitration board. Now I think it is only fair to point out, Mr. Speaker, that the board referred to by the hon. member does not have the support of the government of Manitoba and in no way involves the expenditure of public funds in that province. It is being established on a voluntary basis by the Automotive Trade Association of Manitoba, whose 1,000 members make up only about 50 to 55 per cent of all garage and service station operators in the province of Manitoba. Citizens who have complaints against a non-member firm will not be able to appeal to that voluntary board to which I made reference. As far as I am aware, there is no consideration being given to the establishment of such a board in Ontario at this time.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Huron-Bruce has a question of the Minister of Agriculture and Food.

Mr. M. Gaunt (Huron-Bruce): My question, Mr. Speaker, is to the Minister of Agriculture and Food.

In view of the department's letter of January 13, 1967, wherein it was indicated that the extra ARDA grant would be applicable to all municipal drains where the application for the grant was made after April 1, 1966, and which would be effective until March 31, 1970, will the Minister reconsider extending the programme to this latter date?

Hon. W. A. Stewart (Minister of Agriculture and Food): Mr. Speaker with regard to the question, I believe the hon. member should have said it was made after April 1, rather than before April 1.

Mr. Gaunt: I am sorry, Mr. Speaker. It should have read after April 1.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Well, Mr. Speaker, I regret very much that action was necessary to be taken to indicate that the grant would be withdrawn. However, the problem which generated the withdrawal of the grant is under discussion and I trust favourable consideration with the government of Canada. I hope these considerations will result in the fact that we may be able to reconsider withdrawal of the grant, but I would doubt very much that it would be possible for us to reinstate the grant for the period to which the hon. member refers, right up to the end of the programme. I think that his question related to a longer period than that which I believe most municipalities would be quite happy to live with.

Mr. Gaunt: Mr. Speaker, may I ask a supplementary question? Would it be fair to say that the province will not go it alone in the event that the federal government does not reconsider?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: I would say this, I would hope the federal government would go along on that, which is an obligation which they accepted some time ago, and I would hope very much that we could look forward to favourable consideration by the federal government of our request.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Brantford.

Mr. M. Makarchuk (Brantford): A question of the Minister of Agriculture and Food:

In view of the recent report to the Barber commission regarding the increase in farm machinery accidents, what steps will be taken by the department to remedy the situation?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Mr. Speaker, I assume that the hon. member is referring to the study that was done by Prof. Graham Donaldson of Wye College, the University of London, England, for the Barber commission. This is a most interesting report. I have received it with some concern. This is a report to the Barber commission and until the Barber commission reports, I would think it would be difficult to know what the disposition of this particular report would be.

There is one thing that does stand out in that report, and that is the fact that there are so many youngsters who are suffering fatal accidents involving farm machinery. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that the member has raised a point which I feel all of us who are interested in promoting farm safety, as far as the operation of equipment is concerned, should consider, in that Prof. Donaldson states in his report that 12 per cent of the total, fatal farm accidents involve children under five years of age. To me, that is nothing that the farm machinery companies can do very much about, but it does fall very definitely upon those who operate farm equipment to see that small children are not around and involved with it. It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that we would be well advised to take it upon ourselves, in every way, at every opportunity we can, to promote farm safety and the safe operation of equipment. As a matter of fact, the Ontario Farm Safety Council is meeting at Guelph this very day, and these are matters which are under active consideration by that very distinguished group.

Mr. Makarchuk: By way of a supplementary question; from the Minister's answer I take it that the department is not doing anything about it? Is that correct?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member had been listening to what I said, he would have heard that I said the report is simply a study paper presented to the Barber commission. The Barber commission is charged with the responsibility of dealing with this matter, and I assume that it will be referring to that paper when the report is brought down.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville has a question of the Minister of Trade and Development.

Mr. B. Newman: Yes, Mr. Speaker, the question to the Minister is as follows:

Has the Minister arrived at a decision as to the date at which homes in the Bridgeview subdivision in Windsor will be put up for sale to the tenants?

Hon. S. J. Randall (Minister of Trade and Development): Mr. Speaker, we have not as yet arrived at a decision on that, because we have just completed the one up in Guelph, and we are waiting to see how that works out before we proceed with the next one, which I would assume would be in Windsor. I am informed by the Ontario Housing Corporation this morning that we have made a preliminary survey, done as to the value of the home and the land, and I would hope very shortly we will proceed with that down there.

Mr. B. Newman: May I ask of the Minister a supplementary question? Is he aware that deterioration continues in the homes because the OHC is not doing any type of repairs? As a result, the homes are going to depreciate considerably, so when the time comes to resell them, the government may not be able to get what it expects to get for them.

Hon. Mr. Randall: I think we would follow the same course as we did in Guelph, where we sent in a repair crew and looked over the amount of work that had to be done to bring them up to good standard before they were sold to the tenants. I think if this is happening in Windsor, it would not be too bad, because only a few months ago we made this decision that we could fix up the homes to make sure that the tenants do not have to bear the load of repairs.

Mr. B. Newman: Could the Minister be a little specific in his answer as to a date? Would it be before the warm weather sets in, before the summer holidays?

Hon. Mr. Randall: I would think so, yes.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Scarborough Centre has a question for this Minister.

Mrs. M. Renwick: A question of the Minister of Trade and Development:

1. What was the purpose of the rent survey conducted by OHC since the rent freeze last May? 2. Has the survey been completed? 3. Was the survey conducted by OHC staff? 4. If not, who conducted the survey, and what was the cost?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Mr. Speaker, in answer to the hon. member, it was a survey for two purposes—first of all, to gather the information with reference to paying of the basic tax exemption which is taking place; secondly, as you know we froze the rents last May and we wanted to get some information whereby we could sit down with Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation and arrive at new bases for tenants' rents.

I would think now that having completed the survey, we will be talking to our friends at Ottawa, I hope by the end of this month, when the matter will be discussed with them.

The survey was conducted by the Ontario Housing Corporation staff and the branch office of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. Our day-to-day operations have now allocated expenses for this.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Sarnia has a series of questions of the Attorney General.

Mr. J. E. Bullbrook (Sarnia): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Could the Attorney General advise, relative to prosecution under The Residential Property Tax Reduction Act, as follows:

1. When has this department instructed Crown attorneys throughout the province to prosecute charges laid pursuant to the statute?

2. Is the public responsible for charges—by that I mean fees, sir—payable to justices of the peace in the laying of information pursuant to such statute?

3. How many informations have been laid pursuant to such statute to February 1, 1969?

4. How many trials have ensued as a result of such information prior to February 1, 1969?

5. Has the legal aid plan been involved in the prosecution or defence of any such charges?

6. Does the Attorney General agree with the statement reportedly made by the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs, that tenants are legally entitled to set off tax rebate amounts owing to them by landlords against rent going to such landlords?

If I might be permitted, Mr. Speaker, I recognize that questions 3 and 4 and 5 might take some time.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Speaker, the question is six questions in one. The answer to the first part of the question as to whether we gave instruction to Crown attorneys to prosecute charges, the answer is, no. And I would say in answer to the second part of the question, that the informant is responsible for the cost that may be required to be paid under the statute or under the regulations.

As the hon. member has been good enough to say—regarding parts 3, 4 and 5, as to the informations that have been laid under the statute, how many trials have ensued, and whether legal aid has been involved—I think we do appreciate that to answer a question I received around 1 o'clock today, it is just not possible to get that information. I shall try to get it.

As to part 6 of the question, I am not sure just what my colleague, the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs, said in this regard. I would say this, that on questions as to whether a tenant is entitled to set off against his rent the amount of the tax rebate, I think it would be difficult to give a firm opinion at this moment. If he refused to pay his rent or refused to pay the rent in the full amount, relying on the amount of the rebate, I think he might very well leave himself open to an action for collection of his rent. But I would think further that if the landlord were so ill advised as to commence such an action, he would be met with a set-off—which I think would be a thorough defence—for that part of the rent which was equivalent to the tax rebate. That would be my opinion on the matter.

Mr. Bullbrook: Mr. Speaker, if the Attorney General would entertain a supplementary, in connection with part 6 of the question, would I not be correct in assuming that if section 6 of the Order-in-Council or the regulations to the statute were amended to give the tenant the reciprocal rights that the landlord presently has, then the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs might well be right?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: This is possible, Mr. Speaker. I think we should bear in mind that we have now before the House, tabled at the end of last session, the report of the law reform commission on landlord and tenant. As we are considering that, perhaps in this whole matter of review we can work out something which will affect the situation—

Mr. Bullbrook: It was the unilateral aspect of things, Mr. Speaker, that I thought was unfair.

But in connection with part one, would the Attorney General permit a supplementary?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Yes.

Mr. Bullbrook: Now the Minister said no to my question. Would he mind explaining why the department does not feel an obligation to undertake the prosecutions? After all, this is a public statute and protects the rights of public!

Hon. Mr. Wishart: We have certain statutes; other provincial statutes such as The Liquor Control Act and certain offences under The Highway Traffic Act which are of a minor nature, on which we do not instruct our Crown attorneys to act. We feel they can be carried on without the intervention of a Crown attorney.

I would be glad to look at that and discuss it with the Minister of Municipal Affairs if the situation is serious. My impression is that there have not been many prosecutions or charges laid.

Mr. Speaker: I believe the hon. member for High Park has questions of this Minister.

Mr. Shulman: Why has Coroner Cantelon ruled that no inquest is to be held into the deaths of the eight persons in the family of David Haskell, which occurred December 10, 1968, in West Lorne, Ontario?

Is it true that there are no fire inspectors for that area of the province? And if there are no inspectors, why?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Speaker, the information I have is that Doctor C. B. Cantelon, who is the coroner, was assisted in his investigation of this matter by Inspector R. P. Kaufman of the office of the fire marshal at London, along with Mr. H. E. Steels, the area inspector of Ontario Hydro and Detective Sergeant Allsop of the Ontario Provincial Police.

It was Doctor Cantelon's conclusion that the fire was caused by an over-heated wood stove in the kitchen of the dwelling, one of the stoves of this type which was used to heat the home. Doctor Cantelon could see no purpose in holding an inquest as the cause of the fire had been ascertained and there was no evidence to indicate that it was other than an accidental fire. I would say further, that Mr. Peter Gloin, the Crown attorney, reviewed the matter and confirmed the opinion that an inquest was not indicated.

As to the second part of the question enquiring as to whether we have any fire inspectors in that area, we have had a fire inspector in that area for many years. He is located in London and he investigates all fires in that area, which includes the village of West Lorne.

Mr. Shulman: Would the Attorney General allow a supplementary question?

In view of the fact that there have been a number of deaths of this nature, would the Attorney General not agree with me that an inquest into a series of deaths such as occurred in this case would help to prevent future deaths by outlining the dangers of this type of stove and of the circumstances under which it was used in this case?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: No, Mr. Speaker, I could not agree with the hon. member for the reason he states. I think every situation where death has occurred deserves a full investigation. The question as to whether an inquest will help or not is a matter which I think the coroner and those who advise him, such as a Crown attorney and the fire inspector, must determine. I do not think it is possible to make a general statement of agreement that inquests are always necessary in such cases.

Mr. Shulman: I was asking about this specific case.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Well on this specific case I have answered.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Speaker, through you to the Attorney General, why were no charges laid nor an inquest held into the death of Marchelle Rayburn Rule, age 16, who was killed when struck by a car on Highway 48 on September 22, 1968?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Speaker, this matter was investigated by the members of the Ontario Provincial Police. They consulted with the Crown attorney and it was on the decision of the Crown attorney, after the investigation by the OPP, that no charges were warranted.

First of all, the facts are that this was a motorcycle proceeding on the highway which was struck in the rear by an automobile. The coroner at the time discussed the matter with the Crown attorney and it was agreed that there would be no purpose in holding the inquest because there were no independent witnesses of the accident or at the scene.

Mr. Shulman: Would the Attorney General allow a supplementary question—two supplementary questions?

First of all, is the Attorney General aware that the family is extremely upset that an inquest has not been held and they feel that the facts are being suppressed?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Speaker, I can understand the family being upset at the loss of a son 16 years of age. I do not perhaps accept the fact that they are upset because an inquest was not held.

An inquest, unless it can serve some purpose, adds nothing to the matter except to prolong the grief and the feelings of the family. I have discovered that in some cases where certain persons pursue these matters suggesting that inquests be held families do not understand all the considerations that apply to inquests, and we have had cases where they have been stirred up unnecessarily. I think this may be one of them.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Speaker, I must answer that allusion. That family has come to me requesting I approach the Attorney General, just in case the Attorney General has any misunderstanding on that score.

The second supplementary question: Would the Attorney General not agree with me that the purpose of an inquest is to prevent similar deaths? This type of death has occurred time and time again on highways. Surely there should be an inquest in this case, even if it would not do anything about this death, at least to prevent other deaths in the future.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Speaker, I do not want to debate this matter. I have accepted the supplementary question, but when the hon. member says would the Attorney General not agree with me that an inquest would help to prevent this kind of thing, I ask the hon. member, "How does an inquest affect a situation where a motorcycle is proceeding on a highway and someone driving a car runs into it from the rear?" I do not know how the finding of a coroner's jury is going to stop that in the future.

Mr. E. W. Martel (Sudbury East): Follow the recommendations.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Well I am not going to debate the matter, Mr. Speaker.

I presume there are ways one could answer; say reduce the speed limit, keep motorcycles off the highway, put them on a certain part of the highway, or something else. But I do not think a coroner's jury is the body to decide those things.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Speaker, we will pursue this in the estimates.

I have another question for the Attorney General.

What was the result of the investigation mentioned by the Minister on July 8, 1968, by the director of public prosecutions of the kidnapping of Valery and John Martin?

What charges were laid by his department?

Has any action been taken against the Ontario detectives who kidnapped the children?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Speaker, there was a very full and complete investigation made into this matter by officials of my department and I also directed there be an investigation through the Ontario Provincial Police into the whole matter.

There was an order of custody—these are some of the facts—there was an order of custody made by the court in California giving the mother custody of the children, who were in Ontario. In attempting to carry out that order, which was really not effective in Ontario, there was unfortunately an assault upon the grandmother of the children by these two American or two United States citizens who entered this country and then got out of the jurisdiction before they could be apprehended.

The individuals involved in the occurrence could be charged with an offence if they were within our jurisdiction but the offence is not of a nature for which they could be brought back to Ontario to stand trial. For this reason it was not contemplated that any charges would be laid.

As to the Ontario investigators who were retained by the Americans, they were brought before the appropriate official of the department responsible for security guards and investigators, and the whole matter was inquired into. As a result of that inquiry no conduct was disclosed which would warrant an interference with their licenses, which were issued to them out of the provisions of our own statute. They were warned that their action was doubtful and they were reprimanded and asked to be more careful in the future. I think that was a reasonable decision in the circumstances.

The facts are, as I say, that the American people entered and engaged the services of local investigators to guide them and assist them to some extent, but there was no assault by an Ontario-licensed person and no action on which we could establish a basis to lay a charge.

Mr. Shulman: Does the Minister suggest that a kidnapping warrants only a reprimand to a detective who is licensed in this province?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: The "kidnapping" was not carried out by any Ontario official.

Mr. G. Ben (Humber): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, it has been your practice to edit these questions. I am rather disturbed by this particular question and the way it was phrased. I think it is time that members in this House arose when words are used as loosely as they are in this instance.

Mr. Speaker, everybody knows that kidnapping in a common sense involves the taking of an individual, depriving him of his liberty and offering to restore that liberty in exchange for money.

The hon. member for High Park has twice used a phrase that these people have been guilty of kidnapping.

Mr. Speaker, you are a lawyer and also Speaker of this House. I can only presume that you concur that there has been an instance of kidnapping here or you would have disallowed the question; or else the Minister would have risen in his place and said there has been no kidnapping. Nobody ought to use the sanctity of this House to libel somebody in the manner they have been libelled, if there has been no kidnapping.

Mr. Shulman: May I speak to the point of order, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Humber really is not the most consistent member, because he has repeatedly objected to Mr. Speaker editorially correcting or changing questions. The Speaker has not been doing that for some time and I feel that it is the right and the privilege of the members of this House to express themselves as they wish in their questions as well as in the House provided parliamentary wording and procedures are followed. Therefore, so far as I am concerned these are the words in which the question was submitted. It has been asked in those terms and answered by the hon. Minister, and I think that ends the matter at that point.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Shulman, I would like to speak to the point of order, or if I may, on a point of privilege—

Mr. Speaker: I do not think that any further point of order is involved here. The hon. member has perhaps further questions of this Minister, he might proceed with them.

Mr. Ben: I take it that this House goes on record as saying that these two members have been guilty of kidnapping?

Mr. Speaker: Order, order. The House goes on record, or the records of the House will only show that the hon. member for High Park asked a question couched in the terms that the hon. members have referred to.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Speaker, I wish to speak on a point of personal privilege. The hon. member for Humber has suggested I use my words loosely and under those circumstances I wish to elucidate. I used the word "kidnap".

The circumstances were that men came from the United States and employed Ontario detectives. These men then, by violence, grabbed two children off the street, put them into a car and rode them over the border. After they were safely over the border, the Ontario detectives then went to the police station and told what they had done. If this is not kidnapping then I never heard of it.

Mr. Speaker: Order, order. Now the hon. member has explained it and explained his use of the word and I think that finishes that particular area.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order, order. The hon. member for High Park has further questions of the Minister.

Mr. Shulman: The Liberals are very touchy today, Mr. Speaker. I have a question for the Attorney General.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Speaker, referring to the question which the hon. member asked previously and which I answered, he has added now a further statement of fact.

I simply want to go on record as saying that the facts as he has just stated them are not as I understand them, I do not believe they are correct.

An hon. member: Then they are not facts!

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Speaker, may I invite the Attorney General to correct the facts which I have mis-stated?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member will continue with his questions and I would suggest that perhaps the hon. member and the hon. Minister might get together—not on the floor of the House—and get the facts determined between them.

Mr. Shulman: Perhaps the estimates are the place again, Mr. Speaker.

I have a question for the Attorney General, Mr. Speaker. Has the Attorney General investigated the actions taken by the Crown Attorney in the John Ferguson case as promised in this House on July 2, 1968?

What was the result of that investigation?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Speaker, I got about nine questions, I believe, from the hon. member today. I was able to find time since I got them to prepare the answers to seven. I think I shall have to take this one as notice and answer it as soon as possible.

Mr. Shulman: I have a question for the Attorney General, Mr. Speaker. Did Mr. Cruickshank's appointment as a consultant to the supervising coroner expire on September 30, 1968, as stated to the House on June 19, 1968?

(2) What role is Dr. Cruickshank now playing at the coroner's office?

(3) What salary is he receiving?

(4) Is it the intention of the government to appoint a chief coroner for Metropolitan Toronto?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Speaker, Dr. Cruickshank's appointment as consultant to the supervising coroner was renewed until the 31st day of March, 1969, and he is still consultant to the supervising coroner's office.

His salary is $1,500 per month.

It is not my intention at this time to proceed with the appointment of a chief coroner for Metropolitan Toronto.

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister of Correctional Services): He is waiting for the hon. member for High Park to be defeated.

Mr. C. G. Pilkey (Oshawa): Do not hold your breath.

Mr. Shulman: I have a question for the Attorney General, Mr. Speaker.

Has the Minister given consideration, as he promised the House on June 27, 1968, to recompensing the legal expenses of those individuals who are innocently involved with Royal Commissions and are found innocent by the Commission?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Speaker, this matter has been considered. It is not my intention to recompense the persons involved in the judicial inquiry respecting certain magistrates. The cases have to be decided upon their individual merits and I make no statement of general policy as to these matters.

Mr. Shulman: Is it the intention ultimately to have a general policy on this matter?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I say each case has to be decided, Mr. Speaker, on its individual merits, and I do not propose to make a statement of general policy.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Speaker, finally I have a question for the Attorney General of great import.

Has the Attorney General looked into the matter of non exercise of the law in reference to docking horses' tails as promised in this Legislature on July 3, 1968, and what was the result of that investigation?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: This is the other question of the nine that I was not able to check. I have not checked on horses' tails. I will have to get that later.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Wentworth has a question of the Minister of Municipal Affairs?

Mr. I. Deans (Wentworth): Yes, thank you, Mr. Speaker.

To the Minister of Municipal Affairs:

Will the Minister reconsider his decision not to reimburse municipalities for expenses incurred in the administration of the municipal tax rebate?

Hon. W. D. McKeough (Minister of Municipal Affairs): Mr. Speaker, it is not my intention to recommend payment to the municipalities for their very excellent co-operation in helping reduce the level of the municipal tax bill.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, may I ask a supplementary question? Have you received any requests for reimbursement from the municipalities?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: No. When I got your letter I wondered about that and we had a very quick look through the files. There may be one or two. There would probably be 10 or fifteen letters from municipalities—from clerk-treasurers of municipalities—saying how little trouble it was and how much they appreciated it.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Sarnia.

Mr. Bullbrook: To the Minister of Municipal Affairs:

Could the Minister advise this House and the people of Ontario when they might expect a statement of government policy respecting the continuance or otherwise of the tax shelter programme?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Mr. Speaker, in reply to that question I would say that that information is expected to be made available to the members of this House and the people of Ontario when the Treasurer brings in his Budget on February 19 next.

Mr. Speaker: I apologize to the Minister of Highways. I have demoted him. The hon. member for Cochrane South has a question of the Minister of Highways.

Mr. W. Ferrier (Cochrane South): Mr. Speaker, to the Minister of Highways.

Has the pre-contract engineering been completed on highway 577? When will the proposed reconstruction programme for this highway between Ansonville and Monteith get under way?

Hon. G. E. Gomme (Minister of Highways): Mr. Speaker, the answer to the first part is "no", and to the second part I cannot give a definite answer until the engineering is done.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for High Park, I believe, has a statement.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Speaker, during our recess, a memorable anniversary occurred, and I would like to take this opportunity for us, the citizens of a free and independent nation, to join the peoples and descendents of the Ukraine on the anniversary of their independence.

It was just two weeks and 51 years ago that freedom was so claimed at Kiev. However, its freedom was short lived; by 1920 Red army troops had again put the courageous Ukrainians under the yoke of subjugation. There reside in my riding many persons of Ukrainian extraction. These industrious and honourable people are proud to be citizens of Canada, yet they agree that their brethren are denied the freedom which they so readily enjoy.

The seed of freedom, once planted, cannot be destroyed. It will flower despite those difficulties and obstructions which may be put in its path. The hearts and minds of the Ukrainian citizens both within their native land and in other nations around the world still nourish the thought of regaining independence.

On this anniversary it is well to remember that the spark of freedom still burns and burns brightly.

We express our hope that in the future these people will again be able to exercise their freedom. In doing so, I am sure we are in a small way helping to sustain and encourage the spirit of freedom among the Ukrainian people and among all other captive nations.

Mr. Ben: It is a pity they have been subjugated by your system.

Mr. Speaker: May I say for the information of the members something which they all know—

Mr. MacDonald: Talk about libelous remarks.

Mr. Speaker:—and that is, that while questions are received by Mr. Speaker's office before 12 noon and are telephoned almost immediately they are received, they sometimes do not necessarily reach the Minister personally until he is coming into the House. So it is quite important for members to realize that a question will not always have reached the Minister in time for him to prepare a reply, even though it may have come in to Mr. Speaker's office at 10 in the morning and been relayed, because the Ministers are very often out of their offices.

May I give the members notice that the annual dinner of Mr. Speaker will be on Wednesday, March 26, so perhaps if you would mark that down and reserve that date Mr. Speaker will be able to have again the pleasure of being host to his fellow members—Wednesday, March 26.

Orders of the day.

Clerk of the House: The first order; resuming the adjourned debate on the amendment to the amendment to the motion for an address in reply to the speech of the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor at the opening of the session.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

Mr. E. W. Martel (Sudbury East): Mr. Speaker, the longest speech in history will go on.

On the last occasion we had for discussion, Mr. Speaker, we were talking about a favourite topic of mine, International Nickel Company. I had hoped to not come back to this topic, but unfortunately some of the incidents which have occurred in the month and a half that we have been away make it necessary for me to bring to light a few more interesting facts about this wonderful, benevolent company that occupies the area around Sudbury and Sudbury East.

An hon. member: They had a visitor.

Mr. Martel: Yes, to the member here, we had a visitor, who came in by request and toured that swamp; but that is not what I want to talk about. I am sure that the member, when he has an occasion, will speak about his visit in the smelter.

Mr. Speaker, I was speaking on the fog condition last day and I just want to finish up that part with several letters that were written, one to the hon. Minister of The Department of Energy and Resources Management (Mr. Simonett) on December 6, 1968:

Dear Sir:

On December 3, 1968, I attended a meeting regarding the fog condition on Highway 17 near Copper Cliff, caused by polluted water. Mr. John Luyt was present for the Ontario Water Resources Commission. The discussion during that meeting, I believe, will not bring results in corrective action and life may be lost again. No one at that meeting was able to deny the fact that the water in Copper Cliff Creek is polluted.

And I believe I outlined this quite well from the report of the Ontario Water Resources Commission on International Nickel Company.

I go on in this letter:

On May 6, 1968, our committee presented resolutions endorsed by municipalities in this area—to Mr. Caverly, General Manager of the OWRC—asking him to eliminate the hazard created by polluted water in that location. Copper Cliff Creek carries polluted water, it will not freeze during winter months, and temperatures are as low as 40 degrees below zero, therefore, this creek may be responsible for the dense fog condition during the winter months. Persons have lost their lives when accidents occurred during dense fog periods and it was stated during the meeting that it may be too costly to cover that creek, which may not even be responsible for creating the hazardous driving condition, but we do know that the water is polluted, therefore the Company responsible for the pollution should be ordered to take immediate steps to correct this pollution problem.

And this is what I took exception to in the report, if you will recall. The report said International Nickel "should" clean up; not "must" but "should".

This would serve (1) to eliminate existing water pollution and (2) to determine whether that creek is responsible for the fog condition during the winter months.

I have no other choice but to request very strongly that water pollution in that creek be eliminated as soon as possible, since it was suggested that it may be too costly to cover the creek.

Cost should not enter where human life may be lost on account of a pollution problem, created by the International Nickel Company.

I hope to hear your comments soon.

Paul Falkowski,
Chairman,
Water Pollution Sub-Committee.

On the same occasion Mr. Falkowski wrote a letter to me respecting this matter, and he starts out:

I am sorry that you are not able to attend the meeting in Copper Cliff regarding the fog conditions on Highway 17. You missed expert maneuvering by Mr. Caswell and Mr. Saddington.

To be brief about it, I must say the responsible persons present avoided the issue. An alarm warning system, increased light, and fog dispersion system or equipment were some of the methods suggested and discussed. It was also stated by Mr. Saddington that the fog in other areas is similar to the fog condition on Highway 17; I don't share that opinion. Mr. Caswell was elected chairman and John Luyt, secretary. A study programme will be undertaken by collecting water and air-temperatures to determine the cause of the fog. I don't agree with that study, because we are in bad need for corrective action in order to prevent future loss of life in that location.

No one was able to deny the fact that the creek is polluted. In my opinion, our good friends (?) are stalling; therefore, pressure will have to come from other sources.

Well Mr. Speaker, this is indicative of the government's action whenever it comes in contact with anything respecting International Nickel Company. There just does not seem to be any way by which this government can force International Nickel to move. It seems that this company can dupe Cabinet Minister after Cabinet Minister into believing a lot of hogwash.

I make reference to the meeting which the Minister of Mines (Mr. A. F. Lawrence) attended last fall in which he suggested that the coal plant—an issue which I have raised on many occasions in this House—was washed down every Sunday. International Nickel has advised him of this. And yet sitting at that meeting, Mr. Speaker, was a man who worked every Sunday in the coal plant and he kind of sneered when he heard the comments from the Minister, because he said: "I have been in the plant for the last three weeks and it has not been washed once on a Sunday".

But this goes beyond just the Minister of Mines, Mr. Speaker. I want to make reference to another problem which again involves the Minister of The Department of Energy and Resources Management, and I am afraid that he too has been taken in again. Unfortunately some of the Cabinet Ministers are susceptible to this company.

I make reference to a letter dated December 31. It is interesting, Mr. Speaker, when you find out that this problem has now been in existence for over a year and it still has not been rectified, to hear International Nickel's lame excuse, which the Minister accepted, holus-bolus.

Mr. J. R. Simonett, Minister,
Department of Energy and Resources Management

Dear Sir:

During the month of February, 1968, the overflow from a process water reservoir caused a well pollution problem as a result of equipment failure in the iron ore recovery plant. The Villeneuve family was forced to carry their domestic water supply for a distance of one half mile from the time when the problem occurred until about July 1968.

On May 28, 1968, I was advised by the Ontario Water Resources Commission that it had been determined through contact with the International Nickel Company that a complete revamping of all hydraulic systems will be undertaken immediately——to eliminate in future the necessity of having to use the pond for containment of process water in the event of mechanical breakdown, as was done in February 1968.

And the word "immediately" is underlined.

On July 11, 1968, a report by Dr. Vance stated that the International Nickel Company will replace the existing woodstave pipeline to the tailings disposal area with a metal pipeline, and in addition install standby pumping facilities as a precautionary measure. Since December 23, 1968, the holding pond has been overflowing at full capacity—

Overflowing once again.

—at full capacity of the 24-inch overflow pipe. The International Nickel Company did have enough time to install any equipment that would have been necessary to control the overflow. It indicates to me that the recommendations made to the aforementioned firm by the commission have not been followed. I am requesting that immediate steps be taken to ensure the control of the holding pond. Will you please advise me what action will be taken by your department to have an effective overflow in that location.

Well, Mr. Speaker, the Minister replied. I also wrote to him in this matter and he replied to me, and he states:

In reply to your letter of January 14, 1969, I am enclosing a copy of my reply to Mr. Paul Falkowski which contains the information requested in your letter.

Since I have the International Company's assurance that they are proceeding with the required work and that delays presently being encountered arose from a labour dispute rather than any unwillingness on the part of the company to comply with the requirements of the Ontario Water Resources Commission, the suggestion of prosecuting the company seems to be entirely inappropriate.

The members can note from that, that Mr. Paul Falkowski and myself were after some action to force the company to install the pipeline and that the International Nickel Company advised the Minister that it could not be done because of labour disputes involving two unions. This is a lot of nonsense too, Mr. Speaker.

Hon. J. R. Simonett (Minister of Energy and Resources Management): Is the member saying that there was not a labour dispute?

Mr. Martel: I am going to prove that there was not a labour dispute.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): The Minister walked into that one.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Oh, I did not walk into anything.

Mr. Martel: From a letter of January 31, 1969, Mr. Speaker, from Mr. Falkowski to the hon. Minister of Energy and Resources Management:

Honourable Sir:

In reply to your letter of January 16, 1969, I might say that the excuse given for the delay for the completion of the pipeline is not correct.

The Ironworkers and the Pipefitters Union have an agreement regarding handling pipes, which is very clear. I am enclosing a copy of this agreement for your convenience.

I have discussed this matter with the representative of the Ironworkers, Local 786, in Sudbury, and the Pipefitters Union, Local 800, and they know nothing about such a dispute as you have mentioned in your letter.

I did not think that was sufficient, Mr. Speaker, so I suggested to Mr. Falkowski that he get me some correspondence from the unions. I did not think that people might believe Mr. Falkowski and myself, so we went to the unions involved. I have one letter already from one of the unions and it is to Mr. Falkowski, at my request, signed by Mr. R. James, business manager, Local 800, of the United Association of Journeymen and Apprentices of the Plumbing and Pipefitting Industry of the United States and Canada:

Dear Sir:

This will advise that the pipeline in question was installed by members of our union working for the company, McConnell Plumbing and Heating Limited.

Further to this, our relations with this company have been very good, and to date there have been no work stoppages. However, employees of Foundation Company remained home during December 16, 17 and 18, 1968, which employees were working on the company's project at the iron ore plant, Copper Cliff, Ontario.

This action, to my knowledge, in no way interfered with the McConnell pipeline installation.

Mr. Speaker, this one year later, and the excuse we get from the Minister was that there was a union dispute, and yet the unions supposedly involved are not even aware of the dispute. I suggest that, just as with the case of the Minister of Mines when he was advised that they washed down the coal plant every Sunday, with the Minister of Energy and Resources Management this company continues to lead the government down the blind path, and the government accepts it, and it is high time it stopped. They are only making—well, to be quite frank—fools of some people in this House, and if I were a Cabinet Minister I would rather resent it, that a company would make me the goat, so to speak. I think they should be trampled on.

Mr. Speaker, I wanted to leave the company game, and Falconbridge and the whole pollution problem, but unfortunately, as I indicated the last time I was speaking, neither one of these companies in our area has much respect for the people who live in the area. I am hopeful that the Minister of Energy and Resources Management will act in this case I am going to outline, and act immediately, to ensure safe drinking water, should the need arise, from Lake Wahnapiatae or the Wahnapiatae River. There is a great amount of evidence that Emery Creek is polluting the Wahnapiatae River and the future source of water for Sudbury will have to be the Wahnapiatae River and Lake Wahnapiatae.

Our friends in Falconbridge, like our friends in Inco, have no compunction about polluting any area. I know that I have the backing of the member for Sudbury in this matter when it comes to preventing any future pollution of the Wahnapiatae River or Lake Wahnapiatae. I want to outline the stand taken not only by the pollution committee, Mr. Speaker, but by the city of Sudbury. Just to keep the record straight, I do represent a large portion of the city of Sudbury; if people think I am infringing on the member for Sudbury's riding, I do not feel I am. They have written the hon. Minister of Energy and Resources Management the following letter:

Regarding Lake Wahnapiatae, the Sudbury city council and the Sudbury and District Pollution Committee have the desire to have the waters of Lake Wahnapiatae defined as a source of public water supply. It must be protected for the following reasons:

An assured supply of water is an essential requirement for any thriving city. Sudbury is no exception and for over 70 years, Lake Ramsay has been able to meet all the demands placed upon it. However, in the last ten years, it has become apparent that the city was outgrowing the yield of this lake. The key factor in the provision of future water supplies is the determination of the future population. This, in itself, is difficult, since the rate of increase may vary for many reasons. Water consumption per capita is increasing and provision must be made for this in future projections of water demand.

According to a report published by the engineering firm, Gibb, Albery, Pullerits & Dickson, the population of Sudbury within the city limits was 77,500 in the year 1960. In 1965, the population was estimated to be 80,392, and in 1966, the Dominion Bureau of Statistics figure was 85,000. The city planning department has established that the future population which could be accommodated within the present boundary is approximately 185,000. An extension of the present trends of increase indicate that a population of 120,000 might be expected in 20 years, and that the 185,000 population might be reached in the year 2016. The planning for this report has been based on a population of 120,000 in 20 years time.

The present water consumption in Sudbury is estimated to average 69 gallons per day per head, and this is low compared with many cities. In Sudbury as in other cities, the increasing use of automatic domestic equipment is leading to a slowly increasing water consumption. An increase in demand to 82 gallons per head per day in the year 1986 is possible and it may be 90 gallons per head per day in the year 2000.

Therefore, a source for future water supply has to be found. The source, or combination of sources, should be capable of supplying maximum daily demand for extended periods. The quality should be such that any treatment required should be minimal and economical with feasible watershed control.

An examination was carried out of all the watersheds, rivers and lakes that might feasibly be developed as a future source. This also included development of the ground water sources in the northern district of the city. The choice of new sources to supply the city is restricted to either Wahnapiatae Lake or the Wahnapiatae River. Both of these offer the prospect of development, beyond the turn of the century, to the capacity likely to be adequate to the needs of Sudbury.

In general, the waters in this area are of good quality and it is desirable to meet present-day standards in the Ontario Water Resources Commission objectives for water quality. In order that such a supply of water may be provided for human consumption, it is necessary that the pollution of the source is restricted. However, since human consumption requires the highest quality of water of all other uses, it is the water supply authority which must exercise control.

From reports of occasional high iron content, one phenol content at high concentration and the appearance of green water in Bowlins Creek, it would appear that there may be an intermittent industrial activity in need of elimination.

Emery Creek, which is a tributary of the Wahnapiatae River is the receiving stream for the industrial wastes produced by the operations in the Falconbridge area.

The construction of the proposed iron ore recovery plant along with the associated sulphur plant will produce two new waste streams and the Wahnapiatae River will be the receiving stream.

Most trees and buildings in the area around Bowlins Bay are covered with a layer of red dust which is the product in the operation of the Falconbridge Nickel Mines and it finds its way airborne with the wind, to the areas of Lake Wahnapiatae.

I have reason to believe that this dust has a low sulphur content and in my opinion, it should not enter into the water shed that may be the future source of water supply for the city of Sudbury. In fact, it should not enter any body of water. Therefore, the future water supply for the Sudbury area has to be protected from any damaging activity that may impair the present water quality.

New industrial plants should be planned and constructed in such a way that the effluents will not impair the quality of the water of the receiving stream. Existing, operating industrial establishments must receive instruction from the Ontario Water Resources Commission to install water pollution control equipment and meet a certain time limit to control the industrial effluent.

In short, the discharge process water of any industrial installation must be of good quality in order to prevent impairment of water quality of the receiving stream.

It is important, in my opinion, that the waters in Lake Wahnapiatae be protected from any damaging activity.

The Department of Lands and Forests advise me, on May 28, 1968, that the remaining Crown land with water frontage on Lake Wahnapiatae has been withdrawn from further dispossession.

The Sudbury city council was concerned and passed two resolutions with the desire to have the waters of the water shed of Lake Wahnapiatae and the Wahnapiatae River protected from any damaging activity that may impair the water quality.

I have discussed this matter with the officials in the Ontario Water Resources Commission and they advise me that it will be impractical to define Lake Wahnapiatae as a source of public water supply under section 28 of the Ontario Water Resources Commission Act, because there are other interests involved. If the other interests involved happen to be Falconbridge Nickel, this is unfortunate, but they are going to have to control the pollution.

They are going to have to clean up and not, as this report, I read at great lengths, on the Copper Cliff industrial wastes or the one respecting Falconbridge Nickel Mines, which says, they should clean up. Mr. Speaker, I cannot agree with that bit that they should clean up. I am saying they must clean up and I think it is high time that this government told them exactly the same thing.

To listen to the malarkey that was batted around the last time I spoke on this matter, that—you know—"what do you want to do, close them down?" Well, that is just about as silly as an argument you can find anywhere. Companies making the fabulous profits that they are making are not going to close down because they have to clean up a little pollution. But, they will delay it as long as possible by using threats and any other type of method to control government.

It is unfortunate the government does not control them. One official stated, and I am quoting again from the Ontario Water Resources Commission:

If the city wants to have Lake Wahnapiatae defined as a source of public water supply then they should do it by themselves and notify us. We will then come to Sudbury and decide, at a public meeting, whether it is practical or not.

Well, the city of Sudbury did that, Mr. Speaker. They advised the Sudbury and district pollution committee of the resolution they passed on November 26, 1968 and also, one on August 6, 1968. The one they addressed to the Ontario Water Resources Commission reads as follows:

The following resolution No. 68-646 was passed by city council at a meeting held November 26, 1968. That this council requests the Ontario Water Resources Commission to take steps immediately to protect the waters of the watershed of Lake Wahnapiatae and the Wahnapiatae River from any pollutants from industrial sources with immediate attention being directed to the Emery Creek watershed.

Now, as far as I know, nothing has been done on this and that was November 26. Well, that is just about three months and we never seem to be in too much of a hurry to disturb the industrial giants of the north. We just let them keep going their merry way. Well, I do hope, Mr. Speaker, that the Minister who has listened to this today will do something about this and do something about it immediately.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I would like to leave International Nickel and Falconbridge for the time being anyway and go on to another topic involving another Minister.

In fact, I have got four or five lined up for the afternoon. I hope they stay around.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to talk about the Sudbury housing authority. I do so because I want to set the record straight which was something I attempted to do, but I am afraid I did not get much assistance from the local news media in my area. Quite understandable!

On October 30 or thereabouts, I issued a press release regarding six couples who were living in two-bedroom unit houses under the Sudbury housing authority and none of these couples had children. In Sudbury there are approximately 200 families waiting for two-bedroom units of which there are approximately 20 in number.

Before I issued this release I had done a considerable amount of investigation. I was concerned with how six couples were in two-bedroom units without children and that the same situation prevailed in the three-bedroom units. I also wanted to know how these people acquired these facilities.

I contacted a variety of people and as a result of my questioning, I came across quite a few names of people who had occupied three-bedroom units and who seem to have been placed in them rather quickly. These people I then contacted personally. They were willing to discuss the matter quite frankly and I learned some interesting facts.

One gentleman in question had returned from Sault Ste. Marie and a banker was living in his house and when he suggested he needed his home the banker said, "Well, I cannot find a place to go. If I could get you into the Sudbury housing authority would this be acceptable" and the gentleman in question said "Certainly." So, through a telephone call he was able to acquire a three-bedroom unit for this man in question.

I want to come back to this question in a few minutes because you are going to see some of the red "herrings" that were run across the stage, Mr. Speaker, in order to cover up the real issue involved here.

When this appeared in the newspaper, luckily several people phoned me long distance to advise me that they too, had received three-bedroom units under similar circumstances. If you had a connection in the right place, you could get a house in one or two days. In fact, these people are so disturbed about it that they are willing to come back to Sudbury and swear an affidavit.

But they did in fact, get a house in from one to two or three days. And I can show you, Mr. Speaker, that they were the ones that contacted me by long distance call.

Well, after checking this far, I then decided to approach the Housing Authority's manager. But, before doing so, I outlined the situation to a prominent Liberal, in the city of Sudbury, and because there was no connection between him and myself, I asked him if he would phone the—

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Martel: Yes, prominent—but anyway, this man consented to phone the manager of the Housing Authority and he used the names which I had given to him, to determine if these people were in fact, in these six homes, and yes, they were.

So then I checked with the manager, myself. Well, Mr. Speaker, the manager told me that the reason the people got in was that there were a certain amount of pressure exerted on him. I really do not know if that is true or not; it is really immaterial, the fact is that people were getting in and in rather strange ways.

Just to show you, Mr. Speaker, the type of people that were not getting in, I had a family phone me; they had ten children, and two of them are confined to wheelchairs. They lived in one room in the basement—10 by 14 ft. They ate and slept in that one room.

They applied to the Sudbury Housing Authority, Mr. Speaker, and their application was in over one year ago and they did not get in.

Well this is all gone by, Mr. Speaker, so I want to straighten the record out. When this matter was raised the chairman of the Sudbury Housing Authority, one Mr. Barbeau, started to throw in the red herring to hide the real issue. In his newspaper reply, and I want to read an excerpt from it, he states:

Mr. Martel mentioned a businessman who returned from the Sault and his bank manager called the housing manager and got a house for him. He did not mention that the man was a union organizer and that as soon as the board found out about it he was asked to leave, and did so.

Well, Mr. Speaker, I never said he was any kind of man, because this was not the issue.

The issue was the man got in. But this was just one of the red herrings thrown in. You know: "He was a union man and this bird Martel did not want to let anyone know, so he turned businessman."

Well this was not the case at all, Mr. Speaker. Throughout the entire matter, just for the record, I did not disclose any names of anyone because I did not feel that I would want it known who these people were. So I was right!

But this is the type of red herring.

Another interesting thing, Mr. Speaker: The one New Democrat who happened to sit on the board found out that this gentleman, this union man was in the house, and she was the one that asked him to leave. But this does not happen when other people are involved.

Well then, Mr. Speaker, the game really got interesting. Out of the five families, three had to have separate bedrooms according to the doctors, for a variety of reasons. It turned out that one had a heart disease and had to have a separate bedroom; and one was a cripple and had to have a separate bedroom. But I checked with specialists in the Sudbury area, Mr. Speaker. I consulted a variety of specialists in the Sudbury area to find out if this was the case. What type of disease makes it imperative that a husband and wife have a different bedroom?

Well one of the specialists—and by the way one of the specialists, Mr. Speaker, has just received quite an appointment by the Conservative government so he was just telling the truth—stated to me that it was a disgrace that any doctor in Ontario would fill out a form saying that a husband and wife would have to have separate bedrooms.

He said even in the case of infectious diseases, such as tuberculosis, they could share the same bedroom. He said that if the infectious disease was so bad that it necessitated separate bedrooms then the one with the infectious disease would be in the hospital.

But this is the type of red herring, Mr. Speaker, that we got from the chairman of the housing authority in Sudbury as they tried to cover up this sham.

But then he let it out of the bag, Mr. Speaker. In the same article, he states:

The team from the Ontario Housing Corporation has examined each allegation. There will be a new manager soon, and we hope the new broom will sweep clean.

Well, the manager is now gone, but the local newspaper certainly was not adverse to picking up this sort of tidbit, Mr. Speaker, because the editorial page the very next night, the very next day, says: "Storm Over Public Housing Due to Poor Communication."

Indeed—it says—it might have saved the socialist member from some small embarrassment had he discovered the man for whom the bank manager got a house was the union organizer.

Well they were correct to pick up that tidbit, Mr. Speaker. The interesting thing was I had interviewed the man who had been ejected from the house, so I knew who he was. But as I say the local paper was quick to pick up the tidbit.

The whole matter would be the proverbial tempest in the teapot but for the importance in present-day Sudbury for strict adherence to the rules in allocating public housing. The city's serious housing shortage is bound to create stress and demands upon public officials from every level. To make a political football out of the housing authority will not accommodate any new family, but can only aggravate the distress of those in need.

Well, Mr. Speaker, again the Sudbury Star was 'way out on a limb.

It was not my intention to give false hope, what I was attempting to do was to ensure that people who are entitled to housing had it and to discover if political favours or gimmickry could not be used to get someone a house. This was what was going on.

It is interesting to note, Mr. Speaker, that of the six names that were given to the Sudbury Housing Authority, three are going to be kicked out and two moved out without giving the housing authority notice; just up and moved out. They knew they were wrong. But as I say the Sudbury Star was quick to pick it up.

When these people moved out without giving notice I feel it pretty well indicated what means were used in this matter. Well then I tried to straighten this matter out. The story that was written by the reporter never did make it to the newspaper.

The real reason, Mr. Speaker, that such a situation can exist in Ontario or in Canada, is that we just do not have enough houses. We have the Tories blaming the Liberals federally; the federal Liberals blaming the Tories provincially; and out of it all nobody gets any houses.

Mr. P. D. Lawlor (Lakeshore): We are not going to get any from Hellyer either.

Mr. Martel: No!

We have several task forces running around the countryside. Everyone knows the problem, Mr. Speaker; there are not enough houses. So we go out and build some; it is as simple as that. But it does not seem that simple to the Tories or to the Liberals that you go out and build houses.

Mr. G. A. Kerr (Halton West): It is really not that simple.

Mr. Martel: Oh, it really is!

As long as you are not out in the cold it is not simple, but I have a family right now, Mr. Speaker, living in a bus—an old bus. Rather expensive—$30 a month just to heat the bus.

Mr. J. W. Snow (Halton East): It is a mobile home.

Mr. Martel: It might be mobile, but it is not very conducive to little children. That smuggery is just the type of thing you expect from the right—in this case the left, but the right type of Parliament.

Now Mr. Speaker, I want to go on to another case. It is unfortunate the Minister of Lands and Forests (Mr. Brunelle) is not here, because I have about 30 letters in this one case on which I have been trying to get the Minister to come around to my way of thinking; but it is rather difficult. He did at the beginning, but now he has recanted and is no longer willing to make the same move that he made last fall.

Mr. and Mrs. Napoleon Dumont, of Warren, are beekeepers. They have worked hard and invested a considerable amount of money in establishing their apiaries.

In June of this year evidence indicated that there would be a very large bear population around Warren. To beekeepers, bears mean trouble. The Dumonts sought out The Department of Lands and Forests officials in the North Bay detachment to ascertain how they might protect their nine apiaries, which are spread out on their fields and the fields of their farmer friends. It was evident that they would need assistance to protect their apiaries, and to their request the following communication was sent:

As a result of our recent discussion in North Bay we have examined your problem and conclude that there will be no difficulty in your carrying a gun in your truck in travelling to and from your beeyards, or in shooting bear in defence of your bees, providing the following conditions are adhered to:

1. No person shall have a loaded firearm in or on, or discharge the same from, a motor vehicle.

2. During the period from one half hour after sunset to one half hour before sunrise, i.e. the hours of darkness, a gun must be encased in an area in which game inhabit.

3. Bears should be killed only in defence of your property and you should have permission of the owners of the property on whose land your bees are located. This is necessary since those tourist outfitters who guide and board spring bear hunters also have a right to a livelihood.

If these rules are followed there will be no problem with enforcement officers.

That was the first in a series of letters, Mr. Speaker, and throughout the summer the Dumonts took a severe beating as a result of the bears. In fact, over a three-month period their losses came to in the neighbourhood of $6,400. All this time they tried to get The Department of Lands and Forests to issue them some document which would give them the authority to hire a hunter, but the department did not see fit to allow them to hire a hunter. On September 6, after the losses had mounted considerably, the Dumonts again wrote The Department of Lands and Forests, only this time in Toronto, and it is addressed:

Department of Lands and Forests,
Parliament Buildings,
Toronto, Ontario.

Dear Sirs:

We are requesting that a bounty be placed on bear in this farming area and/or a subsidy be paid for the damages done to crop and livestock by these animals.

We realize the tourist trade and the livelihood of the outfitters and guides would be seriously affected, but some common sense should be used in certain areas.

We lose part of our livelihood in feeding the bears and paying for a licence to kill the bears that are taking our crops, stock and honey, and all this so the tourist can hunt bear and the government get fees from the licences. No matter which way you look at it we lose and have to pay.

In the St. Charles, Noelville, Hagar, Verner and Warren area you have farms, crops, livestock, beekeepers, who rely on their crops and stock for their livelihood.

Battling the elements is sufficient problem without having to continually worry about the damage being done by the bears.

We request some intelligent consideration and immediate action.

The Dumonts followed this up on September 11 with a letter to the Ontario Department of Agriculture and Food:

Dear Sirs:

Our problems with marauding bears are mounting. We moved to the Warren area to relieve the congested southern Ontario areas, only to find at the peak of the honey season, we were plagued with bears classed as "game animals". The American tourist licence is $101 and the outfitters and guides are making a good living, while farmers and beekeepers lose their shirts. Cattle, pigs, grain and honey (30 colonies as of this a.m.), bees and equipment are lost.

Anticipating a problem, we went to see The Department of Lands and Forests in June and had quite a fight to get a letter with permission to kill bear in defence of our bees. This letter was so worded that the only time we could actually kill them was when we could not find them. The Department of Lands and Forests have made a pretence of helping us but since we obtained their assistance we have lost another 11 colonies.

A petition was sent to The Department of Lands and Forests requesting a bounty and/or a subsidy for our loss which now stands——at $2,705.10. The OPP in Warren have many reports of damage, and have seen ours, but appear unable to help us due to the game laws. A councilman and a noted veterinarian, Dr. Seguin, arranged for the newspaper to get the story but the attitude is apathetic in this area regarding the farmer.

And this was on December 11—

If the persons in authority are only interested in those having fun and the outfitters making money while the farmers lose their shirts keeping the bears fat for the kill, then the farmers should be subsidized.

I am sending a copy of this to the Ontario Department of Agriculture, Parliament Buildings, Toronto, and trust that some intelligent action will be forthcoming soon. Battling the elements is sufficient problem without having continually to lose to marauding bears.

Here is a copy of the letter which had been given to the Dumonts and which allowed them to partially protect their property:

To Whom it May Concern:

Mr. Napoleon Dumont, unable to protect all his apiaries against the attacks of bears, has accorded me as his agent in the protection of his property and with permission of the farmer involved.

That was September 13, 1968. By September 16, 1968, the Dumonts finally had a reply from The Department of Lands and Forests.

Mr. Napoleon Dumont,
Warren, Ontario.

Dear Sir:

Your petition dated September 5 regarding a request for a bounty on bear has been received at this office for acknowledgement.

The bounty system, including the bounty on wolves, has never demonstrated that it effectively reduces the population of any species. The number of bear killed each year is numbered at 1,000 to 1,500 animals. This is without a bounty system. You would have to pay for all of these animals under a bounty system before having one more animal taken than we now have.

It is difficult for us to state the actual value of a bear to the tourist industry but we have records which range from $100 to $500 for one bear. In addition, we have records of an average pelt value of $21.04 with large prime hides bringing as much as $75 on the North Bay Fur Market.

There is one factor that you and other bee-keepers may have overlooked, and this is the right provided in The Game and Fish Act for a person to destroy a bear by any means at any time in preservation of his property. There appears to be a higher population of bear being experienced throughout Ontario this year. We do not favour the establishment of a bounty on bear for the above reasons.

Yours very truly,
C. H. D. Clarke, Chief,
Fish and Wildlife Branch.

And then two days later, the Dumonts were very fortunate—they got a letter from The Department of Agriculture:

Dear Mr. Dumont:

From time to time, we have reports from beekeepers in some parts of the province that they have suffered losses of colonies from damage done by bears. It is my understanding that there has been little or no difficulty in having bears hunted down and destroyed.

This, of course, is a relatively easy matter in areas such as Grey, Victoria and Hastings counties where such trouble has been caused and where the bear population is low. I suspect that in your vicinity the bear population would be relatively high, and therefore you would have greater incidence of such trouble.

You did not mention in your letter as to whether you had tried some form of electric fencing around your apiary. This may be very helpful in deterring the bears, but I understand it is almost essential to have the fence set up and operating before the beeyard is established. A width of chicken-netting type wire could be placed along the outside of the fence and connected to the fence grounding system to improve the ground.

I have heard that the beekeepers in British Columbia set up electric fences with a minimum of wire and coat the live wire with animal fat. The bear is attracted to this material, and of course when it contacts the wire it gets a severe jolt.

It could also be of some assistance to you to locate your apiaries close to buildings and away from direct contact with the bush, as the bears would be less inclined to invade an apiary in such a location.

Members can see this is very helpful to these people. All of this is very, very helpful, but you know, the losses continue to mount.

Then on September 18 they got another letter, this one from H. E. McGill, livestock commissioner, Department of Agriculture and Food:

Dear Sir:

This will acknowledge receipt of your letter advising of the damage that has been caused by bears in your area. As I am sure you realize, the matter of paying a bounty has been the responsibility of The Department of Lands and Forests. I can assure you, however, that we will look into this matter and give consideration to your request.

When the Dumonts received these three letters—which were all very helpful—within two days, they decided it was time to write a few more letters, and this one they wrote to the editor of the North Bay Nugget:

Dear Sir:

We find the controversy arising out of the damage caused by bear in the Warren area rather disturbing.

For those of you receiving a weekly or monthly income, it is surely difficult for you to understand that the farmer relies on his crops and livestock for his "bread and butter".

An outfitter and guide recently made a remark concerning a registered trapper, in our area, that killed five bear in a farmer's corn field. The remarks of "wholesale slaughter" and "murder" that were made, were asinine and no thought was given to what the farmer had lost. Even the most naive, inexperienced citizen must realize what five bear could do to a corn field.

The tourist outfitters and guides make their living lodging and guiding people who "kill for kicks". They have a lot of fun killing bear, deer, moose and sometimes each other. We don't want to kill for fun, but to have a bounty placed on bear to protect our very living. We like to eat; we have children that go to school, have bills to pay and depend on our crops to get the money for these things.

The Department of Lands and Forests have made a pretence of helping us. We have been offered an abundance of platitudes and sympathy, but the attitude toward the farmer in this area is one of apathy, so no real constructive consideration or action is taken.

Surely in this vast northern region there is some person of authority who can do something to protect us; surely they are not all just "pen pushers" and "buck passers." We want consideration and constructive action and we don't really care what department can give it. An intelligent control on bear in farming communities would be the answer.

You have a bounty on wolf, and bears can do just as much damage as wolves, when overpopulated. This is predominantly a farming area, so would an intelligent person wielding authority, who is not just a "pen pusher," please step forward.

Then on September 21 the Dumonts took the trouble to write to The Department of Agriculture and Food again:

Dear Sir:

The Department of Lands and Forests have ignored the petition of the farmers in this area—who are a majority—in favour of a minority group, tourist outfitters and guides, who lodge tourists who kill bear, deer, moose, and sometimes each other for fun. We have received an abundance of platitudes, sympathy, statistics, (as to why the tourist trade is so important) and inanities.

The Canadian farmer is, according to all departemnts, of no concern. The word "subsidy" is completely ignored. We must fatten the bear for the tourist, give up our living for the tourist trade, but no one wants to pay for it.

This is a populated area, so the bear attack after dark when, of course, you are not permitted to kill them. We can't patrol nine apiaries and are not permitted to have responsible assistants aid us at night when the bears are attacking.

It appears the governmental departments want to have their cake and eat it too; no bounty, no subsidy, no progress in farming, no intelligent action whatsoever.

Any assistance you can afford us will be sincerely appreciated. You know, it has become so bad in this area where the different departments are concerned that the farmer feels there is no one to turn to.

On the same day Mrs. Dumont also wrote another letter to The Department of Lands and Forests:

Dear Sirs:

Re your letter of the 16th instant. This is predominantly a farming area and the tourist outfitters and guides are a minority group. As of this date we have lost $6,354.60 so we are no longer amused by statistics referring us to the tourist trade, as we are Canadians attempting to make a living in our country as farmers.

We have nine registered apiaries and are unable to be in all of them at the same time and cannot have assistants, as the bears attack at night when the farmers, tractors and dogs are all asleep.

If we have to fatten the bear for the tourists to kill, then subsidize our loss or give us permission to have other responsible persons assist us in protecting some of our nine apiaries at night when they are being attacked.

Mr. Speaker, this is the crux of the whole matter. Either these people be subsidized or they be allowed to have someone to help them track down these marauders.

The Dumonts came to see me after this and I contacted the Minister. I was in one day and the Minister had seen to it that the Dumonts received permission to engage hunters to protect their property. Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, this only lasted until the end of 1968. For now, in 1969, once again the old runaround starts. The Dumonts cannot have permission to hire someone to protect their apiaries at night, which are spread over nine fields. They are to contact the department when trouble arises.

What I want to know, Mr. Speaker, is who is going to pay the Dumonts this year? And why can they not hire? It was okay to do it last year after they had lost $6,000 worth of bees and so on. Why the reluctance on the part of the Minister concerned to give these people the same permission which he granted to them last September? Yet he refuses to budge on the matter.

Mr. Speaker, I could go on at great lengths on this. I have another 20 letters in this case and I was hopeful that the Minister would be around, and maybe he would break down and sign one little document for these people, saying that they could engage hunters to protect their property. I hope one of the Cabinet Ministers across on the other side has a heart and will come to the assistance of these people.

Mr. Speaker, I want to move on to another topic. We, in this party, have for years been advocating the need to develop the north. The extraction industries, Mr. Speaker, do not provide an adequate return on tax dollars to the north to provide the amenities enjoyed in the south. Extraction industries do not provide sufficient employment for our young, and consequently, they must, too, come south, along with the raw material, and as a result we lose both our natural resources and our human resources, and somewhere it must be stopped.

There seems to be no end in sight, however, to this flow southward, and there is a refusal on this government's part to get involved in sound economic planning and development. Mr. Speaker, northerners are getting more fed up than ever before. This was obvious in the election a little over a year ago, but was brought home more clearly last fall when a committee was set up to study the feasibility of forming an eleventh province.

Mr. G. Demers (Nickel Belt): Oh, not that again!

Mr. Martel: It is unfortunate, Mr. Speaker, that the member for Nickel Belt would not once in a while get up and speak, rather than make a comment from his chair.

Mr. Demers: We were doing pretty well.

Mr. Martel: I have been in the House for a year, Mr. Speaker, and this gentleman across the way has not opened his mouth once yet, except for an interjection.

Mr. Demers: Because you have not closed yours.

Mr. Martel: They have a lineup, Mr. Speaker, and if he wants to get in all he has to do is to get on. But he might have to work—

Mr. Demers: Talk is cheap! Show us results.

Mr. Martel: Mr. Speaker, I might say that at that meeting in Timmins there were some rather prominent Tories from the north in attendance, whether the member from across the floor wants to admit it or not.

Mr. Demers: Not very bright ones.

Mr. Martel: Well, I do not think there are very many bright ones anywhere.

Mr. Demers: Let him show us what he has achieved.

Mr. E. W. Sopha (Sudbury): Martel for Lieutenant Governor.

Mr. Martel: I sat, Mr. Speaker, and listened with interest several months ago as the member for Sudbury detailed what was happening to the north. I concurred with him in the fact that the government was sitting on its hands and not helping to remedy the matter. What intrigues me in this, Mr. Speaker, is that his own party is doing the same thing at the federal level. The continental system had its greatest ally in C. D. Howe, and neither major party is willing to get involved in developing Canada for future generations of Canadians. Like the housing situation, each is willing to point an accusing finger at the other in order to cover up its own pathetic efforts to retain the resources and the wealth of Canada for its citizens. If the member for Sudbury is as concerned for Ontario and Canada as he claims to be, then he is certainly with the wrong party, for it is the New Democratic Party which has advocated development consistently.

Mr. R. Gisborn (Hamilton East): Hear, hear!

Mr. Martel: If private capital is not going to get involved in developing secondary industry in northern Ontario, then, as we have stated all along, the government must do so through Crown corporations. Some people besides the New Democrats are starting to realize this need, Mr. Speaker, and I would like to quote an extract from a speech by a rather prominent Ontarian, who has realized that what we in the New Democratic Party have been advocating is probably the solution to the problem.

Mr. Kerr: Branch plant economy.

Mr. Martel: Would the member just mention his name so that she will know who is talking.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Martel: Mr. Speaker, I will quote from the speech, and one of the portions says:

The answer lies in planned political and administrative decisions aimed at determining the form and character northern development should take. Northern development should not be left entirely in private hands. We have to put behind us our unwarranted fear of co-ordinated planning and consider the long-term interests of the people concerned and develop the north as a whole region.

The availability of capital is frequently noted as another significant problem. The financial and administrative infrastructure necessary to large-scale, capital-intensive resource industries is largely located in the cities of southern Ontario, particularly Toronto. The "equalization of opportunity" grants of the Ontario Development Corporation cover all of northern Ontario except those areas covered by federal assistance programmes.

Established manufacturers who wish to expand are quite interested in this programme. However, few manufacturers in industries other than those already established in the north express interest in these incentives. This seems to be inconsistent with the view that capital is a problem, and suggests a need to explore this further. I do know, however, that capital available for tourist industry development is less than satisfactory. A related problem, which we have noted, is that, while most large companies in the north have aggressive management, many medium and smaller companies lack the initiative to seek out new products and new market opportunities.

Mr. Speaker, a little later on this same writer asks:

Where do we go from here? Canada is not the only country facing this challenge. Sweden and Russia, with similar problems, have taken bold steps to stimulate northern development and provide adequate living conditions for northern settlers. The developments by our European and Asian counterparts give us an indication of how successful they can be when properly handled.

No doubt each province has certain programmes that are aimed at stimulating northern development, some of which include rural and regional development. But what is lacking is a co-ordinated attack on the problem of Canada's north. The first step for legislators concerned with this problem is to decide that we really want to develop our north.

Mr. Speaker, contrary to what the member for Nickel Belt says, we have not decided what we have really determined, and this writer is quite determined. It is interesting to note, Mr. Speaker, that the writer, and the gentleman who made this speech, is none other than the hon. Minister of Lands and Forests (Mr. Brunelle), to the Canadian Council of Resource Ministers, October 9, 1968. So you see, Mr. Speaker, that contrary to what the member from Nickel Belt said, the Cabinet Minister from the north is aware of what has to be done even if he does not know.

Mr. MacDonald: It is a good statement of NDP policy.

Mr. Martel: Now, what can be done?

An hon. member: Well, take it from the source.

Mr. MacDonald: He is taking it from the source.

Mr. Martel: Mr. Speaker, this was borrowed directly. I can recall when the Tories, when we even mentioned Crown corporations, were inflamed at the prospect of a Crown corporation, and now we have a Minister of the Crown advocating it. Have we been right all along, and the government wrong?

Mr. I. Deans (Wentworth): Yes. Progress.

Mr. Martel: Oh, the member's thinking is getting straightened out now.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Martel: I did not hear the member's comment, Mr. Speaker, so I will not answer it.

Mr. Speaker, there are studies being made which indicate the types of industry that we can develop in the north. I am just going to quote a few, by the way, from a Conservative document again—maybe an enlightened one; there do not seem to be very many, but maybe an enlightened one. He indicates some of the types of industry that could be developed if this government had a desire to do so. We could start out with the development of the complete complex around the copper and nickel industry in the Sudbury basin or we could do it around Timmins or in other areas. We smelt a little bit and we ship it out. But the complete development—

Mr. W. Newman (Ontario South): Yes, and the member wants to tax them all out of business.

Mr. Martel: The complete development—that is what we are interested in—in the north for the northerners.

This report by Sawchuk and Peech, Mr. Speaker, indicates some of the types of light industry that could be done; those concerned with canning, freezing, dehydrating, refining, extracting, salting, concentrating, or in short, all operations devoted to the preservation and processing of agricultural products including packaging, storage and shipping. He goes on to secondary light industry:

Refrigeration; warehousing; special storage facilities for agricultural products; construction and building industry; farm machinery; service repair; rental and contracting industries; wholesale and storage of domestic commercial and industrial supplies; cleaning; growth industries such as the electrical, chemical and plastic industries; industries liable to demonstrate healthy and stable growth by virtue of the application of the latest production techniques; those industries aimed at filling production gaps in Canadian industry by the production of goods for which there is a high and rising demand and which are presently, and more importantly, imported—such as iron products, wool and textile products and agriculture.

And you notice he says rather than import let us start developing some of our own in the areas and from the materials which we have at our disposal.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I want to get to a rather serious problem, a very short but rather serious problem, involving the doctor shortage in northern Ontario.

I read with interest some of the comments and suggestions by the Minister of Health over the Christmas recess and how they hope to solve the shortage. I do not have too much hope, Mr. Speaker, but we could bring in some European doctors. With this in mind I discussed this matter with four or five European doctors in the Sudbury area to see what they felt was necessary in order that more European doctors come to Canada.

The first thing that we could recommend the government could do is provide the funds necessary, let us say, to bring up to 200 doctors to Canada and to house them while they do their internship.

The second area that the government could get involved in would be in relation to the internship itself. Many European doctors come to Canada and they have to practice a two year internship. Most of them agree that there is some change from Europe to here, but they all felt that within six to eight months they had made the adjustments to our Canadian system. And so, Mr. Speaker, we could cut down the internship to maybe six months; an intense six months, and then for the next six months, Mr. Speaker, we could put them into a practice. We would put them into a practice with a practicing Ontario doctor. Then they would learn to handle the forms for the various insurance companies and so on. Instead of having a two year internship, Mr. Speaker, we could have a one year internship.

Because we had reduced the internship, Mr. Speaker, and because we paid to bring them here, then we would have a right to put them in an area where we need them for three to five years. This is the agreement they would come under. I am told by at least four or five European doctors that they would much rather have come that way than the way they did come, where they had to do two years internship at almost no salary, and for the next three or four years they found things very difficult.

I would hope the Minister would consider discussing this with the college of physicians, if that is who it takes to make this change; and that the internship could be divided into two phases, the first six to eight months a crash programme of familiarization and the second, possibly four or five months, practicing with a doctor to learn the proper terminology and so on. Then we have the right to direct where they will go for three to five years.

I feel, Mr. Speaker, that as a result of this we would probably bring in many doctors to serve the areas in the north where there are no doctors for anywhere for 100 to 200 miles.

We presented this, Mr. Speaker, just as a test, to one European doctor from France. He certainly thinks the idea is a good one and would be willing to come to Canada and to Ontario and go through this procedure and be at our disposal as to where we would send him for a period of three to five years.

I do hope the Minister takes this into consideration. If he does not I will make every effort to appear before the House committee to present the idea there.

Mr. R. K. McNeil (Elgin): Mr. Speaker, in rising to take part in this Throne Debate I would first of all like to congratulate you, sir, on the excellent manner in which you are carrying out your duties as Speaker. I realize that at times it is difficult to control some of our actions as members, particularly when the interjections are being hurled across the floor. But, sir, you have always ruled this House in a very fair and commendable manner.

I would also like to congratulate the hon. member for Waterloo South (Mr. Reuter) on being renamed chairman of the whole House. He carried out his duties effectively last year and I know that he will continue to do so again during this session.

I also, sir, take this opportunity to congratulate the hon. member for London South (Mr. White) on his promotion to Cabinet. With his years of experience in the business field as well as the years of experience which he has had in this House, I know that he will carry out the duties as the Minister of Revenue in a very capable manner.

Then too, Mr. Speaker, while I am handing out bouquets, I would like to congratulate the hon. member for York South (Mr. Macdonald) on being re-elected leader of the New Democratic Party. I do not often agree with the hon. member for Riverdale (Mr. Renwick), but I would have to agree with a statement that he made during their leadership campaign to the effect that it would be impossible for the member for York South to lead the socialists to power in the next election.

I would like also to congratulate the hon. member for Prescott and Russell (Mr. Belanger) on his excellent contribution to the speech in moving the Speech from the Throne and also the hon. member for Fort William (Mr. Jessiman) in seconding the Speech from the Throne.

In the—

Mr. E. W. Martel (Sudbury East): Who wrote them for the hon. members?

Mr. McNeil: Pardon? I do not know. I did not.

In the redistribution of 1933, the riding of Elgin was first organized, Mr. Speaker, and in 1967 three municipalities from the county of Norfolk were added to the original Elgin riding. It is rather interesting to note, Mr. Speaker, that the riding of Elgin is the first riding in Ontario where a secret ballot was used. The date was August 6, 1874, the occasion a byelection. In it the ballot was used instead of the old system of open voting which had prevailed even longer than old timers could remember under which a qualified elector stepped up to the hustings and publicity announced his choice.

It is rather interesting too, Mr. Speaker, to read the comments of the St. Thomas Despatch, which was a local paper published in the city of St. Thomas, and they quoted as follows:

We never favoured vote by ballot but now that it has become law it must be carried out and every voter who has learned to make the sign of the cross or to set up a rail fence may understand how to mark his ballot. At the poll a blank ballot is presented to him with names of the candidates within separate cross boxes, and at the end of the fence enclosing the name for whom he intends to vote, the elector has only to affix his cross and return his billet doux to the deputy returning officer.

We had imagined that vote by ballot was to do away with all corrupt practices at elections, but the new election law by its numerous clauses provides for detection and punishment of every sort of electoral rascality.

Therefore let every good elector take care to make the sign of the cross.

And they name the Tory candidate, and incidentally, he lost in that election.

I understand now, Mr. Speaker, that this riding is one of the largest tobacco producing ridings in the province of Ontario, and I am happy to be able to report that tobacco is selling at satisfactory prices. In 1968, Canada's flue-cured tobacco crop was estimated at 216 million pounds, of which an estimated 207 million pounds were grown in Ontario, the balance being in Quebec and the Maritimes. In Ontario, the acreage is fixed by the Ontario Flue cured Tobacco Growers Marketing Board. I would like to take this opportunity, Mr. Speaker to congratulate this board on the very excellent manner in which they are handling this commodity.

The sale of the 1967 crop was concluded by March 25, 1968, with about 196 million pounds selling at an average price of 69.8 cents per pound, realizing a total of $135 million. This average price is slightly under the high of 71.3 cents per pound obtained in the 1966 crop.

The present system, Mr. Speaker, is working quite well. I would like to commend the growers and the board, as well as the buyers, on the fact that the system is working so satisfactorily, and I would take this opportunity to wish continued success. The tobacco industry has made, and will continue to make, a great contribution to the economy of this province, particularly in southwestern Ontario.

In November, 1965, the Ford Motor Company announced that it would build a new assembly plant at Talbotville, an announcement that has had, and will continue to have, a very material effect on the growth and development of southwestern Ontario. Later this year another shift of workers will be added to this plant which is one of the most modern automobile assembly plants on the North American continent.

Following the announcement in 1965, a rather significant announcement was made by the government that the Lake Erie pipeline would be built from Lake Erie to the Ford Motor Company, a line that could service the townships of Yarmouth and Southwold, and the city of St. Thomas. Shortly after this announcement, resolutions were received from the townships of Southwold and Yarmouth and the city of St. Thomas, supporting the construction of this important utility, a utility that will have a most marked effect on the development and economy of the whole area.

Since this announcement was made some three years ago, negotiations have taken place between the city of St. Thomas, and the Ontario Water Resources Commission, and last week an agreement in principle was reached between the Minister of Energy and Resources Management and the city of St. Thomas. I would commend all parties for the final agreement which has been made.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. McNeil: If the Opposition paid any attention to the municipal elections that take place in Ontario they would know that we have a new mayor in St. Thomas. Apparently they are not aware of that, so I will inform them. He is a classmate of the hon. member for Halton, so he must be a good man.

I realize that the Ontario Water Resources Commission has a grave responsibility to the people of Ontario, but unfortunately this commission has not created a very favourable image in our area, and I would suggest that the public relations of the said commission could be improved. During these negotiations, approval for subdivisions was withheld for some time, with the result that we now face a serious housing shortage in the St. Thomas area. I am pleased that an agreement has been reached, an agreement which will be favourable to the future growth of St. Thomas and also to the surrounding areas.

Interjections by an hon. member.

Mr. McNeil: Don't worry, we are looking after Elgin, Mr. Speaker, I would like to emphasize the importance—yes, the necessity—of having signed agreements before construction of such extensive and expensive pipelines begins. I hope the experience that happened in this area never occurs again in Ontario. No one can ever estimate the great loss experienced by St. Thomas during this unfortunate episode. A good supply of water is a must for municipal growth and development.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. McNeil: Your leader was misquoting when he spoke about it. I could quote from the London Free Press—

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. McNeil: A good supply of water is a must for municipal growth and development. I would cite another municipality, sir, the village of Port Burwell, which is in need of a good water supply. The OWRC has quoted a price of $280 per household per year for an adequate supply of water. As badly as water is needed for survival, growth and development, it is doubtful if the citizens of this small village can financially support such a programme. It would seem to me that small municipalities such as Port Burwell, and there must be many in this province, need government-financial assistance.

I would urge this government to study and implement some plan of financial assistance for municipalities of this type, that require water and sewage systems. I am pleased that the government has decided to locate a provincial park at Port Burwell where there is one of the best beaches on the north shore. I would urge that this park be developed immediately, with a view to acquiring additional land for expansion, while land is still available at reasonable prices. Recreation is important to our citizens, and one of the responsibilities of a government should be to acquire as much parkland as possible before it is too late to purchase it.

Mr. Speaker, having a riding that is fronted on the south side by Lake Erie, we are losing valuable land into the lake each year through erosion. We have lost a considerable acreage of valuable agricultural and residential land during the last 20 years and it would seem that both the federal and provincial governments should become more interested in this problem. Individual property owners cannot cope with this problem alone, although many have done a commendable job in trying to stop their land from being gulped by the lake. I understand that some work of an experimental nature has been done with respect to old automobile bodies being dumped along the shoreline. If this plan is feasible, what better use could be made of these scrap materials? Surely the time for action with lake erosion is now.

I would like to quote an article from the St. Thomas Times Journal which is entitled:

THE DUST BOWL IN SOUTHWESTERN ONTARIO, NOT SO FARFETCHED AS IT MIGHT SEEM

Soil erosion is a major problem in the Kettle Creek watershed, and unless extensive works to control the problem are carried out, soil loss from agricultural lands can become a very serious economic loss for the county.

Erosion reduces the value of many thousands of acres of farmland each season. Valuable fertile topsoil is lost from the land and deposited as sediment in channels, lakes, reservoirs and harbours. Then costly remedial measures are required.

Erosion may be spectacular in the form of gullies. More often, however, it goes on slowly and almost unnoticed in farm fields. In early spring, the small rills washed out will be easily worked over, but much valuable topsoil has been carried away.

Contouring and strip farming are means of reducing soil erosion and loss of water on sloping land. These, along with grass waterways, improved drainage, and suitable rotation, help maintain and build up the soil.

The soil of the Kettle Creek watershed suffers in varying degrees from erosion by water. The most dramatic examples are along the shores of Lake Erie and along the banks of Kettle Creek itself.

Spectacular erosion occurs along the shore cliff of Lake Erie. Here there are three forces at work, eroding the cliff and inducing encroachment on agricultural land, homes, land and roads. They are: the action of the lake waters at work on the base of the cliff, the seepage of ground water below the top of the cliff, and the effect of the water that runs over the face of the banks. This type of erosion is largely a natural phenomenon and cannot be prevented by vegetative means alone. It would require mechanical devices that would be very expensive.

The area is under the jurisdiction of the federal government and not the local conservation authority.

Some ten years ago, Mr. Speaker, during an election campaign, the citizens of our area were promised a bypass for the city of St. Thomas. A traffic study has since been made in the city and now that the city and county are in agreement as to the location, I would urge the Minister of Highways to start this project immediately. We cannot afford a delay of another ten or even five or three years. St. Thomas has a long main street and the through traffic should be removed from this main artery.

I have urged The Department of Highways to construct night lights at the intersection of numbers 3 and 74 highways. My request has been turned down, and yet some few miles east of this intersection, we have another intersection of county road 38 and number 3 highway being illuminated at night with three lights. The county would have to receive approval from The Department of Highways for this construction, and I can only say, let us have consistency in the procedure and the programme of the department. I have travelled this road a great deal and I think I know what is needed. Let us provide illumination before someone loses a life.

Then, too, we have many other dangerous intersections which have been brought to the attention of the department but the decisions are often too slow and too late.

We have very diversified farming operations in this riding and today farmers are facing a difficult financial position. Our costs of production are mounting each year with increased costs in the purchase of machinery, repairs, fertilizers, seed, labour, interest rates, etc. Our selling costs have remained much the same. As a result the farmer is being forced into larger units, sometimes against his better judgment, in order to remain in business. Farming is one of the few businesses that can be operated year in and year out for several years at a loss, but in time this sort of thing catches up.

Farmers cannot continue to operate at a loss as we have been doing for the past several years. I had hoped that the farm income study would reveal some suitable solutions in January. It did reveal that there is no easy solution to the problems facing agriculture. Today a great deal of capital is required for land, machinery, live stock; and farming today is big business.

In 1966 the average farm investment in Ontario was $56,000, which represents an 80 per cent increase in the last five years. Investments range from $10,000 to as high as $200,000, an increase of 134 per cent since the 1930's. In 1966, only 26 per cent of the farmers of this province grossed over $10,000 and only seven and a half per cent of the farmers grossed $25,000.

In 1930 Canadian farmers produced food for 11 people. In 1967 the Canadian farmer produced enough food to feed 33 people, and the Ontario figure stands at enough food for the farmer plus 40 others.

The commercialization of the family farm in Canada is substituting capital for labour. Increasing the size of the farm business has resulted in a 75 per cent increase in productivity in the last 30 years, yet the latest report of the Economic Council of Canada stated that notwithstanding very significant progress in output per worker in Canadian agriculture, it is still 25 to 30 per cent less efficient than U.S. agriculture.

I would like to quote, Mr. Speaker, from the economic council regarding the agricultural output.

Employment in Canadian agriculture is only half as large as it was two decades ago, according to the council's review, and the gaps between agricultural outputs per worker in the United States and Canada are widening.

Over the same period the volume of farm output was increased by roughly 50 per cent. This has resulted in a tripling of output per worker, as regards labour productivity in the agricultural sector of the economy.

Canada has achieved a rate of growth of labour productivity in agriculture well above that recorded in other sectors of the economy and of roughly comparable dimensions to the rate of growth of agricultural labour productivity in the U.S. The substantial disparity between the two countries in the absolute level of agricultural labour productivity, however, has widened significantly. Mechanization and yield technology have contributed in nearly equal proportions to growth in the U.S. In contrast, Canada has advanced in the area of mechanization, but has not kept pace in yield technology.

The growth rate of labour productivity in Canadian agriculture is about six per cent a year. In terms of net value of production per worker, Canadian farmers produce, on the average, 25 per cent less than U.S. farmers. Two decades ago the gap in output per worker was around $1,000, the council notes, whereas today it is more than $3,000.

The review warns that Canadian farmers will have to step up their productivity growth from about five and half per cent to more than eight per cent a year in order to catch up to U.S. productivity levels by 1990.

The council explains the productivity gap in part by pointing out that machinery input per farm worker in the U.S. has been about 30 per cent higher than in Canada.

Probably a much more important part of the productivity gap between the two countries arises, however, from differences in yield technology in both crop and livestock production. Whereas U.S. farmers spent nearly twice as much on yield technology as on mechanization, Canadian farmers spent more on mechanization than on yield technology.

This suggests that labour productivity in the U.S. has gained more and reached a higher level as a result of more intensive application of yield technology rather than more rapid advances in mechanization.

Mr. Speaker, I feel that farmers must be better trained in the field of farm management and I compliment the government for the assistance it has been giving in this area. We, in Elgin, are very fortunate in the fact that we have an excellent agricultural office well staffed by good personnel, headed by one of the best agricultural representatives in Ontario. They are giving good service to our farmers.

I was pleased to learn that the federal government has reinstated the farm improvement loan. It is a loan that is most valuable to our farmers, although I feel that farmers are being requested and required to pay too high a rate of interest. We, as citizens, should be interested in the production of food, and anything that can be done to assist agriculture will assist the whole population of our country.

One very difficult problem I have faced in my operation and which I feel many farmers are facing today is the problem of obtaining satisfactory farm help. It is difficult for us to compete with industry, even though we may provide some fringe benefits such as housing, because in agriculture we must work longer hours in order to plant and harvest our crops. A 40-hour week is not feasible at planting time or in harvest, and we cannot obtain extra help in order to operate on a shift basis. Our friends across the Chamber may not agree, but there is no way in which a farm can be operated on a 40-hour week. There are advantages to farming such as fresh air, diversity of jobs, and independence, but how long can one live on this sort of thing? Today, agriculture is at the crossroads. Never before since the dirty '30s have farmers faced so many problems and never before has it been so difficult for a young man to enter this field.

Mr. Speaker, as a farmer I am most concerned. I am concerned because I would not encourage any young man to enter the field of agriculture unless he is prepared to work long hours under many discouraging conditions, such as inclement weather, high costs of production, unavailability of machinery repairs, lack of proper farm help, and, in many instances, lack of proper available financial assistance. There are many farmers in southwestern Ontario who are facing financial difficulty through no fault of their own but mainly through the peculiarity of the industry itself.

I do not know of any other business where the best laid plans of men go so often astray. In this business, if the costs of production are high, it is impossible to recover these costs because the selling price is fixed. We in agriculture have been told that we must be more efficient, and farmers down through the years invariably have tried to be efficient operators. We have developed marketing boards which have served us well and are a compliment to many men and women who serve on these boards.

Mr. Speaker, agriculture today in Ontario is facing more problems than it has ever faced in its history. I would appeal to the members of this Legislature to do everything they can to upgrade the position of the farmer of our province.

Mr. Speaker: I wonder if the hon. member is going to go more than two or three minutes.

Mr. McNeil: I think about two minutes, sir, will complete it.

Mr. Speaker: All right.

Mr. McNeil: I have had some complaints regarding the rebate of gasoline tax. Many farmers are now being penalized for assisting their neighbours at the rate of five cents per gallon. I have appealed and will continue to appeal to the Minister of Revenue (Mr. White) to rectify this inequality. I do not hesitate to support any legislation that will help the farmers of our province.

Then, too, why should farmers be held up for considerable lengths of time in receiving their gasoline tax rebates—something which is rightfully theirs? I cannot understand, Mr. Speaker, why their integrity and honesty should be questioned after filing for rebates, when the information being sought is not even included on the rebate form. Let us incorporate some common sense into this gasoline tax refund operation.

Mr. Speaker, I would commend the Minister of Agriculture and Food on the leadership which he has given to this important industry. I know of no more dedicated and sincere man in the Cabinet, and it is one of the most important Cabinet portfolios. We in this province enjoy a very high standard of living because of the efficiency of our farmers.

Mr. Speaker, I have sat in this House for quite a number of years and have had the opportunity of representing a great riding of wonderful people. I have listened to many speakers in the House and have felt that the business of the House is being conducted in a commendable fashion. I must admit that some of the members of the Opposition speak much too long—and I am sorry the member for Sudbury East (Mr. Martel), has left—and offer very little of a constructive nature to the debate. But when one reflects that the people of Ontario have used very sound judgment in the last eight elections, after they read some of the speeches of our friends opposite, I am quite positive that their judgment will be good in the next election when this government will be returned.

Mr. J. B. Trotter (Parkdale) moves the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Speaker: Before the adjournment of the House is moved, the hon. Prime Minister has a correction to make in some information given to the House this afternoon.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, we became a little involved in the fiscal arrangements with the federal government. I was not satisfied myself so I checked it out and perhaps I could set the record straight.

Under The Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements Act, which was passed in 1967 and lasts to 1972, the federal government rebates to us 28 percentage points of personal income tax. Corporation tax is handled separately. The federal government takes 40 per cent of a total of 52 per cent of corporate income tax and we take 12 per cent; but they collect theirs separately and we collect ours separately, so the corporation tax is not involved in The Fiscal Arrangements Act. Of course there is no agreement necessary there. We can raise our rate of tax whenever we wish and to whatever level we want.

Now there is another Act called The Tax Collection Agreement Act and this covers income tax collection arrangements. It was signed on December 19, 1968, and it may be terminated on one year's notice, to expire on December 31 of any year, by the government of Canada. We, provincially, may terminate it by notice up to October 15 to end the agreement on December 31 of the same year. The province may increase the tax rate twice in any calendar year if it so chooses, that is there are two periods in any calendar year when we may increase the personal tax rate. We must give notice to the federal government before October 15 if it is to be increased by January 1, or by April 15 if it is to be increased with the increased payments to start on July 1.

I think this embodies all the information.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): That means that the Budget could announce an increase which would be effective July 1.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Well, the member will have to use this information as he sees fit, I am just placing it before the House.

Hon. Mr. Robarts moves the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to.

The House adjourned at 6:00 o'clock, p.m.

1. Mr. T. Reid (Scarborough East)—Enquiry of the Ministry—

(a) How many science and mathematics teachers are employed at the George Brown College of Applied Arts and Technology? How many of these teachers hold a certificate for teaching from The Department of Education? How many, if any, non-certified teachers are university graduates? Of the remaining teachers, how many have Grade 13?

(b) What are the standards and regulations of The Department of Education concerning the qualifications necessary for persons to be eligible to teach science and mathematics at the colleges of applied arts and technology? Have these regulations been adhered to at the George Brown College of Applied Arts and Technology?

(c) Is it true that person can be appointed a teaching master at George Brown College only if he has at the minimum, an honour degree or an ordinary degree plus trade qualifications? If the answer is yes, are there any masters at George Brown College who do not have these minimum qualifications?

(d) Who are the chairmen of the various teaching departments of the college and what are their academic and professional qualifications?

Answer by the Minister of Education—

1. (a) (c) and (d)—Each college is responsible for the appointment of its own staff. The Department of Education has nothing to do with the number of staff appointed to teach specific subjects, or with their certification, or with other academic or professional qualifications. The colleges are not required to submit to the department the names of staff members nor the positions they hold. In these respects the colleges of Applied Arts and Technology are in the same position as the universities of the province. Requests for information along the lines indicated in the question should be made direct to the institution concerned.

1. (b) The Department of Education does not set standards and regulations for the qualifications of teachers at the Colleges of Applied Arts and Technology. In this respect these institutions are in a similar category to our universities.

2. Mr. T. Reid (Scarborough East)—Enquiry of the Ministry—

(a) Are the Bower-Lambert Scales used in the province of Ontario in the detection of emotionally disturbed children? If not, what criteria are used in the province of Ontario to detect emotionally disturbed children? How many emotionally disturbed children are there in the province of Ontario (excluding such children who are also blind and/or deaf)?

(b) How many of these children are old enough to go to school? How many school-age children are judged to be so disturbed that they have been excluded from regular school classrooms and how many of these children do not receive the special education services of The Department of Education? How many teachers have professional training in what to do for emotionally disturbed children?

(c) How many emotionally disturbed children in Ontario are not old enough to go to school? How many of these children receive in-patient care? How many receive out-patient care? Who pays? How many receive no professional care at all and are isolated at home?

Answer by the Minister of Education—

2. (a) (i) No.

(ii) From the point of view of The Department of Education, a clinical diagnosis is required before a child is referred to as emotionally disturbed.

(iii) Because of the factors involved in classifying a child as emotionally disturbed, it is not possible to secure the figure requested.

(b) (i) The answer to this question would be dependent on the answer to number (a) (iii).

(ii) Children who are excluded from regular school classrooms are placed in special classes for emotionally disturbed unless they require institutional care. As of September 1967, there were 432 children in 48 special classes for emotionally disturbed in the province of Ontario. This does not represent the total number of children receiving special help as many are being given assistance on a part time basis, and others by home instruction.

(iii) Since 1965 and subsequent summers, 160 have completed the special education course offered by The Department of Education in the education of the emotionally disturbed child.

(c) Because of the factors to which reference is made in the answer to 2 (a) (iii) above, and the matter of the legal school age, the figure requested is not available.

3. Mr. T. Reid (Scarborough East)—Enquiry of the Ministry—How many of the 5,159 candidates admitted to Ontario's 13 (elementary school) teachers' colleges during the academic year 1967-68 and the summer session in 1968, had an academic standing of 64 per cent or less on their grade 13 entrance requirements? How many had an academic standing of 80 per cent or more on their grade 13 entrance requirements?

In 1967-68, 6,237 graduates of Grade 13 entered the teachers' colleges. Of this number, 5,135 had a Grade 13 standing of 64 per cent or less and 106 had a standing of 80 per cent or more. In addition, a total of 110 candidates attended the Internship Summer Course in 1968, all of whom had acceptable university degrees.

4. Mr. T. Reid (Scarborough East)—Enquiry of the Ministry—With regard to the Teachers' College Conference at the Lake Couchiching Centre held by the teacher education branch of The Department of Education in June, 1968, which had as its theme "New Directions for the Teacher of Teachers":

(a) What was the length of this conference?

(b) How many persons were in full-time attendance?

(c) How many persons attended for part of the conference only?

(d) What was the total cost of the conference?

(e) What was the age distribution of those who attended?

(f) What was the sex distribution of those who attended?

(g) How many were Department of Education officials? Held administrative appointments at Ontario's 13 teachers' colleges? Were from boards of education? Were full-time teachers at Ontario's 13 teachers' colleges? Were principals of elementary schools? Were from the Ontario Institute for Studies in Education? Were full-time classroom teachers in elementary schools?

Answer by the Minister of Education:

4. The conference held at Lake Couchiching in June, 1968, entitled "New Directions for the Teacher of Teachers" was called to permit consideration of recommendations from a committee of teachers' college principals and teacher education branch staff concerning the re-organization of teachers' college courses as recommended in the report of the Minister's committee on the training of elementary school teachers (MacLeod Report).

(a) Length of conference—two and one-half days.

(b) Full-time attendance—80 persons.

(c) Part-time attendance—5 persons.

(d) Total cost of conference—$1,275.25.

(e) Age range of those who attended was from 29 to 63 years.

(f) A total of 79 men and six women attended.

(g) Attendance summary:

Department of Education officials	11
Administrative staff from teachers' colleges	27
Boards of education	1
Full-time staff from teachers' college	32
Principals of elementary schools	3
Full-time classroom teachers	1
Ontario Teachers' Federation	1
Others	9
Total	85

5. Mr. Brown—Enquiry of the Ministry—

(1) During the fiscal year 1967-68, what were the amounts of the grants given to the Multiple Sclerosis Society of Canada (Ontario Division)? What was the actual amount requested by the organization? Were those grants given as a result of a direct request from the Multiple Sclerosis Society of Canada? Is there any reason why grants for this organization for medical research have not been allowed?

(2) What is the relationship between The Department of Health and the Canadian Association of Occupational Therapists? During the fiscal year 1967-68, what were the amounts of grants given to the Canadian Association of Occupational Therapists? On what basis were the grants given? What was the actual amount requested by this organization?

(3) During the fiscal year 1967-68, what were the amounts of the grants given to The Health League of Canada? What was the actual amount requested by this organization?

(4) During the fiscal year 1967-68, what were the amounts of the grants given to the Canadian Paraplegic Association? What was the actual amount requested by this organization?

(5) During the fiscal year 1967-68, what were the amounts of the grants given to the St. Elizabeth Visiting Nurses' Association? What was the actual amount requested by this organization? Were those grants given as a result of a direct request from the organization and if so, what was the specific purpose for which the grant was requested?

(6) What standards are imposed by The Department of Health or the Ontario Hospital Services Commission on Red Cross outpost hospitals? Do these standards differ markedly from public hospitals' standards? It is possible for other private organizations to establish such outpost hospitals and receive similar benefits from the Ontario Hospital Services Commission?

(7) Is the grant to the College of Nurses of Ontario based on a budgeted programme of costs in the inspection of schools of nursing and training centres, or is the grant provided to cover other aspects of the organization's programme?

(8) What are the details of the grant system between various divisions of The Department of Health and the Banting & Best Institute of Medical Research? Does The Department of Health receive funds from royalties from the sale of insulin? Does the Banting & Best Institute undertake the funding of research that should normally be funded by research grants from The Department of Health—that is, is it replacing public research money and if so, who makes the decisions about whether this should be done?

Answer by the Minister of Health:

1. During the fiscal year 1967-68 a grant of $2,000 was given to the Multiple Sclerosis Society of Canada (Ontario Division). The society always asks that consideration be given to increasing the grant.

The grant of $2,000 is a continuing grant, which is reviewed annually to support the activities of the society within the province of Ontario.

The society does not conduct specific research studies, but provides grants to universities and other research bodies which carry out the actual research.

Most research of this nature is financed through Medical Research Council.

2. The Department of Health maintains a close liaison with the Canadian Association of Occupational Therapists, as with all other professional groups related to the field of medical rehabilitation. The services of the Association are called upon with increasing frequency to provide advice regarding plans for the physical facilities of new occupational therapy departments; personnel policies; employment of staff; recommended treatment programmes; lists of equipment and supplies, and many other matters pertaining to the establishment of an occupational therapy service.

During the fiscal year 1967-68 a grant in the amount of $5,000 was given to the Association. No actual amount was requested by this organization.

3. During the fiscal year 1967-68 a grant in the amount of $2,500 was given to the Health League of Canada specifically to stimulate immunization in adults. The health league consistently asks each year that the grant be increased.

4. During the fiscal year 1967-68 a grant in the amount of $3,500 was given to the Canadian Paraplegic Association.

No actual amount was requested. The grant of $3,500 is a continuing grant which is reviewed annually, and is to assist the association in its administrative and general expenses.

5. During the fiscal year 1967-68 a grant in the amount of $1,250 was given to the St. Elizabeth Visiting Nurses Association.

No actual amount was requested. The grant of $1,250 is a continuing grant which is reviewed annually, and is to assist the association in its home nursing programme, but since much of the work done by this group is included in home care programmes, consideration is being given to ending this grant.

6. Red Cross Outpost Hospitals are governed by the provisions of The Public Hospitals Act and are listed as Group "D", General Hospitals operated by the Ontario division of the Red Cross Society. The Act and the Regulations apply to all public hospitals including the Red Cross institutions.

The Ontario Hospital Services Commission does not lay down or specify any different or modified standards for these institutions. Before any citizens' group or a private organization can proceed in the planning of a new hospital in any part of the province, it must first secure the approval of the commission. This approval depends upon the need for a new or additional hospital in the area. The project would also need to comply with the provisions and standards laid down in The Public Hospitals Act and regulations before it could proceed.

7. The grant of $20,000 to the College of Nurses of Ontario is to provide financial assistance in its programme of inspection of schools of nursing. Prior to 1963-64, this programme of inspection was carried out by The Department of Health.

8. The original $10,000 grant was established by an Act of the Legislature in 1923, to assist the Banting and Best Institute of Medical Research in carrying out its work in the various fields of medical research. In 1958, an additional non-statutory grant of $20,000 was provided to the foundation in support of senior medical research staff who would devote their time to current problems in the field of medical research.

The Department of Health receives no funds from royalties from the sale of insulin.

The Banting and Best Institute does not undertake the funding of research, and it is not considered that this grant replaces public research money.

6. Mr. T. Reid (Scarborough East)—Enquiry of the Ministry—What are the names of the elementary schools in Ontario which do not provide kindergarten to the children in the surrounding community?

Answer by the Minister of Education:

The Department of Education does not record the names of elementary schools which do not provide kindergarten. There are 4,761 elementary schools of which 2,589 have kindergartens. This number of 4,761, however, includes senior public schools and junior high schools, and 1,579 schools of five rooms or fewer, many of which have not previously been in a position to provide kindergartens.

7. Mr. J. P. Spence—Enquiry of the Ministry—How many American cottages are exempt under the new basic tax exemption in 1968?

Answer by the Minister of Municipal Affairs:

1. If the "American cottages" are assessed as residential property as defined in The Residential Property Tax Reduction Act, 1968, the municipal taxes payable thereon are subject to a reduction under the Act.

2. The department records do not include the number of "American cottages" which are subject to the reduction.

9. Mr. T. Reid (Scarborough East)—Enquiry of the Ministry—How many straps have schools in Ontario purchased as of December 1, 1968? What are the names of the schools which have purchased these straps?

Answer by the Minister of Education:

The Department of Education does not collect statistics giving this information. A departmental policy statement on corporal punishment in the following terms was issued recently, and circulated to regional and area superintendents, programme consultants, municipal directors and superintendents, principals of schools, secretaries of school boards and principals of private schools.

Re: Corporal Punishment:

Hitherto it generally has been assumed that while corporal punishment was not specifically authorized by any Act or Regulation, it nevertheless was condoned under Section 40(1b) of Ontario Regulation 339/66 which states that, "A pupil shall submit to such discipline as would be exercised by a kind, firm and judicious parent."

Without commenting in any way on the responsibilities or prerogatives of parents, it is suggested that this regulation should be interpreted as providing, within the context of the schools, an atmosphere of respect, and trust between students and teachers with the cultivation of individual responsibility as a major goal.

The provincial committee on aims and objectives of education in the schools of Ontario in dealing with this matter made this observation, "A child is not a young adult, and just as we accept his need to increase in wisdom, we must assume his need to grow toward maturity of conduct. The application of punishment in the area of behavioral learning is not more defensible than its application in any other area of learning.

Consequently, it is considered that the use of corporal punishment in any form is not appropriate in the schools of Ontario and it is recommended that principals and teachers refrain from its use.

10. Mr. T. Reid (Scarborough East)—Enquiry of the Ministry—(a) How many strappings were administered in the 1967/68 school year to children attending schools which received financial assistance from The Department of Education? How many children received these strappings? How many were girls? How many of these children received medical treatment as a consequence of such strappings? (b) How many children have been strapped with approved straps by members of the Staff at Sutton District High School between September 1, 1962 and December 1, 1968?

Answer by the Minister of Education:

The Department of Education does not collect the statistical data requested.

11. Mr. T. Reid (Scarborough East)—Enquiry of the Ministry—What detailed specifications has the Minister of Education laid down concerning the length, width, thickness, weight, substance and flexibility of straps that are currently being purchased by schools in Ontario who receive financial assistance from the Minister's department? Do these specifications vary depending on sex, age or size of the children who are expected to be strapped by the principals of the schools?

Answer by the Minister of Education:

The Department has not laid down detailed specifications along the lines suggested in the question.

12. Mr. T. Reid (Scarborough East)—Enquiry of the Ministry—How many English-language primary schools in Ontario have language laboratories?

Answer by the Minister of Education—

Language laboratories are not commonly used in elementary schools but specific figures have not been collected.

The primary schools frequently use listening stations (earphones) to catch the intonation and pronunciation from records and tapes. The Toronto board of education, for example has about 100 schools so equipped. No figures are available for the province as a whole.

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 5, 1969

The House met today at 2.30 o'clock p.m.

Prayers.

Mr. Speaker: Our visitors today in the east gallery are from the Adult Education Centre, Humber College, Etobicoke; in the west gallery from Dalewood Senior Public School, St. Catharines. Later today in the east gallery we will be joined by students from Grand River Collegiate in Kitchener.

Petitions.

Clerk of the House: The following petitions have been received:

Of the corporation of the city of Belleville praying that an Act may pass permitting a two-year term of election for the mayor and aldermen.

Of the corporation of the city of Toronto praying that an Act may pass authorizing an executive committee of council.

Of the corporation of the city of Hamilton authorizing payment for certain public works, out of the corporation's general funds; and for other purposes.

Of the corporation of the township of Teck praying that an Act may pass authorizing debentures for an addition and alteration to Kirkland Lake Collegiate and Vocational Institute.

Of the corporation of the town of Whitby praying that an Act may pass permitting it to require applicants desiring the use of town streets for cable television purposes to enter into agreements with the town for the use thereof.

Of Carleton University praying that an Act may pass changing the procedure for appointment of persons to the senate of the university; and for other purposes.

Of the trustees of the William J. Miller Trust praying that an Act may pass authorizing a new method of appointing trustees of the trust.

Of Lawrence Michael Baldwin, Kenneth Harold John Clarke, Herman Berthold Geiger-Torel, Arthur Ellis Gelber, William Hugh Graham, Walter Homburger, James Mavor Moore, Robert Edward Peel, Wallace Arven Russell, Muriel Sherrin, Raymond Frederick

Wickens, Calvin Gordon Rand, William Tennent Wylie and Frederick Gerald Townsend praying that an Act may pass incorporating them as Co-ordinated Arts Services.

Of the corporation of the city of Sarnia praying that an Act may pass confirming a certain by-law with respect to a municipal transportation system.

Of the corporation of the city of Peterborough praying that an Act may pass authorizing the corporation to enter into agreements with Border Transit Limited with respect to the operation of a bus line within the limits of the corporation.

Of John Robert Banks, Evelyn Florence Banks and John Lewis Banks praying that an Act may pass reviving the Charter of Banks Alignment Limited.

Of the corporation of the county of Welland praying that an Act may pass permitting it to amend the agreement authorized by Chapter 182 of the Statutes of Ontario, 17 Elizabeth II, 1968.

Mr. Speaker: Presenting reports.

Motions.

Introduction of bills.

The Hon. Minister of Health has a statement.

Hon. M. B. Dymond (Minister of Health): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day I would like to draw something to your attention, something that I think will be of great importance to the members of this House and also to the people in certain segments of our province. I am sure, sir, you will recall that the question of sulphur dioxide emissions to the outdoor atmosphere, in the Sudbury area particularly, have been the subject of much discussion in the Legislature during the past years. You will also recall that my department undertook, after it had assumed the responsibility for air pollution control, to investigate this problem and implement a programme of control.

Today I wish to report the first step in the implementation of this programme. During this past summer the air pollution control service conducted a very thorough emission survey to determine the number of sources and the total amount of sulphur dioxide being emitted. Our findings have been discussed with International Nickel Company of Canada and have resulted in an undertaking by them which they are announcing today.

Their announcement reads as follows:

Copper Cliff, Ontario, Wednesday, February 5, 1969. The International Nickel Company of Canada Limited announced today that it will erect a 1,250 ft. chimney to serve the company's Copper Cliff smelter complex. The new stack will be the highest in the world and will replace the existing stacks (two of 500 ft. each and the third 350 ft.)—

Interjection by an hon. member.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: The instant expert, Mr. Speaker, is running off at the mouth once again before he has ever listened.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Always running off at the mouth, that is the only place he can run, Mr. Speaker.

—Two stacks of 500 feet each and the third of 350 feet, which will be closed down and capped.

Design basis for the new stack have been drawn up in consultation with the Ontario Department of Health and also with Dr. Morris Katz of Syracuse University, one of the world's leading experts in sulphur dioxide emission and control.

The chimney will assure that air in the Sudbury area will be considerably cleaner on average than that in any other industrial community in Ontario and will exceed, by a substantial margin, the air quality standards established by the Ontario Air Pollution Control Service.

Coincidentally with the erection of the new chimney, Inco will install two new electrostatic precipitators for dust abatement and collection and will also enlarge existing precipitators at the smelter. This will decrease the dust content of the gases to well below Ontario health department standards.

Engineering work will start immediately and construction will be underway this summer. This project is expected to cost in excess of $13 million.

Consultants have assured the company that the new stack will eliminate any possibility that ground concentrations of sulphur dioxide from Copper Cliff will again reach the point where they can cause damage to vegetation. This is supported by experience gained from recent high stack installations in Europe and the United States.

Gases from the smelter will be emitted at high velocity, temperature and altitude to assure their adequate dispersion and dilution even under adverse weather conditions.

Mr. M. Shulman (High Park): This is an error—they are just spreading the pollution over a wider area.

Hon. Mr. Dymond:

Company officials emphasized that erection of the 1,250-ft. stack is regarded only as an interim measure and will permit continuing studies aimed at more complete recovery of sulphur from the smelter gases.

Mr. Shulman: Too little and too late.

Hon. Mr. Dymond:

International Nickel's laboratories and pilot plants will continue their intensive research on other processes for sulphur recovery.

The new stack will be approximately the same height as the Empire State Building and thus, one of the world's tallest structures.

Mr. E. W. Sopha (Sudbury): That is not far from Wall street anyway.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: For the members' reassurance, Mr. Speaker, I would leave no doubt that my department considers the use of tall stacks to disperse pollutants and reduce ground level effects as an interim or short term measure only. This is fully understood by industry, and the ultimate objective is to remove the pollutant at the source.

Mr. Shulman: We will fix it when we form a new government.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Accordingly, we have advised International Nickel Company of Canada to this effect and will require them to submit progress reports on their plans to achieve this objective.

Because of the difficulties inherent in the removal of sulphur dioxide in the light of our present knowledge, this will, of necessity, be a long range project. However, we intend to pursue it vigorously and thus achieve our objectives in progressive stages.

Since we are concerned with the Sudbury area, discussions are currently taking place with Falconbridge Nickel Mines to evolve an equally effective control programme and I hope to be able to announce similar results shortly.

Mr. Sopha: They put it over on you, I can see.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): I think the hon. member is disappointed that something is going to be done about it.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: He is disappointed that something is going to be done about it. No more objections.

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, I am tabling this afternoon the document entitled "Propositions of the Government of Ontario submitted to the Continuing Committee of Officials as of December 1968". This document had its origins in the decision of the federal-provincial conference of Prime Ministers and Premiers held in Ottawa, as it so happens, exactly a year ago today.

It will be recalled that the conference agreed to establish itself as a continuing constitutional conference to proceed with all the questions involved in constitutional review. And at the same time, the conference agreed to establish a continuing committee of officials to carry out the preparatory and detailed work necessary to this task, and to make the necessary preparations for the conference that will open on Monday next.

Now, sir, the government of Ontario fully supported these decisions of the conference. We consider it very desirable that we should participate, to the fullest, in a joint exploration with the other governments of Canada in which our contemporary constitutional problems may be examined and may be the subject of a very complete study as we try to find some solutions to some of the problems that face us.

Our desire to engage in this study as equal partners with the other governments of Canada in the evolution of Canadian federalism was expressed, of course, at the first meeting of the continuing committee of officials held in Ottawa. Our officials on that committee are the Deputy Treasurer, Mr. H. I. Macdonald and the Deputy Minister of Justice, Mr. A. R. Dick.

At that meeting in May, the continuing committee of officials was confronted with the very difficult task of attempting to decide upon what technique would be used in order to even make an approach to this whole problem of constitutional review.

The committee decided to adopt the "proposition" method whereby delegations would submit to the committee, and I am referring to the committee of officials, any number of propositions dealing with the constitutional issues that were raised at the conference last February. A "proposition" was defined as:

A statement of principle or general concept by which governments should be guided in the process of constitutional review or which should underlie the provisions of the constitution.

Thus, the propositions put forward and which I will table here are suggestions which, in the judgment of the government submitting them, should guide the examination of the many different aspects of the constitutional arrangements of the country. The propositions are not intended to represent firm or final positions of the governments who submit them.

I would underline that point because I do not want it to be assumed that because we present these propositions that they represent a firm or final position of this government. They are put forward as matters that can form the basis of discussion as we get into examination of our constitution.

They should not be regarded as comprehensive. They are designed to stimulate discussion, and of course, this is what I am emphasizing.

By adopting this approach, the committee hoped that all concerned would gain a better understanding of the views of each participating government on the various issues. This approach was also designed to help identify broad areas of agreement and also, broad areas of disagreement and designed also to permit the committee of officials, on the basis of the propositions submitted, to suggest subjects to the conference itself which would require more detailed and specialized study.

We, as a government, agreed with this method. We believe that it will allow the constitutional review to develop exactly that atmosphere of partnership and good faith which is so necessary if it is to be successful.

At the same time, I think this approach recognizes how complex the whole exercise is, how necessary it is to proceed carefully and deliberately and I think, when you read these propositions and the propositions of the other governments, you will get some idea of what a complex task we have undertaken.

In our view, the constitution must be viewed as a totality. Each of its parts is connected and interrelated and none of the issues can really be settled in isolation. The proposition approach recognized these views and emphasizes that we are taking the first tentative steps, that submissions are of a preliminary nature, and that they are a way of promoting discussion. In short, this approach has the merit of being both flexible and workable.

The 40 Ontario propositions contained in this volume are therefore not considered by the government of Ontario to be final and are not considered to be complete, and they are not considered to be binding. They have been put forward in the spirit which I have described, and in response to discussions which have already taken place, at last year's conference and in the committee. We as a government of course will undertake to review, refine or revise these propositions, and any that we may submit in the future.

The committee itself established 14 categories in which the various propositions submitted by all the governments might be placed. These categories are as follows: (1) Object of review; (2) objects of confederation; (3) general principles to be reflected in the constitution; (4) fundamental rights; (5) the constitution of the central government; (6) the constitutions of the provincial governments; (7) the constitution of the judicial system; (8) the distribution of legislative powers; (9) inter-government relations; (10) external relations; (11) amendment procedures; (12) general provisions; (13) transitional provisions; (14) adoption of the constitution.

In its five meetings since May, the committee of officials has discussed the first six topics I indicated here in some detail. In addition, preliminary consideration has been given to the constitution of the judicial system, and to the distribution of legislative power. Now, you will see from this volume that we have submitted propositions dealing with the first twelve categories, although it has tended to concentrate on several of them. It is clear that propositions in the final two categories—namely transitional provisions and adoption of a constitution—can only be developed towards the end of the constitutional review.

The particular concentration of our proposition is partially a problem of categorization. What one government may label an objective of confederation, another may call a basic principle. In some categories, our point of view is met in propositions submitted by one or more other governments. When such compatibility exists we saw no special need to repeat the point.

I would like to make some special remarks about two of the categories. On December 10 last, the Minister of Labour spoke on my behalf in this House about the necessity of ensuring the fundamental rights of all Canadians be respected by every government and by every individual.

In February of last year, at the constitutional conference, the Minister of Justice and Attorney General told that conference that Ontario believed that the Bill of Rights entrenched in the constitution should not be considered in isolation from the other aspects of the constitutional review. He also explained that we were then awaiting a report of the Royal Commission Inquiry into Civil Rights.

The first part of the report has now been published, but the second part, which we anticipate will include the question of the Bill of Rights, has not yet been presented to the government by Mr. Justice McRuer. The most important question to answer with respect to fundamental rights, is how we can best ensure maximum freedom for the Canadian people. We expect the findings of the hon. Mr. McRuer will contribute to our understanding of the problems involved. Therefore we have so far submitted only a preliminary proposition in this category. Similarly we have submitted only one proposition dealing with the distribution of legislative powers.

I do not think that anyone who has been listening to what this government has been saying on this subject during the last few months can reasonably interpret our contribution as a lack of interest. The contrary, of course, is the case. We consider the distribution of powers to be the heart of any constitutional review.

Furthermore, the committee has had only a preliminary discussion of the distribution of legislative powers. As the discussions continue in the coming months, further propositions on these vital subjects will be submitted.

I will emphasize in closing that these propositions are really of a tentative nature. I would emphasize one additional important aspect for your consideration as you read them. I need hardly say that a great deal of thought and consideration has gone into the preparation of the propositions.

In particular, and in almost each instance, the bare statement of the proposition is accompanied by a careful explanation. These explanatory notes must be read in conjunction with the propositions themselves in order that the statement, which is necessarily brief, can be fully understood. In fact, I would say that we attach as much importance to the explanations as to the propositions themselves.

I hope that this document will be received in the same spirit that its contents have been put forward. That is, as a preliminary view on some very complex and some very difficult subjects which require a great deal of discussion and revision by all of us if the challenges to Canadian federalism that seem to exist are to be successfully resolved.

There will be copies of this delivered to both the other parties and if additional copies are required, of course, they are available.

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, as one who has listened over the last two months to the government's pronouncements on the distribution of powers and the way these reflect on the tax situation, I am surprised that the Prime Minister's committee did not give some additional proposition or additional material on distribution of powers.

Why is it that this was neglected in the presentation of the propositions that have just been tabled?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: I might say, Mr. Speaker, that there is some difference of opinion as to what should come first. After all, that conference in February is only a year ago. This committee had to meet and it had to devise a means in the first place of attacking the problem. So this is by no means a complete or comprehensive statement of all the matters involved.

There has been time to deal with some of them more thoroughly than others. But then, some governments are not as anxious to discuss certain aspects of the constitution as they are to discuss some other aspects. They have their own priorities of constitutional review.

The federal government is not particularly enthusiastic about discussing powers in terms of possible revision of fiscal arrangements and revenue sources. I think probably their reluctance in this regard has been made evident in the last few months as well. But these matters will be sorted out in due course.

Mr. Nixon: For clarification, as I understand it Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister did say he considered these matters of paramount importance. I was simply asking him why, if he considers them of paramount importance, did his committee not consider them likewise and put forward the propositions which could perhaps have given some leadership to the governments who are less enthusiastic on this matter.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: We are just going along with the operation as it is evolving. We will have lots to say about this in due course.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, I have a question remaining from yesterday, of the Minister of Energy and Resources Management. I know he would agree the matter is of considerable urgency.

Mr. Speaker: I have arranged with the hon. Minister that when you had asked your questions today he would then give the answer to yesterday's question, but I have no objection to the answer coming now. However, it would seem to me that that would be the proper procedure. The hon. Minister has the floor.

Hon. J. R. Simonett (Minister of Energy and Resources Management): Mr. Speaker, in answer to the question of the hon. leader of the Opposition—perhaps I should read the question:

Does the system of rotated work stoppage by the Hydro employees seriously threaten the supply of energy in view of the fact that the unions have emergency crews available?

The answer: Any action which creates a situation such as that which existed February 3, when the large Sir Adam Beck generating complex, representing an investment of $400 million, and a generating capacity of 1,800,000 kilowatts, had to be operated by a skeleton staff of supervisory people, cannot help but threaten the supply of energy.

Emergency stand-by crews are of value for transmission and distribution line repair, but operating errors can seldom wait for someone to be called in to take corrective action.

The commission's policy is to keep all generating plants and equipment operating at full required capacity and every effort will be made to achieve this. No one, however, can foresee the dislocating effects of a rotating strike.

Mr. Nixon: If I might ask a supplementary question. Since the Minister believes that our electrical capacity is in danger, does this mean that he is prepared to make some recommendations to his colleagues in the Cabinet for solving the problem?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Well, Mr. Speaker, I might say that this matter is under discussion and I would have to report on it at a later date when the decision is made.

Mr. Nixon: Just one final question, then. Under those circumstances, the Minister then feels that the emergency crews that the unions say are readily available are not filling the need as he sees it?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Mr. Speaker, there are emergency crews standing by to repair line or distributions systems, but they must be, I would think, men who fully understand the machinery and the complex operation within the plant, and this is Hydro's worry at the present time.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the hon. Attorney General.

Is the Attorney General expecting to introduce legislation at this session based on the interim report on landlord and tenant laws of the Ontario Law Reform Commission?

Hon. A. A. Wishart (Attorney General): Mr. Speaker, the report which we received toward the end of the session in December is being studied by practically all departments of the government and I am not in a position to say, at this moment, what the government policy or position is as to introducing legislation this session.

We are certainly concerned with the study of those recommendations and I would expect that as soon as it is feasible, we shall produce legislation, but whether it could be at this session I cannot say at this moment.

Mr. Nixon: I would like further to ask the Attorney General if he has reconsidered whether there will be any change in the government's position that approval for the proposed Lakeshore raceway can be granted exclusively by the metropolitan council?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Speaker, this question is framed to speak of the government's position and I do not think the government, so far as I am aware, has expressed a position.

Mr. Nixon: They would not accept your advice in this?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Just allow me to finish the answer to the question. Nothing was asked except an opinion of two of my colleagues as to the necessity of their consent — at least the consent of the Lieutenant-Governor-in-Council.

I rendered an opinion — taking the request from my colleague, the Minister of Highways, I believe, and the Minister of Transport — that no consent of the Lieutenant-Governor-in-Council was necessary and that metropolitan Toronto Council was free to act within its jurisdiction in this matter.

Mr. Sopha: That opinion was wrong; no question about it.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: That may be your opinion.

Mr. Sopha: Bad advice. Even his best friends call him, "Trading Stamps Wishart". He gets bad advice.

Four statutes say it is a highway. Of course, I do not care what they do down in the Lakeshore.

Hon. A. F. Lawrence (Minister of Mines): Imagine when the member writes his book.

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I would like to say, Mr. Speaker, that I clearly did not express a government position. I expressed a legal opinion, and I referred in that opinion — if the hon. member for Sudbury were interested — specifically to the four statutes which I am sure he has in mind.

A letter which I sent to metro chairman William Allen had all those statutes considered and specifically covered, and there is no change in that opinion.

Mr. Nixon: For purposes of clarification then, we are to assume that the legal position delivered by the Attorney General in the House and, presumably, beforehand to his colleagues, does not represent the position of the government in the case of the Lakeshore raceway.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I am not talking about the position of the government. I am talking about a legal opinion I was asked to give. It has been given, it is firm, and by it I stand.

Mr. Nixon: Then it is the position of the government, surely?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Government has not been asked to take a position.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Nixon: Maybe the Premier ought to make some comments on that and either accept the Attorney General's position or not.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, people have written to me and we just take the attitude that it is within the jurisdiction of the locally elected bodies to govern these roads.

This is the legal opinion given the government by the Attorney General and so we do not have a position.

Mr. Sopha: The government does not have a position? Certainly it has a position.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: We do not say it is a good thing or a bad thing because it is outside our jurisdiction, and they can make up their own minds.

Mr. Sopha: The Minister of Tourism said it was a good thing; the Minister of Tourism and Information announced it.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, in this, perhaps some people would like to see us intervene, but in another case—and I could name many of them—we would be soundly rapped if we thrust our opinion into and upon and among decisions taken by duly elected bodies—

Mr. Nixon: This is your responsibility and you are shirking it.

Hon. Mr. Robarts:—who are responsible to the people who elected them. Now we just simply will not supplant any opinion or any position of ours for that position taken. After all, these by-laws, or whatever, are carried by majorities of the two elected councils. I consider it would be completely improper if we were to interfere with the decisions that were made, particularly when in the hon. Minister's opinion, we do not have the jurisdiction.

An hon. member: Ask the Minister of Highways.

Mr. Nixon: So, Mr. Speaker, we are to understand that the Premier does accept the advice of this chief law officer.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. leader should be asking questions; not making statements. He is at liberty to interpret the Prime Minister's answer as he wishes.

Mr. Nixon: They are pretty foggy; we just want to pin it down.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I had not quite concluded my answer to the question.

Mr. Nixon: But?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: But nothing. I was going to say that in relation to this matter, I observed the leader of the Opposition, a few days ago on television, saying that the Attorney General seems fearful to give an opinion to the House. He referred to the occasion on which the opinion was given.

I would just like to say the opinion—if he cares to read Hansard—was very straightforward, very clear, and very definite.

Mr. Nixon: He shirked from accepting his responsibility and I reiterate it.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Is the member saying that he gave a wrong opinion because he was fearful, is that what the hon. member is saying?

Mr. Nixon: I am saying that he should, and you should, take the responsibility for that raceway and that you should turn it down flat.

An hon. member: And most of your Toronto colleagues think so, too.

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Sopha: You may be sucking and whistling at the same time.

Mr. Nixon: He did not really call me a reprobate, did he? Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Highways: Has the route been established for the Dundas by-pass, and if so what are the estimated construction dates and costs?

Hon. G. E. Gomme (Minister of Highways): Mr. Speaker, the answer is no.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Port Arthur has a point of privilege.

Mr. R. H. Knight (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, my point relates to an article in the Toronto Daily Star of Saturday, February 1. I feel that the article written here, which came after an interview with one of this government's Cabinet Ministers, as it sits in the newspaper with the biggest circulation in this entire country, I believe, is extremely derogatory to the people I represent as well as those in the sister riding of Fort William. It could indeed perhaps prejudice legislation which I understand will be brought into this House during this session, and for that reason I would like to set the record straight.

The article in its sub-title says:

Whoever would have thought that those arch rival twin cities of Port Arthur and Fort William would merge? Well, a young Cabinet Minister named D'Arcy McKeough is pulling it off.

I see that my impression of this government's attitude toward my people is confirmed by the banging of the desks. Mr. Speaker, further, under the picture, I read what it says there:

D'Arcy McKeough is the 36-year-old Municipal Affairs Minister who is reshaping the map of Ontario by amalgamating hundreds of small municipalities, and even those rival towns at the Lakehead, Port Arthur and Fort William, which next January 1 will become one big city.

Before I make further quotes, Mr. Speaker, I would like to say that I feel that the hon. Cabinet Minister should get his due.

The point that I am making is that it should not be by using the Lakehead cities as a stepping stone and I will continue to quote from this article. Further down, it says:

Fort William and Port Arthur, historical—

Mr. Speaker: Order! The hon. member is quite in order if he wishes to raise a point of privilege or order which affects the people of his riding. He is not in order to go further afield. Now if he has a point of privilege or order, he has yet to state it, because what he has already said has not yet appeared as a point of privilege or order. I would ask that he state his point of privilege or order and then support it with whatever he wishes in the way of material.

Mr. Knight: With all due respect, Mr. Speaker, I think I called it a point of personal privilege.

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry, a point of personal privilege. I stand corrected—it is a point of personal privilege. Would the hon. member restate his point of personal privilege and then document it only, and not the actions of a Minister or of a newspaper?

Mr. Knight: The point of personal privilege is that following an interview with a Cabinet Minister relating to legislation that is going to be introduced into this House, the newspaper with the largest circulation in Canada has printed biased information which is hurtful to my riding and my people and, I think, in some way will prejudice the legislation that is going to be brought into the House.

My understanding of personal privilege, Mr. Speaker, is that where a member feels that he has been wronged in some way, or that those he represents have been wronged in some way in this House or through the press in a misquote or biased news reporting, he is entitled to make that point of personal privilege and set the record straight.

An hon. member: You have got it all wrong.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member has stated in a very good fashion I think, the matter of personal privilege except that it is not necessarily a question of someone being wronged, but at least of their privileges being interfered with.

He has stated his point of personal privilege. He has indicated the reasons why he raised it. I think it is highly unnecessary that he should read anymore from the newspaper article because I would suspect that that would compound rather than help the difficulty.

If he wishes to set the record straight by a statement of his own with respect to the attitude of his people then I think he is in order. Otherwise, he would not be.

Mr. Knight: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, you are a good Speaker.

I will not quote any further from the article because what I planned to quote will indeed compound what has already been stated.

The truth of the matter is that unfortunately at a time in history which is so important to the people of my area, everybody is getting the wrong idea. Everybody seems to think we are a bunch of children up there who have got to be spanked and put to bed and tied to the bedpost.

This is not the truth. I hope that if the Globe and Mail and the Toronto Telegram plan articles of this type relating to what this Minister is trying to do at the Lakehead, they will get the record straight.

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Mr. Knight: And remember we are not arch rivals.

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Mr. Knight: We have not been for 20 years, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order! The proper place for the hon. member to discuss this with the publishers of the newspapers would be with the newspapers and not on the floor of the House.

Mr. Knight: Thank you very much.

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister of Correctional Services): He got the last word.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Prime Minister.

Is it accurate that the proposal for the re-establishment of the old tax structure committee as a fiscal policy committee to co-ordinate federal-provincial tax planning and priorities was turned down by the provinces, including Ontario?

If so, how does the Prime Minister reconcile this action by Ontario with the Treasurer's statement to the finance Ministers' meeting in Ottawa just a year ago, January 10, 1968, that the tax structure committee was one of the important elements in the machinery for achieving fiscal co-ordination?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, the answer to the first question is no and therefore, the second question has no significance.

I would say that we have been one of the leading proponents of some form—any form or all forms—of co-operation between the federal and the provincial governments for the development of means of consultation between us.

For the history of the tax structure committee, as you will recall, it was set up at the federal-provincial conference in Quebec City, I think about 1964. It really has never ceased to function.

Although it brought in a report that was completely disregarded by the federal government when we came to certain arrangements; I will not say agreements because this government never agreed to them, but they were arrangements made with the federal government. Even since that time this committee has continued to function. So although it is functioning in more recent times it has not been as vigorous as in those days before it reported.

You recall that when Mr. Sharp was Minister of Finance he did not choose to accept the findings of the tax structure committee. Perhaps what leads to this question is the fact that a year ago, at the meeting of the Ministers of Finance, in January of 1968, this government suggested that the tax structure committee might be combined with this annual meeting of Ministers of Finance because a good deal of overlap was developing in the functions of the tax structure committee which is composed primarily, of officials and the conference of the Ministers of Finance.

This suggestion was not accepted in its entirety. But on November 4 last, at the conference of Finance Ministers it was suggested that the tax structure committee or some successor to it be reconstituted and put to work on a more active basis than it has functioned in the last few years, and this new set up is presently being worked upon.

All of this has, of course, been done, part of it at our instigation and all of it with our complete co-operation and our desire to get some form of meaningful consultation between the federal and provincial governments in the whole field of fiscal policy.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, may I have clarification on one point?

The Prime Minister, as I understand him, appears to be talking in contradictions when he talks of a committee operating, but not as vigorously, but he refers to a decision on November 4 that the committee should be reconstituted to do a job. What exactly is the tax structure committee doing at the present time?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: The tax structure committee, as I explained, did some forecasts and spent a great deal of time preparing those forecasts. They were then embodied in a report and that was the spearhead of its work, to produce those forecasts. That objective having been achieved, then the work of the committee slackened off, but did not cease. Let me put it that way.

Mr. MacDonald: What is it doing?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Well, it was keeping those figures up to date and doing certain statistical work; forecasting work in the same area to get a projection as to what the position of all levels of government would be in terms of debt and revenue and expenditures in the years that lie ahead, which was the original purpose of the committee.

It continued to perform that function, but not in as vigorous a way as when it was working up to the report it presented. Then we got into this question of overlap with the conference of Ministers which developed in the meantime. That is when we suggested the two be put together.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Peterborough.

Mr. W. G. Pitman (Peterborough): Mr. Speaker, I would like to address a question to the Provincial Secretary.

Has the Provincial Secretary been informed that a newly arrived male citizen of the province, born last night to the wife of our hon. colleague, the member for Cochrane South, will be seeking certification from his department?

Hon. R. S. Welch (Provincial Secretary): Mr. Speaker, I had not heard that, but I am sure I will be joined by all my colleagues in wishing the mother and child well and will be very glad to record it.

An hon. member: Do we get a cigar?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Dovercourt.

Mr. D. M. De Monte (Dovercourt): Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Highways.

In respect of the report of the Provincial Auditor tabled in the House yesterday, when will the government enter into a formal agreement with the Canadian National Railways in respect of its current GO Transit operations?

Hon. Mr. Gomme: Mr. Speaker, the entire concept of GO Transit was experimental in nature, and it was recognized from the outset that all aspects of the operation including financing in relationship with the CNR would, of necessity, be modified as the experimental operation continues. While the Provincial Auditor is, of course, quite right in his statement that no formal agreement has as yet been signed, the basic principles laid down at the outset in Letters of Understanding have been broadly adhered to and the formal agreement is within a few weeks of finalization.

While, as previously stated, the overall agreement is being drafted within the terms of the Letters of Understanding, the percentages of sharable costs will, of course, vary as was anticipated, by the relative benefits from the signal and track modifications necessitated by the implementation of the commuter rail service over the Lakeshore route—this at a time when the railroads were experiencing increased freight traffic, the introduction of the new and faster inter-city passenger trains, and of course, the introduction of the GO schedule.

Most of the cost in addition to which has been anticipated when the service was originally suggested, involves the installation of necessary, but very costly signal and control system and additional tracks.

To sum up, however, the drafting of the formal agreement involves the working out of the details within the original principles established. In short, the provincial government is to reimburse the railroads for those costs, both capital and operating, which are a direct result of the operation of the commuter service.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Sudbury.

Mr. Sopha: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order. Upon reflection overnight, I want to say to you, sir, that I thought about my remarks, insofar as they included your Honour, yesterday, I felt that I was rather too harsh with you. I wanted to extend my regrets because I can see, and with what I now know, that you were completely without fault in the whole matter of the allocation of office space.

I quickly go on to ask you, Mr. Speaker, whether in view of the fact that up on the fourth floor there are 20 to 25 offices vacant now, would it be possible for us, as a temporary measure, to move in to one of those offices? Or, to put it another way, supposing I were to move in to one of those offices vacated as recently as last Friday, would you tell me what would be likely to happen?

Mr. Speaker: I doubt if the proper lease forms are yet ready for signature by the members, so the hon. member might find himself in difficulty.

With respect to the fourth floor, I may say, first of all, that with the approval of the House committee the pages are being moved from the cellar, or basement quarters, which are unventilated and in very bad shape, to a suite of offices on the fourth floor.

Mr. Sopha: Well, there is a vacancy right there.

Mr. Speaker: I am sure that if the hon. member for Sudbury had looked over their quarters last fall, when the House committee did, he would have indeed complained to the Minister of Health and others as to their quarters.

The House committee have taken that in hand and with the approval of the Minister of Public Works these accommodations have been made available.

With respect to the greater portion of the accommodation there, I would be most pleased to see what the plans are and to have the hon. member or his leader, the leader of the Opposition, apprised of that. Further than that I cannot at this moment say.

The hon. member for Sudbury East has questions.

Mr. E. W. Martel (Sudbury East): A question of the Attorney General:

When will the Ontario Provincial Police take over the investigation of all fatalities in the Falconbridge Nickel Company's holdings in the Sudbury area, as has been requested by the Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers and myself for the last six months?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Speaker, we have, as the hon. member knows, been studying this for some time. He raised the question, I believe, at the last session. I am just in the position now to inform him that instructions are going forth to the Crown Attorney that all investigations of fatalities in those areas will be conducted, henceforth, by the Ontario Provincial Police.

Mr. Martel: Thank you.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: With the exception of Sudbury city, which will be done by the Sudbury city police.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Sudbury East has several questions.

Mr. Martel: Second question to the Attorney General:

Has the Ontario Police Commission arrived at a decision limiting the duties of the INCO police force to that of security guards for the International Nickel Company with the normal duties of police officers within the company towns being left to the regular police force?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Speaker, we have examined this matter and I have to inform the hon. member that the advice I have from my officials is that since 1936 there has been an arrangement by way of an agreement between International Nickel and the town of Copper Cliff with respect to police protection.

The agreement provides that the town of Copper Cliff, as I am informed, has a municipal police force of 130 men. One hundred of these are assigned to police INCO and the company pays for that service.

Through the same arrangement, 30 officers police the towns of Coniston, Lively and Levack. The arrangement dates back to 1936 and has been, I think, reasonably successful throughout the years.

This is not the matter which the hon. member was pressing upon me about the coroners and inquest situation. In that we have been able to take some action which, I think, will be very satisfactory. This is another matter and, apart from the hon. member, I cannot say that we have received much complaint about the situation.

Mr. Martel: As a supplementary question, is it not a fact that the unions involved have certainly raised this matter on a considerable number of occasions — with the Minister's Deputy Minister; with the chief coroner, I believe; and a variety of people? Because the company utilises some of its force on some occasions as police and on other occasions as security guards, there is a great deal of distrust and, I might say, resentment, in that area with respect to the dual role served by these men in question.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: So far as the mention of a coroner is concerned, that would relate to the question of fatalities and that is resolved.

Copper Cliff is a company town. It is company property and, as I say, an arrangement has persisted there since 1936 which, as far as I am aware, has given quite good satisfaction.

If the hon. member can bring me complaints which have a base and make the situation appear one that should be corrected, I would be glad to go into it further.

Mr. Martel: If the Minister would accept one more question. Does the Minister not recall that, as a result of the wildcat strike two years ago, that when the company and the union negotiated the company was willing to drop all the charges of malicious damage? Some three months later the INCO police force laid the charges, and certainly this was not in good faith. I am not condoning the damage, but this seemed to be a put-up job.

Mr. Speaker: Order! Order! The hon. member has asked his question.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I will try to answer the question. I do not recall in detail, but if malicious damage was done, it is not necessarily the company's decision as to what action may be taken.

I do not know enough about the details of the situation to be very definite in my answer, but I do not think that particularly relates to the question of who polices the property.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Sudbury East has a question from December, of the Minister of Mines—and I wonder if it has been withdrawn or answered in the interim—in connection with soil maps in the Sudbury area.

The question was: can the Minister advise the House when the soil maps for the Sudbury area as researched by Professor Hoffman will be available? Is it correct that these maps have been in the printing stage for two years?

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for bringing this unanswered question to my attention.

The Department of Mines does not employ a Professor Hoffman and we have no knowledge of soil maps being prepared in the Sudbury area.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Wentworth has been attempting to gain Mr. Speaker's eye. I would advise him that the question which he placed today with the Minister of Transport was transferred by that Minister, through Mr. Speaker's office, to the Provincial Treasurer. The party office, I understand, was so advised.

The Provincial Treasurer is not present so—

Mr. I. Deans (Wentworth): I was going to ask, Mr. Speaker, was the question redirected by the Minister of Transport?

Mr. Speaker: It was redirected by Mr. Speaker's office.

Mr. Deans: I see. Thank you.

Mr. Martel: Mr. Speaker, after the Minister of Health made his statement, I rose to ask him for clarification, but the Prime Minister had risen so I took my place. I was wondering if the Minister would be willing to answer a question with reference to clarification on his statement?

Mr. Speaker: I do not think that this is the appropriate time. At the end of the question period, if the hon. member will rise again, I will ascertain if the Minister will accept a question on a point of clarification.

The hon. member for Essex South.

Mr. D. A. Paterson (Essex South): Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the hon. Minister of Agriculture and Food.

Is the hon. Minister aware that on February 1, the Ontario Milk Marketing Board advised the operators of milk transports in Essex and Kent counties that the rates they may charge for this service are to be reduced by approximately 30 per cent from the current rate?

Is this same rate reduction to be ordered for all parts of Ontario? If so, how soon, and what are the reasons for this action?

Hon. W. A. Stewart (Minister of Agriculture and Food): Mr. Speaker, I will take that question as notice.

Mr. Paterson: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Energy and Resources Management:

The public accounts of the province for the year ending March 31, 1968, on page F7 shows an expenditure of $19,399.60 for car rentals by the conservation authorities branch.

First, does the conservation branch own any cars for the use of the department?

Second, how many people are on the staff of this branch and how many of the staff of this branch require the use of vehicles on a regular basis?

Third, on how many occasions during any one week was there more than one vehicle on rental contract?

Fourth, are vehicles for the use of this department available by arrangement with The Department of Public Works?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Mr. Speaker, the answer to the first part of the question is "Yes"; the branch owns three station wagons and a Land Rover, comprising one 1966 Ford, one 1967 Chevrolet II, one 1968 Pontiac plus a 1968 Land Rover.

The answer to the second part: 55 people are permanently employed on the staff of this branch. The number of staff of the branch requiring the use of vehicles on a regular basis is nil. Usage of vehicles varies according to job requirements.

The third part: The number of occasions when more than one vehicle was on a rental contract was during 17 weeks of the summer months. Twenty Ramblers were on hire for the whole of 17 weeks for essential work of the branch, carried out partly by regular staff but mainly by part-time staff.

The answer to the fourth part: Vehicles for the use of this branch are not provided by arrangement with The Department of Public Works.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Essex-Kent has a question.

Mr. R. F. Ruston (Essex-Kent): I have a question, Mr. Speaker, of the hon. Minister of Agriculture and Food.

Is the hon. Minister aware that many requests for municipal drainage were based on the assumption that ARDA grants would be available and in such case, does the Minister not believe that a warning letter should have been sent out prior to the cancellation of such grants?

Is the hon. Minister giving consideration to the request of many municipalities that ARDA grants be approved for all petitions for drainage works made to municipal councils up to December 20, 1968?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Mr. Speaker, in reply to the first question, the notice of the withdrawal of the grants was sent out about as soon as I could possibly send it out after we learned that the federal government had not given us any definite answer as to whether or not they would reinstate the grants that were so, disappointingly to us, withdrawn.

I had a meeting on December 19 with the federal Minister of development, I believe it is—the hon. Mr. Marchand, and we have made him aware of the situation. He asked me to put it in writing and I sent it to him but I felt it was only fair and proper that we should immediately advise the municipalities of the situation in which we found ourselves and, alternatively, in which they found themselves. That letter was sent out on December 20.

In regard to the second question. Other than the date, this is a question not entirely unlike the one asked me by the member for Huron-Bruce yesterday, and I would have to give the same answer.

If we can obtain satisfactory results of our request to Ottawa for the reinstatement of the federal ARDA grants, then I think we can give consideration to at least doing something in regard to the requests that have come to us for consideration along the lines contained in the second question of the member.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for High Park.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Speaker, thank you, I have a question for the Minister of Financial and Commercial Affairs:

Has the Minister investigated the matter of Ord Wallington accepting funds from a public client one week after it was suspended as he promised this House on June 4, 1968?

What was the result of that investigation?

What is the Minister's opinion of the responsibility of the government to those clients of Ord Wallington who believe the Securities Commission ruling and forwarded funds to Ord Wallington after the Securities Commission hearing, but did not receive their stock?

Hon. H. L. Rowntree (Minister of Financial and Commercial Affairs): Mr. Speaker, in answer to parts one and three of the question, I refer the hon. member to Hansard at page 3851 of June 4, 1968.

As for part two, criminal charges have been laid and they are currently before the courts.

Mr. Shulman: Will the Minister accept a supplementary? He will not accept a supplementary? Thank you. I seem to have reached him.

A question to the Minister of Financial and Commercial Affairs, Mr. Speaker.

When does the Minister intend to release the Securities Commission report on trading in Pyrotex which the Minister said on July 2, 1968, he expected without undue delay and would "be delighted" to inform the House?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Mr. Speaker, I am informed that the investigation is not as yet completed. However, both the Ontario Securities Commission and the Toronto Stock Exchange have taken action by way of disciplinary hearings against the registrants. So far as the Ontario Securities Commission is concerned, these decisions will be reported in the bulletin in accordance with the usual policy when the time for the appeals and any subsequent appeals have been completed.

Mr. Shulman: Would the Minister accept a supplementary question?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: No.

Mr. Shulman: I have a question for the Minister of Financial and Commercial Affairs, Mr. Speaker.

What were the results of the department's investigation of irregularities in trading in shares of Clairtone and why were there no charges laid?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Mr. Speaker, there will be no report since I am informed that no offences under The Ontario Securities Act were disclosed.

The Ontario Securities Commission has received no request to intercede on behalf of the company in accordance with section 114 of The Securities Act.

I therefore have nothing to add to the general statement that I made as recorded in Hansard on page 1434 on April 1, of 1968.

Mr. Shulman: Will the Minister accept a supplementary question?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: No.

Mr. Shulman: I have a question to the Minister of Financial and Commercial Affairs, Mr. Speaker.

Has the Minister changed the rule restricting part-time real estate agents to areas of less than 5,000 population as he promised the House on July 19, 1968?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: The matter, Mr. Speaker, of part-time work in real estate came into being in order to assist those persons in areas where the population could not support a full-time operation.

The Real Estate and Business Brokers Act infers that all real estate brokers would be full time, and part-time rule was used only as a guide for entry into the industry.

To our knowledge, no licence has been cancelled where the population growth has put a broker off-side, if I could use that phrase, of the 5,000 population rule.

There is an extensive review underway at the present time dealing with the level of qualifications required for entry into the real estate industry in Ontario. This work is being done in close co-operation with the Ontario Association of Real Estate Boards.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Speaker, the Minister has not answered my question. Has the Minister changed the rule, as he promised the House?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: That is my statement.

Mr. Shulman: Fortunately the estimates are coming, Mr. Speaker.

I have a question for the Minister of Financial and Commercial Affairs, Mr. Speaker.

Has the Minister examined the wording of policies issued by the British Pacific Insurance Company as promised in this House on July 10, 1968? What action has been taken?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: To the first question, yes. With respect to the second question, the wording which gave rise to complaints related to house confinement as a test of total disability. This wording and similar ones used by a few insurers was discussed at the September 1968 meeting of the superintendents of insurance. At that time a committee was set up to review this provision and others, considered to be too restrictive.

There is no question in our minds that restrictive provisions of this nature are now being removed from such policies voluntarily by the industry.

Mr. Shulman: Will the Minister accept a supplementary question?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: No.

Mr. Shulman: I have a question for the Minister of Financial and Commercial Affairs, Mr. Speaker:

What were the results of the department's investigation of trading in shares of Canadian Breweries prior to the Rothman take-over?

Has the Minister looked into the U.S. law which forbids a member of a board of directors from lying to the public in circumstances such as the Canadian Breweries take-over, as he promised the House on June 14, 1968? What has been the result of this look?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: In answer to the first question I must say, Mr. Speaker, that with regard to the routine enquiry, to which I previously referred and which is reported in Hansard of June 14, 1968, on page 4475, I am informed that the necessary insider trading reports were subsequently filed within the time limited by The Securities Act, and its regulations. No offences were disclosed.

With respect to the second and third questions, on July 8, 1968, as reported on page 5314 of Hansard, I made a further statement regarding the position concerning timely disclosure. The Ontario Securities Commission, within the framework of Ontario and Canadian legislation, made further studies which resulted in the publication of its "timely disclosure" policy as reported in the September 1968 bulletin at page 192.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Financial and Commercial Affairs. When may I expect an answer to my letter of November 22, 1968, re: Czeslaw Kaczynski and the Allstate Insurance Company?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: I have in my hands, Mr. Speaker, the final report of this investigation from the superintendent of insurance.

Unfortunately the superintendent is attending meetings in Ottawa this week, and prior to giving a reply, I want an opportunity of discussing this report in detail with him.

Mr. Shulman: Can I ask a supplementary question Mr. Minister? Thank you very much.

Mr. Speaker: I am afraid the hon. member for Sudbury East is unable now to ask his question.

Orders of the day.

Clerk of the House: The first order; resuming the adjourned debate on the amendment to the amendment to the motion for an address in reply to the speech of the Honourable, the Lieutenant-Governor at the opening of the session.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

Mr. J. B. Trotter (Parkdale): Mr. Speaker, I want, at the outset, to congratulate you on your second year presiding over this House, and also at the same time I would like to congratulate the member for Waterloo South who has acted as your deputy. I know that is the custom to thank the Speaker, but often being a Speaker or the Chairman of a Committee is a very thankless task. I would like sincerely to congratulate you for the effort that you have made the past two years, and as this is the first opportunity I have had to speak generally on the subject, I would like to congratulate the member for London South on his elevation to the Cabinet.

During this summer I had an opportunity, along with other members of the House who were on the taxation committee, to realize that he could work very hard. On many subjects we agreed to disagree, but there is no question that the new Minister of Revenue is a man of ability and, deserves the appointment which he has received.

It is one of the few occasions, Mr. Speaker, that I have something nice to say, I guess, about the other side of the House.

Very seldom does a member from the city of Toronto bring forth before this House the problems that in many respects are largely associated with his own riding. Many members from the rural areas and from northern Ontario quite properly discuss the needs of a particular road or a particular bridge, or the importance of having The Department of Highways, or a Department of Highways' depot in their riding, or whether or not The Department of Lands and Forests is doing all it possibly can for that individual member's riding.

When you are a member from a large city, such as the city of Toronto, you often find that it is very impersonal and it is much more difficult for a member from a large city to become identified closely with the constituency which he represents. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, there is a greater tendency on my part to discuss the issues of overall importance for the province, such as health and welfare, and legal aid, or the importance of ethnic groups here in the province of Ontario. Or the desperate needs for more regular policy in housing, and the ever increasing problems of urbanization of the 20th century.

There have been occasions, Mr. Speaker, such as the time the hon. member for Armourdale spoke justly and well for his people. At the time he felt that the Minister of Highways was not treating him and his area properly on the expropriation matter, having to do with Highway 401.

As a result of what he had to say, something was done for his people in Armourdale, and eventually, Mr. Speaker, we had an Expropriation Act which gives protection, not only for the constituents of Armourdale, but for all of the province of Ontario.

Today, Mr. Speaker, I want to discuss a problem concerning a particular roadway in my riding, and that is Lakeshore Boulevard west. As all of us are no doubt aware, there is now a real possibility that a raceway for high speed cars will be established on Lakeshore Boulevard west, in Toronto and in the CNE grounds.

With your permission, Mr. Speaker, I have had pages deliver to each member, a photograph or a picture of the general area that the raceway will cover along the Lakeshore and through the CNE grounds. Naturally, my constituents are alarmed at the prospect for they are fully aware of the many grave problems in inconvenience that they will face. And these problems and inconveniences, during the course of my speech, I will enumerate to you.

But in a larger sense, Mr. Speaker, the issues that arise in the possibility of a raceway on Lakeshore Boulevard west in Toronto, concern not just Toronto-Parkdale or the city of Toronto, but they are issues of far-reaching importance throughout the province of Ontario.

I am firmly convinced that the manner in which the application to obtain the right to conduct the speedway in the city of Toronto has been conducted in a manner that is an outrageous insult to every citizen in the province of Ontario. Indeed it is a vicious threat to what Abraham Lincoln called "government of the people by the people and for the people."

The issue of the Lakeshore raceway is urgent because it affects the future policy of the government of Ontario, not only in the matter of highway safety and the matter of use of public funds for the development of the Toronto waterfront and the effect of the raceway in other parts of Ontario, but particularly on future policies in regard to the use of public parks and roads, and especially whether or not we are going to permit a few wealthy extremely influential feudal barons to dominate not only the municipality of Metropolitan Toronto, but the government of Ontario itself.

Let me give you some of the background of the companies that are interested in the Lakeshore raceway. I particularly hope that the few members on the government side who are in the House at the present time, will listen carefully because they are nearly all their close associates.

I have been extremely curious as I have watched the various Ministers answer questions that have been put to them on this subject since this House first sat in 1968. There is no question in my mind, Mr. Speaker, that the government has deliberately kept its head in the sand to protect its close friends who obviously had too much influence with this government for the good of the people of Toronto and the good of the people of Ontario.

Well, here is some of the background on this whole situation.

A private company named Lakeshore Auto Raceway Holdings Limited was incorporated on July 3, of 1968. Its directors make interesting reading. They include such luminaries as John F. Bassett Jr., George Eaton, John O. Hull, George Ashworth, Don F. Hunt and Stanley D. Houston.

Who these men are explains in very large part, in fact maybe it is the complete explanation as to how and why such a ridiculous and outrageous scheme as having cars rip along the Lakeshore Boulevard at 180 miles an hour has managed to get as far as it has.

John F. Bassett is the son of the publisher of the Toronto Telegram and the publisher's executive assistant. He is also executive assistant to the president of Baton Broadcasting Limited which owns CFTO, Channel 9 Toronto.

Donald Hunt is general manager of Lakeshore Auto Raceway Holdings Limited and was formerly with Public Relations Services known in the trade as PRSL.

Gordon Ashworth is treasurer and director of the Toronto Telegram and a director of CFTO.

John O. Hull is president of Public Relations Services.

Stanley Houston is vice-president of PRSL, and originally handled the Telegram accounts for the Telegram trophy race at Mosport.

George Eaton is an enthusiastic racing driver and the son of John David Eaton, who has a large interest in a firm called the T. Eaton Company.

The public relations firm called PRSL, for short does the Telegram's work on such items as the Telegram Christmas Fairyland and the Telegram trophy race at Mosport in 1967 and 1968. The same firm does the public relations work for Players Tobacco, one of the major sponsors of the grand prix for '67 and '68 and the Players 200. PRSL is a subsidiary of the McKim Advertising Company and this agency has directors and officers which are common to PRSL.

By the way, Mr. Speaker, the McKim agency handles the Eaton account and the Players account and PRSL, obviously interested in sports, handles the metropolitan Toronto account for the Olympic Games and the Toronto waterfront development proposal and PRSL and McKim Advertising, I believe, also do a large part of the Tory Party advertising work.

No matter where you go—whether you are dealing with the city of Toronto or whether you are dealing with the province of Ontario or any of these large firms, you are dealing with the very same people. They are all members of one political party and they are all very close to one political party.

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister of Correctional Services): You people have no political friends, of course.

Mr. Trotter: In all this major discussion that has gone on in the city of Toronto, there has not been a single, prominent government member, of any kind, who has stood up to oppose it. They have kept their mouths shut. They are either ashamed of themselves or they are afraid.

Not a single one.

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): Which is the hon. Minister?

Mr. Trotter: I can only assume that they favour the whole outrageous mess. But to my mind this is, in large part, the reason behind it. If you have ever perused the public accounts of the province of Ontario you will know that this government has smiled sweetly and kindly upon the McKim advertising agency.

Mr. Speaker, the company was incorporated in July of 1968. The first inkling ever to come out in print that such an idea as a speedway on the Lakeshore Boulevard was a possibility came to light in the month of August, 1968, when a Toronto Daily Star sports writer, Bob Purcell, wrote a speculative article that such a raceway was being planned.

Naturally, the officials that own Mosport Race Track became concerned. Mosport is owned by a firm called Cantrack Motor Racing Corporation and it bought out the assets of an old defunct Mosport company. At the present time, the president of the company is a Jerry Polivka and the directors are a Dr. Irwin Fineberg and his wife Charlotte, and another major stockholder is a man named Anthony Esposito of Oshawa.

Now I have no axe to grind for Mosport but its name is bound to come up on various times on this.

Mr. Speaker, the thing that concerns me first, is how such a scheme could come to pass in a major city like Toronto. I want to give you some idea of how a powerful group can really organize a juggernaut and, if enough people are not aware of it, they can do almost exactly as they please even in a large city such as Toronto.

Our whole legislative process concerns all of us, and because Toronto is the capital city of Ontario, and because so much money is involved in this situation, I will give you some idea, before I am through, of the amount of money that is involved. I think it is important to show you how something can be organized and moved quickly.

I am awfully grateful that the city of Toronto is not a one newspaper town. It would be a major disaster for free speech if we ever found that this was a one newspaper town. For example, there was a report in the Toronto Star by Bob Purcell in August that maybe there was something brewing about a Lakeshore raceway. Then an article appeared in the Globe and Mail on September 11, 1968 and they interviewed John Bassett Jr. Maybe he was misquoted — sometimes politicians complain they are misquoted and maybe this is a time when a newspaperman is misquoted — but on September 11, 1968, Mr. Bassett said this:

All we are doing is taking a look at the idea of racing in the CNE grounds. The financing has not been done and we have not laid out the track. There are dozens of people we still have to see.

And above that, in another quotation he says:

We have not been incorporated under provincial law.

That is perhaps where he was not quoted correctly because that is dated September 11 and they were incorporated on July 3. One day, when I was going through some of these papers, I slipped over to the Provincial Secretary's office and invested one dollar of my own money.

Mr. Speaker, I found out that this company applied for incorporation on April 2, 1968, so that obviously, underground, behind the scenes, a great deal had been going on for some considerable time because I do not think a group just goes out and incorporates a company unless they have something very definite in mind.

But none of this was before the public, and then, Mr. Bassett had said on September 11, "We have a lot of things to do, we are thinking it over."

Lo and behold, on September 16, just five days later, along comes the good Minister of Tourism and Information—and it is interesting when we keep in mind, Mr. Speaker, the remarks of the Attorney General when answering questions in regard to this matter, because the Attorney General says, "We do not want to interfere with the city of Toronto."

It did not bother the Minister of Tourism and Information one little bit; he did not worry if there were committees in the city of Toronto or Metropolitan Toronto; he did not worry about their local councils. He came along and he said on September 16, 1968, at a big press conference set up:

It gives me great pleasure to report to you that in 1969 the city of Toronto will be the locale for two major international automobile races, specifically, the site will be the Canadian National Exhibition and Lakeshore Boulevard.

And then he went on in some detail to say what they were. He knew all about them and this was only about four or five days after we were told by Mr. Bassett that they were just thinking things out.

Now, obviously, Mr. Auld either willingly or unwillingly put his foot into it, because time and time again when different discussions were held with various groups at the metro Toronto level and the city of Toronto level, the statement of the Minister of Tourism and Information was thrown up in our face, and there is no doubt that the Minister of Tourism and Information has done, in my view, a tremendous amount of harm to the area with which I am closely associated in Toronto.

Mr. A. B. R. Lawrence (Carleton East): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the hon. member would permit a question?

Mr. Trotter: Yes.

Mr. A. B. R. Lawrence: As a member from a riding nearly 300 miles away, a riding in Ottawa, I would ask if the member speaking would direct some thoughts or some of his remarks to someone in my position. Namely, why should such a member as myself be involved in disciplining or acting as a court of appeal for a matter in his city, namely, Toronto?

In other words, if Ottawa decides to have such a track, would he feel ill at ease at the government here intruding?

Mr. Trotter: Mr. Speaker, I will get into that. When the main issue is here, this is why I say it affects all the province of Ontario. We have a situation that we are going to turn over our public roads, our parks, to a private group for private profit, and a lot of this concerns provincial money.

The province of Ontario, in the not too distant future, is going to be asked to spend millions of dollars to develop the Toronto waterfront. Yet this is the very area that is going to be affected by moneys that are going to have to be spent by the province.

The other thing that I want to emphasize is that again, another part of Ontario, the county of Durham, will be harmed if a particular group in Toronto has its way.

As far as coming to this House about a local matter, I would say that this is the court of appeal, that is why I use as an example the illustration of the member for Armourdale. He complained about how they were expropriating property in his area on a certain stretch of highway, and he did get redress. Eventually they changed the law completely so that the same problem should not arise.

Hon. J. H. White (Minister of Revenue): In that case yes, but we had jurisdiction.

Mr. Trotter: Well, you have jurisdiction and you have had nothing from your Attorney General but a lot of legal garbage. There is no question in mind you had that. So, I am going to continue, Mr. Speaker.

I am embarrassed for the Attorney General that he gave the opinion he did. I have not met a lawyer yet that agrees with him. Maybe he was giving a political opinion, and trying to avoid making any decision whatsoever, but this will not stand up, I would stake my name on it.

Mind you, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. E. W. Sopha (Sudbury): Four statutes say it is a highway.

Mr. Trotter: —Mr. Speaker, I inject here that I realize there is a competition between two private companies, the Mosport group and the new lakeshore company. But what I want to emphasize, when I get into the matter of safety on our public highways, that it is far safer, in the long run, to use the circuit that we have at Mosport rather than using a public highway which we do on the lakeshore.

If we did not have a race track in this area, you might possibly have some sort of excuse. But, when we bear in mind that such a well-known racing driver as Stirling Moss has claimed that the Mosport racetrack is the most challenging and artistic road course on this continent, it is obvious that we have something at least in the Toronto area that can be used by us.

I want to point out to you, Mr. Speaker, that Mosport is located in the township of Clark in the county of Durham and, although it is outside of Metropolitan Toronto, it is considered one of the attractions in the general Toronto area. The Air Canada booklet, co-sponsored by the provinces of Ontario and Quebec, prominently mentions Toronto and its international race track at Mosport. In virtually every hotel room in Toronto there is a copy of the Toronto Guide and, once again, Toronto is linked with the Mosport race track.

Mr. Auld, when he gave his tacit support to the Lakeshore Auto Raceway Holdings Limited, was either being led down the garden path or was deliberately doing a hatchet job on a commercial enterprise which would inevitably harm the county of Durham. And I say this as a member from Toronto, that it is foolish for us, even from a tourist business point of view, to try and go out and do a hatchet job on a neighbouring community.

There is no doubt in my mind that many of the people who attend Mosport stay in Toronto hotels and motels. There is nothing worse for the city of Toronto and Metropolitan Toronto and its relations with the surrounding community to do anything that would encourage the image of being a hog town. And this is really what is happening.

It is not the citizens as a whole, but it is a particular group that wants its way and is going to have its way, regardless of whether or not it has to kick the people of Toronto in the teeth or kick the people of Durham in the teeth.

This is one problem that really goes beyond the boundaries of the city of Toronto.

Mr. C. G. Pilkey (Oshawa): Just one Tory group hatcheting another Tory group.

Mr. Trotter: Mr. Speaker, the announcement was made by the Minister of Tourism and Information on September 16. Only three days later the application of the raceway track company was to be heard before the Metropolitan Toronto committee on parks. If you have any idea of how things might work at City Hall, it is just fantastic that within three days they had any idea that they were going to discuss such an extensive problem as the Lakeshore Raceways. I just want to point out some of the facts that were involved.

The CNE ground is probably worth about half a billion dollars, Mr. Speaker. It is one of the most valuable areas in all of Ontario. Yet we had a situation where they were going to ram things through the Toronto council and through the Metropolitan Toronto council in a very short time.

The raceway company started its application to Metro on September 19. At one time they hoped to have the whole thing completed by October 1. Then they changed their date to sometime in November, and, as people have become more aware of the principles that are involved, of course, the whole matter has been slowed down. Not only is it simply public pressure, but members of the Metropolitan Toronto council are becoming aware of what is wrong.

I want to give you some idea of what I would call a "sweet, sweet deal" for any company that would, like the lakeshore raceway, get the contract they were asking for. The raceway company was to pay $20,000 for each of two race events in the year 1969 and also for the next 14 years, and the company would be entitled to rent at a similar rental with respect to each of the two race events which their company would have the right to hold in each of the next 14 years.

In return for this the lakeshore auto raceway company offered to restore the grass infield within the CNE stadium to at least its original condition, to erect fences, and to protect spectators, and to bring the existing roads within the grounds in that section of the Lakeshore Boulevard required for the race course up to racing standards.

The company was also going to purchase sufficient liability insurance to meet the requirements of the municipality of Metropolitan Toronto and to arrange and pay for the necessary police protection to provide proper crowd control, and that was all the company had to do.

Well, just in passing, Mr. Speaker, one might wonder how much of the $20,000 per race would be left after the garbage was collected after a race, which collection would be at the taxpayers' expense.

In consideration of all this, all that the municipality of Metropolitan Toronto had to do was close the Lakeshore Road, designated as a race course, which would be from 10 a.m. to 3 p.m. on Thursday and Friday and all day on Saturday and Sunday twice a year. Of course, nothing was mentioned that they would need three days for practice runs.

Nothing was said as to how long Lakeshore and other exhibition roads would be closed in order to bring the roadways up to racing standards. Some people tell me that Lakeshore could be closed, or at least hindered, for as long as three months and Metropolitan Toronto was to release, Mr. Speaker, the entire CNE grounds.

Now they were going to give to this private company the entire CNE grounds. They could carry on any type of souvenir stalls they wished; they could have a midway; they had all the television rights, the radio rights, and Metro Toronto, when they total up the amount from two races and what they could get from small matters, from parking in certain concessions, Metro Toronto was to get approximately $85,000.

Mr. Speaker, when these racing companies charge spectators to watch a race, they charge about $5.00 to see the main event, and usually $2.00, to see a preliminary race. So if you get 100,000 people to see a race, there again is a gross, just to see the main race, of half a million dollars. They charge extra for grandstand seats and, of course, if they have a grand prix they charge approximately $7.00 per person.

It has been estimated that this private company, using your roads and your park, could make approximately $500,000 to $600,000 a race. It is no wonder that the commissioner of finance for the city of Toronto was very much opposed to the transaction and it is amazing that so many of the commissioners, with the exception of Mr. Thompson, the commissioner of parks, were pretty well opposed — either vehemently opposed, or in their reports listed a great number of objections.

For example, Mr. Speaker, commissioner Bremner, who is the commissioner of public works for the city of Toronto, said that to close the Lakeshore Boulevard West during the time suggested would create an intolerable situation with respect to the circulation of traffic in the vicinity of the Canadian National Exhibition grounds.

We shall have the inconvenience of that, but simply looking at it from a dollar and cents point of view, there is no question that a strong pressure group has been coming very close to obtaining what I would call a very sweet contract and certainly I think, Mr. Speaker, that the fact that a private group can carry on in such a fashion is nothing but legalized robbery as far as I view the whole deal.

Yet, Mr. Speaker, no matter how outrageous the whole idea may seem, the Lakeshore Raceway people must have been awfully confident of obtaining what they wanted. Before public hearings had begun at city hall, Don F. Hunt, the general manager of Lakeshore Raceway, announced that negotiations had been concluded with the Canadian Racing Drivers Association to organize international races at the track.

Negotiations have also been concluded, so we are told, with the United States Auto Club to hold the Telegram Trophy Race at Lakeshore on June 15, 1969, and just to give you some idea of the speed that attended the progress of this matter through the various civic authorities in metropolitan Toronto—and bear in mind, Mr. Speaker, that the real estate in the CNE is worth, as I have said, about $500 million—the metropolitan Toronto parks commissioner had received a letter dated September 11 from the Lakeshore Auto Raceway Company, and within one day he was able to reply accepting the transaction.

It is amazing to me that a matter involving so much money could be consummated so quickly by a parks department.

Mr. A. B. R. Lawrence: What about my question?

Mr. Trotter: Just sit and listen. It is unusual for some of you to do that over there. I congratulate you for at least being here.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I will just touch briefly on the difficulties that affect a constituency such as mine because all types of spectators are attracted to motor sports and many of these spectators are entering and leaving through residential areas. An awful lot of people say, "Well you have hundreds of thousands of people going to the Canadian National Exhibition, what difference would it make when they come to a race track?"

There is one major difference, Mr. Speaker, just in regard to crowd control. When they go to the exhibition they come at various times and leave at various times. When they go to a race they go at a particular time and they all leave at the same time, or the vast majority of them leave at the same time, so that when you have 100,000 to 150,000 spectators converging on a certain area all at once. This is going to cause a tremendous problem in regard to crowd control, and there is no doubt that in an area today, in an urbanized area that is already highly congested, this serves only to greatly confuse the situation insofar as the people in the area trying to live a decent life.

The constituency, Mr. Speaker, known as Parkdale, is in some respects misnamed, because there is less park area per person in Parkdale than in any other section in metropolitan Toronto.

Before the matter of the Lakeshore raceway came up, the metropolitan parks and recreation committee recommended that 40 acres of land at the west end of the CNE grounds be cleared in order to provide park land and community recreation facilities for the residents of Parkdale.

A speedway is hardly conducive for a good park for children and possibly many of the barricades, earth embankments, crowd control barriers, and other safety features would remain as permanent objects in the proposed park area, despite all the best intentions to the contrary.

South Parkdale has unlimited opportunity for imaginative and creative development, and with imagination and firm resolve that part of Toronto could be a source of pleasure and enjoyment for many thousands of people.

It is no wonder that my constituents are furious that their needs are being completely ignored and that despite the fact there is one of the best enclosed racetracks in the world a few miles away, a second racetrack is going to be established on their doorsteps.

The Minister of Tourism and Information and the others may think that the suggested raceway is a great thing for tourism. Surely the ratepayers in a community, who have lived in that community for many years, paid their taxes year by year, deserve prior consideration.

Mr. Speaker, in my opening remarks, I said this problem of a raceway on the Lakeshore Boulevard in Toronto involves, or at least should involve policy on a provincial government level. And my first concern is for safety, both highway safety and spectator safety.

Just imagine, Mr. Speaker, if we permit speed racing on our streets, either in Toronto or in Ottawa or any other part of Ontario, I think we are bringing in a danger to the general public and I would like to give you my reasons for this.

I would like you to look at this, not just as the problem of Parkdale, which it is an imminent threat in my area, but as the same situation which could happen anywhere in the province of Ontario. So let us take a look at what a speedway involves and how much sense having a road race at speeds of this day and age makes.

I want to make it quite clear that I am not opposed to speed racing as a sport. But because it is a highly dangerous activity, its location should be restricted and highly supervised. Motor racing should most certainly not take place on public highways. I am sorry that the Minister of Transport and the Minister of Highways are not here, because this certainly involves statutes in which they are involved. The Encyclopedia Britannica defines motor racing as being dangerous; it says:

Motor racing is a dangerous undertaking in all its forms, although manufacturers and race promoters are usually reluctant to acknowledge the dangers inherent. Spectacular and death-defying accidents have marked the history of this sport from its early stages.

At various times, following accidents involving participants and spectators, the very continuance of motor racing has seemed to be in doubt because of public and official protest.

Motor racing started in Europe in the 1890s with city to city events on open roads. Both race control and crowd control was extremely difficult, and, after a number of accidents, this type of racing was largely replaced by events on triangular or rectangular circuits, still using public highways, but providing organizers with the means to protect spectators and to charge admission fees.

Throughout the twenties and thirties there were accidents involving spectators on both road circuits and private tracks but the number of people killed was usually relatively low due to moderate speeds, by today's standards, and small crowds. Then in the late 1930s, Mr. Speaker, speeds went up and the number of accidents increased. Eight spectators were killed in the 1936 Tourist Trophy in Northern Ireland, and in 1937 several people were killed or seriously injured at Brno, in Czechoslovakia, and at Pescara in Italy, all of these events being on public roads closed for racing.

However, even as early as 1903 when three people had been killed, open road racing was banned in Europe by the majority of governments.

I would like to emphasize that, Mr. Speaker—that open road racing was banned in Europe by the majority of governments.

Using a "roads closed for the race" policy, some countries did reinstitute street motor racing in the late 1930s. Because so many accidents have taken place, the only street race left in the world today is the Monaco Grand Prix race.

I have since learned that down in South America, in the Argentine, they still have a few street races, but in most of Europe, except Monaco, they are gone.

No wonder, Mr. Speaker, street racing has ceased in Europe and throughout the world. Covering the post-war period from 1946 to date, the unalterable fact that motor racing is a dangerous undertaking is underlined by two basic statistics. When you look at the history of this, this is why a lot of us can be concerned:

One, since 1946 there have been approximately 1,000 fatalities in motor racing. Second, if you take the names for the line-up of any major race run in 1958, it will be noted that 35 per cent of the drivers were subsequently killed in motor racing, and a further 25 per cent had retired as a result of serious injuries sustained during motor racing.

Even Mosport, which has a high safety record, has had three driver fatalities, one flag marshal fatality, and three flag marshal injuries. Only two spectators have been injured and these were both minor and freak accidents in a period of eight years.

Probably the greatest single motor racing disaster took place in 1959—which is not too long ago—in LeMans, France. At that time a Mercedes car killed 80 people and seriously injured 200 others. The Mercedes collided with a slower car, caught fire and vaulted into the crowd. The Mercedes car company has since withdrawn from all racing. It is poor advertising when you get involved in that kind of an schemozzle.

Again, Mr. Speaker, this is why I just want to ask you—and those of you who take the time to look at that map that I put in front of you—I want to ask you how safe is this lakeshore raceway that we have here? When this matter came before the Metropolitan Toronto parks and recreation committee, it was asked, "Are there any experts available on the subject?" The Mosport people said, "Yes, we will get you an expert". And so they got a man named Charles Money-penny and they came up with his record and what he advised on this. Of course, he was very much opposed on the grounds of safety to a racetrack as outlined in that map before you.

When some of us quote Mr. Money-penny, they say he is biased. It is true his expenses were paid by the Mosport people, who are naturally economic competitors of the lakeshore raceway people; he was paid $100 a day. I make no secret about that.

I am not going to list all the record of Mr. Charles Money-penny, but he is one of the two top authorities on race tracks in the world, and he lives in Las Vegas. He is one of the two recognized world authorities in the design and construction of motor race circuits. His recommendations and advice in respect to a race track location, safety and construction are universally accepted.

He has had work to do in building the Fuji race track in Japan. In fact, right at the present time he is in charge of building the race track for Expo '70 in Japan. He has been responsible for the race track in Daytona, Florida, and has carried on as an engineer throughout most of the states in the United States. And, of course, he has been responsible in Atlanta and Charlotte and different other super-speedways. I do not want to take the time of the House to go into his record, Mr. Speaker, but there is no question, he is an outstanding authority.

With that map in front of you—and this is a short report—I just want to give you some idea of what one top expert thinks of a raceway on our highways here in Toronto. And again I urge you that this is a policy that should be involved with the province of Ontario, because what happened in New York? There was a serious motor accident in New York and the state of New York passed a law banning all racing on state highways, and insisted that a circuit track be built. And this is what I hope would happen here—a governmental policy from the province of Ontario that would simply say this should not be and outlaw it. This is really what I am asking for. If the members think this is a local matter, I think this is very important.

This is what Money-penny thinks of that map you have in front of you—the picture of that track:

I went over the proposed course four or five times Tuesday and Wednesday of this week, carefully noting the problems and examining the terrain and have come to the definite conclusion that any person or group that would authorize the conversion of this route into an auto racing facility would be very disappointed in the results emanating from its future use as a motor race track for the following reasons:

The Lakeshore Boulevard portion is the only area where high speeds could be attained. However, spectators located along the stadium parking lot, next to a chain-link fence, would be unable to see more than a flash of cars going by, using a given point, because of the sharp angle of viewing, restricted by the fencing and barricades.

In the interior portion of the CNE area, there are 12 sharp curves—

Incidentally, if members know the CNE grounds, and you look at that map, this race track comes around the fountain. You can imagine what a great place it is. They will be running 180 miles an hour around the fountain.

In the interior portion of the CNE area, there are 12 sharp curves to be negotiated, all of which would be extremely difficult due to the narrow confines of the course due to the existing concrete curbs and the double guard rail installations proposed to be erected about the curves. Also the existing pavement has a centre crown giving a slope toward each curb, resulting in a reverse camber on the outside of each curve.

Just to interject here, Mr. Speaker. We know that in our highways as they are now, they rise slightly in the centre and the water, when we have rain, will run to the sides. Well, the lakeshore race track will have to be perfectly flat or be slightly banked. When we are not using it as a racetrack and have a light rain and then a freeze, I wonder how safe that lakeshore is going to be for the average car driver going to and fro. This matter has not really been given the thought that it should.

Just remember, this is only supposed to be used eight days a week, and the general public has to put up with such a road the rest of the year.

An hon. member: Eight days a year.

Mr. Trotter: Sorry, eight days a year.

Now, on speaking on the roadways, these would require extensive reconstruction in order to make their surface acceptable for a race course.

However, racing cars traversing this section—that is the CNE—approximately 1.5 miles, would, in effect, be travelling inside a narrow chute formed by curving guard rails from which there is no escape, excepting possibly at the ends. Therefore, it can be expected that there will be numerous unavoidable accidents during the competitive races, causing not only serious damage to the cars, but other serious potential damages to adjacent properties and probably spectators.

Mr. Speaker, no matter how safe they make these tracks, there are always fatalities. There have always been fatalities in the history of these racing tracks over a period of time. You just do not escape it.

Now, should the road service camber be constructed along an accepted basis to accommodate motor racing, by either flattening or sloping the pavement in one direction of the curve. This is what concerns me, because I think that throughout most of the year it will be extremely dangerous.

Another very important aspect of its use as a racecourse is to guarantee a large number of spectators being placed in an area where they can view a race from absolutely safe location.

Mr. Money Penny went on for three or four paragraphs to show that under the circumstances it just could not be done. He said temporary barricades erected as additional safeguards could never offer as reliable a protection as permanently constructed barricades due to the inbuilt tolerances necessary for portability.

It is an established fact that in many instances, racing cars hitting a barricade or another racing car that has encountered trouble will slip and slide through the air for considerable distances. It is also well known that tires and wheels will jump over barricades, and so on and travel for considerable distances, easily 60 or 70 feet. I have heard it said they can fly much further than that.

Well, Mr. Speaker, this is one important emphasis that I want to make—the safety of our highways. This is not the question in a place like Indianapolis. We are all familiar with the Indianapolis speedway where they have walls 8 to 12 feet high on both sides made of concrete.

Mosport has guard rails and earthen embankments, and the spectators are well above the track at a different level. But here, in the picture you have before you, there is simply not going to be any of that whatsoever.

Also, Mr. Speaker, I might point out that we are told—and this is not definite information—because of the Lakeshore roadway they are going to have to widen it possibly by four feet, and if that happens they are going to chop down trees. They tell me that on Dominion Street, which is just to the west of the Ontario Provincial Government Buildings, they are going to have to widen it by six feet and chop down some old trees.

Why, I ask you, Mr. Speaker, must all this be done for the convenience of a particular group of people? That seems to be one of the main problems here.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that when the Minister of Tourism and Information gave his enthusiastic approval to the proposed Lakeshore speedway, he completely and utterly ignored the interests of which I have already pointed out. That is, he ignored the interest not only of the people of the area, and the people of another private company carrying on business in the county of Durham, but it is obvious to me that he supported what I think is the very narrow minded point of view of a particular group in Ontario insofar as how they treat a neighbouring community.

I say to you, Mr. Speaker, that I think it is important that in this whole area, not only of southern Ontario, but of all Ontario, that Toronto has the best possible name. But I do not think that the treatment the County of Durham has had in this whole situation, is one of which we can be very proud or very pleased about.

And one bears in mind, Mr. Speaker, that the province of Ontario pays about one-third of the cost of our local roads. I feel that they should pay at least 50 per cent, but I cannot be very pleased with the situation where public money, I feel is being very much misused.

Mr. Speaker, one of the major issues to my mind, is the use of our public roads and our public parks being turned over to a private firm. We are often told that Montreal does this and that Montreal does that, and that if we do not get out and compete Montreal will get these things way ahead of us.

It is interesting to note that when an enquiry was made a few months ago as to what Montreal thought of using road races as an attraction, this is what Mr. Rene Belisle replied. Mr. Belisle is superintendent of recreation in Montreal, and he said that Montreal would never allow racing in Montreal because it was an excess of the speed limit.

Again, I would draw to the attention of the Attorney General that we have a very similar provision in the province of Ontario that he chooses to ignore.

The superintendent of recreation in Montreal said this: "Another reason is that the request was made by a private association, for a financial use of public property. Montreal is very very much opposed to the use of their public roads for private gain."

I have been surprised throughout this whole debate, the whole controversy over the Lakeshore raceway, that the Minister of Trade and Development has been so quiet and taken so little interest in what has taken place. Many of us may not have realized it, and I am sure, Mr. Speaker, that many of you here do not realize that the Canadian National Exhibition grounds is used by about 29 trade shows over a period of time when the Canadian National Exhibition Winter Fair is not in operation.

The trade shows represent, in the economic field, approximately $100 million in the firms that do business there. And yet, the group — the Trading Consumers Association — has never been consulted in regard to this entire proposition that has come before Metropolitan Toronto Council. Despite their interest in the exhibition grounds for more than 20 years, no one has asked their opinion or what they thought.

Again I emphasize, Mr. Speaker, that many of these trade shows are not just for Torontonians; they affect the entire economy of Ontario.

The Minister of Trade and Development has been doing a lot of talking about the importance of trade shows. He has been going around the world encouraging trade shows and in this I agree with him. But I cannot understand how he would completely ignore the fact that these trade shows are going to be seriously harmed.

I just want to give you some idea of what these people — and by that, I mean the Association of Trade and Consumers Exhibitions — think of this entire situation.

Mr. Grant Smedmore, who is president of the Association of Trade and Consumer Exhibitions, has written a number of letters to Mr. William R. Allen, Q.C., chairman of the Municipality of Metropolitan Toronto. This is one letter dated December 12, 1968, and from this particular letter, this is what he says:

As you are no doubt aware, exhibition park facilities have been very tightly booked in recent years and new reservations are often impossible to arrange. This is a condition that will prevail until new facilities are provided. In addition, a number of trade show dates have to be juggled each fall to avoid a conflict with the Jewish holidays.

Under the circumstances, to tie up the whole park for four or five-day periods, spring and fall, would simply aggravate the situation. You say that you are endeavouring to create and establish continuous attractions at exhibition park for a large number of people. This may be very desirable and commendable, but may we point out that since World War II, the growth of trade and consumer shows held in exhibition park has been such that the calendar outside of the period when the park is used by the CNE is virtually full.

In several cases, two events are running concurrently and sharing the parking and other facilities.

Mr. Speaker, we know for a fact that the National Gift Show in September of 1970 has a definite conflict with the proposed race that they intend to carry on. Here is a show that brings in 12,000 salesmen to the city of Toronto and I am sure the Minister of Trade and Development would want to encourage such a show.

When it was told that they would have difficulty getting there, the raceway company offered to bring them in by the back door, at the Dufferin Gate.

I have often wondered how the Minister of Trade and Development would regard a similar situation if businessmen from Ontario, if they were in another jurisdiction, were taken to a building through the back door.

It is a situation that has certainly shown a complete lack of interest by the people who are governing the province of Ontario. Certainly, the Minister of Trade and Development and the Minister of Highways and the Minister of Transport have been derelict in their duty in keeping an eye on and protecting the interests of the people of this province.

When you bear in mind that the Minister of Tourism and Information was really the man responsible for the kick-off of this whole scheme and who has really ignored the metropolitan Toronto council and the various committees in the city of Toronto council, I think that when a Minister goes that far and is either deliberately or naively misled, he should tender his resignation. I do not think he should carry on the office he holds.

There is one particular matter which I want to touch on briefly, and that is, the views of the Attorney General as to what he thinks the authority of the province of Ontario is.

If the Attorney General, and I assume he truly believes in the opinion that he has given, really believes that the province of Ontario has virtually no authority over our highways, over racing on our roadways—then the laws of the province of Ontario should be completely revamped.

There is no question in my mind that the Attorney General is wrong—even in his letter when he would not give the House the reasons for his decision. Mr. Speaker, I was able to obtain a copy of his letter to the chairman of the municipality of metropolitan Toronto; Mr. Allen, and I was able to see some detail of what his reasons were.

There is no question in my mind that he was simply trying to avoid taking a position in this problem.

He did not even discuss The Metropolitan Toronto Act. He did not even mention it in his letter and just to give you an example of what is ignored—and I am not going to go into a legal debate on this—but the municipality of metropolitan Toronto Act was passed in revised statutes of Ontario 1960 and incidentally, again I repeat, the Attorney General did not even consider this Act, if I can go by the report he made.

In Section 89, it says this:

The Metropolitan Council may by law, prescribe a lower or higher rate of speed for motor vehicles driven upon any metropolitan road or any portion of a metropolitan road than is prescribed in subsection 1 of section 59 of The Highway Traffic Act, but such rate of speed shall not be less than 25 miles per hour or more than 60 miles per hour.

They want to have cars that go from 180 to 200 miles an hour. So I do not know how they come within that section. But even subsection 2:

No by-law passed under subsection 1 shall become effective until approved by The Department of Transport and the metropolitan roads or portions thereof affected by the by-laws shall be marked to comply with the regulations made under The Highway Traffic Act.

The Attorney General does not even seem to bother to consider that and when I think of that Act and The Highway Improvement Act, The Highway Traffic Act and The Municipal Act, I cannot understand at all what the Attorney General has in mind nor do I think do the city solicitor of Toronto nor the solicitor for Metropolitan Toronto understand the position of the government of the province of Ontario.

I think the real position of this government is this, Mr. Speaker—they are embarrassed because they have avaricious friends who have been trying to get what they want at no matter what cost to anybody else. Because I emphasize in this whole situation that the people responsible for the whole attempt, the whole rape of our public parks, the seizure of our roadways, are very close friends of the present administration.

Mr. Speaker, I think it is highly questionable if individuals in positions of great influence in mass media such as newspapers and television should be involved in financial enterprises that depend so much for their success on favourable decisions of local politicians.

Hon. H. L. Rowntree (Minister of Financial and Commercial Affairs): What about the Liberal government at Ottawa and television rights?

Mr. Trotter: All right. I remember the station. I am glad you mentioned that, on channel three. There is no question in my mind that they were wrong and I was one of those opposed to channel three being changed. I must say, when the whole debate came up in the early days of public media versus private media, I was opposed to private interests being in television. I do not, on the whole, approve of it.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Would two wrongs make a right?

Mr. Trotter: So this is what is happening in our society. This is another major issue that I am concerned that we should just look at. What can be done? Because whether you are a Liberal or a Conservative or an NDP, if a party is in power—and I do not think the NDP will ever make it—but if they ever did the same situation could happen and when you have mass media in the control of a few people then we shall be faced with a very singular problem.

Mr. S. Apps (Kingston and the Islands): Would you have the government control it?

Mr. Trotter: I would.

Mr. MacDonald: A government enforces its laws, that is all.

Mr. Trotter: I certainly would prefer the CBC. I feel—no matter what criticism I have to make—that you have a better break from them.

I will just give you my reasons for this right here.

Mr. B. Newman (Windsor-Walkerville):
Meanwhile, back at the farm.

Mr. Trotter: I feel those who control mass media have a tremendous responsibility to the public. Now they are always talking about politicians having a responsibility to the public, and so we have. But when you have a company that has numerous other enterprises, and particularly when they are enterprises dealing with public officials that are dependent, in many cases, on the support from public media, it is highly dangerous when the same company controls the television, controls the major newspaper outlets, and is doing business with various public officials.

Now this happened not too long ago with the Maple Leaf Gardens.

Mr. Apps: What you are saying is that the newspapers are telling the aldermen of the city of Toronto what they should be doing.

Mr. Trotter: I do think they have a tremendous influence, no question in my mind.

Mr. Apps: I think you do an injustice.

Mr. Trotter: I think you have your head in the sand if you are not aware that the mass media has a tremendous influence. I do not care what party you are from, you have your head in the sand if you are not aware of that, and you should be aware of it.

Mr. Apps: I think the aldermen are responsible to the people.

Mr. Trotter: A newspaper's policy is bound to be influenced by the financial interests of its owner or owners. It is so easy to report only one side of an issue, to ignore opponents, or in the case of controller Lamport, to completely misrepresent a statement. I will give you an example of that.

I was going through this situation and I came across this article from the Toronto Telegram. It says, "Lamport supports raceway", in big bold headlines, and, of course, I knew he was opposed to it so I phoned and asked him, how come.

Well, if you read the report he does not say he supports the raceway. The reporter did not write it that way, but he was asked, "Do you support motor racing," and he said, "yes," and then they go on talking about shuttling people back and forth from Mosport. You can see the danger if you only have one newspaper in town. He phoned the Telegram and, of course, by then the thing was printed, and what can you do. You are completely, I think at the mercy of reporters.

For example, I was at a meeting last night, discussing this very problem and there is a report in today's Telegram that half the people there were in favour of the Lakeshore raceway. I know of two out of the eighteen in that small group. How they ever figured half I do not know, but that is the report that you read in the paper. The other two papers did not say that, but this is what makes things highly questionable.

We have had a question in this House where a Minister of this government stood up, and stood his ground, and I speak of the hon. Mr. Spooner who opposed the change of a bylaw and stopped Maple Leaf Gardens from overhanging the sidewalk. And there is no question, a newspaper kept up a vicious battle against him editorially. So much so, that Mr. Farquhar Oliver stood up on this side of the House, and defended Mr. Spooner. You fellows did not, but we had to because we thought it was so completely and utterly unfair the way he was being represented in one of your own newspapers. Well, when such a situation develops and they are in business—

Mr. Apps: Did you say one of our own newspapers?

Mr. Trotter: Yes, your "Tely." Who are you kidding?

Mr. Apps: The hon. member must be!

Mr. Trotter: Then again, Mr. Speaker, how can politicians speak on an issue without fear or favour when they know that by their decision they win or lose the favour of one of the most powerful TV systems and newspapers in Canada who have a special interest in the decisions that public officials are making?

One of the great dangers in our society, Mr. Speaker, is that economic power is falling into the hands of fewer and fewer people, and the urbanization of our society has accentuated the centralization of economic power with all the influence it brings. If mass media falls into the hands of people who are often irresponsible, then our freedom of choice in a decision is impaired, if not throttled.

There seems to be, I would say, Mr. Speaker, a web of intrigue, from its very inception, surrounding the whole matter of the Lakeshore raceway. The speed with which the whole plan is being processed through various legislative procedures is highly suspicious. I cannot help but feel that a great deal of pressure, both obvious and not so obvious, has been brought to bear on many people.

Indisputably, powerful interests have conspired to inflict this outrage on Toronto in order to satisfy their own egos and greed. Why should George Eaton, simply because he loves car racing and he wants to go around the fountain at 180 miles an hour, be allowed to turn the southern part of Toronto into his particular playground? When it is borne in mind that it is generally known that Eaton's bank-rolled CFTO and the Toronto Telegram for John Bassett, senior, one cannot help but be gravely concerned when such a powerful clique can bring such tremendous influence on our legislative process, regardless of the consequences to the general public.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: I do not expect you to remember about Sir William Mulock—

Mr. Trotter: That could well be. What is more important is if you allow—

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): Let us hear what he has to say about the raceway.

Mr. Trotter: No matter what cliques you have had in the past, these things become more and more dangerous as time goes on. Often some of these powerful groups sit back and say we have nothing to do with it. But I just want to give you an example, Mr. Speaker, what can happen—just to show you how they are involved and why they cannot say that we are one set of the family so we have nothing to do with it.

The Mosport people had retained one of the best people in the city of Toronto, John Weir, Q.C., and he appeared on their behalf at the first meeting of the recreational and parks committee of Metropolitan Toronto. Then he goes back to his office and gets word from Eaton's legal department, "You may have a conflict of interest." "Why?" "Well, your firm does corporate work for Eaton's and George Eaton is interested in the raceway."

So, naturally, they get another lawyer. But, let us not say that the powerful influence is not being exerted, if not thorough arm twisting, at least slight arm twisting. And this, I think is a melancholy situation in our society today that this could happen in a big city—and what happens in Toronto could affect all of Ontario.

I think that the melancholy decision of Metro council in approving the raceway, and the incomprehensible legal opinion of the Attorney General, and the cavalier attitude of this government in ignoring the entire tragedy is a matter of great concern for all of us.

I would urge, through you, Mr. Speaker, that this government speak out and put an end to the entire raceway situation. It can do it. There is no question in my mind that the Prime Minister, if he wanted, by a telephone call, could end the whole thing. You on that side of the House have to face the fact that the people who are perpetrating this outrage on the city of Toronto and literally ignoring the county of Durham, are your people, among them some of your top writers and one or two of your bag men.

And I do not think it speaks very highly for this government that it can allow the second most powerful governmental group in this country to really sit idly by and do nothing or, what is worse, by their idleness, encourage what is going on.

The government's first responsibility, and it seems to need to be reminded of it, is to the people of the province of Ontario. The responsibility is to protect our roadways and our highways and our parks, and its responsibility is to see to it that our people live in safety. I have books and papers I could read, all about safety.

One European man, one well-known in the racing field says, "Canada, why go backwards?" and points out that all the street races are being shut down throughout Europe. And yet this government sits idly by and says we can do nothing. New York did something. Many of the states in the United States did something. They outlawed street racing and yet this government does nothing and it should be ashamed of itself.

In conclusion I say, Mr. Speaker, that not a single Tory member has ever done anything in trying to protect the people of this province in the problem of the raceway. It involves not only our parks, it goes even deeper than that; it goes to the very heart of our legislative process, for what happens in the city of Toronto and in Metropolitan Toronto just should not have happened. A juggernaut started to move.

Now it may well be stopped, and I predict it now may be because there were enough interested people—the ratepayers' association, the union of women electors, the local trade union groups—they found out what was going on and are making a strong effort to stop it.

More members of Metro council can see what the whole situation involves and are becoming aroused. But this does not excuse this government from the way it kept its head in the sand, deliberately, so it would not see the outrage that its friends were perpetrating.

Over a quarter of a century of government, this government may have matured—it may be like an apple, it is red, it is matured, it is very nice to look at, but after it has been matured, it goes rotten—and what is happening is the government is going rotten to the core and that is why it is going to be chased out.

Mr. I. Deans (Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, as was said by many who have spoken before me in this particular debate, it is a pleasure to be once again taking part in the Throne Debate in this House and putting forward some of the thoughts that have crossed our minds since last year at about this time when we previously took part in such a debate.

I must say, to begin with, that we in this party concur in much of what was said by the member for Parkdale. He put forward very clearly the case of the citizens against the proposed automobile racing around the Lakeshore area. I am sure he will find when the time comes that there is ample and sufficient support in this group should he find it necessary and need it.

I want to spend a few moments today talking about a matter of corporate citizenship. I want to discuss an action that took place in the city of Hamilton just prior to the Christmas recess, an action which I hoped I would have been able to discuss at this time but events and long speeches kept me from getting on with it.

At that time Canadian Westinghouse in Hamilton made an announcement that they were going to fire their security personnel and to hire personnel from an agency. What this meant, in effect, was that many citizens who had lived in the city of Hamilton for a number of years, some who had worked for the Canadian Westinghouse company for up to and including 40 years, were fired as of New Year's eve. On New Year's morning they were replaced by an agency that the Westinghouse company had hired for considerably less money. The only purpose of this particular event was to save money for Westinghouse.

Now this in itself might not be a bad thing if the Canadian Westinghouse company were in a position where they desperately needed every dollar that they could get their hands on. For some time I wondered if this was the case. I seriously wondered if they were in the financial position that would inhibit their future growth, or perhaps even put them out of business.

These thoughts were eliminated today when they announced that their profits for last year were up considerably. I can then only assume that the reason the Canadian Westinghouse saw fit to take this action is because of the structure of the law that prohibits security guards from becoming a part of the general labour body of this province. It is a law that even if they decided to use it to its fullest, would enable them to become only a part of the body as large as they themselves were. In other words they would have no economic pressure that they could exert.

I believe that what has happened here—and I might just point out what could take place in this instance, or what could have taken place. A security guard working for Canadian Westinghouse on New Year's eve, earning $2.84 an hour, could be, and was, fired. At midnight he could have walked out of that plant no longer employed there, and, at 8 o'clock in the morning—or at five minutes after midnight for that matter—he could have come back in, doing exactly the same job, for $1.50 an hour.

This cannot be tolerated in this province. Unless this government is prepared to do something to make sure that the people of this province who do not at this moment enjoy the benefits of collective bargaining in their true sense are protected, they will surely fall on issues just such as this.

I might point out that prior to the Christmas recess, as Mr. Speaker is well aware, I raised the matter with the Minister of Labour on two occasions. As a last resort on the 20th before we adjourned, I even arranged for a meeting with the Prime Minister in an effort to have him intervene, but to no avail. Now these people who had given of their best to this company, are forced to seek employment, many at an age when they are not readily employable, and many of them are now suffering. I think that this is an atrocious condition and it must be changed.

I want to go on with the other matters that are of concern to me. I am sorry that the Minister of Trade and Development is not here today because I would like to have discussed with him now a matter that I tried to discuss one day during the question period. Unfortunately the question period does not lend itself very well to discussion and we were not able to reach an accord on this matter and it is the matter of whether or not full recovery projects under the Ontario Housing Corporation are subsidized in any way.

The one that I want to discuss is the one in the city of Hamilton, where they have a full recovery project that was amortized over 50 years. I discussed this with the officials there. I have looked into it to some great extent.

I have discovered that not only does the rent that is charged pay off the entire amount of the mortgage against the property, but it also provides quite handsomely for an amount of money to be gathered over the course of a number of years for maintenance costs. In fact, the fund for maintenance in this particular project has continued to grow year after year without ever having been used. In fact, this government has not at any time, to my knowledge, since the inception of this programme in Hamilton, subsidized it in any way—

Mr. R. Gisborn (Hamilton East): Or revealed the accounts either.

Mr. Deans: Well, as my colleague says, “or revealed the accounts.” I do suggest to the Minister that, if he is going to be the person in charge of housing, he becomes more familiar with those things that are within the jurisdiction of the department he supposedly oversees and that he does not stand in this House and make statements that are obviously false, and cannot be justified.

If I could leave that now for a moment and go to a matter of Kerman avenue in Grimsby, a matter that is of concern to both myself and to the Provincial Secretary. I would, for the record, congratulate the Minister of Highways on his action in closing Murray avenue in Grimsby. It was much needed; it was much appreciated by the people. They have asked that I extend to him the congratulations and the thanks of the people of that area. We sincerely hope that it is going to cut down on the number of accidents that have occurred over the years and the deaths that have occurred over the years.

All I can do is suggest to him, via Hansard, that similar action at Kerman avenue would go a long way towards cutting down even more on the accident rate of that particular stretch of highway.

One of the things that has disturbed me in the last six or eight months has been the number of letters that I have received from constituents and people across this province who are upset by the witness fee structure in Ontario. They are concerned that it really is unfair—the fact that a witness called to appear and tell what he sees does not receive anything close to what he ought to receive, or what he loses in terms of income.

I have a letter I would like to read prior to going any further on this particular matter. It was sent to me by a Mrs. Richard Shortt, and she resides in my riding. It is addressed to myself and it says:

Dear Sir:

My husband and I have what we feel is a legitimate complaint to present to you. We hope you will be able to help us.

For quite some time my husband has been working at Peterborough—which is quite a considerable distance, I might say, from Hamilton.

On July 5, 1968, while returning to Stoney Creek, he was involved in a car accident—and he has enclosed for my benefit a sketch which I will attempt to relay by word of mouth.

What happened in this accident was that he had stopped in the centre westbound lane. He stopped because the traffic ahead of him had stopped. The car behind him stopped but the car two behind did not and the event was that it eventually involved him in an accident.

I continue from the letter:

My husband received a subpoena to appear in magistrate's court in Toronto on November 26. As a result of this subpoena and his subsequent appearance in court, we are $46.60 out of pocket. The police are responsible for summoning my husband and he received $11 for his co-operation.

Since he had to take the day off work and drive from Peterborough to Toronto, which is 180 miles round trip, he could not expect his employers to pay his meals, his motel room, his gas or his wages. And the total of this was $57.60.

We cannot afford to take this loss and feel there must be some way to reimburse us. My husband was an innocent bystander, which makes it most unfair.

And this is only one of a great many letters that I am sure almost all members of this House have received from time to time.

In attempting to find an answer for this lady, I dug into McRuer's Royal commission report, the inquiry into civil rights and report No. 1, volume 2, chapter 56, page 861, and I would like to quote from it and make some suggestions about it. It says:

Compensation for witnesses: Whatever may be said in favour of the view that jurors should be expected to render a public service at a substantial financial sacrifice — if required to do so as part of the administration of justice — the same cannot be said with respect to the duty of witnesses who are required to attend at trials in the courts before administrative tribunals. No doubt a witness owes a public duty to make himself available to give evidence, but he ought not to be required to subsidize the administration of justice.

And as we go into the report of Mr. Justice McRuer, we find that he quotes from some submissions made by people who appeared before him, and one is of particular significance, and it was made by a trade union and it says as follows:

At the present level of wages, salaries and the cost of living, fees allowed to witnesses in all the courts are totally inadequate to compensate such persons for the time lost in court appearances.

We understand the view . . . that it is the duty of a citizen to render what assistance he can to the courts and that he should not expect to be compensated. The fact is, however, that whatever should be the feeling, most persons are reluctant to volunteer information that may lead to their being called as witnesses.

And this is of vital importance. I read it again so it will stand out:

. . . Most persons are reluctant to volunteer information that may lead to their being called as witnesses at least partly because of the financial sacrifice involved, and to that extent justice is being hampered by the present niggardly allowances made to witnesses. This difficulty is compounded by the lack of attention paid to the convenience of witnesses and the uncertainty of the court calendars.

And the Chief Justice goes on to say:

A spokesman for the same union collected data from certain members of one of its locals who attended as witnesses at a hearing of the Ontario Labour Relations Board, which makes a practice, although not required to do so, of paying witnesses on the same basis as those attending in civil cases —

In other words, they are paid $6 a day. The following illustrations of the financial loss assumed by wage-earners as witnesses were submitted and I will put some of them on the record: On July 20, 1965, a gentleman by the name of Adelard Goudreau from Sudbury would have worked eight hours at $2.68 an hour, which would have been equivalent of $21.44. He received from the Labour Relations Board, $6. This meant that for him to appear as a witness, it cost him $15.44. This is to uphold justice.

Another case, on July 20, 1965, a gentleman by the name of George Flynn, also from Sudbury, would have worked eight hours at $2.52¼ cents an hour, which would have been $20.18. He received from the Ontario Labour Relations Board, $6. And the total loss to this gentleman, which he could ill afford, was $14.18.

And there are many. One of the worst ones is on July 14, to 21, 1965, a gentleman called John Robert Chartrand of Sudbury would have worked 32 hours at $2.37½ an hour, which would have been the equivalent of $76.00. He received $24.00, a total loss to this gentleman of $52.00 over that period.

There are few if any working people in this province who can afford this kind of loss. And it does not require much action on the part of this government to make changes that would eliminate this kind of treatment.

What I would say is that the Chief Justice made some recommendations and they should be on the record, and I am sure the government is about to implement them anyway. If they are not, I suggest they should be. And these recommendations are:

1. All witnesses other than qualified experts should be paid at the rate of at least $15 per day, with proper travelling and accommodation allowances.

2. There ought to be a statutory obligation on statutory tribunals to pay witness fees for all witnesses summonsed at the instance of a tribunal.

3. Where witnesses are summonsed at the instance of a party to a cause before a tribunal, they should be entitled to be paid witness fees by the party requiring them to be summonsed.

4. Where costs are awarded against an opposite party, the tribunal hearing the matter should have power to disallow, as part of the costs, fees for witnesses unnecessarily called.

And this goes on, there are sections five, six, seven and eight, which I will not read into the record but which are available on page 864 of the aforementioned report.

It is obvious to me that there is a great need for change in the witness fee structure. And I am sure it is obvious to any member in this House that it has to be done fairly soon. There are people, as was said in here, and I have no doubt it is true—I know of cases of people who were reluctant and in fact did not volunteer to appear as witnesses in accidents and in other cases because they could not afford to take the day off work. This is a shameful situation. And it can be rectified with considerable ease by just the stroke of a pen.

I ask this government to undertake to do this now. It is a very necessary part of the improvement of the structure of the judicial system.

If I may move now to the matter of municipal tax rebate. This has certainly been an area for much discussion over the past few weeks, in fact, the past few months. And at the time the bill was introduced, many of us were sceptical about the manner in which it was going to be handled; many of us had fears of what might happen to these tenants in cases where they did not receive their municipal tax rebate and I believe that many of the fears that we expressed at that time have been justified by the events that have taken place.

There have been a great many people who did not receive their municipal tax rebate and I believe that the handling of this was entirely wrong; that the government should have left politics aside; and that it should not have been used as a plum to try and attract people to vote for the Conservative Party.

Surely to goodness a finer gesture than that was required; a gesture that would, in actual fact, reduce the cost of municipal taxes to the average individual.

This has not been the case and in many instances people's rents were raised. I cited instances, and I have cited them before, where elderly people have had their rents raised far in excess of the amount of the municipal tax rebate—and it is grossly unfair.

Up until now there is really no recourse for these people. Now if we are fortunate in having the recommendations of the law society implemented then perhaps we shall have the proper avenues for people to make their wishes and desires known and to bring to the government's attention some of the injustices that are perpetrated on them.

There is one area though that disturbs me, and that is in the regulations. I received a copy of them two days ago. In section 6 of the regulation, where it states that any portion of rent is in arrears when the tax reduction allowance is payable, the landlord or his agent may pay the tenant the tax reduction allowance by deducting the amount thereof from such arrears of rent.

I think this places the onus of responsibility in the wrong place. I believe that the onus of responsibility for proving that rents are in arrears ought to lie with the landlord and that, if he is desirous of reclaiming anything that he believes is owing to him, he should take whatever necessary legal action has to be taken to get it. I do not think that this government should provide an easy way for a landlord to get public money and that is what they have done.

I think that if a person owes money I would be the first to say they should have to pay it. I think first of all it must be proven that they owe it and it must be proven in a court. It cannot be proven elsewhere. I think that the onus of responsibility lies on the landlord to take whatever action is necessary, and I suggest that this particular section is wrong and should be deleted.

The matter of Highway 20 in Stoney Creek is one that I have raised with the Minister of Highways on a number of occasions, and I would ask him once again, if he gets around to reading Hansard, that he take whatever action is necessary to ensure the safety of the children crossing this particular stretch of highway in my riding. This is a very heavily travelled portion of highway. It provides the main access for persons travelling from the Niagara Peninsula to Fort Erie, if they are coming towards Hamilton.

Since, this highway was built, a considerable amount of residential building has taken place on the west side of the highway. Unfortunately, all of the educational and recreational facilities are on the east side and, therefore, it is very necessary —

Mr. Gisborn: They should move pretty soon. It is five years since they knew about it.

Mr. Deans: My colleague points out it is five years since it was first brought to his attention, but then, of course, the wheels of government move ever so slowly.

It is very necessary that the government move now to safeguard these children as they cross this particular hazardous stretch of highway. I have appeared before The Department of Highways and The Department of Transport in an effort to have this done. I sincerely hope that in the next two or three weeks we will get the results of their findings and that they will go ahead and implement whatever measures are required in order to ensure this safety.

If I may go back, about a year ago I raised in this House the matter of the Saltfleet satellite city, and the Minister and I engaged in what eventually was a fruitless effort; me trying to find out what he paid for it and him, determined not to tell me. After posing the question in a number of different ways I finally gave up.

Why the government finds it necessary not to disclose, even privately, to members of this Legislature what they are paying public money out for and how much they are paying is beyond me. I made the request to the Minister with the assurance that I would not use it in any way if he would inform me what was paid, because it is of vital importance to know how much we are paying for land in order to determine what prices houses really ought to cost. But the Minister, in his usual manner, is keeping all of this information to himself. Let that be as it may.

At that time the Minister indicated that the city of Hamilton had assured him that they would provide the water for this particular subdivision, if it may be called that. I had the pleasure of taking part in a television programme in which the mayor of the city of Hamilton was present and he denied that the corporation of the city of Hamilton had ever given any assurance that they would provide the water for this particular development.

I can well understand why he would deny it because, at the present moment, within the confines of the city of Hamilton, there are many, many thousands of people who have lived there for years and who have been unable to extract from the city fathers water to their door.

I am sure that the city, the corporation, is not likely to undertake now to provide it for an area that is not even within the Hamilton region—that is not talking about regional government, that is just the region of the city of Hamilton—before it undertakes to provide it for its citizens who live and pay taxes in that area.

This last year has been one of complete frustration in regard to some compensation matters that have been raised by members and by persons in my constituency.

One of the great difficulties with the compensation board appears to be their inability to retrain persons with a very limited academic ability. If a person has a fairly substantial academic background the board seems quite able and ready to retrain them in anything in which they desire to be retrained. But I have three cases, and there are many, many others. I have three that come to mind very quickly of people whose educational background is very limited or age precludes them from many types of work.

Two out of the three are affected by back injuries, and this seems to be the nemesis of the workmen's compensation board. They seem totally unable to deal with persons with back injuries. It always amazes me how long they can take and how many of these cases they claim to be a result of fantasy.

I have one gentleman in particular, and he suffered a back injury some time ago and was compensated for it at that time. He has been totally unable to return to the form of work which he previously did. He was a pile driver and if anyone knows anything about pile driving, it is a very, very difficult job. It is a job that requires a great deal of strength, and it is a job that requires that you be in reasonably good physical condition.

As a pile driver this gentleman had earned in the neighbourhood of $7,000 a year, some 10 years ago. Today, he is struggling to get by on $200 a month or less, because the compensation board have been unable to retrain him or provide some kind of employment for him that he can do.

It seems to me that here was a man with a grade three education capable of earning $7,000 a year. He gets injured doing his job of work, doing it to the best of his ability at that time and he is injured to the extent that he is unable to go back to that kind of work or to any other kind of similar work.

He cannot go back to construction because there is nothing in construction he can do. He is unable to lift. He is unable to stand for extended periods of time. He cannot become a welder, as suggested, because he cannot wear the apparatus that is required. And so he suggested that he can become a basket weaver or make snow shoes or something. I think quite frankly that this is ludicrous. The whole situation in regard to the retraining of people at the compensation board require some investigation, and as I say, particularly those people who have suffered back injuries.

There is no easy answer. It is not easy to say that we may have to pay a person a substantial amount of money for the rest of his life, or that he is incapable of performing any useful task. I think it is a very necessary thing and we must recognize it, that there are people who are injured who are not totally disabled, but by workmen's compensation standards are not able to be retrained.

If you are injured, unable to work and not able to be retrained, then the only thing left for you is welfare, which in itself has taken on an atmosphere that most people do not enjoy.

Surely if a man goes out and does his job to the best of his ability for a number of years, shows his ability to earn, shows his ability to produce, and then is injured, he is entitled to continue a normal life. I suggest that this government should take a very close look, at the type of retraining that is offered by the workmen's compensation board.

That is but one case. I have others. I have tried and tried. I have spoken to rehabilitation officers, gone to the board and appeared before them in an effort to get them to understand that many of these people—contrary to what they may think sitting in the ivory tower down here and on Front street—contrary to what they may think, these people are legitimate citizens of this province, and they deserve more from this province than they are getting. They deserve more from this government.

I was going to take a little while dealing with the accommodation of members, but I think it has been quite well dealt with. My friends, the member for Sudbury, and for Sudbury East too, they spent some time dealing with the accommodation facilities for members in this House, so I do not think we will go into it any further.

I would like now to move to what is really the main topic that I want to discuss this afternoon. I would like to take a look at what is happening to the average—

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Deans: I am quite prepared to yield, if anyone else wishes to speak. Thank you.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Deans: I thought that was you that was speaking.

You know, I was going to talk about the jails system in this province. I have even thought of discussing some of the inadequacies of the jail system, but then I decided that it would take too long. It would take much too long. So, I know that the members do not want long speeches, so I decided to cut down. It would take two or three weeks just to get to the core of what the problem is.

Let us get to the core—to get rid of the core, that is the problem. Anyway, I would like for a little while to take a look at what is happening to the average citizen of Ontario. I would like to take, as an example, a man who earns $100 a week, or $5,200 a year.

According to the 1966 income tax statistics, 65 per cent of those submitting tax returns in Ontario had incomes below $5,000 a year. So this hypothetical man that I am talking about is part of a very large group, even if we were to allow some upgrading of incomes since 1966.

If this man is a typical family man with a wife and two children, and if he is not able to claim other deductions beyond the $2,000 marital exemption, and the $600 for the two children, and the $100 standard deduction for charity, he will pay $310 per year in income tax to the federal government and $90 to the provincial government. In addition, he will pay $81 for Canada Pension Plan, $73 for unemployment insurance, $132 for hospital insurance, and $177 for OMSIP—and considerably more if he belongs to a private medical plan, like PSI.

Yes, and he contributed something in his union dues. My good friend, the member for Hamilton Mountain, wanted to remind me of that. I had forgotten that he will pay a little in union dues. That is where he gets the protection that he requires in order to face up to the problems of the day.

This adds up to a total of $862 in taxes and compulsory levies before he starts providing for his basic food, clothing, shelter and transportation needs. $862 is not the entire total of taxes which this family pays. That represents only the direct taxes. The ones that are visible and out in the open. In addition, there are all the hidden taxes from the family's purchases—on its tobacco and liquor, if it can afford such indulgences, and I doubt from that kind of money if they can; on gasoline; on any amusements that it cares to indulge in, if there is anything left for amusement.

There are also taxes included in the rent that is paid. And we are assuming that the family in this lower level of income has not been able to undertake home ownership. In fact, it is not much of an assumption to make, it is almost assured that a family on $5,000 has not been able to undertake home ownership, either under NHA or conventional mortgage. But even if they had somehow managed to get the money together they would then have to add property tax to those taxes that are already mentioned.

Now, I have made some rough estimates of the total tax burden on a family of four making $5,200 a year. We have assumed that he drives a car, that he smokes one package of cigarettes a day, and that he drinks very moderately. We have added up all the taxes that he pays both direct and hidden, to all three levels of government, and have come up with the shocking figure—and I say it is shocking — of $1,750 out of his $5,200. This is 33.7 per cent of his $5,200. This is what he pays. And I should point that this figure does not include any allowance for whatever corporation taxes are passed on to this family in the price of the goods that they purchased. This is very difficult to determine.

I would say that the tax system which takes this large a percentage from a family making $100 a week is certainly not based on ability to pay. It is not a fair tax system. Especially when we find that a family making twice this amount pays about the same percentage of its income in taxes.

According to our estimates—and they are open to any criticism—while a family making ten times this amount in salary—about $52,000 a year—pays a higher percentage, they still have over $27,000 left to spend as they please. Moreover, they may be able to reduce this amount—which works out to about 47 per cent—considerably by owning stocks, and qualifying for dividends tax credit, or being able to make large deductions from their taxable income for pension contribution.

If we come back to this $5,200 a year family, let us take a closer look at their situation. I said earlier that they had to pay out $862 in direct taxes and premiums, before making any provision for their basic needs. This leaves them with $4,338 a year to spend.

Recent surveys of family spending patterns in cities done by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics show that families in this income group spent about 24 per cent of their gross income on food in 1964. Since food prices have gone up by 15 per cent since 1964, they may be having to devote an even bigger percentage of their income at this time for this vital necessity. And if we assume that they now spend 25 per cent on food, that would mean $1,300 out of their total income.

Shelter is, we will say, the second basic necessity for the family. As I said earlier, we are assuming that our $5,200 family is among the hundreds of thousands who have been priced out of the housing market by present high land and mortgage costs. The National Housing Act is of no help to them, and is, largely, the welfare measure for the upper income groups. Well, a family of four really needs at least a three-bedroomed house or apartment, especially if the children are of different sexes. However, all we are allowing in our estimates of their living costs is a two-bedroom apartment at $150 a month, or $1,800 a year.

Household operation, hydro, telephone and supplies we have estimated at $200, and I would say, just to point out, that the telephone alone takes over $73 in Toronto, almost $67 in Hamilton, with tax included, and with the increases will be going up to about $82.53, and $71.82.

The Dominion Bureau of Statistics shows that families in the cities in the $5,000 to $4,499 income range spend 8 per cent on clothing, 3.5 per cent on furniture and appliances. This works out to about $600 for these two categories, and I think by anyone's standards this would be conceded not to be an exorbitant sum of money to spend on these two very vital things.

We are assuming that this family drives a car, and if they are able to find an apartment at $150 a month in Metro Toronto at least, they will likely not be in the centre of town, and a car will be a necessity. Besides, they will not be able to afford much else in the way of recreation other than a picnic in the country or perhaps a trip to the beach. And a trip to the beach has almost become non-existent these days because of the pollution.

Mrs. M. Renwick (Scarborough Centre): A $150 apartment is non-existent, too.

Mr. Deans: We are allowing only $250 for payments on the car, so you can well imagine what kind of a car they are going to own. This means that the family will be buying a second hand car and be spreading it out over three or four years. Inevitably, they will be faced with substantial repair bills on this kind of a car. However, the figure is close to the amount which families in the $5,000 to $5,500 income group from the DBS survey said that they spend on car purchases.

For automotive operating costs we must first provide for the licence, and the government knows a lot about licencing which has gone up considerably this year. In some areas it has gone up 37.5 per cent which is a substantial amount, or even more. But this has to be paid out of this already inadequate income.

The gasoline will cost them at least $250 a year if they drive 10,000 miles and are fortunate enough to get 20 miles to the gallon. This includes 18c per gallon in gasoline tax. Again the government is familiar with this I am sure, since they raised it by 2c in last year's budget. For car repairs and maintenance we are allowing $100 a year as the bare minimum, and I would suggest that $100 a year is really far too low, but we decided that we would put that in there in an effort to make the budget fit the needs.

Additional family expenditures which must be covered include bus and subway fares for children and wife, recreational expenses, the daily newspapers, drugs, personal needs and insurance. Some people also would like to spend something on tobacco and liquor, further education and vacations. But the fact of the matter is that in this particular instance, when we add up all the particular items and expenses that I have listed to date—and none of them out of line—the direct taxes, the premiums and the clothing, the rent, the household operation, the car expenses, when we add it up the total comes to almost $200 more than the family earns.

It requires in the province of Ontario, $5,400 a year to live on $5,200 and I ask you how this can be done.

Well it is quite easy. You see they borrow the $200 every year and they go more and more into debt, and they do without. They cut down on the essentials of life. They cut down, they do without, and there is no need for that. If they do not go into debt, if they are the kind of family who prefer that the wife would work, and many are forced into this position even though they do not want it — if it means that they have to have their children do without the maternal care that they ought to have, then perhaps they will not go $200 in debt. Fortunately, this is not the kind of society that we in this party imagine ought to be in this province.

Surely to God it is not too much to ask that a family in this province can live on the wage of one husband, working in one job, and trying his best to provide for the people that he has dependent upon him.

But they probably would not save — even if the wife did go out to work — they probably would not save much.

Mrs. M. Renwick: She works for an average income of $2,000 a year.

Mr. Deans: She works for an average income of $2,000 a year my colleague tells me.

Because of the expenses of baby-sitting and because of the additional expenses incurred on a wife having to work they probably would not save very much out of it. They probably would not save much even if they did without a car because, as you recall, we did not allow very much for a car payment unless they happened to live in an area and work in an area of good, cheap, public transportation, and this is something that is practically non-existent in this province — good, cheap public transportation.

It is unfortunate, very unfortunate, because we do not seem to understand that if we are going to have these families on this income range able to make ends meet we must provide this kind of thing.

In this situation that I am naming now — and I might point out that I did not include — I forgot about it at the time — the federal social development tax — the brain child of the "just society" which would deduct $48.38 more from this family, which means that instead of going in the hole $200 a year they are going to go in the hole almost $250.

At the moment, with Ontario not in the federal Medicare plan there is no sign that even though Ontario families pay this social development tax they will really receive any benefit from what they are paying.

Now this family that I have described just has no hope of ever getting a home of its own. There just does not appear, in spite of what Paul Hellyer might have us believe, to be any hope under the present kind of administration, both federal and provincial, that this family will ever be in the position of owning a home of its own, because even if they could scrape up a down payment with the wife and children both working, the $150 per month which they now pay in rent would carry a mortgage of only $14,200 on a 25-year repayment basis, or one of $15,300 over 35 years.

If $35 a month had to be earmarked for municipal taxes, with new houses selling at anything from $24,000 to $35,000 and more, a down payment of over $10,000 would be required and this just would not work. There is just no way to save $10,000 when you have to borrow $200 to make ends meet. So I am afraid that this family will just never own a home.

The $150 a month which I have allowed for rent is above the 27 per cent of income which Central Mortgage and Housing judge to be the top amount that should be devoted to housing when passing on NHA loans. So even if they somehow or other scraped the money together — and it would be impossible I am sure — for the down payment, they would not be able to pay the $150 a month because it is in excess of the amount allowed by Central Mortgage and Housing.

You might say to yourselves, and I am sure some do not really understand, “that is the $5,000 a year guy, what can he expect?” But you know I decided at that point, when I had worked these figures out, to see what happens to the person making $7,000 a year, just to see what the difference really is; to find out if they are that much better off and if we can make ends meet in this society on $7,000. So I will run quickly through the $7,000 a year man.

This family still has trouble making ends meet in this province. He will pay $1,287 a year for income, unemployment insurance, Canada pension plan, hospital insurance and Omsip, which will leave him $5,713 to spend. If he limits his shelter expenses to 27 per cent of his income which the Central Mortgage and Housing considers is all he can afford, he will have just $157.50 a month for mortgage payments and property taxes. This comes to $1,890 a year — the same amount for rent. It does not matter, as I pointed out earlier; this will not likely enable him to finance a house at today's exorbitant rates.

A funny thing, too, about the interest rates as I think about it; the federal government is suggesting that they should take the ceiling off interest rates and then they will go down. That is just unbelievable. How Paul Hellyer could stand and say a thing like that, with a straight face, is beyond my understanding. Anyway, he always has been a bit of a dreamer, you know.

There are indications that interest rates would certainly go up and I believe that they would. The food costs for this particular person would run about 21 per cent of his income, his clothing 8.5, furnishings about 4.8 according to DBS statistics and he would use up, at this point, about $2,405 of his income.

His automobile expenses would run about $925 a year by the time he pays the new license which is $35, 40 per cent increase over last year if you have an eight cylinder car, about $300 for gasoline which, as I said before, included this increase, $370 for car purchase payments, $125 for auto insurance, $100 for repairs and maintenance and if you add all of this up, you find that this poor soul earning $7,000 a year, supposedly among the affluent, is really not much better off, than the man earning $5,200 a year.

Now how do we combat this? I think this is probably the most important thing. What do we do to overcome the situation that has become prevalent throughout this province?

We recommend a few things, and if they are implemented, we believe they would improve the situation and in time, perhaps eliminate it. First, we should give tax credits to all low income families so that they are relieved of the burden of paying income tax on inadequate incomes. Now this is preferable, we believe, to raising the present exemption because an increase in exemption of $2,000 gives the family, at the 15 per cent tax rate, a benefit of only $150 and it gives the family at the top 80 per cent rate, a benefit of $1,600.

Number two, we would shift the emphasis in our tax system from the regressive taxes like motor vehicles taxes and flat rate premiums to progressive taxes based on the ability to pay. This means extending the income tax to the untaxed wealth, the capital gains, the stock market profits, land speculators' gains and other incomes not now paying their share, and also getting a fair share from the corporations.

In addition, it means making more use of inheritance tax to prevent undue accumulation of wealth.

Third, we would recommend that the province of Ontario should enter the federal Medicare scheme, so that premiums could be cut and Ontario residents would get some benefit from this two per cent social development tax which they are going to be forced to pay after January 1, that is now.

In my opinion, the total premium for both medical and hospital insurance should not exceed $10 per month for a family, and the balance of costs should be financed out of a more progressive form of taxation based on ability to pay.

Four: We should reduce dependence on regressive property tax by shifting to the province the cost of services not related directly to property. And this includes such things as education and welfare. The property tax is too narrow-based to carry the growing cost of urbanization plus all these social programmes and benefit everybody, and it should be paid out of more progressive taxes. We might just take a look at the unfairness of the property tax.

If we take a family making $100 a week with a $15,000 house assessed at one third of its value, they would pay taxes at $400 a year, if the mill rate was 85 mills, or 8.2 per cent of its income. A family making $200 a week with a $24,000 house assessed at one third of its value would pay taxes of $680 a year, if the mill rate was 85 mills, or 6.5 per cent of its income, going down.

But a family making $1,000 a week—and I do not know many of those myself but I am sure the Conservative members know a few, and the Liberals too—with a $60,000 house assessed at one third of its value, would pay taxes of $1,700 a year if the mill rate was 85, or 3.3 per cent of its income. And what is really needed is that we have got to get all of those things that are not related to property out of there and on to a broader tax base so that we can reduce this heavy burden on the lower income groups.

Five: We would reduce the cost of housing by policies designed to cut the price of land and of mortgage money. This would mean large scale assembly of land in advance of need; possibly appropriation of land in speculators' hands at roll back price; and subsidized interest rates for low cost homes until such time as federal government policies bring down the interest rates—and if what is suggested is any indication, it is not going to happen.

Channeling money from investment pools into housing mortgages and other measures to increase home building.

Six: We would end exorbitant rent increases by a rental review board, as we have said time after time after time.

Seven: We would see that the family gets better value for its sales dollar. That is why we need better consumer protection laws and a prices review board. Do car prices have to go up every year? It would be interesting to know. It would be nice to have an investigation whether or not this yearly increase in car prices is justified, and perhaps I could ask—

Mr. D. Jackson (Timiskaming): Ford went from $32 million to $50 million profit.

Mr. Deans: There is always scrutiny on wages. Public scrutiny. Continuous. Whoever knows how much profit is made? How do we find out? How do we know whether the increases in car insurance are justified or not unless the government, the agency of the people, the representatives of the people in this province are prepared to take a look at it? Surely this falls within the function of the Minister who was just speaking.

Eight: We suggest an increase in corporation taxes.

Mr. M. Makarchuk (Brantford): He was not speaking when Morty was questioning him.

Mr. Deans: The Ontario government has been getting a smaller and smaller proportion of revenue from corporation tax. In the year 1961 the corporation tax yielded 25 per cent of the total government revenues. In 1967-68, the corporate contribution was only 14 per cent. Personal income tax, on the other hand, produced 15 per cent of the government revenues in 1960-61, and 25.6 per cent in 1967-68.

Mr. E. W. Sopha (Sudbury): This is the society where the lions' share goes to the lions.

Mr. Deans: Corporation profits have been going up.

An hon. member: Elmer is sending fraternal greetings to his friends over there.

Mr. Deans: Let me say that corporation profits last year went up and they were 15 per cent ahead of the year previous in the third quarter. We can take some of the weight of taxes off the wage earner if we get a proper share of taxes from the corporations, and this government must make this a priority. However, I realize this is whistling in the wind.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the hon. member would find a convenient place shortly to adjourn the debate.

Mr. Deans: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, I move the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. H. L. Rowntree (Minister of Financial and Commercial Affairs): Mr. Speaker, tomorrow we will continue with the Throne Debate.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree moves the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to.

The House adjourned at 6:00 o'clock p.m.

---

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 6, 1969

The House met at 2.30 o'clock, p.m.

Prayers.

Mr. Speaker: Our guests today in the east gallery are students from East York Collegiate in East York and Eastern High School of Commerce in Toronto; and in the west gallery, students from Dalewood Senior Public School in St. Catharines.

Petitions.

Clerk of the House: The following petitions were presented:

Of McMaster University praying that an Act may pass changing the composition, method of election and powers of the board of governors and senate of the university.

Of the corporation of the city of Windsor praying that an Act may pass permitting the council to charge the cost of municipal drainage work against all the rateable property in the municipality; and for other purposes.

Mr. Speaker: Presenting reports.

Clerk of the House: Mr. L. C. Henderson, from the standing orders and printing committee, presented the committee's third report which was read as follows and adopted:

Your committee has carefully examined the following petitions and finds the notices, as published in each case, sufficient:

Of the corporation of the city of Cornwall praying that an Act may pass confirming a bylaw reducing certain assessments for local improvements.

Of the corporation of the city of Toronto praying that an Act may pass authorizing it to grant the right to operate means of conveyance in public parks; and for other purposes.

Of the corporation of the city of Kitchener praying that an Act may pass authorizing special separation allowances and retirement allowances to certain employees; and for other purposes.

Of the corporation of the county of Ontario praying that an Act may pass extending the time for taking of the assessment for the township of Pickering and for returning the roll to the clerk.

Of the corporation of the town of Mitchell praying that an Act may pass permitting it to raise the sum of $20,000 by way of debentures being the purchase price of a sanitary land fill site.

Of the corporation of the county of Peel praying that an Act may pass extending the time for the return of the assessment rolls in the township of Chinguacousy.

Of the corporation of the city of Belleville praying that an Act may pass permitting a two-year term of election for the mayor and aldermen.

Of the corporation of the city of Toronto praying that an Act may pass authorizing an executive committee of council.

Your committee recommends that copies of the Canadian Parliamentary Guide, the Canadian Almanac and Canada Year Book be purchased for distribution to the members of the assembly, and that the stationery and publications allowance to members for the current session of the assembly be fixed at $400.

Mr. Speaker: Motions.

Introduction of bills.

CITY OF BELLEVILLE

Mr. R. T. Potter (Quinte) moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act respecting the city of Belleville.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

COUNTY OF PEEL

Mr. R. D. Kennedy (Peel South) moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act respecting the county of Peel.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

TOWN OF MITCHELL

Mr. R. H. Knight (Port Arthur), in the absence of Mr. Edighoffer, moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act respecting the town of Mitchell.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

CITY OF KITCHENER

Mr. H. Worton (Wellington South), in the absence of Mr. Breithaupt, moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act respecting the city of Kitchener.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

CITY OF CORNWALL

Mr. O. F. Villeneuve (Glengarry) moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act respecting the city of Cornwall.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): Where are all those Toronto Tories?

THE MEDICAL ACT

Mr. M. Shulman (High Park) moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend The Medical Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to allow the government to appoint one lay member to the five-member discipline board of the College of Physicians and Surgeons.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. Provincial Secretary has a statement.

Hon. R. S. Welch (Provincial Secretary): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, I would like to remind the House that today Her Majesty, Queen Elizabeth II, commences the eighteenth year of her reign as the Queen of Canada.

Mr. E. W. Sopha (Sudbury): A very fine lady!

Hon. Mr. Welch: During the past 17 years Her Majesty's position in the Commonwealth, and indeed throughout the whole world, has increased in stature; chiefly, I am sure, because of her own complete understanding of the role of the monarchy in a modern world.

So it is with personal pride that I join with countless others who this day publicly renew their pledge of allegiance to Her Majesty the Queen.

Mr. Sopha: The day a Canadian was sworn in as Governor General it was never mentioned.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health has a statement.

Hon. M. B. Dymond (Minister of Health): As of January 1, the tuberculosis prevention branch of our department has been conducting a tuberculin test and x-ray survey of all Ontario government public servants in the Metropolitan Toronto area. As a further stage of this programme, tuberculin tests and x-ray services will be provided to all members of the Legislature on February 14, 1969, from 10:00 a.m. to 1:00 p.m. The testing facilities will be located in committee room 153, just around the corner from the central elevators on the main floor of the main building.

I would encourage every member, sir, to take advantage of this survey. It would involve only a few moments of their time and I think it would set a good example to the populace of our province.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Speaker, for the purposes of clarification, may I ask a question?

Is the Minister aware that in the testing that has been done already some serious errors have occurred in that people who have received BCG were told that they should receive treatment for tuberculosis which they do not have.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member is not asking for a clarification of the Minister's statement with respect to the proceedings for the x-rays here, he is commenting on another matter entirely. He is quite out of order.

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Energy and Resources Management. What was the cost of purchasing electrical energy to meet Hydro's load commitments during December, 1968, and January, 1969?

Hon. J. R. Simonett (Minister of Energy and Resources Management): Mr. Speaker, at this date it is not possible to give the cost of electrical energy purchased by Ontario Hydro either for December, 1968, or for January, 1969. This may be explained by the fact that all invoices for the periods have not been received and therefore processing of costs have not been completed.

Mr. Nixon: Might I ask a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker?

I wonder if the Minister is in a position to tell the House if in fact our purchases were more extensive than usual during December 1968.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: I would take that question as notice and I think I should give the hon. leader of the Opposition a complete rundown of Hydro and their costs for the last 25 years. I will do that tomorrow with your permission.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, I look forward to a fairly lengthy dissertation. I know how anxious the Minister is to talk about Hydro in the House.

I would like now to ask a question of the Minister of Municipal Affairs. Why were the members of the board of trustees of the improvement district of Marathon recently replaced?

What advice did the Minister seek before naming the new board members, and when is the Minister going to recommend that the improvement district of Marathon become a municipality?

Hon. W. D. McKeough (Minister of Municipal Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I assume these questions result from a letter addressed to me—with a copy to the hon. leader of the Opposition—from a Mr. Frank Talarico, former vice-chairman of the board of trustees from the district of Marathon, which just arrived on my desk yesterday. Mr. Talarico appears to be somewhat upset that the wishes of the retiring members of the board were not completely adhered to in the composition of the new board. While the views of retiring members of such boards are always welcome and receive through consideration, the hon. member will realize that the diverse interests of the inhabitants of an improvement district are not always best served by concurring with their recommendations.

To put the matter in the right perspective, I would like to briefly outline the events leading up to the recent appointments and the manner in which they were made.

As I mentioned, Mr. Talarico was the former vice-chairman of the board of trustees. He submitted his resignation, effective January 31, 1969. He did not give a reason for his resignation, as far as I am aware. Prior to that date, effective December 31, 1968, the former chairman of the board resigned for reasons of ill-health.

This resulted in the need to redesignate the remaining member of the board and to appoint two new members. I understand that all agreed to the redesignation of Mr. John Palmer to the position of chairman. The retiring chairman and vice-chairman also recommended the appointment of an employee of the main industry of the municipality.

As Mr. Palmer, the new chairman, is also an employee of the company, it would have meant that two of the three members would have been company employees.

In the past, all members of the board of trustees of this municipality have been employed by the local industry and we have received reports from time to time that the ratepayers of the municipality are dissatisfied with this arrangement.

They feel that persons other than employees of the company should also be appointed to the board. Accordingly, my staff recommended the appointments of Mr. Donald Stuart Harrison, who has been a resident of Marathon for 22 years, and is the local postmaster, and Mr. Ross Baxter Cummings, who has resided in the municipality for 12 years, and is the manager of the brewer's retail store.

My submission, then, to the Lieutenant-Governor-in-Council recommended that Mr. Palmer be redesignated—

An hon. member: A two-time winner.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: —that Mr. Palmer be redesignated from member to chairman, and that Mr. Harrison be appointed vice-chairman, and that Mr. Cummings be appointed member.

I would now like to quote from Mr. Talarico's letter in connection with the third part of the hon. member's question:

I might add that this has not been the first time the wishes of this board have been ignored by your department. I point to the fact that in the past year we have made it very clear to your department that we felt it was time that this community became a municipality and as you know no action was taken on this matter by your department.

Mr. Speaker, I cannot understand why this gentleman would make such a statement. As a member of the board for a period of nine years, Mr. Talarico should be well aware of the fact, that my department has on a number of occasions during the past seven or eight years, recommended that improvement districts apply for a change in municipal status. This would require the submission of a bylaw to my department. To my knowledge no such bylaw has been received from the improvement district of Marathon.

Mr. Nixon: Might I ask the hon. Minister, Mr. Speaker; if such a by-law were submitted, would he be prepared to recommend to his Cabinet colleagues that it become a municipality?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: I do not know any reason why we would not.

Mr. Nixon: Right. There is just one other thing that was mentioned in the letter, Mr. Speaker.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Just to clarify it, by-laws submitted to us then go to the Ontario Municipal Board, if we approve, and I do not know of any reason why we would not send it on to the board.

Mr. Nixon: The only other thing was the complaint that those who had been elevated to the new position were not in fact property holders. I am glad to hear from the Minister that they are, however, long-time residents.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Yes, I believe one rents from the company as a matter of fact. The member for Thunder Bay would know this, but I doubt whether there are many privately-owned residences in the municipality.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): I have two questions, Mr. Speaker. I am sorry, the Minister is not here, so I guess I will have to withhold the first.

To the Minister of Health: Can the Minister state from information available from the voluntary health insurance survey prepared by the Canadian Conference of Health Care—which he quoted in reply to my question December 20, 1968—how many of the 2,034,000 Ontario population with PSI coverage had Brown Plan only, and how many of the 2,376,000 population with insurance company plans had partial medical coverage which did not include home and office calls?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Speaker, I will have to take that question as notice to get the statistics.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Sudbury.

Mr. Sopha: I have a question of the Minister of Health. What assurance can the Minister give us that in the building of the much higher chimney by the International Nickel Company of Canada Limited, the pollution and damage caused by the emission of sulphur dioxide will not be manifested over a much wider area than has previously been experienced?

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the hon. member for Sudbury East would also place his question, which is similar, of the same Minister?

Mr. E. W. Martel (Sudbury East): I have a three-part question of the Minister of Health.

1. Will the installation of the new stacks by Inco remove the gas in the plant sufficiently to bring the gas concentrations in all areas to, or below, what is considered to be the safety level of 5 ppm?

2. Will the increased height of the new stack ensure that the sulphur damage will not occur beyond the 35-mile radius of Copper Cliff, now being damaged by the emissions from the existing stacks?

3. Finally, is the answer to the problem not the emission of sulphur dioxide, but rather the capturing and neutralizing of the gas?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Speaker, I will answer the question of the hon. member for Sudbury East, since his second question is practically on all fours with that of the hon. member for Sudbury.

1. The approval of the new stacks at Inco was given on the basis of controlling pollution of the outdoor atmosphere. Such a stack could be utilized to exhaust ventilation systems. We understand that changes in the ventilation system are presently under consideration. 2. The best available scientific knowledge concludes that no damage is likely to occur when utilizing the new stack at Copper Cliff. 3. In my statement in the Legislature yesterday I stated unequivocally that the use of the tall stack was considered an interim measure only. Our objective is to remove the pollution at the source, and to my knowledge this gives us the ability so to do.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Sudbury East has a supplementary question.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Speaker: Order, order. If the hon. member has a supplementary question, he is entitled to ask the Minister, who will answer it, but not comment. Has the hon. member for Sudbury East a supplementary question?

Mr. Martel: Yes, if the Minister would answer. I am not quite certain of the answer he gave to the first question.

Is there going to be something added whereby the safety level of concentration of gas will be brought in line with that which is recommended, at five parts per million?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: I think the answer, Mr. Speaker, is clear, that the stack will bring the level of pollution to a lower level than that recommended by The Department of Health as being safe.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Sandwich-Riverside has a question of this Minister.

Mr. F. A. Burr (Sandwich-Riverside): Mr. Speaker, a question of the Minister of Health.

Is the Minister taking any action to ensure that adequate compensation will be received by those people living in the neighbourhood of the Erco plant near Port Maitland, who have been compelled to import water because their own household supplies are polluted by operations of the Erco plant?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Speaker, we have received no requests for compensation for the importation of household water supplies from people living in the vicinity of the Erco plant at Port Maitland. We have no evidence of pollution of well water at Erco's operation. We believe that roof cistern water should not be used for drinking purposes under any condition.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Thunder Bay.

Mr. J. E. Stokes (Thunder Bay): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Minister of Health:

Has the Minister, together with the Minister of Social and Family Services (Mr. Yaremko), reviewed the lack of medical facilities endured by the Osnaburgh Indian band, Osnaburgh, Ontario, as outlined in my letter to both Ministers dated January 28, 1969?

Has the Minister decided what action his department can take to alleviate this intolerable situation, and if so, what action is contemplated by the Minister?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Social and Family Services and I have not discussed this jointly. I received the hon. member's letter yesterday. My colleague had not yet received his copy of it.

However, I have, through my department activities, considered medical facilities for the Osnaburgh Indian band as outlined in the hon. member's letter of January 28th.

The answer to two is yes. We have been in consultation with The Department of National Health and Welfare in respect of this matter.

And three, I am advised that The Department of National Health and Welfare is planning to build a new health centre at New Osnaburgh, which will contain residential quarters for a nurse and clinic facilities.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for High Park has a series of questions of this Minister.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Health.

When can we expect the report from the committee on the healing arts, which the Minister said on April 25th, 1968, he expected last fall?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Speaker, while the committee has not yet been able to report or to establish a final date for the completion of its report, we are now hoping it will be completed for the fall of this year. They ran into far more complexities than they anticipated apparently and I am assured that the report is in the process of writing but it has not yet been delivered to me. When it is, sir, it will be delivered to this House.

Mr. Shulman: Will the Minister accept a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Speaker: The Minister said he would hear it and then decide.

Mr. Shulman: Is it possible to get an interim report in the meanwhile, of the recommendations which they have prepared so far, so that the long-overdue reforms could be—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member has asked his question.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Speaker, the terms of reference given to this commission did not ask for an interim report.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Speaker, a question to the Minister of Health.

Has the Minister studied and reviewed charges made by the head of Associated Medical Services about excessive lab tests and costs of same, as he promised in this House on June 18th, 1968?

Did the Minister find that Doctor Hannah was correct and that unnecessary lab tests were being done?

What action has been taken?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: The answer to the first part of the question, Mr. Speaker, is yes. I have studied and we have reviewed the charges made by the head of the AMS but we find ourselves up against the impossible situation of determining what constitutes interference with the practice of medicine. The hon. member knows very well, of course, that he would be one of the first to bridle very greatly if the government dictated to him what and how many tests he should order.

We are assured by the profession that the tests are ordered only in the interests of good patient care.

Mr. Shulman: Will the Minister allow a supplementary?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: I will hear it.

Mr. Shulman: In view of your comments, is there any way that these rapidly-rising costs of lab tests can be controlled?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Speaker, this matter is under very intensive study at the present time.

Mr. Shulman: Another question of the Minister of Health, Mr. Speaker.

What steps has the Minister taken to protect against the danger of fire in the trade workshops at the Lakeshore Psychiatric Hospital, as he promised the House on May 6, 1968?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Speaker, plans are presently being prepared to relocate the activity at that hospital.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Speaker, could the Minister inform us when this will occur?

Mr. Speaker: Is the hon. member directing a supplementary question to the Minister? Perhaps he would do so again, I do not think the Minister heard him.

Mr. Shulman: Can the Minister inform us when this will occur?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: I said it was under active planning now, sir.

Mr. E. Sargent (Grey-Bruce): That is within ten years.

Mr. Shulman: As soon as we get a new government.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: The hon. member will not be part of it!

Mr. Shulman: Did the Minister get the information he promised the House on April 29, 1968, re the suggestion by the committee on maternal and infant mortalities that The Coroners' Act be amended to require an autopsy in every maternal death?

Has the Minister taken this up with the Attorney General and what was the result?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: I shall take the question as notice, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Shulman: A question for the Minister of Health, Mr. Speaker.

Has the Minister approached the Liquor Control Board about restricting liquor advertising as he advised the House he was considering doing on April 25, 1968? What resulted from the Minister's considerations?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: My answer to the first is no.

Second, Mr. Speaker, after due and deliberate consideration I felt that the Liquor Control Board of Ontario and its appropriate Minister were far better equipped to consider the impact and value and procedures in advertising than was I, and I did not feel that I could add very much to their knowledge.

Mr. Shulman: For once the Minister and I agree, Mr. Speaker.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: The only difference is—on a point of order, Mr. Speaker—that I admit it.

Mr. Shulman: I have a question for the Minister of Health, Mr. Speaker.

Has the Minister looked into the matter of self-contained units for Wasserman blood tests as he stated in the House on April 24, 1968? What was the result of looking into that?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: I will take the question as notice, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Shulman: Finally, Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Health.

Has the Minister examined the instructions given out for ambulance drivers in Toronto, a copy of which I sent him on June 18, 1968, which included instructions for breach delivery and how to put a mother's uterus up into her body? What action has the Minister taken?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: The answer to the first part of the question is yes. These instructions were prepared for use by the metro emergency service, I understand. It is planned now that in future courses they will use the course of instruction laid down by us.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. Minister of Agriculture and Food has answers to questions taken as notice yesterday.

Hon. W. A. Stewart (Minister of Agriculture and Food): Mr. Speaker, thank you for the opportunity of replying to the question asked me by the member for Essex South (Mr. Paterson). The question related to change in transportation costs for milk in that area.

The Ontario Milk Marketing Board, under the Milk Act of 1965 and the regulations thereto, has jurisdiction over the transportation of milk from farm to plant in Ontario, and acts on behalf of the producers in negotiating the best possible price for this service in the producers' interests.

Last year the Ontario Milk Marketing Board was engaged in the development of a policy of transport rationalization, in short, to develop ways and means of eliminating unnecessary duplication of routes and overlapping of facilities. This programme started in southwestern Ontario and is well under way across the province. Now, extending this jurisdiction to the next logical step, the boards have investigated the costs of such transportation, and where costs appear to be out of line, the board has opened negotiations with the transporters.

The first such negotiations took place in Essex County and a number of meetings were held with the seven transporters involved in the movement of milk. It had previously been determined, on the basis of extensive analysis of milk transportation costs across the province, that the charges in Essex appeared to be out of line.

When the meeting between the transporters and the transportation committee of the Ontario Milk Marketing Board failed to provide a solution, I am advised that action was taken under the Board's authority, to act on behalf of and for the producers and to set transportation rates. These new rates will become effective March 1. In the meantime the transporters have the right to appeal to the Ontario Milk Marketing Board, to the Ontario Milk Commission, and as a final recourse, the courts if necessary.

For the information, Mr. Speaker, of members of the House, the average price for milk delivery in a great many markets of Ontario, on the basis of comparable distance, is about 26 cents a hundred. This is frankly a continuation of the milk marketing board's role of acting as agents for the milk producers of this province, to provide efficient transportation for their milk at a fair price. The farmers of Ontario, I think we would all agree, who produce milk have a right to expect this kind of service on the part of the Ontario Milk Marketing Board.

Mr. D. A. Paterson (Essex South): Would the hon. Minister accept a supplementary question? I believe I asked if this programme was going to continue on into other parts of Ontario and I do not believe that was specifically answered.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Well, Mr. Speaker, I thought I explained that this was a programme that was under review right across the province of Ontario. Where transportation costs appear to be not out of line, then I do not think any such action would be taken as was taken in Essex county. However, there is one other area in Ontario where the producers have asked the milk marketing board to step in and try to renegotiate the costs of transporting their milk.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Wentworth has a question placed yesterday with the Minister of Transport (Mr. Haskett) and transferred to the Provincial Treasurer.

Mr. I. Deans (Wentworth): Yes, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It amazes me how it got to this particular Minister.

To the Provincial Treasurer—in view of the TTC proposals for regional transportation as reported in the Globe and Mail this morning (that was yesterday morning) will the Minister assure the House that before the 1969-1970 estimates of his department are considered, he will present to the Legislature an integrated policy governing future transportation developments within the area covered by the MTART study?

2. Will the Minister table in the Legislature the written memoranda containing the TTC reaction to the MTART study?

Hon. C. S. MacNaughton (Provincial Treasurer): Well, Mr. Speaker, I will have to take this question as notice. I have not received a copy of it, it is the first time I have heard it, so I will take it as notice.

Mr. Deans: Will the Minister accept a supplementary question? You can take it as notice too if you wish.

Would you care to explain to the House how you arrived to be the Minister in charge of MTARTS?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Mr. Speaker, am I to receive notice of these questions before I am required to answer them, or am I not?

Mr. Speaker: This bears a little investigation because my office advised me that this was transferred by my office to the office of the hon. Treasurer yesterday.

The second question by the hon. member, of course, perhaps could be answered without notice, or not answered, but I presume the hon. Treasurer did not hear the second question which was a rather innocent question.

Mr. Deans: May I ask it again?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Yes, you may.

Mr. Deans: Would you care to explain to the House how it is that the Provincial Treasurer is responsible for the Metropolitan Toronto and Region Transportation Study?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Mr. Speaker, the Provincial Treasurer is not responsible for the Metropolitan Toronto and Region Transportation Study. The Treasurer of the province of Ontario when he was Minister of Highways was made the first chairman of the executive committee of the Metropolitan Toronto and Region Transportation Study—

Mr. Sopha: How much extra pay?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: The pay was doubled—yes, nothing, precisely nothing.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order, the problem appears to be locating the correct place for this question and Mr. Speaker will try to do so personally before tomorrow. The hon. member for Essex-Kent has a question for the Provincial Treasurer.

Mr. R. F. Ruston (Essex-Kent): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Provincial Treasurer. How many copies of the report of the Ontario committee on taxation were sold at the price of $15; and were any sold at a price other than the one mentioned above?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Mr. Speaker, the answer to the first part of the hon. member's question is 1,248; and to the second part of the hon. member's question, none.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Etobicoke has a question of the Minister of Transport?

Mr. L. A. Braithwaite (Etobicoke): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Transport. It is a two part question:

1. Is the Minister aware of the many complaints about snowmobiles from Kerney Drive and other areas in Etobicoke and in Metropolitan Toronto because of the danger to children, the damage to public and private property caused by the lugs and the irritation caused by the excessive exhaust noise?

2. Is the Minister planning to outlaw the use of snowmobiles on residential streets in urban areas in Metropolitan Toronto?

Hon. I. Haskett (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the jurisdiction to control the situation referred to by the hon. member lies in the municipality. The Motorized Snow Vehicles Act, section 6, grants authority to a municipality to prohibit, by by-law, the operation of motorized snow vehicles on municipal roads and streets.

Mr. Braithwaite: Will the Minister permit a supplementary question? I, and other people, have received delegations of people worried about this.

Will the Minister not consider amending The Highway Traffic Act or any other pertinent Act that might concern snowmobiles, and take the responsibility for the safety of people from the control of the Metropolitan area and bring it under his own jurisdiction so that we do not have a fatality before something is done?

Hon. Mr. Haskett: Mr. Speaker, the motorized snow vehicle is a rather new animal we are having to deal with, and we are trying to deal with it in a sensible way and at the same time make what progress we can.

The Motorized Snow Vehicles Act that was introduced at the last session was new legislation and I would not want it to be felt by any that it is final by any means. This vehicle poses a problem for us and we are trying to resolve the problems it has created as best we can. We are receiving representations, we have made changes in the regulations and we are open to representations for further changes.

Mr. Braithwaite: Does the Minister say it is acceptable for a snowmobile to operate on the streets of Toronto and for it to possibly hit someone?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member for Grey-Bruce has two questions from before Christmas of the Minister of Trade and Development and I believe it has been arranged that they be asked and answered today.

Mr. Sargent: Would the Minister reveal the following information re Sheridan Park: How much money has Sheridan Park cost the taxpayers of Ontario since its inception prior to 1963 and since 1963? How much money has the Ontario Research Foundation cost the Ontario taxpayers since then?

Hon. S. J. Randall (Minister of Trade and Development): Mr. Speaker, the answer to the first question:

The Sheridan Park Corporation was established in May, 1964, by An Act to Incorporate the Sheridan Park Corporation. Thus Sheridan Park did not cost the taxpayers of Ontario any money prior to 1963. From May, 1964, to date, the Lieutenant Governor in Council has authorized the Treasurer of Ontario to advance a $3 million loan to the corporation—$2.5 million at an interest rate of six per cent per annum and $500,000 at a rate of seven per cent per annum. Of these amounts, $2,895,000 has been borrowed as of November 30, 1968.

The above liability of the corporation is offset by land assets of 106.070 acres. It is expected that the $2,895,000 loan will be repaid with interest upon sale of the land inventory.

In addition to the loan made to the corporation, the Sheridan Park Association was given a grant through the then Department of Economics and Development of $25,000 in the fiscal year 1965-66 to commence a development of the entrance to the park.

At the moment, therefore, Sheridan Park has cost Ontario taxpayers $25,000 since its inception in 1964.

The time period in the second part of the hon. member's question is not clear. However, I have interpreted it to mean since the inception of the Ontario Research Foundation in 1928.

During the period 1928 to the end of 1968, a period of 40 years, the Ontario government has provided financial support to the Ontario Research Foundation as follows:

Capital grants	$ 2,335,000.00
Building grants	5,255,000.00
Research grants	8,400,000.00
Research contracts	3,479,000.00
Total	$19,469,000.00

During the same period other sources of financial support to ORF were:

Capital grants—National Research Council	$ 500,000.00
Capital grants from industry	2,180,000.00
Investment income—used for capital expansion	$6,396,000.00
Research contracts from industry	17,816,000.00
Total	$26,892,000.00

A comparison of the above two total amounts indicates that ORF has depended upon industry and internal means for 58 per cent of required support, while 42 per cent has been provided by the Ontario government.

In its operation, ORF recognizes the increasing importance of the role of industrial research to our industrial society. To quote from the ORF annual report of 1967:

The major objective of all industrial research activity is the economic benefit resulting from technological innovation. By technological innovation I mean the process by which scientific knowledge or technical ideas are translated successfully into new or improved products that are saleable.

It is these new or improved products that create the new jobs in manufacturing and in distribution and thus form a major driving force behind the growth of the industrial sector of the economy.

Since 1928, when the foundation was established, advances in science have created whole new industries, such as the television, plastics and computer industries. During this period, the foundation has contributed to the establishment of several new manufacturing processes in our province. The production of vanillin by the Ontario Paper Company and the manufacture of disposable diapers by Dominion Cellulose Limited are two widely differing examples of industrial development which was the result, in part, of research carried out at the Ontario Research Foundation. The path by which such new ideas become a successful part of the economic scene is usually difficult and often financially hazardous. This path, despite its risks, must be followed more frequently by Canadian industry if we are to remain an advanced and advancing industrial nation.

In the case of ORF, research and development programmes are initiated with the objective of contributing to the economic development of the province. There is a need to maintain a proper balance between basic research studies and the industrial contract work in progress in the laboratories. Industrial contracts are directed toward specific objectives which do not normally involve extended basic studies.

In order for ORF to function effectively as a scientific arm of industry and government, it must have the scientific resources to provide adequate facilities and a competency in all those technological areas which are of prime importance in the province, when called upon.

The financial support provided to ORF by the Ontario government in fiscal year ending March 31, 1968, amounted to $1,630,000 or approximately 23 cents per capita. This support was geared to assist basic studies ($1,285,000) in addition to employing the research capabilities of ORF to carry out specific studies for five governmental departments ($345,000).

Mr. Sopha: How many millions?

Mr. Sargent: Would the Minister accept a supplementary question?

You do not have to put anything into your orange juice to realize that this is a pretty great thing. The Minister suggests that we have $26 million involved in the research foundation and about $8 million gross in the Sheridan Park.

Mr. Sopha: Yes, we have disposable diapers as a result.

Mr. Sargent: Well, I will forego my supplementary to ask my second question, which has a bearing on the first one. A news report in the Toronto Star of November 23, said:

The park is still unique in North America if not in the world, in that it is a joint government-private enterprise project. Other such parks in the U.S. are run by land developers as commercial enterprises.

Will the hon. Minister explain, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member will follow his question.

Mr. Sargent: I am trying to. If the taxpayers in the United States cannot afford government participation: (1) Why are Ontario taxpayers subjected to this huge spending as we have mentioned here? (2) Who is the president of the United Lands Corporation? (3) How much did United Lands Corporation receive in payment from the Ontario government for land in the whole project? (4) How much salary does the president of United Lands Corporation receive as a director of Sheridan Park Association? (5) Will the Minister advise how the president of United Lands Corporation can evade "a charge of conflict of interest" if he is a director of Sheridan Park? (6) Do participating companies receive a tax write-off for their capital investment in Sheridan Park? (7) What incentives are offered to participating firms? (8) Does the government still plan to build a 12-storey office block in this project?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Mr. Speaker, after listening to some of the asides and comments to that first question, I think we could use those disposable diapers in here once in a while.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Randall: I have listened to the hon. member with great interest and I hope he will listen to me when I reply without any interruption.

Answering question No. 1, Mr. Speaker, I would like to say that although the United States taxpayer is not involved directly in the financial development and promotion of research parks, such as Sheridan Park, he is more deeply committed financially than we in Canada in the overall expenditure of funds for research and development and the ever-changing advances in technology.

For background information I would like to quote from the 1967 report of the president of the Ontario Research Foundation, as follows:

In allocating total resources for scientific research and development, Canada has neglected to apply the major portion of these resources in the industrial sector. In 1965 only 42 per cent of our total research and development activity was devoted to industrial research and development compared to 66 per cent in the United States and 67 per cent in Great Britain. It is relevant to point out in this connection that in the United States, the federal government provided 55 per cent of the total funds spent by industry on research and development. In Great Britain, the government provided 37 per cent, while in Canada the federal government provided only 18 per cent. American governmental participation in industrial research is, however, swollen by the very large expenditures for defence and for space.

Nevertheless, these expenditures on defence and space do have a marked effect, ultimately, on the technology of the purely private sector of the economy. In the years ahead, we, in Canada, must strive to develop policies that will substantially increase the research and development activities of the industrial sector of the economy if we are to sustain economic growth and provide employment for our expanding population in the face of increasing competition for our manufactured goods in international markets and in our own domestic markets.

The final phase of the research and development process is, of course, the development phase. As this phase often involves the building of prototypes or pilot plants, it is usually very costly. However, only when the development phase is successfully completed and the results put into use can the new idea yield economic or social benefits.

In Canada only 35 per cent of our national expenditure is spent in the development phase, compared to 66 per cent and 62 per cent in the United States and Great Britain respectively. Consequently, national policies in this country must be devised that will accelerate activity in this phase despite its cost and the difficulty of predicting the end result.

It is estimated that in 1968, the United States spent about $26 billion on research and development. Of this $26 billion, $17 billion will be provided by the United States government, which works out to about $80 per capita.

In Canada, it is estimated that about $1 billion was spent on research and development in 1968. If the federal government spends about one-half of this amount—about the same percentage it spent in 1965—then the Canadian government will only be spending about $25 per capita, or about one-third of the United States expenditure per capita on research and development.

In view of what I have said, I think the member for Grey-Bruce will agree with me when I say that the Ontario taxpayer, in comparison with the United States taxpayer, is not subjected to huge spending on research and development.

The Ontario government is contributing to the research and development needs of all companies in Ontario, both large and small.

The Sheridan Park Research Community looks after the needs of the large companies; the Ontario Research Foundation looks after the needs of the middle-sized companies; and technical information services and field engineering services provided by the Ontario government and the National Research Council through the Ontario Research Foundation look after the needs of the small Ontario companies.

The Sheridan Park Research Community has been set up in recent years with the purpose of establishing a centre of science and technology for Ontario industry. It is an experiment—which now shows signs of being most successful—to build up industrial research and development potential in Ontario.

This development provides an opportunity for companies to locate their research and development facilities in one closely-knit community for their mutual advantage. The site was carefully selected to ensure maximum convenience with regard to proximity to universities, industry concentrations, and so on.

Also, with the independent, non-profit and widely-respected Ontario Research Foundation is located as the nucleus of the community, special emphasis has been added to its potential for serving the scientific and technological needs of all industry in Ontario.

The policy of this government is to encourage and assist the establishment of self-reliant and commercially-viable manufacturing industries in Ontario, which will be capable of competing effectively on an international scale in an era of diminishing trade barriers and ever advancing technology.

At the present time, in following this policy we are contributing financially to the Ontario Research Foundation and acting as a catalyst and promoter of Sheridan Park.

Mr. Speaker: Order! The hon. member has a point of order.

Mr. Sargent: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, are we to be subjected to this? I wanted him to answer the first question—

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member asked his questions in the manner in which he wished to ask them. He will now give the same courtesy to the Minister to answer his questions in the manner in which he wishes to answer them. I would ask that the same courtesy be given to the Minister as was given to the member.

The hon. Minister has the floor.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

If we, in asking questions from the Opposition, are going to be subjected to editing which makes those questions pertinent within the rules of the House, I submit to you, Mr. Speaker, that answers which are violations of the rules of the House have to be submitted to the same restrictions by yourself.

Mr. Speaker: Well in the first place I cannot accept the hon. member's view that the answer given by the Minister is a violation of the rules of the House.

Mr. MacDonald: It is.

Mr. Speaker: Then the second part of his observation—which is actually the first part—obviously the hon. member was not listening when I was speaking on this matter yesterday. I said I had decided that as far as I was concerned, if members wished to ask questions which were, shall I say not exactly within the rules of the House, then for a trial period at least I was not editing them. I had not done so since the beginning of this part of the session and I had not done so the last week or so of the last session.

So therefore we will see how it works; and if the members keep within reasonable range of the rules, I have no objection, because this House is run by rules set by the members. If it is the view of the majority of the members that that type of question is allowable, then certainly Mr. Speaker has no desire to change it.

So these questions were not changed nor edited or any suggestions made to the member with respect to same. Nor has the Minister been in touch with Mr. Speaker about his answer. As far as Mr. Speaker is concerned, the hon. Minister has the floor and is in order.

Mr. MacDonald: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, when we attempt to ask a supplementary question and that supplementary question strays to excessive quotations or anything that is not strictly relevant to a supplementary question, you quite rightly intervene. When the Minister gives a speech that strays far beyond the answer to the question asked him, I submit you have the power and the obligation to intervene.

Mr. Speaker: I have listened very carefully to the answer the hon. Minister has given and I read the question because I was told these questions would be asked today. I read the question very carefully. Insofar as I am concerned, the hon. Minister has been answering the question and has been adding very useful information for the members of the House.

And I still rule that the hon. Minister is in order.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order.

Very respectfully, may I say that this is typical of this Minister. He tries to filibuster any questions embarrassing to the government and he ruins the chance to get to the meat of the question. I say respectfully, sir, that this has to stop from this Minister.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, I will continue. The answer is so interesting I can hardly wait to hear it myself, so I will continue. We are now and will be in the future looking at additional research and development programmes and research parks which will continue to contribute to the economic growth and well-being of this province.

Finally, I would like to say that Sheridan Park, supported by the Ontario government and industry, is attempting to utilise fully all the increased knowledge that research and development is giving us. We are learning to understand better the beneficial effects of new technology and to make these benefits more widely felt.

Research and development at Sheridan Park aims to discover and develop products that will reach markets as quickly as possible.

It's been said many times before, but bears repeating: competition in world markets is no longer a contest of price alone. World competition has increasingly become a battle of invention and innovation, in which scientific superiority and technical excellence are major weapons. Through research at Sheridan Park, we are attempting to progress from an economy of imitation to an economy of innovation. We are seeking self-reliance!

Mr. Speaker, that answers the long question—No. 1.

The answer to No. 2: Mr. L. W. Finch is the president of United Lands Corporation.

3. United Lands Corporation sold all the land for the Sheridan Park project—168.017 acres—to the Sheridan Park Corporation for the amount of $1,804,306.69 which represented the actual cost to United Lands Corporation.

4. Article 24 of by-law number 1 of the Sheridan Park Association states the following:

No salary or other remuneration shall be paid to any officer or director of the association, but each shall be entitled to receive proper travelling expenses and other disbursements incurred with the approval of the directors in the necessary conduct of the business of the association.

Thus, the president of United Lands Corporation receives no salary as a director of Sheridan Park Association.

5. I assume the member is again referring to the position the president of United Lands Corporation holds as a director of the Sheridan Park Association.

The Sheridan Park Association, whose membership is voluntary, is comprised of the companies owning property and establishing research facilities in Sheridan Park Research Community.

The association's objectives are to promote the interests of its members, to maintain standards of physical development in the community, to provide scientific and technical liaison among its members, and to establish a general policy which will underline the word "community" in the personnel and corporate relationship of its members.

Every new firm to locate in Sheridan Park Research Community is eligible for membership—each has an equal voice in the community's affairs.

Article 5, paragraph 1 of by-law number 1, amended April, 1968, of the Sheridan Park Association deals with the election of officers of the association and reads as follows:

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order, order!

Now the hon. members have been complaining about matters in this House. The hon. Minister, as far as I am concerned, is trying to answer the question of conflict of interest and various other things which the hon. member has asked and I would ask that he be given a reasonable hearing and if it is not the right answer or proper answer, the hon. members have ways and means of finding out.

Mr. Sargent: We never know if it is right or not.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Well just sit back and listen. I am giving the hon. member the information for which he asked.

Mr. Speaker: Order! The hon. Minister will carry on.

Hon. Mr. Randall: So I go back, Mr. Speaker, to pick up where I left off.

The association shall elect from the representative and alternate representatives a board of directors consisting of 18 directors provided that each member company shall have at least one but not more than two representatives elected to the board of directors. The board shall be charged with full responsibility for the management of the affairs of the association.

The president of United Lands Corporation, as a property owner in the park, has the privilege of joining the Sheridan Park Association. In the case of the president of United Lands Corporation, his great contribution to the Sheridan Park project has earned him the honour of being elected a director of the association by the other association members.

In view of the above, I fail to see elements of conflict of interest resulting from the president of United Lands Corporation also being one of eighteen directors of the Sheridan Park Association.

6. The only tax write-offs that participating companies in Sheridan Park receive for their capital investment are those that are available through the federal government, and of course they are available to all companies undertaking research and development regardless of where they locate.

7. The only incentives offered to participating firms are those incentives offered by the federal government. These same incentives are also available to companies locating any place in Ontario or Canada.

For your information, I am pleased to send over a booklet which outlines research and development incentives available in Canada through the federal government.

8. The Ontario government has at no time planned to construct or operate a twelve-storey office complex in Sheridan Park. The present commercial services complex located in the park was developed and paid for by private enterprise.

As demands for facilities of the type provided by the complex grow and additional space is required, private enterprise will continue to develop, pay for and operate the expanded facilities.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Speaker, although realizing that this has taken too much time now, what is your ruling on a supplementary question? May I ask a supplementary question?

Mr. Speaker: Hon. members are always entitled to ask the Minister a supplementary question provided he will accept it.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Speaker, on the matter of the president of the United Lands Corporation, he received $1,804,000 for the land.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Is there anything wrong with that?

Mr. Sargent: I do not know.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Yet the member asks the same question every year. It has been in here about five or six years; he has had a chance to debate it. There is nothing wrong with it.

Mr. Sargent: Just because it was bad then does not say it is bad now.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Oh, nothing wrong with it!

Mr. Speaker: Will the hon. Minister please give the floor to the member who has a supplementary question?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Delighted!

Mr. Sargent: What is the interest of the man who made the $1,804,000? Why is he still in the corporation? What is the incentive for him to stay in it?

Hon. Mr. Randall: May I have that question please?

Mr. Speaker: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Randall: I tried to explain that Sheridan Park Association is an association of private industry and the Ontario Research Foundation and there is no pay, no money, nothing involved. It is an honorary appointment. The man who sold the land and built the commercial complex out there is Mr. Finch, and there is no reason why the other 17 people would not invite him to become an honorary member. He gets no pay. He does not get any graft out of it, if that is what the member is driving at. It is an association; this is not the Ontario Research Foundation.

Mr. Sargent: Regarding the tax write-offs for these incorporating firms, first of all, are they all American subsidiaries?

Hon. Mr. Randall: No, I would not say they all are. Some of them are. But they get that 150 per cent write-off from the federal government, not the provincial government.

Mr. Sargent: Then if there is that sufficient tax write-off federally, why could they not amortize the whole deal instead of the taxpayers of Ontario putting $28 million into it?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member is very confused. The $28 million, over the last four years, is part of the earnings of the corporation from the moneys donated to it by industry; moneys it has earned itself through the work it has done for industry and government, and like any corporation, it has built up this asset.

As far as I am concerned, it is a legitimate enterprise all the way through, and they can answer for their own earnings. The balance sheet will be in here. The member can examine the balance sheet and it will tell him what he is asking me here today.

Mr. Sargent: Does the Minister agree with the story in the Toronto Daily Star that he is in trouble down there?

Hon. Mr. Randall: No, I certainly do not. I do not agree with the Star or the hon. member.

Mr. Sargent: Well, the newspaper is wrong, then?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Pardon?

Mr. Sargent: The newspaper is wrong?

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order.

Mr. Speaker: Point of order.

Mr. Deans: Would you not agree, sir, that this is developing into a debate which is not relative to the question period?

Mr. Speaker: I most certainly agree with the hon. member but I have no desire, within any reasonable limits, to hobble any member on any side of the House, and particularly to Mr. Speaker's left. Of course, the hon. Minister has it within his power to say that he will not answer supplementary questions if he feels the hon. member's questions are not supplementary or not proper at the time.

If the hon. member has any further question which is really supplementary to the original question and the answers given, I will be glad to give him the floor; otherwise, the matter will be closed.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Mr. Speaker, may I just rise on a point of order. I never intend to get into a long discourse in answering questions, but I just want to say that if the member asks me a question—and he asked 11 questions this afternoon, all rolled into one — it is impossible for me to give him the information just by saying yes or no, and leave any kind of an impression as to whether it is a good operation or a bad one. I think in defence of any department of government we have a right to explain the full operation so that there is no misunderstanding as to how it operates. I think this afternoon there was an inference that Mr. Finch was under suspicion. I think I have cleared that, and I am right in doing so.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, just a minute ago I asked in one supplementary question why the American economy was not subject to what we have here, and—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member has no point of order. I would point out again to the hon. member that so far as I am concerned—and I looked at the question carefully, I listened to the answer carefully—the hon. Minister was answering that “why” question, and he was answering it in his own way.

Orders of the day.

Clerk of the House: The first order, resuming the adjourned debate on the amendment to the amendment to the motion for an address in reply to the Speech of the Honourable the Lieutenant-Governor at the opening of the session.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

Mr. I. Deans (Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, anything I might say after that episode of a few minutes ago will seem pale I am sure.

Yesterday at the adjournment hour I was discussing the matter of the difficulty of families in Ontario making ends meet. I did suggest at that time a number of measures that might be taken by this government, in order to assure that every person in this province receives those things that are essential to maintenance of life. All I wish to say in regard to those things today, is that I hope that the appropriate Ministers will take into consideration the recommendations that I made yesterday, and will take whatever actions they can take to implement them immediately.

I would like to discuss two further matters for a few moments this afternoon, and one is a matter that affects quite a large section of the community in this province. It is the matter of compulsory arbitration as it applies to police officers in this province.

I would like to suggest to the Attorney General (Mr. Wishart) that the present structure of arbitration as it applies to police officers is not satisfactory, and that the practice that is presently carried on in this province for appointing judges to hold positions on police commissions—to sit in judgement as the arbitrator in disputes between employees and employers—is wrong.

A judge who sits on a police commission is in a position of holding down a management post. He does in fact administer to some degree the affairs of the police who fall within the jurisdiction of the commission of which he is a member. In so doing, he must enter into discussion on behalf of that corporation as a management person, in an attempt to arrive at a satisfactory conclusion to negotiations. In many municipalities the judges who sit on the police commissions are also members of the association of police-governing bodies. This particular association meets and has met in the last number of months to determine at what level police officers' salaries ought to fall. This means that the judge has sat with other judges who are likely to act as arbitrators in a dispute, and they have determined beforehand the maximum level at which they would like to see wage increases pegged. They are then supposed to sit and deal impartially with the evidence presented to them.

I suggest, sir, that this is not possible. It is very difficult if not impossible for a judge to have sat and determined beforehand what level any award might be, and then to sit, and without any preconceived notion, listen to the arguments put forward both by management and the union involved, or the association in this case, and reach an unbiased conclusion.

I would suggest to the Attorney General that judges who sit on police commissions should no longer be allowed to sit as arbitrators in police disputes, and that suitable persons trained by The Department of Labour could perhaps undertake to fill this board. There is an instance right now with the police in the city of Oakville, and another pending where the police in the city of Hamilton have taken exception to action of judges who have sat on the police governing bodies of this province and decided in advance of any evidence being presented to them by the police association what the level of wages ought to be for police officers. It does not lend itself to bargaining in good faith, and does not lend itself to providing an impartial judge to settle this dispute.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I turn to a matter that was brought to my attention by the member for Thunder Bay (Mr. Stokes). The member for Thunder Bay would have raised this matter himself, but the structure of debate in this House does not allow him to stand again during the Throne Debate and raise it. But it is a matter of vital importance to a fairly large segment of his riding.

Today the member for Thunder Bay asked a question of the Minister of Health (Mr. Dymond) in regard to medical services for the Osnaburgh band of Indians. The Minister of Health indicated that he had spoken to the federal Minister of Health and Welfare, and that the federal government said that it was going to take some action in this matter. But the unfortunate part is that right in this government there is a department with moneys appropriated for the purpose of alleviating the lot of the Indians in this province. He could have taken action on this very important matter, this matter of life and death as it may seem.

I would like to read for the record a letter that was sent by the chief, councillors and members of the Osnaburgh band of Indians, in relation to the matter of medical services that have not been available to them for the last 14 years. I quote from this:

MEDICAL FACILITIES ON THE OLD RESERVE,
LAKE ST. JOSEPH SITE, 1950 TO 1956:

The Osnaburgh Indian reserve was the site of the first Hudson's Bay Co. trading post established in Ontario in 1778. A modern outpost hospital was erected and staffed at the Lake St. Joseph site about 1950. The site of the modern installation was autocratically selected and placed near the Hudson's Bay property a lengthy distance across the bay from the Indian reserve village. Access from the village to the nursing station was both distant and hazardous because of the stormy waters of Lake St. Joseph. Indeed, two residents will attest to the fact that each of them had a child die because of the inability to cross the perilous waters while attempting to seek aid for their ailing children.

In 1955 the authority decided again, and without prior consultation with the Indian residents, to terminate the medical facilities. The hospital structure was sold by a private individual after which it was moved to a location contiguous to the present Indian reserve property on Ontario Highway 599. It has remained there to the present time unattended and in disrepair.

The next heading is:

The relocation of the Indian village from Lake St. Joseph to Highway 599 in 1961:

In 1961 the Lake St. Joseph townsite residents were moved en masse to the present site on Highway 599. The movement of the residents and the selection of the new townsite was again determined without consultation and with no suggestion from the Osnaburgh band residents.

They then go on to explain the housing situation on the original reserve, and I quote from them:

The original reserve had no educational facilities from the date of inception, except for an annual temporary summer school of two weeks duration.

The housing in pleasant surroundings, was adequate because the majority of the population was transient. The location had an easy access to the fishing and trapping areas which were the main occupations of the residents.

They then explain what the situation of the school and housing was on the new reserve site, and they say:

When the authorities transferred the residents to the new townsite, school facilities were provided to initiate the full-term school year from September to June. During the past seven years educational facilities have been extended and improved. The original classroom space has been increased from two to four classrooms and many pupils are attending residential and day schools — city schools. New homes were built with supplies and financing provided by the Indian Affairs Department, and labour provided by the residents. Housing units are improving in quality and increasing in numbers. A community hall — the only community recreation quarter partially in use — is gradually reaching completion.

Then they go on to the matter that is of direct concern today.

The only medical facilities available for the residents after the outpost nursing station was closed were of itinerant nature. A transient nurse visited on infrequent occasions, as well as an X-ray clinic on the annual Indian treaty day. After the relocation to the present site, medical facilities were greatly improved. The townsite reserve was located about 25 miles distant from a private hospital staffed with a full-time medical doctor, registered nurses and aids. The private hospital was operated by the Pickle Crow Mines as an adjunct to their main activity, which was gold mining.

Moreover, the Indian health services had a clinic at Central Patricia, Ontario, a distance of about 20 miles from the Osnaburgh townsite. The private hospital aided the Central Patricia Clinic by supplementing emergency aid, particularly of a critical nature, to the residents over an area of about 100 miles.

In 1966, the Pickle Crow Mines closed its mining activity as well as the hospital services. Medical ministrations then were only available at Central Patricia Clinic, staffed by one nurse who had to, and still does administer medical aid to the residents in a remote area accessible only by air or road. It is the responsibility of the Central Patricia Clinic with a staff of one, to administer to about 100 residents in the Central Patricia townsite, about 100 residents in Pickle Lake Landing, which is two miles distant, about 500 residents on the Osnaburgh Reserve, which is itself spread over an area of about five miles about 20 miles distant from Central Patricia. In addition, the one nurse must travel to areas accessible only by air to administer to about 150 residents of Cat Lake, who area boggles the imagination. We feel, and as well as about 500 residents at Round Lake.

As you will agree, the ability of one person to provide medical aid for so many individuals over so large and scattered an area boggles the imagination. We feel, and you would agree, gentlemen, that this is an unreasonable burden of responsibility to place on one person. We also feel, that you would also agreed, that these medical arrangements are totally inadequate as well as unjust to Treaty Indians, citizens of Canada and citizens of Ontario.

As further emphasis on the gradual deterioration of medical facilities, we would like to specify some acts of seemingly utter negligence within the last year.

The first such instance occurred during the period January 15, 1968, to March 15, 1968. At that time there was a change-over of personnel to perhaps better one's circumstances. Throughout the three months' interval, the only medical clinic in the area accessible by land or air was left unstaffed. It should be noted that while this clinic remained unstaffed, there was an outbreak of apparent salivary gland infections, mumps as well as measles and chicken pox.

The second instance of these acts of seemingly utter negligence took place in the immediate present and included the interval December 15, 1968, to January 14, 1969. Again there was a changeover of personnel, the third since March, 1968, again the clinic remained unstaffed for a period of approximately one month. If you will recall there has been and still is at this time of writing, an epidemic of respiratory ailments throughout most of Canada which was denied by the Minister of Health for quite some time. Four deaths have occurred on our reserve alone.

One infant died at the beginning of the New Year. Three persons died on the one day, Friday, January 17, 1969. Of these three, one was a two-day-old, apparently premature infant, born near midnight of January 15 during a raging snowstorm. The other two who died on the same day were older residents, one ill from the current bronchial ailment, the other a chronically ill patient. It may be suggested that, had a nurse been present during the month's interval that the clinic remained unstaffed, perhaps the maternity patient would have been advised to go to a hospital maternity ward instead of giving birth to a child in a small one-room house containing 20 persons, about 15 of whom were ailing with the respiratory ailment.

To further emphasize the need for an outpost nursing station, it is necessary for you to be aware that during the week prior to January 17, the day on which the three deaths occurred, there was no possibility of reaching the nearest hospital at Sioux Lookout by airplane and only a hazardous attempt could be made by road and train. Air flights were halted because of weather conditions and a snowstorm which continued from Wednesday, January 15 to January 17, making road travel perilous particularly for an ailing person and certainly impossible for a woman in labour.

As an additional example of the futility to get assistance, the Central Patricia area was out of telephone contact with Canada due to the failure of the long distance telephone services, throughout January 14 until late evening.

Prior to the time that the respiratory epidemic reached its peak in our area, many residents who felt physically able to travel, boarded the daily bus to the Sioux Lookout hospital and many were turned away because the hospital was overcrowded.

We wish to digress here to state that we understand an epidemic of this nature is an extreme situation. However, it is necessary for you to gain some appreciation of the land travel facilities to Sioux Lookout.

Bus transport is available each morning from Monday to Saturday. A patient will board a bus at 8.30 a.m. EST, and arrive at Savant Lake at 11.00 a.m. EST. The patient must find a place to stay at Savant Lake until he entrains at 5.00 p.m. EST, for arrival at Sioux Lookout at 6.00 p.m. EST, after which he must journey to the hospital. Incidentally, the sole hotel and warm food purveyor at Savant Lake opens its food premises between 1.00 and 2.00 p.m. and 7.00 and 8.00 p.m. EST.

It should be evident that a person is in transit for a period of about ten hours. Consider now the situation if that same patient is turned away from the hospital—and many have been—because of the lack of accommodation. After having been in transit for ten hours and arriving at the hospital at 7.00 p.m. EST, and perhaps attended to in a cursory manner, the patient has no alternative but to return to Osnaburgh. Therefore, this citizen—and I emphasize, this citizen—in a failing state of health, must again entrain at 4.00 a.m. EST arriving at Savant Lake at 5.00 a.m. EST, find a place to stay until the departure time at 12 noon, to arrive at Osnaburgh at 3.00 p.m. In effect, an ailing person who makes this superhuman exhausting journey to Sioux Lookout for medical attention, is potentially in transit for about 31 hours. It should be obvious that such a venture would tax the stamina of even an exceptional individual.

As a consequence of the above information, we reiterate our plea to you, gentlemen, to take immediate action to provide hospital facilities for the Treaty Indians of Osnaburgh, who are also citizens of Canada and citizens of Ontario.

The sad part about this entire thing, is that in this government there were funds available that could have been used to provide, even on a temporary basis, the medical services needed for these people. But for some unknown reason, Indians in this province—in fact in this entire country—are considered second class citizens—at least, by the governments presently in power.

The Department of Social and Family Services, through their Indian development branch, had a budget of $1.4 million; much of which—and when I say much, it was around the $400,000 mark—was not expended. This money would have gone a great way towards making sure that this kind of a situation could not happen in this province. But it was not used. It was not used and I ask you why. Surely to goodness, we are not going to allow the kind of argument as to whose responsibility this is, to interfere with the well being of the citizens of this province.

Surely, if we have $400,000, $200,000 even $50,000 left in a budget, supposed to be used for the development of the Indian people of this province, that it should be used for such a thing as this; to provide them with the necessary medical care in order that they might survive in an atmosphere which, even at the very best, is difficult to survive in.

I make this plea to you. On behalf of the member for Thunder Bay, on behalf of all of those Indians in northern Ontario, for goodness sake, have a little bit of heart for these people, try to understand that money is of no earthly use if you keep it in the coffers of this province.

I think this just further indicates the unfeelingness of the government of the present time.

I think that the matters which I discussed yesterday in regard to the needs of those people earning in the $5,000 and below bracket, the matter of Canadian Westinghouse's callous attitude towards its employees, the difficulty I had today in trying to determine whether the Minister of Transport is indeed responsible for anything that falls within what normally would be considered transport media, the difficulty that these Indians have had in trying to get, for themselves, the very bare necessities to keep body and soul together only emphasises even more the complete and utter neglect and disregard that this government feels for the people of this province. I suggest to you now that you should resign.

Mr. S. Apps (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, may I—along with all the other members who have participated in this Throne Debate—extend to you my congratulations on the way that you are conducting this most important office.

I think we all realise that it is a very trying task and I think that we all respect the way in which you are trying to rule in an impartial and fair manner. May I extend to you my best wishes for your continued health and happiness in your job and also, that your present disposition will remain ever thus throughout the whole tenure of this Legislature.

I would also like to say a word of congratulations to the member for Waterloo South, whom I have a tremendously high regard for and who, I feel, has made a very excellent Deputy Speaker and Chairman of the committee of the whole House. I think that almost every member in this Legislature will agree with me when I say that he too has conducted his duties in a most impartial manner and under very difficult situations on many occasions, and has won the respect of all of us here in this Legislature.

May I, too, add a word of congratulations and welcome to our new Lieutenant-Governor, the Hon. W. Ross Macdonald.

Coming from the riding of Brant along with the leader of the Opposition, I have rather a feeling of kinship with him because he is now living in the same house in which my father was born many, many years ago. I would like to extend to him also, my best wishes for long life and happiness and trust that all members of this Legislature will tender to him the esteem and respect to which his office is entitled.

Before I get into the main portion of my address this afternoon; as I look around the Legislature sometimes it appears to me that those participating in the Speech from the Throne are participating in rather a pointless exercise in futility.

I realise that the work load of the MLA in this province has tremendously increased in the last 10 years and I realise that a great many of the members must be absent from the Legislature in order to look after the work that they must do on behalf of their constituents.

I think the time has come when we should re-assess the role of the Throne Speech in this Legislature. I think that, if the work load is such that the members of this Legislature must be absent from it, then surely to goodness we, as a government, in this province of Ontario, should provide the necessary individual clerical help to do a lot of this work. This would enable the members of the Legislature to take a more active part in the Legislature—as I understand we are all supposed to do.

I would like to recommend two things to our government—to re-assess this role of the Throne Speech in this Legislature and to provide us with the clerical staff that will make it possible for us to spend most of our time here in the Legislature where our constituents expect us to be.

The other day I was rather disturbed when the member for Yorkville attempted—

Mr. F. Young (Yorkview): Yorkview!

Mr. Apps:—Yorkview attempted to indicate that many members of the election law committee voted against the lowering of the voting age. Now I am sure that he did not really mean to indicate that we voted against this because this is not correct.

Mr. Young: You voted against it—

Mr. Apps: If you want to put a point of order you stand up, and I will sit down.

Mr. Young: Mr. Speaker, since the member has invited me, I simply tried to say—and I was howled down at that time—that the members of the committee, in effect, voted that the voting age be not recommended as to lowering, at this time until the second phase of the committee's work. Now that means—

Mr. Apps: On a point of order. I accept that explanation, but that is not what you said.

All right, now you have made your point of order.

Mr. Young: This means before 1975 the lowering simply—

Mr. Apps: Let me continue—

Mr. Young:—cannot be done.

Mr. Apps: Let me continue. I can tell you this, the chairman of the committee suggested that our deliberations should be divided into two sections; those of housekeeping units and those of other things we wanted to discuss more fully. When the decision came to postpone the discussion of the voting age to the second section, it was made on the understanding that any recommendation we made could be implemented before the next possible provincial election. And I—

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. R. Gisborn (Hamilton East): Just the opposite.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, I too am a member of that committee and I think that the member for Yorkview is far more correct than the member for Kingston and the Islands.

What happened exactly was that there was such a debate and there was such a division and it is pretty commonly regarded, in that committee, as being a fact that anything we do in the next series of deliberations we have, which will commence sometime after this House rises at the end of this session, perhaps has little likelihood of being implemented in time for the election in 1971. So with great respect, all the member for Kingston and the Islands is doing, is splitting hairs and the member for Yorkview is in fact correct.

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): He has not got enough to split—

Mr. Young: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order—

An hon. member: Speak to the point of order.

Mr. Young: Mr. Speaker, this in effect was what both the clerk of the House and the chairman told us—that the second phase could not be implemented before the next election.

Mr. Young: Before the next election. The reason for my motion in committee was, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. L. M. Reilly (Eglinton): Who is making the speech?

Mr. Young: To the point of order—

Mr. Reilly: He should declare his point of order.

Mr. Young: My motion was that we change the order so that this matter of voting age could be debated now so it would be implemented by 1971. That was the motion and what I said was, that the Conservative members in that committee voted against that motion and a division was made. In other words, this cannot now possibly take place until 1975.

Mr. Apps: Mr. Speaker, now we have heard the version of the member for Yorkview, which was a very different version from what he said the other day.

Let me say this, that we voted on that motion on the assurance by the clerk of this Legislature that any amendment that would be made could be put into law before the next election would take place.

Mr. Young: That was not said in the committee.

Mr. Apps: That was said in the committee.

All right, now that I have clarified that to I hope the satisfaction of a lot of people, and if you are interested in knowing what my reaction was to that, I am going to read you a little bit from the excerpt from the select committee on youth—

Mr. Nixon: Who was the chairman of that committee?

Mr. Apps: I was the chairman of that committee. Thank you very much.

And I want to clear up any misunderstanding as far as I am concerned, and this is what it says, the recommendation of the voting age, and I am going to read it all:

Young people at age 18 to 20 today are generally more educated and more knowledgeable than any previous generation at the same age. One of the great weaknesses noted by the committee in its many contacts with young people was the inability of adults to give youngsters responsibility commensurate with their knowledge and capability. Probably this has stemmed from the unfortunate image that has been created by those few irresponsible, often immature teenagers who all-too-frequently come to public attention. Certainly they do not typify nor represent the large numbers of stable and good-living young persons who make up our great body of youth.

Many opinions have been expressed regarding the desirability of allowing young people under 21 the right to vote. Would a lower voting age be in keeping with the responsibility that should, and could, be sustained by young people and help them develop more responsible attitudes towards their communities?

After much study and discussion based on many submissions both for and against lowering the voting age, and material derived from provincial visitations across Canada, the committee agreed that the minimum voting age in Ontario should be lowered. However, there were some differences of opinion among the members in respect to what the minimum age should be. It was felt by most members that the minimum age should be either 18 or 19 years rather than 21.

One of the reasons suggested in favour of a 19-year minimum was that at this age most young people have had an opportunity to be away from high school for approximately a year. During this time they have usually been able to make their own decisions and to mature either through attendance at universities or while employed in the work force.

It is believed that students at the entrance level of university or the work force of the province are sufficiently knowledgeable and responsible to intelligently exercise the franchise. Many such persons are married and raising families before they are 21. They pay taxes, fight for their country, drive cars, are treated as adults before the courts, and in many other ways are accountable for their actions as adults in our society. Knowledge of the functions of democratic government and personal responsibility in the democratic process cannot claim much respect from a group of intelligent young people who have no voice within such a process.

At the present time, the provinces of Canada are split equally on the question of a voting age other than 21. Alberta, British Columbia and Newfoundland favour 19, Quebec and Saskatchewan 18, while the remaining provinces remain at 21.

The select committee recommends that: The voting age in Ontario be reduced to 19 years. Members dissenting in favour of 18 years: Murray Gaunt, MPP, Stephen Lewis, MPP, Bernard Newman, MPP, Richard Smith, MPP, and Thomas L. Wells, MPP.

For the last two years since this report has been tabled, I for one have had no reason at all to change my views from that recommendation which I helped to draft.

Mr. Young: Not until 1975.

Mr. Singer: Let us have it now.

Mr. Apps: Well, that remains for the government. I am telling the House about my view and I am also trying to correct a misrepresentation which I think was made two days ago in this Legislature. As far as youth is concerned, I am not overly impressed with the contribution that the member for Yorkview or the members of the NDP have made for the youth of this province over the last years. Perhaps an indication of their reaction to youth and to the young people, and I hope it is not, is the remark made by the member for Beaches-Woodbine (Mr. Brown), I guess he is. He is never here in the Legislature, but he was rather prominent in the caucus down in Kingston when he suggested it might be a good idea if the young people would burn down a few buildings at the university in order to get their needs.

I am sure that that is not the view of most members of the NDP, but it is the view of one of the members and I am just wondering what kind of a contribution the NDP has made. As far as I am concerned, I am not very impressed with it. As a matter of fact, I often wonder, in looking at the NDP over there, that of all those members, only one that I can see might be genuinely concerned with the young people, and that is the member for Cochrane South (Mr. Ferrier). Sometimes I think he must wonder what kind of a group he has got into, every once in a while, over there.

Mr. Young: That is laying it on.

Mr. C. G. Pilkey (Oshawa): Have a good time, it is later than you think.

Mr. Apps: I would like to bring to the attention of the members of this Legislature an experiment that has been going on in Kingston over the last six months. That is the new idea of ambulance service down there which was originated by Dr. William Ghent in co-operation with The Department of Health. The ambulance service is now stationed at or operates from the Hotel Dieu Hospital in Kingston and is looked after by Dr. Ghent, the members and interns and staff of the Hotel Dieu Hospital.

This I think, has been one of the greatest advances in ambulance care that we have had in this province, because it assures that every time an ambulance leaves the hospital, it is staffed by well-trained technicians who are capable of acting in almost any capacity in an emergency. I think this is a tremendous step forward, and I want to congratulate here, publicly, Dr. Ghent for his efforts in establishing this, and the co-operation he has received from The Department of Health in making it all possible.

Mr. Speaker, I want to come to one of the very important things that I feel is of extreme importance to the people that I represent in the riding of Kingston and the Islands. For some time now, the people of Kingston have been concerned over the high ratio of taxes on property within the city of Kingston. This has resulted in an ever increasing burden being placed on our municipal taxpayers who are required to pay the taxes which in part go towards providing the municipal services that some tax-exempt institutions require.

I brought this to the attention of the Legislature last year during the Throne Debate and on several occasions during the last provincial election. At these times I endeavoured to show that in the case of Queen's University, it is most unfair to expect our citizens to pay for the services used by Queen's when the benefits of the education received are enjoyed by many students from all parts of Ontario and Canada. As a matter of fact, about 85 per cent of the students at our university come from outside the city of Kingston.

I would like to place on record in support of my case a brief presented to the Ontario select committee on taxation by the city of Kingston, which I believe shows beyond the shadow of a doubt that relief must be provided to our taxpayers. It might be of interest to this House that the man who was chairman of this committee which prepared the brief was the late W. Nickle, Q.C., long a valued and prominent member of this Legislature, who passed away a few weeks ago. In quoting from the brief presented by Mr. Nickle's committee, I begin as follows:

Your committee notes that the tax levy for the city of Kingston has increased from $5,900,000 in 1962 to $9,400,000 in 1967, an increase of $4.5 million during a five-year period. This represents an average increase of $900,000 a year, a percentage increase of 76 per cent. During the same period, taxable assessment increased from $70,300,000 to $86,700,000, an increase of $16,400,000 or 23.3 per cent, and property exempt from taxation during the same period increased from $33,200,000 to $46,100,000, an increase of $12,900,000, or 30.9 per cent.

It is quite evident that the tax levy cannot continue to increase three times as fast as the increase in municipal assessment without imposing intolerable municipal tax burdens upon all owners and tenants of property in Kingston. The Kingston tax base has been struck a nearly mortal blow by the staggering amount of tax-exempted property. For the year 1967, $46,100,000 assessment was tax exempt out of a total assessment of $132,800,000—in other words, 34 per cent.

Included in this tax exempt figure are land and buildings owned by the city of Kingston, the board of education, federal government property, in which grants in lieu of taxes are paid, and some provincial property on which the non-educational portion of taxes is paid, but there still remains $30,500,000 of tax-exempt property on which no taxes are paid, except garbage taxes.

The main institutions having these tax exemptions are as follows:

Queen's University, $15,223,000, which represents a tax loss of $1,600,000.

Ontario Hospital, $3,992,000, a tax loss of $392,000.

Kingston General Hospital, $3,526,000, a tax loss of $382,900.

Hotel Dieu Hospital, $2,016,000, with a tax loss of $218,900.

This is a total tax-exempt assessment of $24,756,007 and a total tax loss of $2,593,800.

Your committee received briefs from Queen's University, the Kingston General Hospital, the Hotel Dieu Hospital, which pointed out that their tax exemptions were granted by the province of Ontario and they had no funds for payment of municipal taxes.

Your committee realizes that these institutions do not have funds for the payment of municipal services that they receive and your committee also recognizes the vital role that these institutions play in the economy of our community, that they provide special medical and other community services that would otherwise be lacking.

However, after giving full recognition to the additional purchasing power to construct the new facilities, the services of faculty and staff and the cultural and social benefits, we believe that we should also point out certain disadvantages.

Taxable houses are required for university expansion; demolished and replaced by tax-exempt buildings, that place additional demands upon municipal services. The decrease in housing stock resulting from the demolition of houses is placing further pressures on scarce housing accommodation.

All the tax-exempt university property places additional demands upon fire protection, sewage disposal, police protection, and traffic and parking facilities. All these additional services' demands are reflected in the mill rate and result in a mill rate that is less acceptable to home owners, working men who must rent, existing industry, and industry that is considering locating in Kingston.

That the benefits of Queen's University go far beyond the local area is indicated by the locations of the alumnae branch offices and there are Queen's Alumnae Associations from Fredericton, New Brunswick, on the east coast, to Victoria, B.C., on the west coast, and also branches in Bermuda, Illinois, and California.

There are very good reasons for arguing that, since Queen's University serves not only the citizens in the immediate area but, indeed, the entire province, all citizens of the province should help pay for the services which the municipality provides for the university.

The best asset of this province today is the child with brains who will be the man or woman of tomorrow, and if his academic qualifications are sound, he should not be deprived of a university education on the grounds that there is no room for him in the classroom.

Your committee recommends that this province be requested to immediately make a grant in lieu of taxes on university and hospital property based on assessment to place Kingston on a tax base similar to other municipalities in Ontario, and I heartily concur with that recommendation.

May I just give you some kind of a comparison between the tax-exempt condition of Kingston and those of other comparable cities in this province. Kingston at the present time has total tax-exempt properties of 34 per cent.

When this survey was made there was 26.05 per cent. This is about three years old and as you can see it has gone up since then.

Comparable areas: Ottawa, 4.7; London, 3.47; St. Catharines, 4.60; Sudbury, 6.59; Sault Ste. Marie, 4.60; Niagara Falls, 3.39; Welland, 5.71; Forest Hill, .59; Stratford, 12.90; Leaside, .81; Pembroke, 12.58.

So you can see that there is no comparison between comparable areas in this province as compared with the tax-exempt property of Kingston, and as the Smith Committee Report recommended in the proportion of non-government property, universities, churches, hospitals and charitable institutions, on which neither taxes nor grants in lieu of taxes are paid, Kingston stands out like a sore thumb.

I also report to you excerpts from the Kingston Whig-Standard reporting on the meeting of the select committee on taxation when they met in Kingston last summer.

Mayor Robert Fray and other city officials put the city's tax position to the Ontario Legislature's select committee on taxation here Wednesday and as one committee member noted, he and his colleagues were impressed by the potency of the argument. The committee got a detailed account of the city's extremely vulnerable tax position caused by the heavy burden of tax exemptions granted the universities, hospitals and other institutions.

Besides Mayor Fray, the committee heard from senior alderman George Webb, vice-chairman of the council's finance committee; chief assessor Robert Harding; city clerk, comptroller T. J. McKibbin; Kingston and the Islands MLA Syl Apps; Queen's University vice-president of finance Florence MacPherson; Mackie St. Tumney, a member of the mayor's special committee on taxation.

The result of this presentation; comments by members of the committee, and also by Mr. MacPherson, of Queen's University, who said: "We have the greatest sympathy for the city's position, the only solution seems to be in getting money from the province".

Committee member Arthur Meen, Q.C., York East, a member of the committee, agreed that Kingston had a good argument: "At one time it was a real asset to be classed as a university town but from this we can see that it no longer is, and I am sure that we will do what we can."

Both committee chairman John White, P.C., London South, and Robert Macaulay, former Economics Minister in the Ontario Cabinet, appeared concerned at the discrepancy between the grants paid on institutions by the provincial and federal governments.

The committee is expected to report to the Legislature by September 17, the day it carried its tax dialogue to Peterborough. Mr. White said that the committee was extremely well pleased with the exchange it had here with city officials.

May I also move into the record comments from the principal of Queen's University, Dr. Corey, who at the time of submissions to the mayor's committee on taxation, said:

More importantly to the committee, Dr. J. A. Corey, Queen's principal, and Dr. John Deutsch, principal designate, support the city in its concern over the staggering load of exemptions the property owners of Kingston must carry.

Queens is the biggest university in Ontario in relation to the size of the community in which it is situated. This fact makes an injustice for the city of Kingston and I especially sympathise with old age pensioners and others on fixed income who are hit hard by this tax burden.

And finally a comment from the Toronto Telegram of August 9. In this regard I hope, along with the member for Parkdale, that the Legislature pays a little attention to this particular editorial in the Toronto Telegram. It said:

Metro Toronto—the city in particular—will sympathise with the brief presented by Mayor Robert Fray, of Kingston, to a select committee of the Ontario Legislature in which he sought relief from the heavy load local taxpayers bear from tax-exempt universities and hospitals. The province is forcing Queen's University to expand, thus forcing municipal taxpayers to bear a burden they soon will be unable to carry.

In Metro Toronto, notably in the city where the University of Toronto occupies vast property in which there is a large concentration of hospitals, the point raised by Mayor Fray is conspicuously applicable.

The Kingston belief recommends that exemptions from municipal taxes on such institutions should be eliminated and the province should pay grants to meet their taxes. This partly coincides with the view expressed by the Telegram from last year, when it suggested that while it may be considered right to exempt hospitals and universities from local taxation, the government ought to provide grants in lieu of taxes much as it does for Crown property.

Metro hospitals, universities, and to a lesser extent similar institutions in Kingston, as well as other centres, serve not only local residents but also citizens beyond the community.

In Toronto the great concentration of academic buildings, hospitals and research centres occupy large and valuable land. In expanding their services to benefit the local community and others alike—and this, I think, is the key paragraph—rather than requiring local taxpayers alone to subsidize them; the Ontario government would be justified in providing grants in lieu of taxes for public-serving institutions of a provincial character.

Mr. Speaker, and I say again as one of the members of the select committee mentioned during the sittings in Kingston, it is no longer an advantage to be a university town. To many of our hard-pressed municipal taxpayers, this is very true.

Queens University is a tremendous asset to our city in numerous ways, such as their contributions to the many organizations in which the members of the faculty and students are always willing to participate.

Also, there is no question that the university is an economic asset to those who provide goods and services to Queens. However, to the many thousands of home owners whose taxes are extremely high, there is no advantage whatsoever.

It is becoming increasingly evident that immediate relief must be provided, and I urge again that university properties pay full municipal taxes, and that these amounts be reimbursed to the universities by the addition of similar amounts to the grants paid to the university by the provincial government.

To strengthen even further my argument in this connection, let me read into the record the recommendation of the Smith committee on taxation. You will find this on page 156, in paragraphs 109, 110 and 112. It gives the reasons why they feel this recommendation should be made, and I am not going to go over it again, but it says,

We therefore recommend that all present exemptions from property taxation to institutions of higher learning be terminated following provincial review of the merits of each institution for continuing financial assistance, and the provincial grants support to institutions of higher learning in lieu of the tax exemptions be confined to those institutions recognized for the purpose by either The Department of University Affairs or The Department of Education.

This was borne out again by the findings of the Ontario government select committee on taxation, which also made the recommendation which I have just read. But our committee said,

We endorse this recommendation. We have learned from many delegations that have come before us that those municipalities with universities and colleges are labouring under a particular disadvantage and require financial assistance to compensate for the substantial loss of tax revenue. We recommend, therefore, that the exception of these institutions from property taxation be terminated. We recommend that provincial grants be used to reimburse approved institutions for the payment of these taxes.

Mr. Speaker, universities should pay their fair share of municipal taxes. It is a reasonable request, and all who have studied it recommend it. How long do we have to wait for this much-needed assistance? How many more committees do we have to have recommend this assistance? How many more meetings do we have to attend before action is taken? We have talked to the Provincial Treasurer, the Minister of Municipal Affairs, the Ontario select committee on taxation. They are all sympathetic, but sympathy will not reduce our municipal taxes. It is imperative that, as far as our city is concerned, action be taken on this recommendation during this session of the Legislature.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Apps: Will you keep quiet for a minute? I fervently hope—now get this, this is important—I fervently hope that this action will be forthcoming, and I have every confidence that our government, with 25 years of progressive legislation behind it, will add this to our outstanding record this year.

Where will the money come from? This is the problem—

Mr. J. B. Trotter (Parkdale): What year did you write that?

Mr. Apps: Where will the money come from? This is always a problem, and I would like to make a suggestion. At the present time the Ontario taxpayer pays approximately 80 per cent of the cost of every student enrolled at our universities. Although I do not have the exact figures on post-graduate students, this percentage could be even higher. Is it not time that some consideration is given to have foreign undergraduate and post-graduate students pay the full cost of their education at our universities? Is it fair, when education costs are increasing so rapidly, to ask our taxpayers in Kingston to assume this extra burden as well?

If, as a policy of external aid the federal government would assume these costs for those students coming from under developed countries, it would be a commendable contribution to those countries and to those individuals, and I think the same applies to the province of Ontario. Students coming from the so-called affluent nations, like the United States, the U.K., France, Germany, and so on, should be required to pay the full cost of their education here in our universities. And this will certainly save the universities a considerable amount of money, perhaps enough to provide the extra grants required to pay for the municipal taxes universities should be required to pay.

I recognize that such a decision on the part of the universities may be a very difficult one. However, I believe that the cost of our educational system is not so high that it would be one way for additional funds to be obtained and would certainly be a great help to our hard-pressed tax payer. And let me impress again, Mr. Speaker, the situation as it applies to Kingston is very, very serious. The high rate of taxation hampers our industrial development, and I urge that this government, if they cannot see their way clear to implement the recommendations of every committee that studied it, they must give the city of Kingston relief, at least to the level of other comparative cities. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. E. R. Good (Waterloo North): Mr. Speaker, the topics on which I intend to deal with in my contribution to the Throne Debate range very widely but they have one thing in common, and that is my concern for the unplanned change that is going on in our province, the lack on the part of the government to cope with this, and particularly its effect on Waterloo county.

I intend to deal with the statement of the Minister of Municipal Affairs that he made as part of the Throne Debate on December 2, and which was recorded in Hansard on pages 273-282. And since the Minister's original statement formed part of that debate, my reply, as municipal affairs critic of the Liberal caucus, ought also to be part of this debate. Certainly there is little reason to withhold until the estimates for The Department of Municipal Affairs are considered, my reaction to what can only be described as a remarkable statement which was made by the Minister at that time.

But before I come to that main statement in my speech, I want, if I may, to use Waterloo county as an example of what has been going on, and to underline the haphazard way in which change is coming about in Ontario for lack of an overall plan. Mr. Speaker, the county of Waterloo, and particularly the riding of Waterloo North, has been undergoing a very remarkable increase in population for the past number of years. The growth of this area has resulted in a phenomenal 72 per cent increase in population — a rate of growth which has outstripped that of many large metropolitan areas.

One needs only to have lived in the twin cities or in the surrounding area for a number of years to realize the impact that the tremendous growth is making on the county. As the population grows, so do the problems, foremost being the increased need for services. As the city boundaries expand, more land is needed for annexation. Some years ago, it became quite apparent that the whole future of Waterloo county was tied up with the need for good planning and proper future direction for the whole area.

It was in May, 1966 that representatives of the cities and of the municipalities of the county met to discuss the desirability of a review of the structure of local government in the area. The pressures being felt due to increasing urbanization were behind the suggestions from many quarters that such a review be undertaken.

In general, the problems associated with controlling urban-type development in formerly rural areas concern: Water supply, sewage disposal, industrial development, traffic and communications, housing, urban renewal, police and fire protection; and such basic matters as financing and taxation. In Waterloo county, as elsewhere, where this development has occurred, the incidence of such problems was causing the many separate local governments to change their methods of operation, each in its own way, of course, and this, in turn, made many people wonder if a basic change in government structure for the whole area might not be desirable.

That summer, 1966, a recommendation for a study committee was made, the cost to be divided between The Department of Municipal Affairs and the local sponsoring municipalities. In response to this request, the then Minister of Municipal Affairs authorized the Waterloo area local government review and appointed Mr. Ron Farrow as research director. In 1967, Dr. Stewart Fyfe was appointed special commissioner for the study.

The basic question before the review is this: Can the present organization and structure of local government provide the kind and quality of service the residents of the area expect and are likely to require in the foreseeable future; and, if not, what changes in local government should be made in order to provide these services and resolve area problems in a better fashion?

With this basic question in mind, the various councils of the county, the planning boards, other organizations and private individuals prepared numerous briefs. During the spring of 1968, Dr. Fyfe held hearings to receive these briefs. In all, 101 submissions were made to him. In the natural course of events, his task would then have been to study carefully all the submissions and proposals laid before him, and then make his recommendation as to the best form of government for the Waterloo county area.

Later in my speech, in replying to the Minister's statement of December 2, I shall have a good deal to say about this particular procedure of review in its general implications; but, at this stage, and aside from my critique of the procedure review as such, I should like to say something about the difficulties encountered by this particular study.

First of all, the task was complicated by the announcement of the planned divisional county school boards. We are all well aware of the problems and frustrations that arose on the local level, both with school boards and with individuals who lost the right to serve their local communities through this process of integration, many after long years of service.

The Minister of Education is using all the means at his command, Mr. Speaker, and they are considerable, and will be more if he has his way: all the machinery of his information and other services to give the impression to the public that this transition to larger units is going along extremely smoothly. He certainly appears to have convinced the Premier that this is so, if the euphoric tone of the latter's statement of November 28 is any guide. But, regardless of the atmosphere that the Minister has attempted to create, the transition has had and is having problems, Mr. Speaker, and, in fairness to those who are now struggling with the problems that he has created, I want to set the record straight.

The new school boards are faced with a task of tremendous proportions. The members of these boards are meeting almost nightly. The problems of trying to administer through one board all the multifarious activities of the former 17 boards of our county are most complex and formidable. What success the trustees are having during this transitional stage is due entirely to their own tremendous efforts and their reservoir of common sense—a quality which in my judgment was so readily discounted by the Minister in dismissing so many of these good and loyal servants with a stroke of the pen.

Let me tell you that, during this transitional period up to the middle of December, there have been no guidelines issued by the Minister of Education or his departmental officials. What are they doing all the time? The public accounts suggest that they travel a lot. Do they ever, I wonder, sit down at their desks and do a few days of solid thinking as to the consequences of their proposals? Or is it all gloss? Glossy publications that belie the province is in financial trouble—all artwork and no content, all style and no text.

I dislike to show you here, but there are lots of publications you can get from The Department of Education. There is Dimensions, or the Wright report, or Six Flags Over Ontario, or any of the dozen showpiece efforts graced by the Minister's portrait. But it's an entirely different story when a harassed school trustee, up to his eyes in the problems of change, tries to get hold of a copy of the relevant school administration Acts. He is told the demand is so great they are out of print! The pedagogic playboy press seems to churn out this stuff without any problem, and then the trustees, with the uncertainty involved in this tremendous changeover, pushes many of the new divisional boards to the brink of frustration.

As if this problem were not enough of a complication for our country during the period of the government review, there was yet another factor to be contended with: The announcement of the establishment of a new community of 27,000 people, to be developed by Peel Village Development Company Limited. This scheme was condemned by the area planners, by people in the vicinity of Blair—which was to be annexed to Preston—and by many other boards and agencies who were in the process of preparing briefs for submission to the review commissioner. However, the developer, not surprisingly, had the blessing of the Tory government. And so, just like in a fairy story, there was a happy ending for the developer. The Ontario Municipal Board saved the project by allowing the annexation from the township to the town of Preston.

By this time, it was spring 1968, and all the briefs had come in to the commission for study. We were in high hopes that a recommendation as to the form of government best suited to our needs would not be much longer in abeyance. But the Tory government was not finished playing football with Waterloo county, and instead of allowing Dr. Fyfe's report to be completed and presented before the end of last year, the Minister of Trade and Development cut right across the orderly progression of the inquiry by announcing, on August 28, that Ontario had assembled almost 3,000 acres of land in Waterloo township and intended to build a new town there.

The impact of this announcement can be gauged by realizing that this is the largest Ontario Housing Corporation land scheme to date, and that it may eventually mean an additional population of 100,000 in our area. It has, of course, upset the whole basis of Dr. Fyfe's assessment of the situation, and he has had to postpone the issuance of his report until next spring. All the work that went into the preparation of briefs based on the previous situation has, of course, been rendered invalid whenever any wherever the new town's prospects touch upon previous ideas.

Even worse, rumour and discussion of Ontario's proposal were widespread, with fact and fiction mixed up—exactly the kind of climate that speculators love. Yet in July, when I attempted to pin down the Minister of Municipal Affairs regarding the participation of OHC in this land assembly, he denied it.

You can imagine the turmoil. In the face of so-called secrecy, no municipality in the area had been consulted; no local or area planning board was taken into confidence. From this, it is charitable to assume, I suppose, that in no way was the advisability of this new town's location made subject to planning consideration. The kind of consideration that was given to this project was of a different order: it was a consideration to the right people who were taken off the hook by the government when they happened to come up with a land assembly.

My point is further substantiated by the remark of the Minister of Trade and Development to the effect that there are still no immediate plans for this land, and that the results of the Waterloo South-Wellington land use study will be considered in the shaping of the new town. Did it never occur to the Minister that the study should dictate the location of any new town, and not the other way round?

Really, Mr. Speaker, I am more convinced than ever that the right hand of this government does not know what the left hand is doing.

Here we have land speculation at its worst. The Ontario Housing Corporation is not interested in providing lots at a lower price than that asked by private developers. They have made this abundantly clear in their HOME programme. Regardless of the price the OHC pays for the land, the lots will be sold to the public at whatever the going rate happens to be. What does this policy make the OHC? It makes the Ontario Housing Corporation the biggest land speculator in Ontario.

A sweeping change? Well, consider the facts:

They have no plans for the area concerned.

They have given no thought as to how services are to be put into the area.

They have given no thought as to what effect their action has had, or will have, on the planning or land use of the area.

What, then, have they accomplished? All they have succeeded in doing is to drive up the prices of land in Waterloo county. So disastrous has this land grab of OHC been, that prices have risen to the point where even the city of Kitchener cannot afford to buy the industrial land it so badly needs.

To add further to the unbelievable confusion, the Minister of Municipal Affairs is quoted as telling a housebuilders' conference in Toronto earlier in December:

The Ontario government is not wildly enthusiastic about getting involved in developing brand new towns. Great scope exists for improving and expanding existing communities.

Yet in spite of this statement, another department of government, along with his own, has denied to existing cities within the county the opportunity to expand, using as an excuse for this position, the existence of a new town land assembly and the pending issuance of the area review report.

Mr. Speaker, I feel this is a deplorable situation, when a department of this government moves, uninvited, unannounced—except for the grapevine—and without any consultation, into an area and creates nothing but turmoil, trouble and higher land prices.

I would like to say a few words regarding the basic shelter grant.

Mr. Speaker, I must agree with the member for Quinte and others in their remarks about the basic shelter grant.

This government by its promise during the 1967 election campaign to implement a basic shelter grant has done nothing more than bribe the people with their own money, and put the province further into debt by so doing. This scheme has been the cause of many landlord-tenant problems. It, perhaps more than anything else, has been used as an excuse for excessive raises in rents. It has resulted in various methods of conniving and the making of unsatisfactory deals.

Because of it, injustices have come to landlords and tenants alike. The Minister of Municipal Affairs stated it cost only a half million dollars for publicity of the scheme. Can he estimate the cost of time wasted last spring while municipalities were waiting for the government to make up its mind? Can he estimate the cost of delay in sending out tax bills, and in the reprinting of tax forms? Can he estimate the cost to landlords who have to refund the payments to tenants, when the mortgage companies still hold a good share of the grants, because of prepayment of taxes a year in advance?

Mr. Speaker, let the government tell the people of Ontario that this grant was all financed out of provincial debt. Let the government tell the people the $150 million it cost is now added to our provincial deficit. Let them calculate the cost of financing this increase in debt and they will have to add another $10 million or $12 million a year to it.

Mr. Speaker, I am not against deficit financing when the economy of the province requires it. I think there are many expenditures that could be justified out of deficit financing. But when this government goes $160 million in debt to bribe the people of Ontario with their own money, then I must rebel. Finally, on this subject, Mr. Speaker, it is beyond understanding how this government can give this grant to American property owners when the funds for it are raised almost exclusively by the people of Ontario. My American friends who own cottages near mine are laughing, yes, literally laughing, at the stupidity of a government that allows them the privilege of owning property and having to pay little or no property tax on it.

While this is going on, we have our Premier and Treasurer running around Europe looking for some more Reichmarks.

Now, I would like to speak of some more government confusion and this has to do with the matter of regional libraries.

The problem regarding the financing of the regional library system, especially as it pertains to the lack of funds from the beginning of the year until April 1 when funds are available from the province. On March 8 of last year I asked the Minister of Education the following question:

As the department has indicated through the Provincial Library Services Branch that no payments can be made before April 1 to the mid-western regional libraries system, and since they are not permitted to borrow funds, what steps does the Minister intend taking to finance the regional libraries system from January 1 to April 1 of each year?

The Minister's reply stated that it has been the policy of his department that no funds can be taken until April 1 and then, quoting him he said:

"We have ascertained that it is not a great problem for a number of them . . .", and then he continued with his usual phrase, "As the hon. member well knows. . ."

While the Minister may not think this is a problem, I would like to submit, Mr. Speaker, that a survey done by myself and others in the regional library system has shown that in a great many of the 14 regional libraries systems throughout the province, the financing of the operations in the first few months of the year is a very serious problem, whether the Minister is willing to recognize it or not.

Let me put into the record some of the answers received from the regional library boards to a questionnaire regarding this problem as to what they do to finance their operations for the first three months of the year.

Borrowed . . . Not paid bills . . . Programme developing, Expect problem by 1970 . . . No problem . . . Low overhead and Type of programme permits delay in payments, but expect difficulty by 1970 . . . Just starting . . . Supported by Metro . . . No known solution, probably tried to borrow on contracts and bills . . . Delayed payment on contracts and bills . . . Practically inactive for three months . . . Borrow . . . Tried to borrow . . . Do not pay any bills until money comes.

Now this is the sort of position regional library boards are put into through the lack of proper planning and carrying out of responsibilities of government.

I submit, Mr. Speaker, that the reason it has not been a problem to some, in the past has been simply the lack of a planned programme. The regional libraries were established to co-ordinate the library activities within the geographic area of the regions. This takes planning, and planning takes time and money.

Not all have problems this year, but all expect problems within the next year or two. In some cases it is expected that the local library will carry the regions, since the region can delay payments under the terms of the yearly contract until the grants are paid. This is not good fiscal management but it is one method of solving the problem. In many of them, however, this solution is not possible.

While this problem is severe to many regional libraries and has been this year, it will become more acute, if not in 1969, then in 1970. The problem is not solved by no planning. It can be solved by recognizing it and finding a solution before it becomes acute. Many boards expect to borrow funds.

Mr. Speaker, I submit that the answer to my question last March was no answer, the Minister failed to recognize the problem. I have documented proof here from the regional library systems stating that there is a severe problem, and once again we see this government dragging its feet and not meeting a situation until after it becomes acute.

In a fashion similar to that in respect of the libraries, the municipalities of Waterloo county have been forced into an awkward position by having to finance the area planning board.

Finally, after funds were exhausted, and borrowing had reached the limits of reason, The Department of Municipal Affairs, reported in November of 1968, that arrangements were being made to pay the balance of the 1967 grant to the area planning board one year later in the amount of $7,194. This represents two-thirds of the provincial amount due to the board.

This delay is nothing new. It was September of 1967 before the 1966 provincial subsidy was paid.

Mr. Speaker, why should area municipalities be forced to advance finances which are rightly the responsibility of the province? Because the government will not carry out its business in an orderly and well planned manner.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, of the many boards and commissions I would like to single out just one for a few comments, the Ontario Racing Commission.

When one reads the report of this commission it is most difficult to understand why the costs of operation of the commission are not included in their financial statement. Why should one have to delve through the expenditures of The Treasury Department to find out the cost of operating the commission? Surely their expenses should reflect as part of the cost of carrying on racing in Ontario.

Racing in Ontario, as you well know, Mr. Speaker, is almost exclusively dominated by the Ontario Jockey Club. This group in the past year has become the most favoured among the favoured. By their threats and bleatings they extracted from this government preferred treatment to help them overcome their own mismanagement.

A double outpouring of Conservative co-operation has resulted in the granting of Sunday racing, a feature that was asked for by only one group, the Jockey Club, along with a provision of $1,800,000 for the promotion of horse-racing in Ontario.

No other sector of private enterprise is treated so lavishly. In reality, this money does nothing more than help the big tracks get bigger and keep the small tracks small. It helps the big race-horse owner get bigger and adds little to the lot of the small owners.

Let me illustrate. Only $25,000 of the $1,800,000 will be used for equine disease research. $250,000 will go for breeders' awards. In 1967 in thoroughbred racing thirteen owners got 47.6 per cent of the awards. And in standard-breds 20 per cent of the award money went to 3 per cent of the owners. The balance of $1,525,000 is to be used to increase purses and used as track subsidies, except for class B circuit tracks and tracks with less than seven days' racing.

These two small classifications of tracks will have their part of the pool withheld for the time being. The amount for all tracks in these two categories is $19,996 for all Class B tracks and $909 for under seven day operators and is considered so small that it is not worth dividing at the present time. So again the large wealthy tracks get 97.7 per cent of the $1,525,000.

Mr. Speaker, for once I would like to see this government move in a direction to give aid to those who need it most.

There is once again the proof that they are the tools of big business. First they increase the gift to racing interests from $300,000 to $1,800,000 and then give in to Sunday racing; while the Jockey Club called the tune, the people of Ontario did an after-dance and once again, the friends of government called the shot. And not even the dissenting members on the government side with the exception of one were here to vote against it.

And now let me turn to the statement on regional government of the Minister of Municipal Affairs, made on December 2. I want to answer this in my capacity as Municipal Affairs critic to the Ontario Liberal caucus.

This document, I must say, is a tactical masterpiece. The Minister has hardly boxed himself in at all. But by his very cleverness, he betrays, I think, the fact that he is a politician first and that the interests of the people of Ontario come a poor second to the political expediencies of the moment. Especially is this true of those formative years that I am sure he sees ahead of him, as he aims for the top.

In a sense, this document is an early broadside in the leadership battle—not perhaps the first salvo, though—I suspect that Bill 44 was the beginning of the battle, and that the café society liquor legislation will mark the entry of the third candidate. It is rather amusing to note that the only way, apparently, for a Minister to draw attention to himself and his claim to party leadership, is to set about remaking Ontario in his own image.

Of course, speaking of images, the Minister of Education has had a head start there, with his picture in the gatefold of most of his fancy publications. We used to think that this was just a Narcissus complex, but perhaps there is more to it than that. Perhaps, indeed, in the broad sense, all this educational material pouring out from 44 Eglinton Avenue West might be regarded as leadership campaign literature.

I'm not, of course, talking about crude propaganda or election campaign literature. The Minister of Education is much too subtle for that. It's that overall favourable image business that he is master of, as he insinuates his portrait into every publication, official or otherwise, that he can possibly associate himself with.

So let me warn the Minister of Municipal Affairs and the Provincial Secretary that when the Minister of Education gets his hands on the ETV network, then indeed, it will call for an acceleration of tactical footwork on their part, in order to redress the great advantage that must then accrue to the Minister of Education from being seen on TV, all over the province, as schools open and classes begin. For the Minister of Education of course the medium will indeed be the message.

Faced with this challenge, we are not unduly surprised to find the Minister of Municipal Affairs using regional government as his platform on which to perform his leadership solo. For him, the imperative is this; that regional government has got to be an individual tour-de force, a showcase for the Minister himself, particularly since the basic shelter exemption scheme has backfired so badly. This approach can only lead to distortions in the concept, and it is not an approach that commends itself to thoughtful people.

Now, as Liberals, we are not prepared to concede that the Minister has the right to play fast and loose with the recommendations of the Select Committee of this Legislature in this regard. That committee, under the whip of the since-elevated Minister of Revenue, worked day and night for many weeks — the hardest-worked committee that this House has ever put forth — and it brought down a report whose recommendations have been discounted one by one for political reasons, some with more justification than others, but always because of the political consequences so far as the Conservative government was concerned.

It is interesting to note that, while the minority report of the Liberal members set forth a logical position against the taxation of places of worship, the reasons advanced by the Premier, at the press conference at which this was announced before this Legislature convened, were political ones. "These may be good economists' recommendations," said the Premier, "but I wouldn't like to be the head of a government which brought this in."

Now, Mr. Speaker, this approach gives the government a political advantage over those of us who try to assess regional government on its merits, and who discover that every base is loaded. The statement abounds with examples of this fancy footwork. Before returning to the recommendations of the select committee, therefore, let me briefly give three examples of the distortions of purpose which suggest that the implementation of regional government should be taken away from his department.

I will refer throughout to the typewritten version of the Minister's statement for convenience in locating the phrases on which I shall comment. On page 8, he says: "However, and I wish to emphasize this, our objective is a set of regional governments with a population of at least 150,000 to 200,000." On the previous page, he says: "Our experience suggests conclusively that a minimum regional population of from 150,000 to 200,000 is required for the efficient provision of most local services."

The first reaction of a critic is to feel that this represents an inflexibility of mind that bodes ill for the future of regional government under the Minister's aegis. We think of the north, where communication and social contact would be impossible on those terms — where figures like this imply only four or at most five regions for the whole of northern Ontario, with no possibility of interaction, no viability as regions at all because of the vast distances and transportation difficulties involved.

But, after a night's sleep, one realizes that this is not even intended to be a logical approach, but is a politically motivated one — one that will give leeway and scope to all the fancy footwork the Minister cares to indulge in at a later date. When rural people want to cavil he can say: "Oh, yes, but you may indeed retain the identity and reality of your present municipalities, under the umbrella which I now throw over you, whereby the existing county becomes a region, and some services are stepped up; but really everything is the same as it ever was." The figure, in this case, is an umbrella figure, a mythical grouping, a pretence that will satisfy those who are already satisfied. Progress on paper. Glory founded on nothing. Rungs climbed on the leadership ladder.

The second example I want to give, in order to expose what the Minister is up to, occurs on page 19. In talking about representation to the upper-tier of a two-tier system, he explains that you can have direct representation of the people of the region at the upper level, or you can have people designated from the lower tier indirectly.

"I must say, in all frankness," he adds, in a most disarming fashion, "that we do not know at this time, which system is superior." And so he hedges his bet both ways. In fact, he has even taken the opportunity in the Lincoln-Welland survey to put in a combination of the two systems. So no matter how things develop he will end up so that one of his three systems may turn out to be the right one. He says: "In view of this, we hope to experiment with two-tier regional governments embodying both principles in order to see which form does, in fact, work better." Call it an experiment, you see, and you can't lose. It's a little tough on those who have to be guinea pigs, but the Minister can always claim he adopted the scientific approach.

My third example shows up, perhaps, the most subtle footwork. On page 23, the Minister says: "Our desire for local participation is such that we will, in some cases, endure delays in the establishing process in order to give local opinion time to form and express itself." A most encouraging statement at first glance, until you notice that little phrase, "in some cases", and then you smell what the Minister is up to. He is leaving himself free to do what suits him. He is saying, in effect: "When it suits the government's purpose, we will stall, but equally, when it suits our purpose, we will forge ahead regardless of local objections."

The Minister obviously has a full-time semanticist on his staff to work out these subtleties of language, and we in Opposition obviously need another to ferret out the real, hidden meaning of the Minister's statement, which, on the face of it, is so generous, so all-embracing, so all-encompassing.

However, let me get back to the select committee of the Legislature, because the basis of the Opposition approach to regional government will be very different from that of the Minister, in that we will respect the spirit of this significant recommendation of the committee, whereas he has spurned it. In chapter 23, "Reconciling Structure with Finance (Regional Government)," the select committee has this to say in sections 18 through 24. The timing, of course, is not inflexible, but the spirit of the recommendations is plain:

18. We recommend specifically that a special branch be established, perhaps in The Prime Minister's Department (sic) for the purpose of supervising the four-stage programme set forth below. It would supply information to local municipalities respecting all implications of regional government, co-ordinate all provincial-municipal discussions and act as liaison between the province and the municipal governments in implementing regional government without undue delay. We visualize a secretariat of three or four qualified persons independent of The Department of Municipal Affairs.

19. Although it cannot be expected that the present local governments will restructure themselves and coalesce entirely on their own initiative in all regions, we think that every opportunity should be given to local initiative, experience and wisdom in establishing new regional governments. Your committee proposes a four-stage programme as follows.

20. First, local meetings within existing municipalities be held for internal discussions on the various aspects of regional government. We recommend that the new special branch be charged with the task of initiating, supervising, co-ordinating and leading such discussions and that this phase be concluded by the end of 1969.

21. Secondly, that meetings be held between municipalities in local areas. Some municipalities would attend two or more such series of meetings to consider the possible regional amalgamations available to them. Again, the new special branch would be charged with the responsibility that this stage be completed not later than mid-1970.

22. Thirdly, provincial-municipal conferences be scheduled for each potential region during the first half of 1971 at which decisions would be made as to regional boundaries and regional responsibilities.

23. Finally, the implementation of full regional government in Ontario would be accomplished during the latter half of 1971.

24. We emphasize that this general programme should not postpone regional government in areas that are in a position to proceed at an earlier date.

I am indebted to my colleague, the member for York Centre—who served on the select committee along with the members for Parkdale and for Kitchener—for his amplification of the reasons which lay behind the select committee's recommendation that a special branch within the Premier's department be established to deal with regional government. He gave, as an example, community affairs, and on this he says, in a paper written for our caucus:

So many agencies are presently involved in community affairs that overlap is inevitable. We have at least five government departments working in this field: Social and Family Services, Education, Citizenship under the Provincial Secretary, The Department of Agriculture's community centres branch; and, of course, the regional development activity of Mr. Randall's Department of Trade and Development.

So there are five unco-ordinated and more or less parallel lines of activity; there are five departmental empires and a tremendous amount of jealousy between the various working groups. In view of the great concern of taxpayers now regarding the overlap of bureaucracy, co-ordination and integration in one department has become essential. The essence of the matter is this: Queen's Park should be offering leadership, but the work itself should be fully delegated to the new regional level.

Integration of these various programmes can be achieved at the regional government level by specific legislation delegating the broad range of community affairs and community development to such governments.

Every ministerial department has its own views in relation to regional government, and since they cannot be reconciled, they must be transcended. This can only be done if the official or branch is part of the Premier's office, above it all. Only then will you overcome the reluctance of different departments to delegate their responsibilities to the regional government level, for fear of relative loss of influence—if you like, loss of "pecking order"—within Queen's Park itself.

So during the formation stage, representatives of the various municipalities, which it is thought might be interested in coming together as a regional unit, must meet, not once, but many times, under the chairmanship of this high official, and, aided by his staff, must themselves set out their timetable and boundaries, their priorities and their assessment settlements. We see this as happening in two stages, not necessarily related in time: the enquiry and research stage, always locally initiated, and not something brought into a locality from on high; and the implementation stage, which in some cases will occur a decade later than in others, if at all.

The essential point is that the people of that area will set their own timetable for regional government in a truly democratic manner; and that the positive advantages of regional government seen in operation in the forward areas will sell other areas on the idea in the fullness of time. This is a totally different concept from the Minister's cynical approach of dawdling where it suits him, and pushing when it suits him. Our plan, we feel, is democratic; his is autocratic. It is Eric Hardy in the Lakehead, Plunkett in Halton-Peel, Mayo in Niagara; the pantheon of the gods come to visit the mortals through grace.

In our plan, the local people themselves will write their own report and sign it. Then the electorate at large will see who, among the elected representatives they already know, stands for what; and they will have some opportunity to endorse that locally written report, not necessarily by a simple "yes or no" referendum, which we recognize is too simplistic a solution in many cases, but through machinery which we will devise to see to it that the people are not swept off their feet by arrogance. In the Lakehead, our position is that the only palliative to the abrupt manner in which amalgamation is being forced on the people, consists in a referendum.

We know this is an emotional problem and this is the only way that will relieve the situation. Elsewhere, it will not be so black and white. But there will always be a way for the people to express their views on the report that their own folks have themselves written. And this is the only democratic way in which regional government can come about.

This approach will also solve the question of priorities, as to which region shall be formed first, since, while all the enquiries will proceed concurrently, to achieve a master plan for Ontario and an overall consensus, yet the more progressive areas will emerge of their own volition, having weighed their own advantage.

Once regional government comes to an area, it will be a franchise operation—it should be a franchise operation, rather than a branch store of Queen's Park. The purpose of regional government is not to create more government, but less. A Liberal scheme of regional government will therefore be chock-full of local opportunity, incentive and responsibility. The province will lead, encourage, assist and provide the best possible facilities for reporting, for recording achievement, and for comparison. But the real responsibility for large areas of the appropriate functions of government will be decentralized and placed in the hands of the people who are drawn from the region and working in the region, as elected representatives and staffs of this tier of government.

Our whole approach, too, depends upon a reorganization of the OWRC—something that is not even contemplated in the Minister's statement—but which is fundamental to a Liberal attack on the problem. OWRC would become like Hydro and would sell its services wholesale to regional government or borough utility commissions. Regional government will not work if such bodies are fettered by having to finance their water and sewage services as municipalities must presently do. Our contention is that OWRC service, depending as it does on drainage areas and topographical considerations, cannot be localized, but must instead be a provincial body, backed by government credit, province-wide in its scope and scale.

Community discussion, on a bilateral or multilateral basis, must in every case precede the implementation of regional government. This is the crux of the proposed local participation. Such questions, raised by local people, as: "Do we look northward or do we look to the Lake? Do we look to Metro or do we look to the hinterland?" are questions the answers to which must satisfy those involved, and be meaningful in terms of continuing local experience. These are the people who have to live with it. They should be in on the making of the decisions which so vitally affect their lives.

The validity of one- or two-tier government will always be settled in the light of local circumstances, and these decisions will be pragmatic ones, practical ones. The basic question to be answered will always be: Is this governmental function one which operates best at this level, giving those governed a sense of participation and involvement? If the tier is too remote, there is alienation and apathy. On the other hand, if it is centred around too small units, it is inefficient and costly through duplication of effort. There can be no model for Ontario. The people of each region must solve their own problems, drawing upon what will be a growing body of experience to solve their own problems in their own particular way.

We feel that, while the county is generally agreed to be the basis on which regional government will be built, there are many reasons why great flexibility will be required in using the county as the building block. The geography of areas, involving their natural barriers and boundaries one with another, and the concentrations of population, will sometimes dictate a natural expansion on the present county framework. Almost always, the planning function of regional governments must extend beyond their administrative limits and certainly well beyond present county boundaries.

This is most evident in places where a heavy concentration of people exists, with social, economic and communications ties to an established metropolis. There will be many such instances where the region must extend its influence beyond political boundaries to take in the natural, historical and social functions of a large area. We see larger planning regions than administrative regions right from the start. Later, there will be administrative integration so that the political entities themselves become often much larger than the existing counties, and correspondingly fewer in number. So essentially this is a two-stage process of integration, with planning leading the way and reaching out, and political consolidation following later. The report brought out yesterday by the Ontario Economic Council, in my view, is a complete indictment of the plan proposed by the Minister. It has shown that proposed wider regional roles are essential, and this of course bears out the validity of our thinking, which has been to this end, I think, for some time.

We want to get away from the Minister's and his predecessor's pattern of reaction to an existing emergency, and the appointment of an outsider from on high to go into an area. Our view is that this process should be reversed, with the provincial action always anticipatory in nature; always involving a responsible member of the Premier's department rather than an outsider to chair the local meetings; always involving the local people from the word "go"; and always resulting in a locally written report, a group effort by those who will be vitally affected by what they say and propose.

The government's departure from this attitude was well illustrated on Friday morning, December 13, when the Minister, in answering the question from the member for Windsor-Walkerville regarding the timetable for regional government in the Windsor area and hinterland, made the gratuitous remark about the area being prosperous, and so on, and he seeing no reason for early action. The point is that it would be the people of the area who made such value judgments under the Liberal plan, and not the Minister off the top of his head.

The essence of our approach is its flexibility and its adaptability to circumstances. A modified form of municipal consolidation would probably suffice in many areas initially, until the time is ripe for them to become fully integrated as regions, having learned from the experience of those who have already gone ahead. Talks would be on a province-wide basis, however, right from the start, so as to avoid the situation described in D. C. Rowat's paper, "The Concept of Regional Government and a Proposal for Ontario", in Urban Studies: A Canadian Perspective, where he says on page 261:

If the provincial government continues to initiate area studies and one by one sets up metropolitan or regional governments for the areas studied, it may eventually achieve somewhat the same general pattern of regional government as proposed in this paper. But it will be a very expensive and time-consuming process. It would be far cheaper and much faster to study the whole scheme of regional and metropolitan government at one time. The result would be a less complex and more logical scheme of regional government throughout the province.

My colleagues who have been looking into this matter, as well as myself, are essentially endorsing Rowat's view, with the proviso that the study be initiated by the Premier's office and involve local people throughout. We feel sure that rural constituents would just as quickly welcome an invitation to talk over their problems in this way as would those of urban centres, provided the timetable separation between research and possible action were made abundantly clear. The fatal thing will be to give the people of Ontario the impression that regional government is being forced down their throats.

We regard the educational role of the consultation stage as of first importance, and here we would underline the difference in the stress being placed on community acceptability by the Minister and by ourselves.

On page 3 of his typed statement, the Minister says, in discussing the criteria he has adopted: "Community participation and, where possible, community acceptability" and he goes on to underline that no municipality will have a veto over regional government proposals in its area. We have to take the view that community acceptability must have reached a certain degree before the implementation of regional government in that area can be considered democratic.

We cannot quarrel with the idea of each region having an urban core. The soundness and validity of this concept have been well demonstrated, and no longer open to serious question. We have large movements of people from the countryside into the urban areas, and a more subtle, but nevertheless quite pervasive, importation of urban values into the countryside, resulting in a process of homogenisation, helped, of course, by radio and TV.

The rural people are starting to ask for the same level of services—education, library, recreation, and entertainment—as their town cousins, to say nothing of the physical demands for piped water and sewage systems.

Turning to page 5 of the Minister's typed statement, we object strongly to the criteria of design "so that they and the school authorities will be co-terminus." This is putting the cart before the horse. If the Minister of Education must bend, so be it. He is not in a privileged position merely because he got in there first with his county boundary.

We warned him at the time what he was getting into. Our Liberal stress on overall planning implies that we are not just setting up regional government merely in order to accommodate the county school boards, the county health units, the county welfare units, and so on. We cannot emphasise too strongly our view that a region must justify its own size and shape in people terms, and this is brought out very strongly in the report of the Ontario Economic Council.

The Minister's own criteria for regions, given in the beginning of his statement, are these: regions, we are told, must exhibit a sense of community identity, based on sociological characteristics, economics, geography and history; should have a balance of interests, so that no one group of interests completely dominates a region; must have a financial base adequate to carry out regional programmes at a satisfactory level; should be large enough that local responsibilities can be performed efficiently by taking advantage of economies of scale; and regional boundaries should facilitate maximum inter-regional co-operation.

These criteria make nonsense, not only of his overall size assertions in respect of the north, but also in those cases where the urban core will be so large that its gravity pull will call for the counterbalance of a larger hinterland to make up the region. The obvious example that comes to mind is Windsor, where the hinterland is unlikely to be confined to one county, even to begin with.

Another criticism we have of the Minister's setting a figure now is that these areas are not standing still. They are growing all the time. Who knows what their population will be by the time regional government is implemented?

We agree with the lower tier minimum of 8,000 to 10,000 in general, however, because, below this round figure, it is difficult to imagine the system working efficiently. In Victoria-Haliburton, Huron-Bruce and some other areas, existing urban cores have not yet attained even this minimum figure.

There is then a case to be made out, all other factors being equal, for the nucleus of a region to be the communications or the transportation centre. But again, this is something that the local people ought to have the right to decide for themselves.

With regard to the division of functions within the two tiers of a two-tiered regional government, the Minister is echoing many Liberal ideas here that are already in Hansard. We can only agree with the recommendations as he has now codified them: property assessment, taxation billing and collection (what about those separate educational tax bills?), planning, and so on, all belong to the top tier of regional government. In the matter of planning, we should add, however, inter-regional planning as a legitimate function of the upper tier—not a separate administration but a function of regional tiers of government.

We have to get away from the previous pattern of the province just saying "yes" or "no" to planning proposals coming up to Queen's Park. A provincial master plan is an essential aspect of meaningful regional planning, which will fill in the broad areas of the provincial plan within that particular regional jurisdiction. This "filling-in" will then become an autonomous function of the region. There will be, or should be, no more running to Toronto to change the zoning of a corner lot to accommodate a general store, or for another use.

With regard to services, police protection, arterial roads and transit are properly listed as falling within the jurisdiction of the upper tier, while fire protection service can properly be either. Health and welfare, we agree, belong in the upper tier because of the economies of scale that will ensue. Parks will often cross regional boundaries entirely, as will conservation areas.

However, when it comes to garbage disposal and collection, we take a stronger line on provincial involvement. We say that a region ought to be able to come to Queen's Park with a request that the province direct the disposal of garbage over regional boundaries if space within a region cannot be found.

Sooner or later, the government is going to have to face the whole question of the relationship and possible integration of what are now the county school boards with the forthcoming regional governments. Do we want specializing school trustees to be elected, or should all the elected representatives be "generalists", that is councillors-at-large, so that they see the whole educational picture in the context of the fiscal and community needs of the region? Is something lost by having separate education trustees and general councillors as we do at present? What ought the future shape of decentralized educational responsibility to be? There is no doubt that the Minister of Education's insistence on rigid county boundaries for his school boards will come home to haunt him as regional government proceeds across this province.

On the question of "rep-by-pop", we feel that in the one-tiered system, there would have to be a "ward" arrangement, so that heavy population centres could not dominate through representation.

When it comes to implementation, the Minister is extremely vulnerable because of his panic reaction approach to crises, rather than the use of an overall plan. When the Minister speaks of a problem-area priority basis for action, that phrase is his condemnation. This government seems committed to solving its problems only by short-range technical means rather than by being concerned with longer-range goals, and we think once again the long-range planning approach is most essential.

Thus we find OMB chairman Kennedy Sudbury bound. It is probably too late to advocate his recall from this assignment, but we certainly criticize his appointment on the ground that it has the potential of another Eric Hardy Lakehead study all over again, coming in and alienating local sentiment and interest.

The Sudbury situation must be regarded as a transitional one, and we must insist that Mr. Kennedy employ the kind of staff advisers that we will ultimately expect to be behind the Premier's office chairman. He can certainly have behind him the nucleus of a group that will be independent of all other government agencies. This composite group should go out as a body, sit down and confer with all those people, in positions of responsibility in a certain area, who could take the lead in determining what was required for their own area.

Let me say in conclusion that I and my colleagues are extremely concerned at the way in which the Minister of Municipal Affairs has handled this situation. Metro Chairman Allen's reaction is only one example of the confusion and ambiguities that will arise because the provincial government is ducking its responsibility for correlation and leadership and overall planning.

The amazing thing is, the Tories seem proud of this statement, as though of itself it were an historic step forward. But the people of Ontario are wise enough to know they cannot get something for nothing, and they will watch the taxation picture at all levels of government and make up their minds both as to what steps they want to take and when they want to take them. Anyone who tries to pull the wool over the people's eyes, for whatever purpose, will get short shrift at the polls. I repeat, regional government must justify its coming, and must be implemented in the people's own time, and not at the Minister's pleasure.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the hon. member for Cochrane South, rather than beginning at this late hour, would adjourn the debate.

Mr. W. Ferrier (Cochrane South): I move the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. R. S. Welch (Provincial Secretary): Mr. Speaker, tomorrow we will carry on with this debate.

Hon. Mr. Welch moves the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to.

The House adjourned at 6.00 o'clock, p.m.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 7, 1969

The House met today at 10.30 o'clock, a.m.

Prayers.

Mr. Speaker: Our guests in the galleries this morning are: In the east gallery from Franklin Horner Public School, Etobicoke, and French River Secondary School, Noelville; and in the west gallery from Downsview Public School in Downsview.

Petitions.

Presenting reports.

Motions.

Introduction of bills.

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day I have a question for the Treasurer. As the Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) is not here I will not make the other point that occurred to me.

The question is this: How many copies of the publication "Responsible Taxation"—and if the Treasurer is not familiar with the publication it is this document that I have here in my hand—dated February 1, 1969, were printed?

Second, how are these copies to be distributed?

Third, how much will the printing and distribution of these copies cost?

Hon. C. S. MacNaughton (Treasurer): Mr. Speaker, in answer to part one of the hon. member's question, approximately 50,000. In answer to part two, by mail. In answer to part three, approximately $8,600.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the Minister would permit a supplementary question.

In view of the fact that several of these speeches were delivered in the Legislature and copies are available in the official reports, and in view of the fact that with most of the others, copies were circulated through the offices of either the Prime Minister or the Treasurer, will the same courtesy that is being given to the Prime Minister and the Treasurer, to have their immortal words printed and distributed in booklet form, be extended to all other members of the Legislature at public expense?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Mr. Speaker, I rather think that this distribution of information is the prerogative of the government. I cannot see that it would be either reasonable or sensible to permit it to be done by every member of the Legislature.

Mr. Singer: A further supplementary question?

Does the Minister think it is reasonable that Tory propaganda be distributed throughout the province at public expense?

Mr. Speaker: Order, order!

The hon. member for York South (Mr. MacDonald) has a question of the Minister of Health.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Mr. Speaker, before the hon. member for York South speaks, I wonder if I could be permitted to answer a question that I took as notice yesterday, placed by the hon. member for Wentworth (Mr. Deans)?

In answer to part one of the question referred to, the MTARTS report and the 78 submissions which have been received to date from the public area, including the brief from the Toronto Transportation Commission, will form the basis of a comprehensive plan for development of Metropolitan Toronto and region.

Our evaluation of the recommendations, now being undertaken by an interdepartmental goals plan committee chaired by the regional development branch, has been assigned the highest priority and is proceeding rapidly. As the Prime Minister has indicated, it is the government's determination to present the plan to the Legislature as soon as possible.

The answer to part two of the hon. member's question: Submissions on MTARTS were invited for internal study by the government and were not intended for tabling in the Legislature. The respondents, of course, are at liberty to make public their submissions and I understand the TTC has already made certain disclosures to the press.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Mr. Speaker, I have a three-part question for the Minister of Health.

Does Ontario have a reciprocal agreement with Manitoba for the payment of hospital insurance, and if so, does it extend to north-western Ontario residents who make regular use of Manitoba hospitals which are more readily available to them?

Second, have requests been received from the Neepawa General Hospital in Manitoba for the payment of hospital bills of Ontario patients?

Third, if so, will OHSC accept responsibility for payment of these bills?

Hon. M. B. Dymond (Minister of Health): Mr. Speaker, I cannot give the complete answer to the specifics, but I will get the specific answer.

In general, I would advise the hon. member, sir, that the answer to the first question is yes. Part of The Hospital Insurance and Diagnostic Services Act calls for reciprocal arrangements between all of the provinces of Canada, so that a Canadian citizen has rights to or has access to hospital care wherever he may be in Canada.

There is a formula worked out for the payment, but in essence the facilities of Manitoba hospitals could be made available to Ontario residents and they would be paid for; but on what basis, in this specific instance, I do not know. I will get the information for the hon. member.

Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, the hon. member for York South asked a question yesterday of which I took notice:

Can the Minister state from information available from the voluntary health insurance survey prepared by the Canadian Conference on Health Care, which he quoted in reply to my question on December 20, 1968, Hansard p. 948, how many of the 2,034,000 Ontario population with PSI coverage had Brown plan only, and how many of the 2,376,000 population with insurance company plans had partial medical coverage which did not include home and office calls?

Mr. Speaker, the answer is that this survey showed that 2,034,000 Ontario population covered by trans-Canada medical plans included not only Physicians Services Incorporated enrollment, but that of another doctor-sponsored plan offering comprehensive physicians services coverage, namely Windsor Medical Services Incorporated.

Of the 1,740,830 enrolled under PSI, only 103,090, or 5.9 per cent were covered by the Brown plan. This survey also showed that of the 2,376,000 Ontario population with insurance coverage plans, only 7.1 per cent were not covered for home and office calls, or in other words some 2.3 per cent of the total population.

Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for High Park (Mr. Shulman) also posed two questions which I took as notice:

Has the Minister looked into the matter of self-contained units for blood Wasserman tests, as he stated in the House on April 24, 1968? What was the result of that looking into?

The answer is yes. The result was that we believe the present tubes and equipment are quite satisfactory and are doing a good job.

The second question he posed:

Did the Minister get the information he promised the House on April 29, 1968, re the suggestion by the committee on maternal and infant mortality, that The Coroner's Act be amended to require an autopsy in every maternal death? Has the Minister taken up this matter with the Attorney General; and what was the result?

This committee, of course, is a committee of the Ontario Medical Association studying all deaths associated with pregnancy in Ontario. The recommendation made by the regional committees, one of which deals with the Metropolitan Toronto area and the supervising coroner is an honorary member of this committee, referred to the maternal welfare committee of the council of the Ontario Medical Association.

No recommendation has been sent from the council of the Ontario Medical Association to the office of the Attorney General requesting an amendment to The Coroner's Act that would require an autopsy in every maternal death in the province.

The maternal welfare committee is assured of the cooperation of The Attorney General's Department following discussions on this subject in 1964, and I would therefore refer the hon. member, Mr. Speaker, to the Attorney General if he needs a more complete outline of the proceedings.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the Minister would permit a supplementary question on the first question I put to him.

In view of the fact that bills submitted by the Neepawa General Hospital have not been paid for so long that the hospital is now billing the patients direct, would the Minister enquire into this particular aspect of it when he looks into this specific case?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I felt from the hon. member's question there must be some problem and I asked for a complete rundown to find out just what the situation is.

Mr. Speaker: While the hon. Minister of Health is answering questions taken as notice, I wonder if I could enquire if questions asked of him by the member for High Park and by the member for York South before the Christmas recess have been satisfactorily answered, other than in the House.

They are 439, the question from the member for High Park, with respect to Dr. J. A. Gamarra; question 440 from the member for High Park with respect to Yorkville hepatitis; and question 441 from the member for York South with respect to how many of the 97 per cent of the population, and so on, are covered for home and office calls by physicians.

Mr. MacDonald: The latter was on December 20, and it is a follow up from that that I am asking the current series of questions.

Mr. Speaker: My observations were not sufficient to mark these off, I am sorry.

Mr. M. Shulman (High Park): I am still waiting for some answers, Mr. Speaker.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: I do not know what questions the member is referring to.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the hon. Minister would make a note of questions 439 and 440 from the member for High Park, dated December 19, 1968, which were taken as notice.

Mr. Shulman: Excuse me, Mr. Speaker, I believe it is just the reply on hepatitis that I am still waiting for.

Mr. Speaker: Right; that is No. 440.

The hon. member for Brantford has a question of the Minister of Education from before Christmas. Has that been dealt with?

Mr. M. Makarchuk (Brantford): Yes, I would like to withdraw that question.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Peterborough.

Mr. W. G. Pitman (Peterborough): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Education. When will HS 1, giving courses of study for secondary schools be in the hands of boards and principals throughout the province?

Hon. W. G. Davis (Minister of Education): Mr. Speaker, as in the past, the changes relating to the secondary school programme are outlined in the circular, HS 1. This has been compiled and distributed in the form of an advance memorandum which went out on February 3. A more detailed memorandum is presently under preparation, which will be mailed out as soon as possible, but the advance memorandum has been mailed out to the board.

Mr. Pitman: I wonder if I may ask a supplementary question. Will the memorandum which has been mailed out be sufficient to enable principals to begin time tabling and hiring teachers, because I think this is the major problem they face at the moment. May I ask another question, Mr. Speaker?

Can the Minister explain the reason The Department of University Affairs has refused to follow the recommendations of the Provincial Auditor that an unexpended balance of $117,079 be returned to the consolidated revenue fund?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I believe there may be a slight misunderstanding on the part of the member for Peterborough, and I shall endeavour to explain what went on.

In 1963, the Ontario new universities libraries project was undertaken as a co-operative venture to provide five of our vigorous new universities and colleges with the basic library facilities. The project was administered by the University of Toronto and by May of 1967 each of the five libraries had been provided with 44,500 volumes through grants totalling $1.8 million. This took place over the four-year period with an estimate of savings, and I think this is quite relevant, of $1.4 million, because of the co-operative approach.

But, sir, because some of the out-of-print books were not delivered and because of these administrative savings there was an outstanding balance as of June 1968 of $117,079. I therefore, Mr. Speaker, authorized cheques totalling $23,415 each, to be sent to the five universities and colleges to complete the purchase of books and those materials that were either out of print or could not be delivered or catalogued within the time established for the regular programme.

These funds were allocated to the following institutions: Scarborough and Erindale colleges of the University of Toronto, the University of Guelph, Brock University and of course Trent University.

Mr. Speaker, knowing the enthusiasm that the hon. member for Peterborough has for the development of library facilities at our universities, he not only would have accepted this policy, he might also endeavour to find some additional funds to put into the pot to provide for books that are necessary for the library service.

Mr. Pitman: Well, Mr. Speaker, never has a truer word been said in this House. I wonder whether the Minister made this explanation to the Provincial Auditor, in view of statement found in the report given to this House just a couple of days ago.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I think the Provincial Auditor is aware of this and I would assume from straight accounting procedures he feels that there was some merit in doing it the other way. But I think there should be certain, shall we say, give and take. I think the funds were there for library purchases and were used for that purpose. They were not just part of the strict administration of the University of Toronto; they were savings and other moneys that were to be spent on books that were not initially available. I think it was a very appropriate way to deal with that fund.

Mr. Pitman: A final question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the evidence of the 1968 report of the provincial auditor that: "The Department of University Affairs Act contains no provision prescribing requirements for the payment of student awards, grants to universities, and other payments," is the Minister prepared to introduce amendments to The Department of University Affairs Act during this session, as recommended by the provincial auditor?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, there is some discussion in the report with respect to the legality or procedures used. But as we see in Bill 126 of 1964, an Act was established in regard to The Department of University Affairs providing adequate authority for the establishment and operation of the department.

With this department—and I think it applies to several others—the statutory authority for dispensing funds under the various programmes comes with the approval by the Legislature of the estimates of the department. In other words, the Legislature approves the funds which, in turn, are dispensed as indicated by the Legislature, I should make specific references to the fact—and this is where it becomes somewhat complicated—that the student awards programme is a joint federal-provincial programme combining federally-guaranteed loans with the provincial grants.

The administrative procedures and regulations are, to a great extent, determined by the federal statute, The Canada Student Loan Act. The complex assessment procedure is carried out by the department under definite legal restrictions. The awards are subject to provincial audit and must be cleared with the provincial auditor, so that the public's interest in this area is well protected.

Now, dealing with the other area—the operating grants to universities—these of course are determined annually in consultation with the committee on university affairs and individual institutions, and in turn, are subject to the review of the Treasury Board in total sum. This is explained in the annual report of the department. I think, Mr. Speaker, this indicates the procedures and the statutory authority, and while we recognize the reference made by the Provincial Auditor, we feel that the procedures being used really do comply with the statutes and the procedures used in this House.

Mr. Speaker, I do not often rise on a matter of personal privilege in this Legislature relating to stories in the press, but the member for Waterloo South (Mr. Reuter) has handed me a story which gave him some concern, and which I wish to explain.

The headline says, Mr. Speaker: "William Davis runs hot", but I want you to look at the body of the story to see that it says:

S. Sonenberg hooped 11 points and R. Sansom 10 as William G. Davis senior public school ran off with a 38-4 decision in the first game of inter-school basketball action against C. Cornwall Public School.

Davis' next game—and I want to make it very clear it is not mine, Mr. Speaker—

—will be an exhibition against Stewart Avenue public school, of Galt.

I would only say to the member for Waterloo South when these headlines cause him perhaps a slight bit of embarrassment from time to time, I hope he would remind his constituents it refers to the school, and not to the Minister.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for High Park.

Mr. Shulman: I have a question for the Minister of Correctional Services, Mr. Speaker.

On January 3, 1969, was the drug wing at the Millbrook Reformatory tear gassed and, if so, why?

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister of Correctional Services): I have a previous question numbered 552; perhaps the hon. member would care to ask his questions in the order in which they were presented to me, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Speaker: I think the hon. member is entitled to ask his questions in any order that he wishes. The order of the questions given to the Minister and the member is only the order in which they are entered in the Speaker's record.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: All right, Mr. Speaker. I am advised that no prisoners have been transferred from Guelph Reformatory to county jails since December 20 for disciplinary purposes.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. Minister is answering a question he has not yet been asked. That is the second question today.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member will appreciate that we have a complete library of the hon. member's questions and sometimes we pull the wrong page.

Mr. Speaker, I have been advised that no tear gas was used in the drug wing. However, on this date tear gas was administered to two inmates in number 5 wing, which is reserved for severe disciplinary problems. These two inmates were creating a disturbance and breaking up the fixtures in their cells. Having regard for the safety of the other inmates, the institution generally, and, of course, the staff, it was necessary to administer the tear gas. The smell of the gas reached number 10 wing, which is the drug wing, where the inmates were ready to leave for a film show. By the time they had returned from the show it was fairly clear of the odour of the gas.

Mr. Shulman: Will the Minister accept a supplementary question?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Shulman: Did the Minister say no?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Yes, I said no.

Mr. Shulman: Thank you. I have another question of the Minister of Correctional Services.

Have any prisoners been transferred from Guelph Reformatory to county jails since December 20, 1968, for disciplinary purposes? If so, how many, and why?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Speaker, I know the member probably heard me start to answer that question. I am advised that no prisoners have been transferred from Guelph Reformatory to county jails since December 20, 1968, for disciplinary purposes.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for York-Forest Hill has a statement.

Mr. E. Dunlop (York-Forest Hill): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter affecting the privileges of all members of this assembly, notably the privileges of the members of the select committee on election law, of which I have the honour to be chairman.

I have before me a copy of the February issue of the Toronto Telegram in which there appears a story on page 1 attributed to one Peter Thurling. This story—without any shadow of colour or reservation or qualification—purports to summarize the recommendations which that committee will make to this assembly. As that report has not yet been made, the story must be regarded as entirely conjectural and, in my view, quite misleading.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Lambton.

Mr. L. C. Henderson (Lambton): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure for me to rise this morning. I am sure the members want to join me in offering congratulations firstly, to the Petrolia Peewee hockey team, who last Saturday, February 1, won the North American Silver Stick championship in Michigan; and, secondly, to the Forest bantam A hockey team who won the championship for that group in the North American Silver Stick championship, both contests held at Port Huron, Michigan.

Playing on this team for Forest was Mr. Bill Loughheed, who was a pageboy in this assembly last year. He was chosen the most valuable player in the Watford district. Bill Loughheed was also chosen to play on the all-star team within the Port Huron district, which includes 75 teams and over 1,000 players. Mr. Speaker, I am sure the assembly will agree with me that Lambton swept everything before it.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Clerk of the House: The first order; resuming the adjourned debate on the amendment to the amendment to the motion for an address in reply to the Speech of the Honourable, the Lieutenant-Governor at the opening of the session.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

Mr. W. Ferrier (Cochrane South): Mr. Speaker, as I rise to make my second contribution to a Throne Debate in this Legislature, I want to commend you for your capable handling of a difficult role. The question is raised in the book of Jeremiah, "Can the leopard change his spots?" with the inference that of course he cannot. Yet we ask the Speaker of the House to set aside his political loyalties and biases to act as impartial arbiter of the proceedings of this assembly. To a significantly large degree, you, sir, as well as the chairman of the whole House, achieve the high standard that is required of you and I congratulate you both in your performance.

As I begin my speech I want to pay tribute to the hard-rock miners of this province, but especially to those of my own riding. They are rugged, adventuresome, courageous, tough, hard-working men who often descend some thousands of feet into the depths of the earth to extract the rich mineral wealth upon which so much of the economy of this province depends. Their work is dangerous, difficult but skilful. They go at it with a spirit that is matched in few other occupations. Many a miner, in spite of the drawbacks and obstacles placed in his way by a niggardly minded industry, has succeeded in making a good living, while educating his children so that they have assumed responsible positions in many parts of this continent. Such men deserve a tremendous amount of credit.

Yet there are a great many more miners who have come out of the mines broken in body and health so that they are excluded from sharing in the abundance of an affluent society. It continues to disturb me to meet numerous older miners with serious chest conditions, whereby shortness of breath, chest pains and a chronic cough restrict their enjoyment of life and cut down drastically their years on earth. There is only one lung condition that is compensable under The Workmen's Compensation Act and that is silicosis. However, one must have an open-and-shut case before a claim is granted for silicosis. It is my contention that dust exposure is a contributing factor in a variety of other chest conditions in miners. And I continue to believe that this Legislature must enact legislation to broaden the chest conditions that occur in miners who have spent a number of years working in dust exposure areas.

In addition, I think we are soon going to have to face up to the fact, Mr. Speaker, that we shall have to limit the number of years that a miner is permitted to work underground exposed to dust. And we shall have to find ways and means to provide alternate equally gainful employment away from the dust, or make it compulsory for mines to provide an adequate pension for an underground miner at an age before his health is broken. Of course, here is the rub about so many mines in my riding. Men have spent their whole lives slugging it out in the mines and then are retired on no pension at all or on some woefully inadequate severance pay. It is a disgrace to the gold-mining industry of this province, and its Tory friends, that this kind of incredible exploitation of human beings has persisted as long as it has. The wages in the gold mines have been woefully inadequate over the years and every advance won by the union for the men has been resisted every inch of the way by a miserly management. Even now the only pension plan that gold miners can look forward to is what they will receive from the Canada Pension Plan.

So, you see, the miner is not overwhelmed by the feigned largesse of the mining companies, who are the champions of the free enterprise system and the darlings of successive Tory governments. He knows what it is to be personally exploited as well as to have his community exploited in which he lives, all for the sake of corporate profit. He has had too many kicks in the teeth by this crowd to give much credence to their flowery rhetoric concerning the virtues of free enterprise. And therefore he knows his true interests are only served when he votes New Democrat.

Another practice that causes untold hardship on working men and miners in particular is the iniquitous system sanctioned in The Workmen's Compensation Act whereby an injured workman, as he begins to get better, has his compensation benefits reduced to 50 per cent and is informed that he is ready for light work. Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask this government, since they are responsible for the Act as it now stands, just where are the light-duty jobs in the mining industry? What really happens is that a workman has his compensation cut in half, he cannot go to work, so he either takes the loss on the chin or he goes on unemployment insurance until he is able to go back to his regular job. The compensation board passes the buck to the federal government and permits the industries, who should be paying the shot, to get off much lighter than they should.

I support my colleague from Timiskaming (Mr. Jackson), that full compensation should be paid if light-duty work is not reasonably available, until the injured worker is well enough to go back to his regular job. I therefore wholeheartedly endorse the bill which he has introduced to make this possible.

Because there is so much manual work involved in mining and related occupations, an unusually large number of men in my area have sustained low-back injuries which have developed into disabilities which prevent the men from returning to heavy work. They may qualify for a 10- or 15-per-cent disability pension from the compensation board, or they may be put off by being told that their injury is on top of a pre-existent condition and thus they are out of luck as far as the disability pension is concerned. The tragedy in some of these cases is that the man is disabled to the extent that he cannot work and he is still ineligible for a pension. There are a number of men with back problems who can be retrained but many others have such little formal education that retraining is not feasible.

Therefore, I believe that a serious effort should be made by this government in the rehabilitation department of the compensation board to locate some kind of small industry in the Porcupine area where these partially disabled workmen can be gainfully employed at light work. I would hope that this government would act upon this recommendation.

There is a final aspect of The Workmen's Compensation Act that needs revision. The pensions that are paid for disablement, for the most part are away too low. Secondly, pensioners paid on old claims when the rates of pay were much lower than they are today, do not receive adequate pensions to cope with today's prices. Surely in this session, legislation must be introduced to raise these pensions and to tie these pensions into the cost of living index, so that when the index rises or falls the pensions will be adjusted accordingly.

The miner has had additional problems to face in his resident municipalities that workers in other industries have not had to cope with. Mining properties have been exempt from municipal assessment and taxation. As a way to offset this fiscal impairment the province has made grants to mining municipalities in lieu of taxes, but these grants have never been adequate. Thus taxes, of necessity, have been high at the municipal level and the range of services that mining municipalities have been able to supply has been restricted compared to those of other municipalities.

I was pleased to read that the select committee studying the Smith committee report has recommended a plan that will give substantially greater provincial grants to mining municipalities and I hope the government will act on its recommendations, so that we shall receive a much fairer deal.

I wish to endorse the brief of the Association of Mining Municipalities which met in Schumacher in mid-January. They have provided for three relationships to exist between a mining municipality and the provincial government. They have recommended the following to the Minister of Municipal Affairs (Mr. McKeough), the Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) and his Cabinet:

First, that a municipality may apply to the Minister of Municipal Affairs for redesignation as a mining municipality for the year 1970. This would permit a municipality to continue to receive the mine revenue payment in accordance with the formula now in existence, subject to the amendments listed in their brief. These municipalities, who choose this course of action, would not be permitted to assess any processing plants within its boundaries.

Secondly, that a municipality may apply to the Minister of Municipal Affairs to be designated as a fiscally impaired mining municipality. Such a municipality would forego any mining revenue payment in accordance with the present formula but would receive an equalisation grant based on the recommendation and formula of the select committee. Such a municipality would be permitted to assess and tax any mine processing plants within the municipal boundaries or within a defined regional area including unorganised townships as determined by the Minister.

Third, that a municipality may apply to the Minister of Municipal Affairs to be designated as a mining industrial municipality in the year 1970. Said municipality would be entitled to the mine revenue payment as it pertains to profits and to mine employees not classed as process workers and would be permitted to assess any mine processing facilities within its boundaries.

Fourth, that those municipalities designated as fiscally impaired mining municipalities be entitled to not more than fifty per cent of their gross budget by way of an equalisation grant.

Fifth, that all mining municipalities in the above categories be subject to budget approval by The Department of Municipal Affairs.

Sixth, that due to the considerable increase in all municipal expenditures the regulations governing mining revenue payments for 1969 be amended as follows:

(a) resident and working in be raised to $8,500 from $7,500;

(b) resident and working out be raised to $6,000 from $5,000;

(c) non-resident and working in be raised to $3,000 from $2,000.

I certainly hope that this government will act on these recommendations and begin to give the fiscal support that mine municipalities so desperately require. However, I do make the point that the foundation programme for municipalities as advocated by this party will do a much better job in providing equality of basic services to all our municipalities including mining municipalities.

There is a situation pertaining to my riding, Mr. Speaker, concerning the very real possibility of Gillies Lake, in Timmins, overflowing its boundaries and flooding when the spring breakup comes. The reason for this is that the Hollinger Mine used to pump the excess water into Pearl Lake, but since the Hollinger is no longer in operation, no one will now assume responsibility for this problem.

The Minister of Energy and Resources Management suggested that the Mattagami Valley conservation authority should make the necessary hydraulic study and assume responsibility for flood control. After he made this suggestion, the town council discovered a "license of occupation" number 3628 given to the Hollinger Mine in 1935. This is how it reads, in part:

Know all men by these presents that I, Paul Leduc, Minister of Mines for the province of Ontario, do hereby give leave and license and due and full permission unto Hollinger Consolidated Gold Mines Limited of the town of Timmins, in the district of Cochrane, its successors and assigns, to enter upon, possess, occupy, use and enjoy during the pleasure of the Crown for the purpose of depositing thereon the tailings from their gold mill.

Subsequently, the license goes on to describe the exact boundaries of the lake and the terms of the license. I want to read one more paragraph from it.

The Crown shall not be liable for any damage done or alleged to be done by the placing of such tailings upon the said lands or by the overflowing of the same upon lands adjoining or for any damage of any other kind whatsoever done or alleged to be done by the said company, their agents or workmen, that the said company shall indemnify the Crown, with respect thereto.

Now the Timmins town fathers came to the realization after reading this license that they had in no way given permission to Hollinger to dump their tailings into Gillies Lake and thus, greatly reduce the area of this lake as well as block off its drainage through the Porcupine River.

What they did then was to drop the problem into the lap of the provincial government because a previous provincial government first granted permission to Hollinger and has collected the license fee of $10 over the years.

I believe they did wisely to not let the Mattagami Valley conservation authority deal with the problem since the local taxpayers would have to pay half the cost of flood control if the conservation authority had accepted responsibility. In one sense the problem is a provincial problem and if the public purse must pay for flood control of Gillies Lake, then the province should pick up the tab.

However, I am still not convinced that the Hollinger mine has no responsibility to carry. In fact, as I read that section from the license, I believe that they have full responsibility to carry and I, therefore, urge this government to see if at all possible that Hollinger may be forced to bear the cost of maintaining the level of Gillies Lake.

I want to make a brief comment about The Department of Social and Family Services. At the outset I must say that the present level of pensions and the method of determining such do not meet with my approval. As soon as this province can move to a guaranteed annual income programme, the better it will be for all people.

The present set-up, with its army of snoopers into the private affairs of all citizens requesting assistance, is a humiliating and demoralizing system to say the least of it. Once a person is granted a pension, there is no such a thing as privacy anymore. Moreover, if a person has bought himself a home and has accumulated a modest amount of money for funeral expenses and such, before he can be granted a pension, should he become completely disabled and unable to support himself and his wife, he must spend his savings until they are reduced to the permissible level.

This certainly pulls the rug from under our people who, over the years, have tried to be thrifty, honest and responsible by doing their best to make their way and plan ahead for the future. It certainly says to people that there is little to be gained by modest savings should you ever reach the point where you must apply for a provincial pension.

There is one other part of the working of this department that concerns me. It is the interminable delays in processing applications. People in need are left dangling in mid-air not knowing whether they will get assistance or not from the province. In a number of cases, people have come to me in sheer desperation, after waiting for ages without any word.

Usually, though not always, after interceding for them, the processing of the claim is speeded up and brought to a decision. It is very disturbing to see a widow with children to care for driven to such anxiety and distraction about how she is going to meet her financial responsibilities by a system bogged down in red tape.

It appears that those who run the system are a heartless, callous group. And yet, I do not think they are anything as bad as the system projects them to be.

I appeal to this department to find some way of making the processing of applications much speedier and to be more efficient in looking after deserving people so that they do not have to hunt out their local member of the Legislature to get action for them which they should get without his prodding.

Despite the fact that some significant highway work is now under way in my riding, there is still need for a great deal more. The residents of the east side of the riding have had little construction work undertaken for them even though Highway 577 from Val Gagne to Ansonville is in dire need of reconstruction.

The Minister says that the pre-contract engineering has not yet been completed. My request is that he will bring pressure to bear in the proper place to see that this preliminary work is speedily done so that his department can proceed without undue delay to get on with the reconstruction programme.

Also Highway 578 which joins Highway 11 to Montrock is in need of a good deal of work. I understand that about a mile of it is scheduled for paving this year, but I would hope that the whole stretch will be paved in the not too distant future.

No further commitment appears to be forthcoming from the Minister as far as reconstruction of Highway 101 west of Highway 144 is concerned, especially as far as the Johns Mansville Reeves mine. Workers have to drive that exceedingly curvy, bumpy, patched-up piece of highway twice a day as they commute from Timmins and it is not only a slow drive because of the bad curves, but the excessive wear and tear on their cars because of the poor roads makes the workers desire a better highway.

I just hope that the Minister will act and see that the road is looked after before a serious accident takes place. The residents of my riding are still waiting patiently to see the completion and opening of Highway 144, so that Sudbury and Timmins are joined. As that time draws near, I appeal to the Minister soon to reach a decision to link Highway 101 west with Highway 11 north someplace around Smooth Rock Falls. This is a logical move to take and it will be of significant assistance in further opening up the development of the northeast section of the province.

As far as the development of the north is concerned, this government is still paying little more than lip service to our legitimate needs. George McLure, of Halifax, director of the Nova Scotia Programme Development Agency, addressed the Canadian Tax Foundation as follows. This is reported in the Globe and Mail of November 20, 1968. The north, in which Mr. McLure included the Northwest Territories and the northern parts of all the provinces, "is still at a stage of colonial exploitation by outsiders".

How very accurate he is! "Colonial exploitation by outsiders".

At this point I want to quote a section of an editorial in the Timmins Daily Press of November 29, 1968, with which I happen to agree, although I must say that it is very seldom their thinking and mine coincide. I quote: "J. R. Simonett, Ontario Energy and Resources Minister, has challenged northern Ontario to sell its good points and stop its 'gloom and doom talk'."

The Minister should know that the north has been selling its good points for years—minerals, lumber and newsprint. Not getting its fair share in return is causing what he describes as the "gloom and doom talk" in the north.

While the north has developed considerably over the past 50 or 60 years, the residents feel that it is due to the efforts of the people living here and not to our southern cousins. Hardly a week passes without some group from a chamber of commerce or a council having to send a delegation either to Toronto or Ottawa to get things for the north.

We get many things, but should we have to get on our knees every time we want something? Northerners have to go to the trouble and expense of travelling several hundred miles to Queens Park to press one government department or another for a better deal. Do we ever hear of any government representative coming north to find out what we need? Very seldom.

When there is an election we wade knee-deep in politicians from all parties who promise everything under the sun for the north. After the election we never see them until vote gathering time comes round again. When anything about the north is raised in the Legislature they show little or no interest. They seem to forget they are part of a political machine which serves the whole of Ontario, not just as far north as Barrie, or even Huntsville.

One of the reasons for discontent among residents of the north is that they feel they are the forgotten people except when it comes time to collect votes or taxes. Northern complaints grow out of neglect of the north by the governments in power and exploitation of the north by our free enterprise economy. As a result of a rather patronizing letter from the Minister of Highways to the North-eastern Ontario Municipal Association, telling them in effect to "quit their crabbing—they should know when they are well off," that body immediately went on record as unanimously calling for a feasibility study for an eleventh province.

It is interesting to note that most of the members of that organization are members of the two old line parties, who have become so frustrated by the kind of government as it affects the north by their parties, that they are willing to venture forth on a course of action that is as drastic as it is exciting. The results of that feasibility study should unearth an interesting and informative story which will have a large bearing on the future of the north country. I am certainly going to approach the study with an open mind so that I may examine the arguments 'pro' and 'con' before I come out with my own position.

However, I believe that a solution of the northern problem will be tackled and resolved when a New Democrat government has the opportunity to resolve it.

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): Is that in the editorial too?

Mr. Ferrier: No sir, that is my comment. Be that as it may, the fact we are having such a study points out not only a loss of confidence in—but even more, the failure of—the Conservative government after 25 years in office to satisfy even their own staunchest supporters that they have adequately come to grips with the problem of northern development, and to adopt bold and aggressive policies to resolve it.

As far as I am concerned, Mr. Speaker, whether we form an eleventh province or not, the north will only come into its own when a government follows the socialist policies of economic and social planning on a large scale for the north. Then we will make available vast sums out of the public purse to implement the kind of overall development that is necessary for our benefit.

If Quebec can make money available through Sidbec to purchase Dosco so that they will have their own steel complex in that province, or other money available through SOQUEM to develop the copper deposits at Louvre-court township near Val D'Or, then there is no reason why Ontario cannot find money to develop some of our northern resources as well as to create secondary industries in the north.

I just want to read a couple of quotes about this SOQUEM deal in the Louvre-court area:

Quebec mining exploration company, SOQUEM, says preliminary estimates of capital required and operating costs, indicate a profitable operation is feasible from the copper deposit outlined in Louvre-court township near Val D'Or in northwestern Quebec.

SOQUEM, a mining exploration company owned by the Quebec government, has been conducting exploratory work in the area on properties owned by Naganta Mining and Development Company Limited, Nemrod Mining Company Limited and Timrod Company Limited all of Montreal.

SOQUEM said mining of the deposits would generate an operating profit of $5.9 million, which after mining taxes, interest and capital costs repayments, would provide a cash flow of $3,087,000, assuming a price of 45 cents a pound for copper and a salvage value of $305,000 for the equipment.

Not only in mining but also in the forestry industry, Quebec is considering the setting up of a Crown corporation which goes to show that Quebec is moving way ahead of Ontario in their way of thinking of the north. I read from this January 17, 1969 article in the Globe and Mail:

Quebec Forestry Minister Claude Gosselin yesterday promised to begin work this year on a Crown corporation to cut and market wood for pulp and other uses. Mr. Gosselin told the annual convention of the Quebec Forestry Association that the Crown corporation would exploit forests uneconomical for single industry exploitation.

What is involved is the creation of a Quebec forestry company, a sort of para-governmental corporation, that would exploit and harvest forests that are uneconomic and inaccessible to private capital but which could provide a good supply to numerous industries now suffering from a shortage of wood.

"I am thinking of a formula that would allow rationalization and planning of different kinds of enterprises throughout Quebec. Such a formula could constitute, in my opinion, the sort of wood pool with yards for selection and classification."

The free enterprise capital that has been used until now to develop the north has done so with a view to profit and exploitation for the outsider, rather than for the long range development of our economy and culture for our own benefit in the north. People of the north are saying that the rape of the north, as sanctioned and encouraged by this government, must come to a stop. And they are demanding more and more, a socialist-oriented programme that will both plan and bring about, with the sufficient funds from the public purse, real regional development.

There is one final subject on which I want to make my views known in the Legislature, and that is the location of the copper and zinc smelters to process the concentrates of the Texas Gulf operation in the Timmins area. As things now stand, Texas Gulf is still engaged in feasibility studies to determine the type of smelting process and the best location for building the two smelters. We are told by the company and the Minister of Mines (Mr. A. F. Lawrence) that we must wait for another few months until the studies are complete, and then a decision will be made and the public will be so informed. During his lead-off speech on the mining estimates last year, the Minister of Mines took the stand that the government would like to see the copper smelter built in Timmins, and the zinc smelter somewhere in Ontario but not necessarily in the Timmins area. So while Timmins is not ruled out as a possible location, neither is it receiving any boost from this government for the zinc smelter.

At first this announcement of at least the copper smelter to be built in Timmins, if feasible, received a very favourable response from the residents of the Porcupine. But as we began to look into it more fully, we began to wonder if perhaps we have been again taken for a ride. In September the Ecstall Mining Company—according to the figures supplied to this House by the Minister of Energy and Resources Management (Mr. Simonett) in answer to my question—shipped 154 cars of copper to Noranda for smelting, while 556 cars of zinc and lead concentrates were shipped elsewhere for processing. The question in most people's minds is, is there enough copper concentrate to warrant a copper smelter? And the growing body of opinion suggests it is not likely that sufficient bearing ores are available to warrant the building of a copper smelter. Moreover there is an abundance of copper smelting facilities already in Canada, to make another smelter highly unlikely.

My hope is that this body of opinion is wrong, and that a copper smelter can in fact be built in our area. But unfortunately, like the Scotsman, "I hae ma doots", so the core of the matter boils down to the zinc smelter and the possibility of that being constructed in the vicinity of the Porcupine. A manager of one of the other mines in the area has made certain comments about the feasibility of a zinc smelter in the Timmins area to process the zinc concentrates. To be fair to the man, he has not at his disposal any inside information from Texas Gulf, and he made his study based on his knowledge of the industry coupled with what information that is common knowledge about Texas Gulf. His conclusion is that in terms of the greatest profits realizable, the Timmins area is not the best location, and that there are other locations more ideal.

I hope The Department of Mines is anticipating this possible announcement by Texas Gulf, and is prepared to submit a counterproposal to the company on behalf of the citizens of my riding, to remind the company that its decision must consider other factors than just maximum profit. The economy and future development of the northeast of this province depends on the location of the smelter in our area. When a tangible opportunity presents itself in the northern part of the province to bring about development to any part of it, I believe the provincial government has an obligation to see that that opportunity is seized and acted upon. Even the Minister of Lands and Forests of this province, in his speech to the Canadian Council of Resource Ministers on October 9 at Halifax, said as much. I quote from that speech:

When a resource is discovered that could be developed at a profit, private enterprise does so, and a new segment of our economy is born. Unless this newly developed resource frontier takes root and becomes integrated into the regional or national economy, its future is limited. This hit-and-miss unplanned development, based solely on the discovery of isolated resources, is not the answer to northern development, nor does the answer lie in transposing criterion standards of the south to the north.

The answer lies in planned political and administrative decisions, and the determining of the form and character that northern development should take. Northern development should not be left entirely in private hands. We have to put behind us our unwarranted fear of co-ordinated planning and consider the long-term interest of the people concerned and develop the north as a whole region.

This is a wonderful statement that he has made. The Texas Gulf smelter question provides this government with an opportunity to act on the hon. Minister's policy statement. Maximum profits must not be the overriding consideration as to the zinc smelter's location. If the copper smelter is ruled out, and Texas Gulf wants to move its zinc smelter elsewhere, this government must take the stand that the zinc smelter goes to the Porcupine, even though company profits may not be as great.

It may be that the ONR may have to make special rate commitments on zinc concentrates coming in from other mines to the Porcupine, and other specialized rates on the processed zinc and byproduct going out. If necessary, I believe such commitments are in order, and may also be necessary to negotiate some kind of concessions as to hydro rates to induce Texas Gulf to build in the Porcupine. If the government will not do this, or if Texas Gulf persists in locating a smelter elsewhere, then the government should be prepared to build a smelter itself to process the concentrates, and pass legislation to force Texas Gulf to have its ores smelted at such a smelter. If the Texas Gulf then were to remain adamant, I believe the government should move in and nationalize the whole operation.

I have no doubt that this course of action will not be necessary, since the ore body of the Kid Creek Mine is a 55-million-ton ore body, and the recoveries from the ore body, as reported in the Toronto Daily Star, are still improving, while the mine is worth an estimated $2 billion in potential output. Texas Gulf is a New York-based company, and while it gave no breakdown or earnings from its various operations, total net profit from the first nine months of 1968 was $53,835,262, as compared with $44,222,301 in 1967 for the same period—or a gain of $9,612,961. I would suspect that most of that extra profit came from the Timmins operation. With the kind of operation that Texas Gulf has at Timmins, with the lucrative profit outlook, this company is not going to back out if the government tells it certain things must be done, and one of those certain things must be a definite commitment to build a smelter—either copper or zinc, but at least one—in the Porcupine area.

This government has played footsy with International Nickel for years, and more and more Cabinet Ministers are being left with egg on their faces. So I say to them, through you, Mr. Speaker, that the time has come to stand up to another international mining giant, and lay down certain specific conditions and guidelines under which it must operate if it is going to do business in this province. One of these conditions must be to bear reasonable responsibility for the economic stability and growth for the area in which it operates. I therefore call upon this government not to pussyfoot, but to act with firm resolve on the smelter location in question, as far as the Porcupine Mine camp is concerned.

Mr. L. M. Reilly (Eglinton): Mr. Speaker, may I join with fellow members of this Legislature in congratulating you and your deputy on the excellent contributions both of you are making to this assembly, and for the fine work that you are doing in conducting the affairs of this House.

Today, in participating in the Throne Debate, I want to deal with a subject of vital importance to all segments of society in our province—specifically the recommendations of the Royal commission inquiry into labour disputes. Members of this Legislature will recall that the late hon. Ivan C. Rand was appointed commissioner in August, 1966, to inquire into the rights, duties, obligations and liabilities of employees and employers individually and collectively, with relation to each other and to the general public, and so on. Members will also recall that the request for an investigation followed the strike of employees at the Tilco plant in the city of Peterborough. At that time there was a violation of an Ontario Supreme Court injunction, which resulted in the imprisonment of several picketers.

It was with this background of unpleasant labour regulations and the dissatisfaction with injunction proceedings that the Rand commission was launched. As most members of this Legislature know, the commissioner held public meetings in various cities throughout the province of Ontario, at which 82 presentations were made. In addition to these presentations the commissioner also received over 100 submissions from interested individuals and organizations. He reviewed existing labour laws and conditions in other jurisdictions, and held discussions with a host of academic, legal, labour and management people in both Canada and abroad.

Obviously he found some of the existing labour laws and regulations in Ontario unsatisfactory and inadequate and after two years of research submitted 56 recommendations in his recent controversial report. Here are some of the highlights of the Royal commission report as analyzed by the Canadian Press.

A tribunal should be established with power to inquire into any labour dispute, terminate any strike and limit picketing.

Unions should be regarded as legal entities, subject to court action.

The government should have the power to order back to work any employee involved in strikes in essential industries, businesses or services.

Picketing during a lawful strike should be limited to the plant, workshop or central assembly of the striking employees and all other picketing prohibited.

Boycotts which in any way imply coercion or restraint should be prohibited.

A strict set of conditions should be established for courts issuing injunctions against picketing.

The Labour Relations Board of Ontario should conduct and supervise all ratification of collective agreements.

If a strike lasts 45 days, the industrial tribunal or labour relations board should be able to conduct a secret vote among strikers to see whether they want to continue the strike.

When a strike has lasted 90 days the union or employer involved should be able to request an award from the tribunal. If the award is accepted, it should become a one-year collective agreement.

If a company maintains a lockout for six months, the tribunal may suspend for up to one month the right of management to hire replacements for locked-out employees who are available for work.

Daily penalties for violations of tribunal rulings should range from $100 for individuals to $2,500 for unions and employers.

An employee who has worked seven years or more with the same firm should have the right to apply to the tribunal for arbitration if he faces dismissal.

A director of enforcement, accountable only to the Legislature should be established to handle all violations of tribunal rulings.

Responsible people should have been encouraged by Mr. Rand's effort to improve labour and management relations in Ontario, and to avoid economic loss and inconvenience to our citizens and workers.

It was rather a disappointment for me to read the quick and cursory comments of some of the labour leaders who should have taken time to study the worthwhile recommendations made by the commissioner.

According to the Toronto Globe and Mail of September 16, the Canadian director of the UAW, Dennis McDermott, described the report as a "mental aberration".

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Yes.

Mr. W. G. Pitman (Peterborough): Let's talk about the Examiner strike.

Mr. Reilly: I would be delighted to. You bet I will—any time any place.

Mr. J. E. Stokes (Thunder Bay): Talk about the Peterborough strike.

Mr. Pitman: Talk about labour rights and management.

Mr. Reilly: I will get around to them, and Peterborough too, my friend.

In the Hamilton Spectator of the same date, the 250 man Canadian Auto Workers Council, over which McDermott presides, said: "the report would easily have earned its author Hitler's Iron Cross". Shameful, shameful.

In the Hamilton Spectator of September 6, David Archer, president of the Ontario Federation of Labour, said that trade unionism would be placed in a strait-jacket if the report was implemented.

In the same newspaper report, George Johnston, vice-president of the Ontario Federation of Labour, said the Rand Report contains nothing favourable to labour.

Donald MacDonald, not the one sitting diagonally across from me but president of the Canadian Labour Congress, was reported in the Spectator of September 14 as saying that the report was "a travesty on justice harkening back to the days of indentured slavery".

In my view, Mr. Speaker, it is undeserving of these men in responsible positions to make unsubstantiated and negative statements.

Anyone can use similar slogans if they don't have to give evidence to prove them. It is simply unconstructive and a negative way of trying to resolve an existing problem. These wild and unworthy statements likely prompted labour editor Wilfred List to write these words in the Globe and Mail under date of September 20:

Union leaders, by their harsh reaction to the report have put themselves in the position of being labelled as men with closed minds, unwilling to engage in rational discussion of a set of ideas, whether good or bad.

He goes on to say:

That if the Rand Report is unworkable, unfair and loaded against labour, as unions allege, it should be dissected by union leaders and their arguments documented.

Fortunately for organized labour, all unions and union leaders are not as negative or unconstructive. Tom Berry, a former business agent with the Toronto Plumbers, was quoted in the Spectator of October 28:

The report was commissioned by the province at labour's request, but unions are completely ignoring any good points in the study. Any unionist suggesting that some points of the report might be workable, becomes a blackhearted scab among his fellow unionists", said Mr. Berry who backs the late Mr. Rand's recommendations for more Canadian autonomy in international trade unions.

Murray Cotterill, Canadian public relations director for United Steel Workers of America, is quoted in the Globe and Mail of October 9 as agreeing that the Rand Report is not all bad. The union official reportedly said there were parts of the report that labour could accept, but that "it would be a matter of culling them".

David Lewis, M.P., the New Democratic Party's Parliamentary leader at Ottawa, recently argued that the suggested powers of the Tribunal are "frighteningly wide" and "deserve to be described as dictatorial."

The powers described by Commissioner Rand would certainly give the tribunal broad authority, seemingly without the right of appeal.

I agree that the powers should be more explicit and that the right of appeal from the proposed tribunal is essential. In fact, this government has revised a number of statutes in recent years, incorporating the right of appeal.

Personally, I do not think that the proposed tribunal should be the final authority on all issues. In my view, the scope of authority as described by Mr. Rand is much too vague, and the terms of the authority are much too broad.

If the tribunal is established, the legislation should carefully describe the authority and jurisdiction of the tribunal. Unquestionably there must be provision for right of appeal from decisions of the tribunal on questions of law or jurisdiction. Whether such appeals should be made to the Supreme Court of Ontario first and then on to the Supreme Court of Canada, if necessary, is something to be considered.

But because I disagree with one section of the report is no reason for me to condemn it, in its entirety. Hugh Buchanan, vice president of the Ontario Federation of Labour, seemed to be expressing similar thoughts. According to a report in the Windsor Star he said:

There are several proposals that, if implemented, would reduce conflict and would improve labour-management relations, such as the provision for restrictions on strikebreaking, job protection for a worker through a vested right to his job after seven years of service and limiting the conciliation procedure to a shorter period.

Well, Mr. Speaker, it has been drawn to my attention that the hour is now 12 o'clock and since this particular time is restricted to the private members' hour, I would, if it is the wish of the members of the group, move adjournment of this debate.

Mr. Reilly moves the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to.

THE ONTARIO WATER RESOURCES COMMISSION ACT

Mr. M. Shulman (High Park) moves second reading of Bill 15, An Act to amend The Ontario Water Resources Commission Act.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Speaker, with some surprise and a great deal of pleasure I am going to discuss eutrophication today.

I may say this is with some surprise, because up until a very short time ago we had thought we were going to discuss the raceway but it was with some delight that I see the Tories have turned tail and are running.

I had to choose another subject in some haste, Mr. Speaker, and because the other parties would have to discuss this also, I took a simple one which I knew they would have a great deal of knowledge of. This bill is to prevent eutrophication of our water systems. If, perchance, there should be anyone here who is not aware what eutrophication is I will give a brief explanation.

Mr. M. Makarchuk (Brantford): All you have to do is look at the Tory party.

Mr. Shulman: I thank the member for Brantford, he explains that one can understand eutrophication by looking at the Tory party.

Actually, eutrophication is a natural aging process resulting in weed and algae growth until someone is stifled. It normally refers to lakes and rivers but perhaps it could be used in a wider context.

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister of Correctional Services): That is what you fellows were saying about your leader—

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): You have not read the results of the election.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: —in nicer language.

Mr. Shulman: This is an extremely serious problem, Mr. Speaker, and it something that deserves a great deal of attention in this province and unfortunately, it has received absolutely none up to this time.

Lakes and rivers do grow old naturally. It takes a long, long time—many thousands of years—but, because of things that we are doing, we are killing our water resources very rapidly. It can be shown up with highlights in Lake Erie but it is occurring throughout the province.

One of the major causes is pollution from household detergents and this problem has been compounded over the last few years with the coming of domestic automatic washing machines which eliminate the need for women to touch the water with their hands. As a result, very high phosphate levels are being poured out into our sewage systems and subsequently, out into the water courses.

These phosphates are not, in themselves, pollutants but they are extremely active fertilizing agents which help the algae grow in the waters and this rapidly accelerates the aging process of our lakes. It prevents fish and normal plants from growing in the water. It allows algae to grow at a tremendous rate and in effect, it very rapidly kills the water for use, either for recreational purposes or for fishing and very, very often completely destroys the area.

The real tragedy is that like the earlier ingredients which caused foam and which the manufacturers took out, the inclusion of phosphates in our detergents is not absolutely vital to detergent manufacturers. In fact it is completely unnecessary, and I have here a quote from Professor P. H. Jones of the University of Toronto, who says:

Substitute chemicals are available which would eliminate the whole problem.

Now these substitutions would cost a little money. Unfortunately, it would cost 15 cents for every package of detergent. But this 15 cents per package of detergent would mean that we would have the use of our lakes and our rivers for some thousands of years more. The quote of Professor Jones is from Water and Pollution Control magazine of September of 1968.

This bill which I have brought in for second reading today would require that these substitutions be made in every package of detergent which would increase the retail price by these few pennies, but it may save millions or perhaps hundreds of millions of dollars in future damage over the next few years.

Putting this law in effect is not going to solve the entire problem. There is a second part to my bill which requires that the phosphates that are now in sewage be removed chemically. This can be done, again at a slight cost.

I have a paper which was presented to the Water Pollution Control Federation in Washington, October 25, 1967, and it explains how the phosphates that are in our sewage can be removed in the sewage disposal plants which is not being done at the present time. I want to quote one paragraph from this paper:

The natural useful life of a lake should be measured in tens of thousands of years. However, the contamination of man is causing extreme premature extinction of many waters. For the last half century man has observed the changes brought about by over-fertilization. Passive realization has now turned to active concern for effective methods to control this accelerated aging. A realistic process is this phosphate extraction process which was presented to the Water Pollution Control Commission.

This is what is being done in the U.S. They are actually taking steps to save their waters. We must do something here; we cannot wait for another government because every year is rapidly decreasing the areas we can save. We often look at the southern part of the United States and compare ourselves extremely favourably. Well, we certainly cannot in this particular aspect.

I have another paper that was presented at the same time and it is called, "The Southland We Live In—Water—How Southern Pulp and Paper Mills Manage This Natural Resource, Its Use, Re-use and Restoration." Reading through this paper, I am ashamed of how little we do here in Ontario. If you go near the pulp and paper plants in this province, which I had an opportunity of doing a few times this past year, you see pollution pouring into our streams, you see dead streams, you see no fish. They have controlled this problem in the South, where they have many pulp and paper plants. They have laid out a lengthy plan there, at very low cost, which allows the streams into which they are pouring their effluent to live, allows the fish to stay in them, allows people to swim in them.

If I had time I would go into it in greater detail; perhaps during the estimates we can do that. But here is something, where if we had a proper Ontario Water Resources Commission, it would send men down to see what is being done there and would bring in proper legislation to save our streams and save our rivers and save our lakes.

I have here a letter which I received from the air and water pollution report committee on May 6, 1968, and it shows what the Americans are doing in Lake Michigan. I just want to read one of the 18 laws they have brought in:

All cities on Lake Michigan basin must provide at least 80-per-cent removal of phosphorus from their waste by the end of 1972 and comply with quality standards approved by Secretary Udall for Lake Michigan. Quality standards require secondary treatment by that date.

We could do that here but we have not done a thing. You have to give plants three or four years to put in the proper equipment. You cannot say, "Do it today" and they will have it done tomorrow; it takes three or four years. They have made a sensible beginning and they are going to save Lake Michigan. We are not going to save Lake Ontario and we are not going to save Lake Erie, because we are not doing anything.

Cost: Here, from the Royal Bank of Canada, I have their monthly letter which goes into this problem in some detail and it states very clearly why we are not doing anything in Ontario.

Why is this treatment not universal in Canada? It is safe to say there are two reasons: The need has not been appreciated and the cost is not relished.

That sums it all up. This government is not prepared to force the plants to do the necessary things to save our water supply, and the individual private companies are too selfish. Why should one plant do it when the plant down the stream is not doing it? So they say, "I'm not going to do it until I am forced to", so nobody does it. We must have governmental action.

To see how far we have gone with Lake Ontario, again I have here an air and water pollution report dated November 25, 1968, and this again is from the United States:

Expenditure of over $309 million is needed to install or upgrade water pollution control facilities to relieve contamination of algae plaguing Lake Ontario and its tributaries.

This number increases geometrically every year. This means that every year that we go along, we are going to have to spend not five or 10 per cent more, but 20 or 30 per cent more, just to eradicate the damage that has been done.

I believe that Lake Erie has already reached the point of no return. I have the Lake Erie report here. I wish the government would at least get a copy. It is a plan for water pollution control which came out last August, and it is frightening reading, Mr. Speaker. It is a very lengthy report and I am just going to read briefly a few excerpts from it because it points out just how far we have gone and how we must have radical action immediately in order to prevent disaster.

Many years of neglect by the citizens and government of the basin, and the lack of knowledge concerning the dynamics of the lake and the cause of the lake pollution, were the principal reasons that Lake Erie is a major pollution problem, for it is in the final analysis the acts of commission or omission by the governments in the Lake Erie basin, as guardians of its water resources, which have placed those resources in their present condition.

It is equally true that Lake Erie can be restored to its one-time health and usefulness only if the basin governments, with support from the people, establish the public policies and governmental institutions capable of doing so. At the present time there is inadequate treatment due to insufficient financing, insufficient research, insufficient surveillance, and insufficient enforcement by the basin governments.

Lake Erie is over-enriched with nutrients from pollution. The over-enrichment is causing premature aging evident in the following aspects: depletion of the life-sustaining oxygen; replacement of high-quality fish with scavengers; undesirable taste and odours in the water; littering of the shoreline with rotting and foul smelling masses of algae; increase in the number of pollutants indicating algae and an increase in the concentration of chemicals in the lake.

Phosphorus, because it is the one essential nutrient for which control measures are best known, is easily singled out as the key to control of this premature aging of Lake Erie. The phosphorus contribution of 137,000 pounds a day from sources within the Lake Erie basin is composed of 72 per cent from municipal waste, 17 per cent from rural run-off, 4 per cent from industrial waste, and 7 per cent from urban run-off. In municipal waste, 66 per cent comes from detergents.

Therefore, if we just make this one change—insist that the detergent companies take the phosphorus out of their product, and this can be done so cheaply—at one stroke we can solve half of the problem of the killing of Lake Erie. I continue with the quotation:

Reducing the total phosphorus discharge from all in-basin sources to half of its present level would control algae growth and arrest the aging process in Lake Erie. Bacterial pollution of Lake Erie and its tributaries is evident in a number of unsafe bathing beaches and the undesirable condition of a few water supplies.

Mr. Speaker, the report goes on to describe in some detail the large quantity of municipal wastes without any treatment that are entering the streams in the Lake Erie basin. It describes the 360 industrial concerns on the American side which are directing a total of 9.5 billion gallons a day of waste water into the lake; it has not measured the amount on the Canadian side. It points out that the steam electric generating plants contribute 72 per cent of this amount.

Last year I got up and I begged that they do something to stop the Nanticoke Hydro plant, which is going to completely destroy the Lake Erie fishing industry. We could get no response from the government. They are storming ahead; they are not putting in cooling towers which would prevent the thermal pollution which is going to destroy the fish; in one stroke, they are going to completely destroy all fishing industry around Nanticoke and no one over there cares. They are going ahead with this plant, which is criminal; it is nothing less than criminal.

Mr. Speaker, this report lays out a plan whereby if it is followed the lake can be saved. Before I give that plan briefly, I want to read one paragraph here. This is published by the U.S. Department of the Interior, the federal Water Pollution Control Administration, Great Lakes Region. Perhaps this Legislature should know what this body, which meets with the Canadian government and the Ontario government in an international control commission, thinks of the policy which is being followed, by the province of Ontario, and I quote:

Some of the elements that were not incorporated in this document on Lake Erie, include international co-operation from the Canadian province of Ontario and its role of a remedial pollution control programme for Lake Erie.

The reason that this is not included is that it is non-existent. They just have not done the things that have to be done. There is a very detailed way of saving our lakes, which is in this report, and I am going to commend it to every member of this Legislature, and I hope they will all read it.

This detailed plan involves control of sewage; it involves control of thermal pollution, which is the heating of water by our electric generating plants which kills the fisheries, it involves the control of the loss of oxygen, but most important of all, it involves the control of the phosphorus, which is what the bill is about that I have brought up today. I would like, Mr. Speaker, in conclusion, since I just have a few moments left—

Mr. W. Hodgson (York North): Is the member an authority on this?

Mr. Shulman: Well, Mr. Speaker, we have heard from one of the Conservative backbenchers and we are asked, are they an authority on it? Yes, the U.S. Department of the Interior Pollution Control Administration is an authority on it.

Mr. W. Hodgson: I thought the member was that authority.

Mr. Shulman: Well, I am a little better authority than you are. At least I have taken the trouble to read the facts and bring them to you.

Mr. W. Hodgson: On a question of personal privilege, he says he is a better authority than I am, but let us hear what that authority is.

Mr. MacDonald: Have you not been listening?

Mr. Shulman: I wish the member would pay attention and he would know where the authority comes from. Perhaps he will read Hansard and he will learn some of the facts that he is not prepared to listen to. I hope he will perhaps speak in this debate and we will find out how much authority he has.

Mr. Speaker, this bill does two things basically.

Every person who sells or offers for sale any detergent that contains a polyphosphate is guilty of an offence, and on summary conviction is liable to a fine of not more than $1,000.

That phrase will prevent 50 per cent of the phosphate which is going into our lakes and rivers. If this bill is carried, it is a simple thing; the detergent companies can make this change in a matter of months. We can save Lake Erie, we can save Lake Ontario if they will just do that one thing. And the second part:

Every municipal sewage works that empties effluent into a lake, river, stream or other water or water course, shall so treat the sewage that the effluent does not contain any phosphate that is chemically capable of being removed.

This second portion, I believe, should allow the municipalities a certain amount of time to make this change. But it can be made—I have the plans here. I would be happy to supply them to any member or to any municipality that is interested.

They have come from a very reliable source in the United States that has put in similar plans across the United States. If the government will make this compulsory, you can give our lakes and our rivers another thousand, two thousand, perhaps longer, years of life. Otherwise, we are going to be living on dead lakes and dead rivers with no fish, no swimming, just pollution. Thank you.

Mr. Speaker: I am sure that the hon. member for Nipissing would allow me at this time to advise the House that we have a distinguished visitor from Australia in Mr. Speaker's gallery below on the east. He is Mr. A. A. Street, who is a federal member of the Australian Parliament from a constituency in the state of Victoria, and I am sure that he will enjoy his short visit to this assembly in the province of Ontario. I wonder if Mr. Street would rise and be recognized.

The hon. member for Nipissing.

Mr. R. S. Smith (Nipissing): Mr. Speaker, I rise to support the bill of the hon. member for High Park on behalf of our party. Since he has discussed in depth the chemical process of the production of dead water, particularly by the use of polyphosphates, perhaps I could place this problem in a larger context of our total environment in which we find ourselves.

Today we speak about the biosphere—that ring of life on the surface of this planet on which we live. We should make no mistake—this is our life-support system. We are cruising through a hostile universe, at an absolute rate of speed which we cannot calculate and in an absolute direction which must forever remain unknown.

We are just like the astronauts, except that our vehicle is more commodious. But let us never forget that this is Earth and that our atmosphere and our waters together are absolutely vital to our continued survival.

Unfortunately, however, we are bad astronauts. We haven't had the training and the discipline to perform those tasks upon which our survival depends. Nor have we thought it necessary specifically to purchase the recycling equipment to ensure that our environment is not degraded to the point where it will no longer support life as we know it.

In this sense, air and water pollution are inseparable, and one of the concerns in our party is that this pollution is the responsibility of more than one Minister. Furthermore, it seems very difficult to get the government down to the nub of the problem. And I think that within this bill the nub of the problem is secondary treatment. Meanwhile, the air grows turgid with sulphur dioxide and our waters grow thick with organic matter and radical salts.

The American Aldo Leopold has said:

The fact that modern man is constantly moving into new environments gives the impression that he is constantly enlarging the range of his evolutionary capabilities and thereby escaping from the bondage of the past. The assurance with which we regard this assumption is inverse to the degree of our education.

This planet has been plundered, the biosphere battered, the earth pulled apart. Significantly, these are all unexaggerated denunciations of worried, thoughtful men—men who see no compromise in their struggle to steer governments away from the prospect of disaster.

As Professor Rene Dubos has pointed out:

Certainly we can adjust to a remarkable degree, but only at the cost of the unborn, and the genetic future of the human race. Every time our bodies adapt to new stresses, they do so at the cost of damage to the genetic line, quite apart from the psychological effects on those now alive. It is a basic fact of biology that man can only survive uninjured as a species to the extent that he maintains or creates around himself an environment similar to that in which he evolved.

In Paris, in September last, 50 world authorities meeting under the auspices of UNESCO recognized this. Throughout all their studies there was one common thread. "We have to keep the BIOS vigorous." In crude terms, they mean the "life-soup"—the things formed by the association of living organisms and water and soil and atmosphere.

The continuous revitalization of this matter is brought about by successive processes of synthesis and destruction. On the land alone, fifty-five billion tons of humus rot each year over the entire surface of the globe. This stupendous activity is caused by higher and lower forms of life: worms, insects, fungi, bacteria. In the end, 90 per cent of this material enters the atmosphere as gases of various kinds.

The golden rule of balance is to take out nothing but the income, and the educational process in which Dr. Shulman and myself are now taking part goes by the name of land-ethic. A name coined by the late Dr. Albert Schweitzer, pointing out that most people believe that they have to deal only with the relationship of man with man. We know that this is not the case.

It is against this background then that we can paint the dreary picture that has already been outlined earlier. Man creates in the laboratory these long-chain molecules—the polyphosphates referred to in the bill—and eventually dumps them into rivers and streams, where they do not break down.

Novelist Farley Mowat has complained about the plastic bottles on the shores of Newfoundland which drift down into the St. Lawrence and other areas. These containers are so indestructible that they not only survive the journey with the current for thousands of miles, but they also stay around the shoreline, apparently indefinitely.

By the same point we can see the gross disfiguration of the environment that these bottles cause. Yet exactly the same thing happens with the contents of these bottles—as valency bonds have been used like fish-hooks to string more and more free radicals end to end to form microscopic monsters. And so we have molecules now that nature never saw, and does not know how to deal with. These are the real poisons, because there are no antidotes in nature's cabinet to take care of them.

We upset this balance at our peril. The state of Michigan has recognized this and Ontario has not. Let me read to you from the Toronto Star of January 23, 1969, and this is perhaps somewhat similar to what Dr. Shulman outlined earlier:

The State of Michigan has set June 1, 1977, as the deadline for correction of pollution from overflowing storm and sanitary sewers and the removal of phosphorus from waste waters, the International Control Commission was told Wednesday morning by Ralph W. Purdy, executive secretary of the Michigan Water Resources.

Mr. Purdy said that, where controls cannot be imposed at once, the commission offers the opportunity for voluntary controls. But when controls are not carried out within a reasonable time, legal steps will be taken.

Secondary treatment is required as a minimum, unless it can be demonstrated that a lesser degree of treatment or control will provide for water quality commensurate with present and future water uses.

He commented that exception from secondary treatment must be justified to the Michigan Water Resources Commission and the Federal Water Pollution Control Administration.

Mr. Purdy said that the commission has set up laboratory facilities for the testing of the Detroit River and Lake Erie waters at 65 locations. Each month about 700 analyses are performed by the Michigan Commission on samples. Mr. Purdy said that municipalities discharging wastes in the St. Clair River must provide for phosphorus removal by June 1, 1972. We are not entirely satisfied with what has been accomplished to date, he said, but some progress has been made. We hope by 1977 to have the matter under total control.

Well, faced with this progress report from Michigan, the OWRC was asked to comment, and our Mr. Caverly did so. I do not like to refer to civil servants or commission employees by name in the House, but he did make these comments and they are public knowledge in the public press.

Mr. Caverly, then, was asked whether the fact that there isn't a similar programme to Michigan's in effect on the Canadian side, might not detract from the effectiveness of the Michigan programme, but he blandly replied that there was a difference of opinion but no conflict between the OWRC and the authorities in Michigan.

Later, in an interview, Mr. Caverly said criticism over a policy of blanket secondary treatment has already arisen at the northern Ontario town of Rainy River.

'I think there is too much emphasis being placed on this aspect of secondary treatment,' Mr. Caverly said. 'It is a waste of taxpayers' money.'

Now what kind of concern did he suggest in that statement? It suggests that OWRC does not have the global view of the urgency of the problem of secondary treatment and particularly the faulty phosphates. This gives strength to the position taken by my leader, Mr. Nixon, and by my colleagues from York

Centre and from Waterloo North. Mr. Nixon, speaking at the University of Windsor last week, gave forth against the organization of the International Joint Commission itself as a body whose teeth had worn down.

He condemned the attitude so far expressed in regard to conservation by Walter J. Hickel, the new U.S. Secretary of the Interior, and he called upon the Premier of Ontario to convene a conference of the governors of all the states, and the premiers of all the provinces, bordering on our joint waters, to lick this pollution menace together.

But he also recognized that Ontario must first put its own house in order, and, using the proposals worked out by my colleagues on the caucus as an adjunct to their study of regional government, he demanded that the OWRC be reformed.

I will not repeat the remarks of Mr. Good from yesterday. You will find them in Hansard in regard to regional government and the OWRC. But I will say that, every time the Liberal caucus meets—and in between times too, as we look at our mail—we are all reinforced in our belief that the time has come for a complete re-vamping of the role and structure of the OWRC.

Now it is becoming not only a matter of government administration and financing, but one of survival. We are going to turn OWRC into another Ontario Hydro, and it will sell its services and raise its money by debentures, without saddling the new regional government with this kind of debt. We'll keep the interest rates low by putting the provincial credit rating behind OWRC—that is, if this present government has any credit rating left by then.

Meanwhile, the report of the Provincial Auditor for 1967-1968, tabled only the other day by the Provincial Secretary, tells the story of a commission working at half potential—or less. If you will turn to page 12, you will see the sad tale under disbursements budgetted and actual, construction and installation, about half way down the page. (See table, page 1111.)

According to these figures, OWRC spent roughly one-fifth of what has been budgeted. While this might in part be explained by slow starts of some programmes and problems within the operations of the OWRC with the municipalities and the Ontario Municipal Board, an expenditure of $14 million when the budgeted capital disbursement was $65 million, indicates poor planning—it implies poor planning and bureaucratic stalling while our environment gets worse. We cannot afford to allow this to continue.

	Budget Net Capital Disbursements	Actual Net Capital Disbursements	Actual to Budget Increase	Decrease
Ontario Water Resources Commission— construction and installation municipal projects	7,000,000	2,576,000		4,424,000
provincial projects	58,000,000	11,493,655		46,506,345

This private member's bill then, represents an attempt to bring to the notice of government something that it should have been aware of for some time and indicates to it that secondary treatment is indeed essential. We support not only the intent of the Bill itself, but also the broader criticism which its tabling implies. That criticism, in brief, is that the Robarts government is living in the pure air and drinking the pure water of the past, while the people of Ontario wallow in the murk of an environment that will surely shorten all our days unless something is done now.

Mr. J. Root (Wellington-Dufferin): Mr. Speaker, I was not aware that this Bill was to be called today until I came into the House. We are in the process of moving over at OWRC. Perhaps some of the statistics that I might like to have read into the record are somewhere between 801 Bay Street and 135 St. Clair Avenue West.

However, I did listen with great interest to the remarks of the two hon. members and I want to make just a few comments.

I am not questioning the desire of the hon. members to improve the quality of water. That is the objective and the purpose of the Ontario Water Resources Commission.

I want to comment on one or two of the statements that were made by the member for High Park. He mentioned the effect that phosphate has—and particularly the phosphate carried in detergent—and suggested that these detergents might shorten the life of our lakes. I think we are all aware that there is a process of eutrophication going on in all of our waters. If you fertilize soil, you will grow grass or weeds; if you fertilize water you stimulate the growth of algae; that is just nature's response to fertile waters.

A suggestion was made that the contamination of man is speeding up the eutrophication of our water. Well that probably is right and the purpose of OWRC is to take every possible step to control the pollution that man does create in many ways. I notice his comment about pollution from the pulp and paper plants and suggestion that the OWRC send men to the United States to learn how they deal with the problem. I would say to the hon. member and to the members of this House that the United States, and indeed countries from all over the world, come to the Ontario Water Resources Commission to find how we have become recognized as a leader in this matter of pollution control.

An hon. member: Well, if you are leading, you will lead anyone who wants to follow.

Mr. Root: I think I will have some comments about Lake Erie a little later.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Mr. Root: Mr. Speaker, if I could have a little order. I appreciate your interjection there.

It is true that in the construction of a new paper mill there are advance methods installed for treating the waste from the paper mill. Keep in mind that most of Ontario's mills were built some 20 or 30 years ago and changes are being made. I want to be fair and say they have spent many millions of dollars and they will be required to spend many more millions of dollars before we reach all the objectives that we have in mind.

The hon. member for Downsview, I believe it is, wants to know whom do we lead. Let me remind him that since this commission was established we have given approval certificates for something over $1.6 billion worth of works. Out of these works, over $125 million—and this was a year ago—were for industrial waste; that is, where industry treats its waste on its own outside municipal systems. Many of the industries treat through the municipal systems. I said at the beginning of my remarks that I have not got the latest figures with me. These are figures for over a year ago.

A suggestion was made by the hon. member for High Park that Lake Erie is gone. Probably, this statement might have been taken from some irresponsible comment. Lake Erie is not gone. Lake Erie is a lake that is fairly shallow, particularly at the west end. The temperature is higher and it is a more attractive lake in which algae can grow. But I would remind the members that approximately two thirds of all the commercial fish in Ontario comes out of Lake Erie. To say that that lake is gone is just not a statement of fact.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to go on and say that approximately 90 per cent of the waste that comes into Lake Erie comes from the American side. I would say that every major centre on the Grand River has erected or enlarged its treatment plant to OWRC specifications. At the present time we have projects in the mill going down to the small villages of 500 to 600—

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Root: All of the municipalities on streams that are in the Lake Erie basin have spent a tremendous amount of money bringing pollution under control. There are one or two cities that were slow starting, but they are well underway—Windsor and so on. We try to be realistic and see that that programme is achieved in an orderly manner to keep these waters in good condition.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Root: I will tell the member when I get through with my remarks.

Mr. Speaker, let me say that we do work with the international organizations. Some of our staff work on a committee with the International Joint Commission; we have liaison with the Great Lakes Commission. We are not a member of the Great Lakes Commission because there are eight states, and we are one, and we do not want to get ourselves in a position where we can be outvoted and have them suggest that we support a programme that we are not prepared to support. But we have good relations. We meet with them and they meet with us. We know what their programme is, and we do everything possible to co-ordinate our programmes so that we advance together.

As I have said, the great bulk of the sewage or effluent coming into Lake Erie comes from the other side, and I say without fear of contradiction that Ontario is a leader in the programme we have had to control pollution including pollution into Lake Erie.

But the rest of the states have a big problem to catch up with us. They have many more people and many more industries. It takes time and it takes money.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Root: I would say to the member for Downsview, Toronto has spent many millions of dollars. There may be times, with some of the old combined sewers, when it rains and you do have a bypass of diluted sewage because there is no purpose in running it through a treatment plant over-loading the plant. You might go down and deal with your planning people in Toronto and suggest that they stop giving out building permits and stop developing in Toronto until the storm sewers are separated from the sanitary sewers. That is an answer; and I would say that the hon. Minister of Trade and Development, who is endeavouring to decentralize industry, is probably helping Toronto in getting some of these industries out of Toronto and located in municipalities where they have the ability to treat the waste.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Root: Mr. Speaker, I did not get that comment. But I would remind the hon. members that we talk to Metropolitan Toronto and the municipalities, we are working with them. They have a programme and they are proceeding to bring this problem under control, it is a major problem. We on the OWRC recognize that it is going to cost a lot of money. We have a bit of sympathy for the taxpayer in Toronto, whether the member for Downsview has or not.

There are one or two comments by the hon. member for Nipissing. He suggested that secondary treatment was an answer. Secondary treatment is an answer to getting solids out of waste. But the problem of phosphates and nitrates is not as simple, because phosphates and nitrates go into solution and they just do not settle out. We are carrying on a study with regard to chemical treatment of primary and secondary treated waste but we are not too sure at this stage what the effects of this chemical precipitation of phosphates will have on nitrates and the effluent.

The member for Nipissing made the remark that two years ago we had $65 million in our capital budget. That is right. Perhaps we were too optimistic that municipalities would sign the necessary agreements. We have been loath to force municipalities to sign agreements until they completely understand what they are getting into. And that is the simple reason why, at the end of the year, the capital expenditure was only $14 million. There were some big projects in the mill at that time. For example, the project out in Peel county, which would add up to almost $88 or $90 million over a number of years, was in the mill. It did not move as fast as we had expected. There are other regional projects where we are carrying on discussions, in addition to the many smaller projects for various municipalities. Some of these projects did not move as fast as expected, and you will find that since that year we have not asked for as much capital money because we have learned that some municipalities are rather loath to commit their people, until after a lot of consideration, to the various implications.

Mr. Speaker, I jotted down a few remarks when I learned that I was going to have to take part in this debate. The OWRC is aware of the effect of phosphates on water. Other jurisdictions are also aware of the effect of phosphates on water and we are carrying out studies with the objective of finding a proper method of dealing with this matter. But before we commit people to tremendous sums of money, we want to know that we have the right answer. We do not want to have to back up, and a few years later have the hon. members opposite saying we just made our people waste their money.

Mr. E. W. Martel (Sudbury East): What more proof do you want about Sudbury?

Mr. Root: Let us not talk about Sudbury, the only city in Ontario that is pouring all of its raw sewage into the lake. Let us not talk about Sudbury.

The OWRC is carrying on studies with the objective of finding a proper method of dealing with phosphates and their effects on water. Phosphates can get into the water from many sources. They could get into the water from raw sewage, if you want to talk about Sudbury. They can get into water from treated sewage, because phosphate goes into solution and at the present time will not settle out. You can get phosphate from the runoff from farms. You can get phosphate even from soil. There is a natural amount of phosphate in the ground when you have runoff.

This whole matter is receiving careful study by responsible organizations. Other jurisdictions are aware of this problem and we are in constant communication with them. As I said before, we have been working with the International Joint Commission. We also work with the Great Lakes Commission. I can assure the House that the OWRC is aware of the effects of phosphates and are dealing with it.

If legislation is necessary, it may be that we have enough authority now, I am not sure; but if legislation is necessary when the studies are further advanced and we find that we need more legislation we will not hesitate to bring to the House a request for that legislation. But I am not prepared at this time to support Bill 15, with the amount of information that is available to me at the present time.

Section (a) of Bill 15 could deprive the housewife of detergents and quite frankly, they are only a small part of the phosphate load. I realize there is a substantial amount of phosphate in detergent. I am aware of that. We have been aware of it and we have been discussing these matters with the detergent industry.

They have been able to bring out a detergent which got rid of the foaming and they are making studies on how they can provide this very necessary material for the housewife. We hope that their research and our research along with the research that is being carried out by other jurisdictions will come up with the right answer.

Section (b) of the Act, from the information we have available at the present time, would tremendously increase the cost of treatment plants and it may not be the right answer, with the research that is going on. We have become aware of the importance of this matter, but we do not want to put an added tax burden on the people until we are reasonably sure that we are making the right proposal.

I will say this, Mr. Speaker, that we are considering asking for chemical precipitation of phosphates where we receive requests that treatment plants be enlarged on small streams where there is not sufficient dilution water to carry away the waste from secondary plants.

That matter is under consideration, but there is an economic factor. There are streams where developers want to go in and put in treatment plants where, according to all of our standards, there is not sufficient dilution water.

Now it may be that we will permit a few pilot projects to see whether this can help us solve that problem and allow development in areas that we are loath to give our approval to at the present time.

Mr. Speaker, I just want to conclude my remarks by saying that I am not prepared to support this bill at the present time. We are aware of the problem of eutrophication of our lakes and our rivers. We are dealing with it. We are studying it, but I am not prepared to support this bill.

Mr. F. Young (Yorkview): Mr. Speaker, we have listened again to an apology for delay.

We have known, for a long time, of certain techniques for getting rid of the pollutants going into our waters—some of the pollutants at least. Those techniques have been developed in other areas and under other jurisdictions.

Somehow or other this government insists that it has to go through the whole process of research and development again before it can use these processes here.

The member for High Park has sent over to the chairman, or the representative in this House on the OWRC, a plan for eliminating phosphates, a plan which has been carried out. We hope he will study it and we hope he will take it to the OWRC and then return that plan to the member for High Park because this is something—

Mr. Root: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order. I have not had time to look at it. I think this is a sales pitch from somebody trying to promote something that they have developed.

Mr. Speaker, all of these matters are now with us and all of these sales pitches are being studied.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member has stated his point of order. If he would, I would be glad to have him enlarge upon it. If he is done with his remarks then the hon. member for Yorkview can carry on.

Mr. Root: The point is, this is not a report, it is a sales pitch, that is what I am suggesting.

Mr. Speaker: Well, I do not think that is a point of order. The hon. member for Yorkview has the floor.

Mr. Young: Mr. Speaker, there are a lot of ways of drawing red herrings across the trail. We know that some years ago a company from Denmark established a pulp mill in British Columbia where the pollution to water is minimal. That has been done.

We know that in United States pulp mills have been established where the same thing is true. That has been done. Yet, we are being told that in this province we have to have time for a pulp industry to develop techniques. They are researching. They are spending millions, but the fact is that our waters are still being polluted.

The hon. member spoke about Lake Erie and contended that Lake Erie is not quite as bad as has been pictured and that the fish population is still good there. Well, that may be true. Perhaps some people have presented Lake Erie as being far worse than it is today, but Lake Erie is in a desperate situation nonetheless.

I have here, a statement from Barry Commoner, who is chairman of The Department of Botany and director of the Centre for Biology of Natural Systems at Washington University, and he says:

In recent years Lake Erie has deteriorated so badly that the game fish that once abounded there are almost entirely gone and beaches are open only occasionally. Swimming is often curtailed because of high bacterial counts in the water and the revolting stench of rotting algae and dead fish on the beaches. Boat owners are hesitant to take their craft into areas where oily material will cling to the hull. In some parts of the lake the waters are a murky green from algae that thrive on the waste dumped into the water. During the summer months the western basin of Lake Erie contains a mass of algae that sometimes covers 800 square miles and has a thickness of two feet.

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): Sounds good, does it not?

Mr. Shulman: That is the lake he says is all right!

Mr. Young: Then, he goes on to say:

Fish gave the first warning that the life of Lake Erie was changing. Until 1900 each of a number of valuable fish species—sturgeon, white fish, sisco, northern pike, walleye and blue pike—yielded annual crops of one million pounds or more. After the turn of the century there were successive reports of abrupt reduction of the fish crops. Typical is the history of the sisco catch—from 1885 to 1925 it averaged about 25 million pounds annually, about half the total Lake Erie fish crop. In 1926, the siscowet catch suddenly dropped to about six million pounds. With some fluctuation, the catch has since declined even more, reaching a scant 1,000 pounds in 1965.

Mr. Shulman: Shame!

Mr. Young: Today the total Lake Erie catch is about the same as it was in 1900. But more valuable fish have been replaced by rough fish, sheepshead, catfish, smelts and carp. As a result, the money value of the catch has declined sharply.

I have a statement here from Stewart Udahl, Secretary of the Interior of the United States, and he is talking about the blue pike.

Blue pike production for 1956 was nearly seven million pounds, worth $1,316,000. But in 1963 it was down to 200 pounds worth $120.

And he goes on to say that, when a body of water the size of Lake Erie becomes so polluted in that short time it is a threat that cannot be ignored. Except for the size of the water body involved, this same situation exists all across the land. Whether it be detergent foam bouncing along the surface of balefully bubbling brooks, or the great cloudy mass of algae which is sucking the life-giving oxygen out of the waters of our greatest lakes, the overriding problem is one of pollution.

The time to deal with it is running out. Water is the conservation scandal of our time. It is without a doubt our most abused resource.

Mr. Speaker, the hon. member has been speaking of the cost to the taxpayers, cost to industry. What he refuses to face is that we are now paying the cost, the cost of pollution in many, many ways.

We had a debate in this House a couple of years ago about the situation at Spanish River where KVP is pouring its pollution into that river and the report of how the fishing industry and the marine life was affected there. In other words, the fishing industry in that river and in that part of the lake is being affected and we are paying the cost in the form of a decreased industry and in the decreased value of fish.

At the same time, the resort owners are finding their businesses affected and have for years and this is true of every polluted river. We cannot ignore the fact that our industrial life is paying the cost right now.

As far as sport is concerned, the swimming is being affected in Lake Erie and along our rivers, Spanish River and other places. The old day of the swimming hole when young people and boys went out to swim near their own home towns is pretty well a thing of the past.

More than that, the people of Metropolitan Toronto—you say that the cost of cleaning up our pollution here on our lakefront is great, but the people of Toronto are having to drive north to Haliburton and Muskoka to find the recreation, the swimming and the boating there because they cannot go into the water here in their own backyard. Add up the cost of the gasoline, the cost of the whole business of seeking recreation a distance away from our homes and we find something of the cost we pay.

Now, back in 1959, according to an editorial in the local paper of March 31, 1965:

In 1959, the then Premier Leslie Frost implied that Toronto could have full use of the beaches restored by 1961.

By 1961, he said. In 1962, the authority said, "wait till next year". In 1967, the outlook for the western beaches is still uncertain.

Talk about cost; the cost of pollution. Not only the cost this way but the money cost which today is going into larger profits perhaps for many of our industries and a little bit smaller tax bill for our people; sooner or later this cost has got to be met out of the taxes or the people, any way, to clean up the situation. Far better to get at it. The sooner we get at it, the less the cost will be.

Mr. Speaker, I see that the time is running out, but I do want to emphasize this fact, that the—

Hon. J. H. White (Minister of Revenue): It is running out on the NDP.

Mr. Young: Running out on the Tory government.

The fact is that today this government can grapple with this problem and can solve it. The techniques are known, all it lacks is the courage to grasp the nettle, and face a problem that has to be solved. In the long run, the cost is going to be far less than if we allow this pollution to continue and then have to face up to it in the fullness of time.

Hon. H. L. Rowntree (Minister of Financial and Commercial Affairs): It is not my normal practice to comment on the speech but I do not think I have ever heard a—

Mr. Speaker: Order! The hon. Minister is out of order.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: —an irrelevant, unintelligent approach to a problem—

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: —as was presented from one of the—

Mr. Speaker: Order! The hon. leader—

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: —one of the finest men—

Mr. Shulman: The Minister is drunk!

Mr. Speaker: Order! The hon. Minister will adjourn the House. We will be done for the week.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: On Monday we will proceed with the Throne Debate, and I now adjourn the House.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree moves the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to.

---

MONDAY, FEBRUARY 10, 1969

The House met at 2.30 o'clock, p.m.

Prayers.

Mr. Speaker: Today our guests are in the east gallery, and they are students from Western Technical Commercial School in Toronto and York Humber High School, also from Toronto.

Petitions.

Presenting reports.

Motions.

Mr. Reilly moves that Mr. Rollins be substituted for Mr. Olde on the standing agricultural and food committee.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Speaker: Introduction of bills.

THE DEPARTMENT OF CORRECTIONAL SERVICES ACT, 1968

Mr. M. Shulman (High Park) moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend The Department of Correctional Services Act, 1968.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Speaker, the purposes of this bill are twofold; first to increase the possibility of rehabilitation of the prisoners; and second, to reduce the amount of homosexuality in our prisons by allowing conjugal visits.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Wentworth.

Mr. I. Deans (Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day I have a question of the Minister of Highways.

Will the Minister inform the House what action has been taken to alleviate the flooding problems affecting the homes of residents of Ancaster township, in the area of Woodworth Drive, caused by the construction of Highway 403?

Hon. G. E. Gomme (Minister of Highways): Mr. Speaker, recent investigations by the department engineers would indicate that there is no flooding of homes on Woodworth Drive. Modifications have been made to the drainage scheme in the area in connection with the construction of Highway 403 and ditch cleaning operations planned for this spring will generally improve the natural flow of water in the area.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for High Park.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of privilege, in reference to an article in the front page of Saturday's Telegram, in which there are two quotes. The first one reads: "Leslie Rowntree said last night that Doctor Morton Shulman threatened to get him"; and the second is: "The Financial and Commercial Affairs Minister said that Doctor Shulman said he would 'make me pay' for refusing to answer a question in the Legislature."

I wish to state for the record, sir, I have made no such comment at any time; and furthermore, at no time have I had any conversation with the hon. Minister on this or any other subject.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Oshawa.

Mr. C. G. Pilkey (Oshawa): A question to the Minister of Trade and Development.

1. Has the Minister made representation to Consolidated Industries Incorporated, of Cleveland, parent company of Kelvinator of Canada, urging them to retain the 340 workers in their London, Ontario, plant who received their layoff notices last Friday?

2. How many jobs were lost to Ontario in the last five years because of American take-over of industries?

Hon. S. J. Randall (Minister of Trade and Development): Mr. Speaker, my colleague, the hon. Minister of Revenue (Mr. White), has already talked to the president of the local unions with reference to this close-down. We read about it in the press and the minute we read about it we had our industrial officers contact Kelvinator to see what could be done to help both the employees and the company.

Insofar as the second question is concerned I will take this as notice, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for High Park.

Mr. Shulman: I have a question for the Minister of Correctional Services, Mr. Speaker.

In future tear gassings at Millbrook will it be possible to take sufficient precautions to prevent accidental gassing of prisoners in other wings?

Mr. Speaker, this is a supplementary question that was not accepted the other day.

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister of Correctional Services): I take it that the hon. member has a supplementary question all ready.

Mr. Shulman: The Minister has just heard it.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Speaker, I have sufficient confidence in the staff at Millbrook and, for that matter the staff in all our institutions, to feel assured that they always take such precautions.

Mr. Shulman: Why did it not work last time?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: That is the hon. member's opinion, not the opinion of the members of my staff — and that is not my opinion.

Mr. Shulman: That was the statement made by the Minister the other day —

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Hon. Mr. Randall: Maybe the wind was blowing in the wrong direction.

Mr. Shulman: There is lots of wind in his institutions.

I have a question, Mr. Speaker, for the Minister of Municipal Affairs. It is in five parts, Mr. Speaker.

1. Did the department issue receipts in March 1968, for goods for Cambrian Stationers and National Cash Register, which in fact had not been received?

2. Were invoices for these supplies sent to the audit office with a "goods received" stamp falsely signed?

3. Were arrangements made with these companies to put on March dates in order to empty the unused maintenance funds, and were these goods actually received in the following fiscal year?

4. When the auditors examined the department's books last June, did they detect this discrepancy?

5. During the 1967-68 fiscal year were over 25 per cent of the expenditures under maintenance charged to the wrong votes?

Hon. W. D. McKeough (Minister of Municipal Affairs): Mr. Speaker, in reply to the first part of the question, the department received invoices in March, 1968, in advance of some of the goods being received.

2. The invoices were falsely signed. Unfortunately several had been processed in error. However, these were detected by the audit examination and were subsequently corrected by journal entry.

3. No arrangements were made as described in the third part of the question. When purchase orders are placed, it is expected that the goods will be delivered on the date specified. However, there are occasions when the supplier is unable to meet the specified date, although he may have made partial delivery. Usually this creates no great problem, however, at the end of the fiscal year. It can affect the funds for the following year. Therefore every attempt is made to be sure delivery is made prior to March 31, in order to charge to the funds allotted for this purpose in that fiscal year.

4. As I have said this was corrected immediately; the audit staff advised the department of the error. As to whether that was in June, I think it was prior to June.

5. The answer to the last part of the question is no. The accounting method used was such that the goods were received into one account and then redistributed to the user account by the use of a journal voucher. This method was changed and goods are charged to the user vote at the time of delivery.

Mr. Shulman: Will the Minister accept a supplementary question?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Yes.

Mr. Shulman: Has sufficient change been made now so that in future no receipts will be issued for goods that have not been received? In other words, can we be sure this will not happen again?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: There have been some changes made, yes.

Mr. Shulman: Thank you.

Mr. D. Jackson (Timiskaming): I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker, concerning a recent statement that was made in committee.

At the first meeting of the committee on natural resources and tourism we were told by the chairman—and he was supported by several other members—I believe in error rather than a deliberate misleading of the committee, that we had no powers to direct anyone to appear before that committee. However, on Wednesday, November 20, on page 10 of Hansard, the chief government whip stated, I will quote, as follows:

Shall be empowered to examine and enquire into all such matters and things that might be referred to them by the House, and to report from time to time their observations and opinions thereon with the power to send for persons, papers and records.

So, Mr. Speaker, I would like to submit to you that the committee is empowered to look into certain aspects of natural resources and tourism; they are directed to look into those aspects of natural resources and tourism and we do have the power to bring people before us so that we can question them. And I would like here to guide this committee so that this mistake will be corrected and we will have proper guidance from our chairman in the future.

Mr. Speaker: I would point out to the hon. member for Timiskaming, as I have done on previous occasions when another member brought some similar matter to the attention of the House, that the committees, once set up, are autonomous within the limits of their jurisdiction and their powers.

If there is any reference desired to the House, it should be made in the ordinary way by the chairman of the committee by means of reports from the committee asking for either additional powers that the committee feel they do not have, or whatever the committee may wish. Therefore, I would respectfully suggest to the hon. member that such is the proper procedure in this instance. I am sure that the House would be glad to receive any report which the committee might wish to bring which would request some additional powers that are not already in the committee.

Mr. G. Ben (Humber): I accept the point made by Mr. Speaker in this regard. I would, however, like to draw to his attention that the quandary in which the hon. member who just sat down finds himself—as far as his committee is concerned—is not unique. Other committee members may also be experiencing the same difficulties.

For example, Mr. Speaker, the committee on health has decided to subpoena a number of individuals, and a number of questions arise from this: (a) Have they the right to subpoena? Is that the same as to “send for”? (b) If the person who is called fails to appear, what sanctions can they impose? In other words, can they charge him with contempt?

(c) Can we give witnesses the protection of The Evidence Act of Ontario and Canada?

I think these questions are of general interest to all committees, Mr. Speaker, and I think it would assist the work of this House and the work of the committees, if Mr. Speaker would take it upon himself to consult the chief law officers of the Crown and render as soon as possible an opinion which would be sanctioned by this House as to those particular aspects of the jurisdiction of these committees.

Mr. Speaker: I would agree with the hon. members for Timiskaming and also for Humber. These particular matters arise from time to time and they always caused difficulty. The difficulty was when Mr. Speaker produced an omnibus ruling, such has been suggested, by the law officers of the Crown. The hon. member for Humber will know, being a member of the legal profession, that different circumstances, of course, require and compel different actions as far as procedure goes.

I would be most pleased to discuss the matter with the Clerk of the House, with the chief law officer of Her Majesty in our province, when he returns from his present occupation and we will endeavour to see if there can be more guidance than that already given.

But my own view is that when these occasions arise—when things become difficult—the committee usually retains counsel and that counsel then advises the committee as to its legal rights and powers.

I think that is very wise, because the circumstances for each investigation that the committee makes differ. I understand that such is already being done by one of the committees mentioned by one of the hon. members. I would be pleased to follow this up and see if we can arrive at something which will be of assistance to all the members, in all the committees.

Mr. Jackson: Further point of order, Mr. Speaker. I intended to submit a question to the House leader this morning, and was refused by your office on the grounds that the House leader does not accept questions.

The question should have been answered by the Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts). However, we all know that the hon. Prime Minister will not be here. It is my opinion that it is a question of urgent, public importance, and that it should have been answered by someone; and the House leader being, in effect, the Prime Minister in the Prime Minister's absence, I submit to you that your office should not have refused it, but should have allowed the question to be directed to the House leader.

Mr. Speaker: May I first point out that there could be a great difference of opinion as to whether the actual question submitted was one of great public importance. It certainly was of importance to certain persons.

Second, I would point out that under the traditions of questions, questions are directed to the Ministry, the Ministry is represented by the Minister. The House leader—if there is such an official in this House—is not the head of a Ministry as such.

Therefore, so far as I am concerned, the hon. members, in asking questions, must direct them to the Ministry as represented by the Minister of whom they wish to ask a question.

Until there is some different ruling given, either by this House—the normal procedure of changing rules—or by directing Mr. Speaker, I remain firm that they must be directed to a member of the Ministry and not to a nebulous person who has no standing, so far as I know, apart from the Prime Minister, as House leader.

Orders of the day.

Clerk of the House: The first order, resuming the adjourned debate on the amendment to the amendment to the motion for an address in reply to the speech of the Hon. the Lieutenant-Governor at the opening of the session.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

Mr. L. M. Reilly (Eglinton): Mr. Speaker, you will recall on Friday when this debate was adjourned that I was discussing the difference in the attitude of leaders of the unions; how some were unilateral in their viewpoints without discussing or reading the report of Mr. Rand, and how others of course had found that there was some benefit from it. I had indicated to the House that Hugh Buchanan, the vice-president of the Ontario federation, found that there were several proposals, which, if implemented, would be helpful.

Mr. P. D. Lawlor (Lakeshore): The member has had a hard time finding anyone.

Mr. Reilly: Mr. Eric Hartley, president of the Ontario Federation of Construction Associations, expressed himself in a similar vein. He is reported to have said that the unions will defeat their own purpose if they carry out threats of a one-day work stoppage.

"Such work stoppages are illegal", he said. "This kind of action underlines the need for legislative changes to overcome abuses of existing legislation". He appealed to the unions to co-operate with management "to put our houses in order or government will be forced to do it for us".

The Toronto Globe and Mail also wrote some editorials in support of the late Mr. Justice Rand and his proposals. In the issue of September 6, there was a two-column editorial entitled, "A Fine Controversial Report". In the opening paragraph it says:

Ontario owes much gratitude to Ivan C. Rand for the job he tackled as the Royal commissioner to inquire into labour-management problems in this province. The 84-year old former Supreme Court of Canada Justice has done more in the past two years than most men half his age would have either the capacity or the daring to undertake.

The editorial concludes by saying:

The Rand report, in fact, is a document which must command the industrious and immediate attention of the Ontario government. Premier John Robarts could not be expected to accept all its recommendations; but certainly he should examine them all with an open mind, and with the determination that the examination will lead to nothing less than revolutionary legislation.

Again, on November 7 another editorial appeared in the Globe and Mail, which points out the need to protect the public. It is only a short editorial, Mr. Speaker, and deserves to be read in its entirety. It is entitled:

THE FORGOTTEN PUBLIC

Labour Minister Dalton Bales reminded the Ontario Federation of Labour this week that he must delay action on the controversial Rand Report on Labour Disputes until he has heard the views of interested parties. He mentioned, of course, the opinions of organized labour and organized management, both of which are preparing better documented analyses than their shoot-from-the-hip first reactions. He will also seek guidance from a special inquiry into construction labour relations and the forthcoming federal task force report on labour relations.

The missing voice in Mr. Bales' choir of advisers is the public itself—the confused and ignored third party the Minister recognizes "is from time to time caught in a squeeze that is not of its own making". In whatever he can salvage from the bold catalogue of Rand proposals, Mr. Bales must give high priority to ways of protecting from unreasonable injury the public witnesses to private quarrelling.

One need not stretch the memory far to identify strikes which have caused more harm outside an industry than within: the Seaway and Lakeshore holdups of last summer would do for a start. Even the endless strike of Quebec liquor employees, in addition to the ruin it visits on the workers themselves, has robbed the public coffers of badly needed funds.

Obviously, Mr. Bales' meditations must include as a means to protect the public some of the Rand views on compulsory arbitration. He is right to give a full and realistic hearing to the views of the parties such solutions would bind but he cannot ignore the fact that at some stage in most disputes, the interest of the voiceless and innocent disorganized third party must take precedence. A government, as Mr. Bales wisely recalls, "has the responsibility for legislating on behalf of all groups in society."

No doubt the theory that compulsory arbitration could lead to defiance and anarchy will be drawn to the Minister's attention. But disorder and violence are normally the refuge of those with bankrupt arguments. Mr. Bales must map out his strategy on more rational premises. Almost any change would be an improvement on the status quo.

Several other newspapers across Ontario have reacted favourably to many of the late Mr. Justice Rand's recommendations. Here are some excerpts from an editorial in the Toronto Daily Star of Friday, September 6, under the caption, "Rand report: An end to jungle law?"

After this summer's series of inconvenient and costly strikes, the public—if not unions and management—should be receptive to the theme of Ivan C. Rand's Royal commission on labour disputes.

That theme, stated with force and urgency, is that there must be more regulation of labour-management relations to uphold the interests of society as a whole.

"The alternative," says the former Canadian Supreme Court justice, "is social anarchy and chaos, the reality of which we are witnessing today in different parts of the world."

He sees no ethical basis for strikes by public service employees, and would subject them to compulsory arbitration by the Industrial Tribunal. The Star agrees, provided such a tribunal is obliged to adopt standards that guarantee public servants fair wages and working conditions compared with those in private industry.

The commissioner has made a conscientious and intelligent attempt to balance the rights of, and the economical pressures on, labour and management during a strike.

They conclude the article by saying:

The Rand report is the work of a great jurist who cares about social justice as well as industrial peace and public order. It deserves careful study—not snap condemnation or endorsement—as a blueprint for labour law reform in Ontario.

Under the caption "Rand Proposes Prickly Solution", the London Free Press says this on its editorial page of September 7:

Everything in the Rand Royal commission report is intelligently reasonable which was only to be expected from Ivan C. Rand.

Unions must be required to be responsible for their actions, and Mr. Rand would make unions legal entities, able to sue or be sued in civil courts.

There lies the rock on which the whole plan may founder.

If unions are considered corporate entities, if they can be sued for infringements of the contracts they make for their members, unions are going to have to exercise much greater responsibility or face punishing judgments against their treasuries. Wildcat strikes such as the recent Ford walkout could lead to a Ford suit against the union for lost profits during the walkout.

Unions will fight this vigorously, indeed have already reacted strongly against the idea. It will be a brave government which will introduce it.

It should be introduced, because unions today are just as powerful (often more so) than the corporations with which they deal. If corporations can be sued for failure to adhere to a contract, unions should be responsible in law also.

The powers suggested for the new labour tribunal are almost dangerously sweeping. If it is established, it will require much discussion and debate before it is in legislative form. In the long run, some such tribunal will be required; otherwise the province's economy can be gradually damaged to the detriment of everyone in Ontario. The punishing strikes of the past several months have persuaded many people that new controls are needed on both labour and management.

Mr. C. G. Pilkey (Oshawa): Would the member accept a question, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Reilly: Well it is possible, Mr. Speaker, that I will perhaps answer his question as I go on through the debate. If not, I will be glad to consider it at the end.

Mr. Pilkey: Not likely. Oh no; would the member not accept a question?

Mr. Reilly: I cannot anticipate his question, Mr. Speaker, but I am suggesting to him that I may be able to answer his question as I proceed through the speech.

Mr. D. Jackson (Timiskaming): He can hand it out but he cannot take it!

Mr. Reilly: To continue:

Mr. Rand's competence is unquestioned. The whole labour-management question has had a thorough airing in hearings before him. Ontario has been well served by his prodigious efforts and he is to be commended for his work.

Under date of September 9, the Hamilton Spectator had a lucid and enlightening editorial about employer-employee relations. Here is part of it in which they refer to the Rand report:

And Mr. Rand is generous. Generous because he is prepared to accord unto labour leaders, company presidents, his proposed tribunal members, politicians, and the public itself, collective possession of his own quality.

Here memory stirs. Just as Mr. Rand a couple of years ago reviewed for the federal government the conduct of Mr. Justice Leo Landreville and found it wanting according to his, Mr. Rand's, standards of morality, he has in this case reviewed the rationale of labour disputes and found it wanting according to the standards of his own wisdom and intellect.

In both cases he sets goals to which men may aspire but which they seldom attain. Mr. Rand, a remarkable man, seeks the same remarkability in others.

Would that he could find it, but we don't think he can.

The danger of his approach is that the organs of communication, vested interest, propaganda and politics may cloak the word "tribunal" in the cloth of slogan and send it crashing into the legislative ashcan; a verbal shibboleth too controversial to be touched.

Yet there must be a tribunal somehow, somewhere, under some name, to give the public a voice in the clanging disputes which inconvenience, economically penalize, and infringe upon the rights of the great mass of people who are indeed a legitimate third party to collective bargaining.

Mr. Rand has imposed on the Robarts government a duty of political expertise and statesmanship. The tribunal as he describes it cannot come to be, not yet anyway, because its creation would be destructive and its function abrasive and totalitarian in the eyes of men.

But a lesser tribunal, with the power to inform the public, exert moral suasion, and to rule on specific, limited aspects of the rights of workingmen, employers and public is a distinct necessity.

Mr. Speaker, the Financial Post of September 14 carried an article entitled, "Climate Seems Right for New Laws to Curb Unions' Power". Here are two short paragraphs which illustrate the opinion expressed:

Legislative limits on the way in which unions handle power are likely to increase over the next few years. The climate is right. Legal and academic thinkers are increasingly critical of organized labour. Public opinion towards unions appears increasingly short-tempered. Sympathy for labour has been dissipated by the various strikes in public or semi-public services which at one time or another in the past two years have involved teachers, hospital employees, municipal employees, railroad workers, postal workers, even liquor store clerks.

These strikes have inconvenienced large numbers of people not directly involved.

Referring to the late Mr. Rand's proposed industrial tribunal the Financial Times of Canada in its issue of September 9 has this to say:

Behind the tribunal proposal is Mr. Rand's concern that the disruptive forces of a labour dispute be confined as much as possible to those directly involved. In essence, he says that the rights of both management and labour must on occasion be subordinated to those of society. But he stops short of recommending blanket compulsory arbitration.

This is similar to the position taken by the British Columbia government earlier this year when it established a labour commission with powers to impose arbitration when the public good is endangered. No other province has anything comparable. Mr. Rand's goals are quite clear:

"What is sought is, within the limits of fairness to both parties, to increase the pressures toward agreement with the minimum of external intervention."

Mr. Rand leaves no doubt as to the importance he attaches to his subject: "... the question of labour relations is considered to be one of the most, if not the most, important internal issues facing western democracy.

"We have not, as yet, produced an acceptable framework of ideals to replace the crudely developed bargaining, conciliation and strike ritual; and only by a concentration of first-class abilities in action can we hope to evolve schemes of solution which will modify or eliminate the present disfiguring and wasteful procedures."

Mr. William Gold writes an interesting article in the Spectator under date of November 1, under the caption "Labor's Real Motive". Referring to Rand's recommendation about a labour union being regarded as a legal entity, he states:

The feeling persists that the labour leaders are really concerned over other, less publicized portions of the Rand report—portions which have a great deal of intrinsic validity and which do not depend upon the creation of the tribunal for enactment.

These provisions threaten the position of every labour leader in Ontario because they stipulate that a union should be designated a legal entity with the power to sue and be sued. In other words, any capricious one-day strike like the one now contemplated would probably result both in damages being assessed against union funds in civil court and possibly even proceedings against the union leaders in magistrate's court.

The recommendations also embody a number of technical methods for democratizing existing union structure. These would force union executives to consult more closely with their members; make them more vulnerable to the complaints of members; make it more difficult for international unions to stifle those who believe in Canadian autonomy.

It is therefore most important that the public at large be aware that the real point at issue is not really a tribunal of an awesome and repugnant nature, but a number of highly sensible and long overdue proposals quite rightly designed to put union leadership in the same category as everyone else—that is, under the law.

And what is wrong with putting the labour unions under the law? Labour unions have been recognized as legal entities in British Columbia and in Manitoba. Both these provinces have passed legislation making unions legal entities capable of suing or being sued. Why would union leaders resent their organizations being designated as legal entities? Is there something to hide? If it is a responsible trade union movement surely it has nothing to fear. Of course it will mean a greater discipline over militant members will have to be exercised, and that the leaders will have to be more responsible.

My viewpoint is that there is ample resources of manpower and money at the disposal of large unions. If they can finance huge strikes they can certainly finance a court action. The commissioner expresses it emphatically in his report when he says that:

A union should be made responsible as any individual or corporation is for wrongs, under the general law, done to others. We are well past any situation in which, for the benefit of any group, exemption from that responsibility should be continued.

The highly esteemed former Justice of the Supreme Court of Canada also indicated in his report that the public interest is often adversely affected when strikes occur. Today the public is demanding that it should not be inconvenienced unnecessarily by lengthy and expensive strikes. Granted that "a strike" is a legal act in Ontario and a recognized tool in our industrial relations today, but it is rapidly losing its effectiveness. When a strike occurs, how long it lasts, what inconvenience it causes the citizen, and what ill-effect it has upon the economy, deeply concerns the person on the street. Often the neutral person, a non-participant in the strike, is more adversely affected than the actual strikers.

Why is it that so many union leaders presuppose that strike action is inevitable? A settlement for the dispute must be found and ultimately often arises as a compromise. This province cannot afford to have a crisis in its industries week after week, and month after month. Surely there is a better method of settling labour disputes. Yet it appears to be getting worse from year to year and some strikes seem to linger almost indefinitely.

Most labour leaders have said that compulsory arbitration is not the answer, but they have been saying this for ten years. Then what is the answer? Commissioner Rand in his report indicates there are some essential services that should not be jeopardized by strikes. In fact, one of the key points of his report was that government should have the power to declare when a dispute is not in the public interest and refer it to the tribunal for arbitration.

In other words when direct negotiations and mediation have failed, it may be necessary to resort to compulsory arbitration. In fact, better settlements are often made through arbitration than by a strike. It has not been proven that arbitration will produce less for the employees than a strike. In other words, it is my view that no group should have the right to deprive people of the necessities of life. This is particularly true of the essential services provided by government. If competitive industry goes on strike citizens can generally get a competitive product elsewhere, but when a government service strikes, there is nowhere else for them to turn. Not only is it true in the government sector but also in other sectors of our economy.

Many industries that extend beyond municipal or provincial jurisdiction, such as the trucking industry or a privately owned gas company, could constitute a monopoly in their fields and are of great public concern. According to a newspaper report, 250,000 householders in New York City were deprived of fuel delivery because the drivers were on strike.

Now a fuel truck driver at this time of the year becomes pretty essential. Absence of fuel can have ill-effect upon the health and well-being of the individual. It could be argued by union leaders that homeowners affected can visit their friends or buy auxiliary heaters, or just suffer the inconvenience in silence. Regardless of the circumstances and the reasons behind the strike, innocent people were involved in what many erroneously consider to be a private warfare.

The New York Times of Monday, December 16, concluded its analysis of the critical New York situation as follows:

SNOW AND STRIKES

New Yorkers, digging themselves out from under the season's first heavy snowfall yesterday, could take comfort from the fact that the snow had held off until 20,000

Consolidated Edison employees began reporting back to their jobs after a two-week strike.

Quite apart from the damage that snow and ice inflict on transmission lines, a further hazard to electric service is presented by the salt-spreaders the city uses to keep the streets passable. The salt, filtering through manholes, plays havoc with underground cables. Even the supervisors who manned Con. Edison plants throughout the strike could not have coped with that kind of disruption.

The article concludes by saying:

Now that the Edison workers have ended their exercise in irresponsibility, fuel oil drivers are moving into the vacuum with a runaway strike that jeopardizes household heat in the midst of a flu epidemic.

The final sentence, Mr. Speaker, is this:

—The Christmas gift New Yorkers need most is a strike insurance policy covering all vital services.

Commissioner Rand points out that some of the powerful international union leaders are willing to consider a form of arbitration. Mr. George Meaney, president of the AFL-CIO presented to President Johnson's committee, a submission that strongly recommended arbitration by an independent board where collective bargaining was deadlocked.

According to a report in the Globe and Mail, of December 19, Mayor Lindsay is considering use of Taft-Hartley law in New York's fuel strike. It goes on about the strike:

About 250,000 persons already were reported shivering in homes where central heating was cut off for lack of oil. Hospitals and nursing homes lowered their heat, although given top priority on available oil.

Mayor John Lindsay asked his legal aides to determine whether the federal Taft-Hartley Law could be invoked to force an 80-day cooling off period in the strike.

One of the most controversial points in the Rand report is the creation of an industrial tribunal. One basic opposition that I have to it is that it seems to intrude on free collective bargaining. I resent further encroachment of government into the affairs of business and labour; and this is not the first time I have said this in the House.

I do not like an additional governmental body telling anyone what must be done, particularly without having a right of appeal from it.

If we are to have a tribunal, the right of appeal must be included and the tribunal's powers must be very carefully defined by the Legislature. An impartial tribunal, non-political in structure, and comprising highly competent personnel selected from the ranks of industry, labour, academic and legal professions, could help solve some of the labour controversies which exist today.

Another recommendation of Commissioner Rand is that an opportunity should be given to employees to ascertain whether a strike should continue. Sometimes the decisions of a few do not reflect the real wishes of all the workers. I personally have received telephone calls from the wives of employees who are on strike and have been told that their husbands would like to return to work but are bound by a strike vote conducted months earlier.

Mr. Rand suggests that after 45 days the employees should be permitted to ask for a secret vote to ascertain whether the strike should continue or not. This seems like a good idea to me. What harm is done if we allow the employees involved to find out by secret ballot whether it is really the wish of most of the membership, or whether it is a few union bosses who wish to continue the strike?

Another suggestion that the late Mr. Rand makes in his report is that after 90 days either management or strikers could make an application to the Tribunal for an award. I don't think that this is an unreasonable suggestion. In fact, I think there is a lot of merit in it. This would help to avoid the conflict and the difficulty that the hon. member for Oshawa (Mr. Pilkey) talked about in connection with the Proctor Silex strike in Picton, Ontario.

If a tribunal found that the Proctor Silex Company had been unreasonable and had not bargained in good faith, and had been paying inadequate wages in comparison with other firms in the same industry, a decision by the tribunal could result in ending the strike. As things stand today a company can successfully defeat a strike. I should judge that the hon. member for Oshawa and all members interested in labour would meet this with a lot of acceptance by workers who are anxious to return to work, and get on with their job.

Secondary picketing or the extension of picketing against third persons was another item discussed in Rand's report. In my view every employer has the right to continue in business and it is not fair to the businessman operating a legitimate business to have someone unfairly picket his place of business. For instance, in the Peterborough Examiner strike some local drug store might be selling newspapers, which represents less than 1 per cent of his total business volume, yet he is embarrassed and unnecessarily humiliated by a demonstration of pickets from a nearby plant.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Reilly: I know Peterborough better than my friend the hon. member does. Yes, better than he does.

In a case like this the commissioner contends that secondary picketing should not be allowed, and I agree with him wholeheartedly. Certainly I am not happy with labour laws which permit interference with the business of an innocent person who is in no way a party to the dispute. The late Mr. Rand has suggested correctly that picketing should be restricted to the place of business or the place of employment that is directly involved in the labour dispute.

The former justice of the Supreme Court of Canada has also made some strong recommendations about injunctions. As I understand it, injunctions are generally granted after court hearings at which both parties are represented.

Mr. I. Deans (Wentworth): The hon. member does not understand it, my friend!

Mr. Reilly: Hold off, I say to my friend, until he hears the full statement, and perhaps he will change his tune.

But ex-parte injunctions have often been granted arbitrarily on the evidence of one side, generally management, where they would submit evidence that there had been or was a possibility of picket line violence or damage to company property. The commissioner indicated that ex-parte injunctions should only be issued in case of an emergency, and I do not quarrel with that suggestion. Undoubtedly an emergency may exist where damage or obstruction or injury may take place.

In my view, there is room for the use of an emergency injunction, but as a general rule if strikers behaved responsibly an emergency would not be necessary. I agree with the thought that when a party is accused of something, he should be notified and should have an opportunity to defend himself. In this way both parties would be represented before an injunction is issued.

On a personal note, I was keenly disappointed that Commissioner Rand failed to make a clear-cut recommendation proposing that The Labour Relations Act be modified to at least give a person who cannot in good faith endorse or financially support a certain union the freedom to "opt out" without any fear of losing his livelihood.

I have previously indicated to this Legislature a number of instances in Ontario where men who are deeply convinced that they should not in any way support certain trade unions were discriminated against and lost their employment. In my view, these workers, practically all of whom are also voluntarily supporting the government-certified Christian Labour Association of Canada, should at least be given the legal right to pay the equivalent of trade union membership dues to a recognized charity of their own choice, or to a charity mutually agreed upon by the parties involved.

I respectfully ask the Minister of Labour (Mr. Bales) to give immediate and serious consideration to this urgent need and to introduce, at the earliest opportunity, an appropriate amendment to The Labour Relations Act which will grant employees, who, on account of their cherished beliefs, can not in good faith support a particular union, the legal right to pay the equivalent of union dues to a charity as proof of good faith in the matter. This is certainly the absolute minimum that the government should do for these conscientious citizens.

I recommend therefore, to the Minister, that he introduce an amendment providing that any employee who satisfies the Minister to the extent that he declares and explains in an affidavit that his basic beliefs prevent him as a matter of conscience from being a member of or paying dues or contributions to the trade union that is a party to the collective agreement to deduct from his wages for remittance to a government-recognized charitable organization an amount at least equal to the dues that a member of the trade union is required to pay, shall be exempted from paying union dues.

There already are good Canadian precedents for this type of protection of civil liberties. The Trade Union Act of Saskatchewan gives the Labour Relations Board the power to grant identical exemptions. The federal government's Treasury Board and the Public Service Alliance of Canada have included similar provisions in their collective agreements covering civil servants.

Right now, as I am talking, five employees of the Burlington Board of Education will probably lose their jobs because they refuse to authorize their employer to deduct certain union dues from their wages. It should be pointed out that these five caretakers have many years of seniority. They have been employed with the board of education for several years and were hired long before the Canadian Union of Public Employees became their fellow-workers' bargaining agent. It should also be remembered that these employees have offered to pay at least the equivalent of union dues to a recognized charity.

For this legislative assembly to ignore this deplorable discrimination would be to sanction the denial of the fundamental freedoms and civil rights to which every Canadian citizen is justly entitled. Especially after we have just celebrated the twentieth anniversary of the United Nations' universal declaration of human rights. We should have the courage of political conviction and the deep concern for justice necessary to ensure that the freedoms of association, religion, opinion and expression as well as the rights to work and to free choice of employment are indiscriminately extended to all. Such positive, legislative action would be entirely in keeping with the spirit of our own civil rights legislation as well as with the letter of the UN's declaration, which in article 20 states that "no one may be compelled to belong to an association."

Surely, in this decade when we have practically everywhere gone out of our way to recognize the right to dissent and men's freedom to do so, we can hopefully also display some tolerance to those relatively few workers who on the basis of their particular beliefs refuse to pay union dues. Surely we have not become that insensitive to minority rights that we will continue to ignore this serious civil liberties problem. Surely there is still plenty of tolerance among us to allow for difference of opinion and for mutual respect.

It is my earnest hope that the hon. members on both sides of the House will all support my urgent plea that the government introduce an amendment to The Labour Relations Act that will effectively end this intolerable form of discrimination.

In closing, let me repeat that generally speaking Commissioner Rand has made many worthwhile observations and suggestions for the improvement of labour relations in Ontario. It is my sincere hope that the Minister of Labour and his executive staff will study these thoughtful recommendations and wherever possible introduce appropriate legislation to implement them. Such legislation should safeguard the fundamental freedoms and legitimate rights of all involved in labour disputes today, namely, the trade union, management, as well as the worker and the public.

Mr. H. MacKenzie (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I take this opportunity to commend you once again, sir, on the quality of your performance in interpreting the rules and procedures of this House, and in maintaining stability and sensibility during those uproarious, frolicking moments when pandemonium attempts to take over.

Your job is not one for beginners nor is it one for the timid and undecided. I commend you, sir, and hope you will continue to fervently lay down the rules and directions for those on all sides of this House who occasionally stray.

The Speech from the Throne for this second session of the 28th Parliament by our new and honoured Lieutenant Governor was one of enlightenment and reassurance in many ways—and as well—outlined in a rather fair and accurate way the state of the province and certain conditions existing for which I am sure the people of Ontario are mighty thankful.

I allude in particular to statements regarding: "Opportunities for human betterment which abound in every land."

No province in Canada—and I question if any province in the world—can provide the same opportunities for human betterment for those who are able and willing both mentally and physically to apply their talents, their skills, and their knowledge. No province in the world has provided more for her people than this great province.

And into the future—it is certain and sure this province can continue to maintain its enviable position—continue to maintain it with the quality of our systems, with our rich resources, with our climate, and with the will of our people to progress and surpass past performance.

But it can continue to maintain it only if great care and forethought is exercised in the planning and regulation of our society.

Whether or not the degree of care and forethought necessary to ensure our future is being applied to the planning and regulation sufficiently in all directions is open to question.

Only by examining and re-examining those areas which greatly affect our people and our economy can we ensure complacency is not overtaking us—that the maximum concern and effort is being applied by all members of the government and their staff to the problems existing, and to future planning for the betterment of our people.

And by planning I include, Mr. Speaker, the provision of funds to make possible implementation of plans. With this thought in mind I would like to suggest to this House, Mr. Speaker, that the system of highways connecting the capital city of Canada with the rest of this province is a most inadequate system—inadequate in that some stretches of highways have not sufficient capacity to service a town, let alone a metropolitan area; inadequate in that some stretches of highways are exceedingly dangerous with their narrow gauge surface and deep ditches; inadequate on one stretch of highway in that the volume of traffic must surely exceed the safe capacity by 100 per cent.

Added to this is the unusual nature of the highway—a nature which for some unknown reason seems to create a proneness to accidents for many who drive on it. The record of accidents and deaths on this stretch of highway, Mr. Speaker, is so bad it is known in eastern Ontario as the "killer strip".

And this substandard two-lane stretch of highway occurs, Mr. Speaker, in the main highway connecting the capital of Canada with the province of Quebec's four-lane highway leading to the city of Montreal.

It is possible to appreciate, Mr. Speaker, that because of the presence of the Federal government in Ottawa this government may not feel the need for industrial and commercial development—which only occurs with a good system of roads—has to be promoted quite so rapidly as other parts of the province. This may be a valid reason—if it is the reason—but it has to be a very narrow approach if it is.

What, Mr. Speaker, could be more fundamental to our international economic position than the impression we give to the representatives of other countries who stay in such large numbers in our national capital.

Surely, there is no more fundamental reason than to create a good impression on foreign residents and visitors to our national capital and the surrounding area—good impressions to ensure that foreign nations look upon us as a country which believes in and follows high standards. Thereby we ensure that our own representatives, in seeking foreign markets, are looked upon in that light.

Then, too, Mr. Speaker, the people of eastern Ontario surely must have a right to the same opportunities of commercial and industrial development—which comes with good highways and good transportation systems—as people in other parts of Ontario, if we are going to attempt to adhere to the principles of a just society.

I have looked carefully at the plans the Minister of Highways (Mr. Gomme) and his department have developed for the national capital area—plans which would connect our national capital to the borders of our great southern neighbour with a four-lane highway, and plans which would connect our national capital to our cherished sister province to the east with a four-lane super highway.

Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Highways has in fact formally announced the detailed planning and construction programme for Highway 417—a four-lane route to connect our national capital with the four-lane highway which was completed two years ago by the province of Quebec to the border of Ontario.

As I understand it, the Treasurer (Mr. MacNaughton) will make funds available to complete this highway in six years. It can only be concluded then that Ontario is eight years behind Quebec in recognizing and providing adequate highways to the national capital.

The announcement of a detailed planning and construction programme for a four-lane highway to connect the national capital to our southern neighbour—a highway which will carry the load presently being carried by Highway 16, the one commonly referred to in the national capital as the cow trail, has not yet been made.

In this case it can only be concluded that the Treasurer is not yet willing to provide the funds to let the Minister of Highways move ahead. It is quite evident from the activity of surveyors in the area that The Department of Highways is ready to go when Treasury indicates a willingness to finance the project.

Mr. Speaker, the new highways I mention are long past due—and with respect, Mr. Speaker—I do suggest the Treasurer should provide the funds to the Minister of Highways that he may implement his plans and clear up this depressing condition existing around our national capital.

Poor highways is one basic problem around our national capital, a problem which is hindering industrial and commercial development in the area and hindering our image in foreign countries.

But there are other problems—problems which are much closer to the people and which are having a pronounced direct effect —particularly so on the very large number of our people who just do not have sufficient earnings to circumvent the ill effects of the problems.

And there are several severe problems of this nature, Mr. Speaker. Pollution of our Ottawa River, and pollution of our Rideau River—the summertime recreation and playgrounds of so many of our people—is by no means the least of these. This pollution is caused by uncontrolled waste disposal from shore establishments, by farm land run-off along the shores, and by boats.

The Ontario Water Resources Commission deserves great credit for the degree of pollution control it has already instigated in the area; one shudders to think what it would be like today if it had not been involved in the area expansion over the past few years. Unfortunately, it seems they cannot always move firmly in the direction they know they should, and occasionally mechanical break-downs occur and pollution control goes way out of control.

Only last summer the beaches on both river were closed for an extended period of time just when they were most needed. The total effect on our people, with the loss of their recreational facilities during the hot summer weather, is difficult to assess with any sort of yardstick we're used to. But it's not hard to believe our children greatly need this type of recreation and occupation during the summer months when school is recessed.

And it is easy to believe the incidence of mental instability will increase among our adult people without the therapy this type of recreation affords.

Imagine for a moment if you will, Mr. Speaker, that the water recreation facilities are suddenly taken away from everyone in this province during the hot summer months. Can you imagine the outcry of despair? With this thought in mind, you may have a measure of the way it affects so many of our people in the national capital area—people who cannot afford the costs to go elsewhere. And they number in the thousands.

Mr. Speaker, the hazards to pollution of the rivers in the national capital area must be eliminated—completely eliminated if possible. Where it is not possible, or where there are obstacles, I would, with respect, request the details be made known.

This problem must be cleared up—we must not force our people—either due to carelessness, neglect, or predictable breakdown—to lose their facilities for another summer.

Roads and pollution—two very real problems in our national capital area. But these two problems, bad as they may be, are completely overshadowed by the plight of many of our people who are either on low fixed pensions, on low weekly earnings, or on assistance.

All of the people in these groups are caught up firmly in the squeeze of rising costs. Add to this problem a severe deficiency of low rent housing and you arrive at the extreme situation where they cannot provide for their needs. It is a set of circumstances beyond belief—in one of the richest provinces in the world—and in the national capital of this country.

How this could occur and what all the circumstances surrounding this situation are, is not yet clear. But it is abundantly clear the situation exists, and exists in a severe and extended way. There is never a week goes by that I do not receive phone calls from people needing assistance—people who have low incomes of one form or another, or who are on government assistance.

In the cases investigated by myself or by my secretary, and the very substantial number of cases reported, the need for further assistance is genuine in the fullest sense—many are suffering varying degrees of hardship and discomfort and in some cases are in need of substantial help. Many cases could be detailed but no useful purpose would be served by them at this time. But let me outline one or two examples of rents, rent increases, and budgets that you may be able to get a measure of the situation.

On the matter of rents only: A year ago I had correspondence from several public service superannuates living in apartments in the centre of Ottawa. One tenant with a one-bedroom apartment had been paying $160 a month—his rent increase last year was $25 a month for a total of $185 a month. The other tenants were faced with similar increases.

Another case I have had recent correspondence on—a tenant on a fixed pension has been renting a two-bedroom apartment for several years, a minimum standard unit in a building 33 years old. Before May 1, 1967, the rent was $105 a month. On May 1, 1967 it was raised to $115 a month. He now has notice that by May 1, 1969, it will be raised to $150 a month—a 30 per cent increase. I understand the other tenants are faced with the same increases.

On the matter of rents and budgets—one case about as difficult as I have heard of

was a responsible woman in the constituency with four children she is determined to look after. Her husband had gone astray some time ago, and she was on mother's allowance. I first heard from her on Friday, October 11, 1968. At that time she reported that she had 60 cents in her purse and no food in the house. In the investigation carried out, the following details were reported:

She had moved into their three-bedroom rundown apartment in December, 1966, at a rent of $75 a month. On April 1, 1967, the rent was increased to $95 a month. During the summer of 1967 the landlord removed the oil space heaters and installed a furnace.

On September 1, 1967, the rent was increased to $115 a month. On April 1, 1968, the rent was again increased to $125 a month. On October 1, 1968, the rent was again raised to $150 a month. The mother was forced to give notice of vacating even though she had no place to move. At this time her mother's allowance was $238 a month plus the federal baby bonus of $20 a month. From this budget deduct rent, light, phone. This leaves less than $100 for food, clothing, drugs, and incidentals for one month for five people.

Fortunately after she had vacated and separated her family among friends for three weeks, the provincial representatives were able to get her into a subsidized low-rental unit. On Monday, February 3, 1969, she reported that she can now buy enough food so that she and the children are not hungry all the time, but cannot afford to buy clothing. So far they have been able to get by with clothing provided by friends and the church.

Just two further examples of the hardships unconscionable rent increases can create:

The first is the case of a man and wife—50 years of age, with six children from four years to 19 years of age, who rented a house in the centre of the constituency from a Hamilton landlord who had just purchased it. Rent for this so-called four and a half bedroom house had been $100 per month. The Hamilton landlord raised it to $175 per month.

The husband is unable to work due to illness. In order to get by they have three boarders who each pay $100 per month, and a 19 year old daughter who brings home $145 per month. Added to this is family assistance of $295 per month, and baby bonus of $36 per month. Carefully note there are 11 people in this so-called four and a half bedroom house—which necessitates the father, mother, and four children sleeping in one room.

The last example I want to bring before you is a man and wife in their early 40's with six children, in age from two to 11 years, who rented a so-called three-bedroom house from the same Hamilton landlord. Rent previously for the house had been $100 per month. The new landlord raised it to $150 per month.

The father is unable to provide due to illness; his outstanding debts amount to $1,400. This family gets by barely with the $324 per month supplied by the family services, the $38 per month baby bonus, and one boarder who pays $60 per month. Note there are nine people living in a so-called three-bedroom house with one used for a boarder and the others for the family of eight.

These last two examples, Mr. Speaker—when you deduct rent, heat, light, phone, and so on, and assess what has to be provided from the remainder in the way of food and clothing, you quickly realize the serious implications of unconscionable rent increases.

From these examples, Mr. Speaker, I would hope you can get some idea of what is happening. There is probably little to be gained in detailing more cases. There are quite a large number of them, and from what members from other cities say, it seems conditions there are as bad and maybe in some cases worse.

The city and department records are available for those who are interested, and if really interested, go from the records and talk with the people—and when you talk with the people, carefully assess the way in which they are compelled because of market conditions to distribute their money.

Some time ago when we in the national capital were warned of the serious situation existing, and the possibility of malnutrition among some of our people, I, like most others, failed to give serious recognition to the warning.

As yet I am not aware that it has in fact occurred, but no longer will I be surprised if it does, for the conditions necessary for it to exist are there—clear and definite, and the city council of our national capital has properly recognized this hazard of the children of our have-not families.

Many hours have been spent trying to decide the best approach to this problem—so far it has not been possible to develop any single plan since no one approach will prove satisfactory and because so much is interwoven with government policy on inter-related matters.

The approach to part of the problem over a long period is not so difficult in a manageable way—primarily it means building a sufficient number of housing units to meet the total needs of the community with rent adjusted to income and reasonable expenses.

In determining the rent, due consideration must be given to all reasonable operating costs including location and transportation. With regard to the type of housing to provide, Mr. Speaker, there is no substitute for single detached units for families, if there is to be any hope of generating pride of ownership and good citizenship among our have-not children as they grow up.

The record past and present of families with children in large multiple occupancy units is not enviable, and in the long run may cost far more to our society than the single detached. Most of the knowledgeable people I have talked with are of the firm opinion that low-rent multiple occupancy units must be restricted to those on low earnings, inadequate pensions, and assistance, who do not have children.

The short-term approach, the approach to meet the needs right now and for the next two years is by far the most challenging and the most serious since it is a near desperate situation for many people. Surely, Mr. Speaker, it must be recognized as a near desperate situation when the city council of our national capital would ask for rent control in the light of the record of rent control in other cities and the deteriorating effect it has had on housing.

In the face of the very strong opposition it cannot help but generate in the business community and already has, as several members of this House must know, and having regard to the fact that many of the council members may be landlords and thus the controls are self imposed.

To fully understand this situation, it is quite necessary to go amongst the people who are experiencing the difficulties, and discuss with them their monthly budget, that is—How much for food? How much for clothing? How much for medicine and so on? And finally, how much for rent?

For the group of people with low earnings, and/or low pensions, you will find in general the percentage used for rent is far in excess of what it should be. For the group on assistance, the problem seems to be that when the field worker dealing with a particular case adds up allowances and needs, to arrive at the dollars and cents assistance allowance, the amount used for rent is arbitrarily fixed at some figure which is far less than the amount actually paid for rent—and as I understand it, they usually instruct the assisted people to look for cheaper accommodation—and when cheaper accommodation is not available, what do they do?

A case in point reported to me on December 19, 1968 was, two families on assistance where the rent paid was $190 for a three-bedroom row house and the amount allowed for assistance was $150. This difference between the rent allowance and rent paid can only be made up out of the clothing and food allowances.

The end result is that not enough is left over to provide for food, clothing and other necessities.

It is quite easy to sit back on each individual case and say: Why do they not do this? Why do they not do that? Why did they not save their money when they were working? If it were I? and so on.

Well, it should be kept in mind, Mr. Speaker, that if the groups we are discussing had all these answers, very few of them would in fact be in the grouping. With regard to the rent being paid — and the increases in rent during the past while — it seems quite evident the most exorbitant increases are occurring in units occupied by those in the groupings I have indicated, and I suppose it is because it is generally known that they have not the money to move with, and if they had, there is no place to move to.

In contrast to the grouping on low budgets, little is heard from the great majority of tenants except that their rents go up somewhat and so do their earnings.

The problems, Mr. Speaker, of those on low, fixed incomes, and those on assistance, in this period of rapidly increasing costs, and unconscionable rent increases, are most difficult problems. For the long term there is little doubt a consolidated assistance programme must be formulated which takes into account all factors, and variables, and which fully recognizes that a small percentage of our people cannot, for various reasons, properly provide for themselves.

The programme we have now is piecemeal, suffers inadequacies, and provides no incentive. For the short-term—until the shortage of low rent housing is alleviated — there are three approaches which must be considered.

The first is to allow for full rent paid in determining assistance to those presently on assistance, and assisting those on low fixed income who are slowly going under with unconscionable rent increases. It is quite apparent when you study the problem in depth that rent control for the city of Ottawa would not be required if the assistance programme were administered having full regard to existing conditions.

The second approach is to legislate and provide control over unconscionable rent increases, and thereby interfere with private business and eventually wage control and all this brings about.

The third approach is to leave it the way it is and let those in their distress and need continue, and hope we will not incur any long term ill effects from it. How it would be possible to follow this approach when children are involved is beyond my comprehension.

Mr. Speaker, this great province of ours has provided well for its people in past years. The incentives to industry and the resulting expansion of industry have kept us moving ahead at a great pace and within general terms, is providing more for everyone. The programme of forgiveness loans as an incentive to get good management who know how to earn profits into depressed areas is a superb one. It is to be hoped the Minister of Trade and Development (Mr. Randall) will continue to vigorously pursue his programmes — and ensure industry and commerce does expand to provide jobs that industry and commerce do make large profits, for in the first instance, they are the ones who must earn the wealth to pay all the bills.

The percentage of our people needing substantially more help is very small, but in terms of numbers — even one who is not getting sufficient food or adequate clothing is one too many.

The wealth of this province can be distributed a little bit more, Mr. Speaker, in order that our have-nots can be adequately looked after, and it must be. It is certain and sure that the basic shelter grant is a long way from being the right way to do it. I find it hard to believe that a government would collect hundreds of millions of dollars in taxes, then give it back to the people telling them they are over-taxed, and knowing all the while they are going to have to collect it back in, and at the same time asking the federal government for more tax room.

If the millions of dollars used to pay the basic shelter grant — and paid in millions of cases to people who did not need it and did not look for it — if these millions had been used wisely where it was needed — the city council of our national capital would not find it necessary to ask for rent control.

Mr. Speaker — it will take a good deal of courage on the part of this government to do the redistribution necessary to relieve and rectify the distressing situations existing — and certainly a good deal more than reflected in this session's Speech from the Throne.

Mr. D. Jackson (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, in rising to speak in this debate I had no intention of speaking on the Rand report. However, following that rather vicious attack on unionism that we got from the other side of the House, I feel that someone from this side, and particularly this party, should at least say something about it.

The hon. member for Eglinton (Mr. Reilly) has stated that we need all of these changes in order to make unionism and management co-operation work in Ontario. First of all he has failed to realize that we have a workable formula providing that government enforces it and that is cooperative, collective bargaining.

The Rand report has spelled out that after 45 days we go into compulsory arbitration to settle something that should have been settled by two people across a bargaining table which is completely ridiculous.

Does anyone in this House feel that two people are going to bargain in good faith when they know that after 45 days they can go to compulsory arbitration and someone else will make the settlement for them. Surely no one here can believe that; and I respectfully submit, through you, sir to the member for Eglinton, I do not think he believes it either. I very seriously question his motives in attacking unionism.

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister of Correctional Services): Out of order!

Mr. R. Gisborn (Hamilton East): Is the member saying the previous speaker had no motive behind his speech?

An hon. member: Is there any motive behind this member's speech?

Mr. Jackson: Very definitely!

Hon. Mr. Grossman: That is what the rules say.

Mr. Jackson: May I say that I seriously question his stated motives?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: That is worse!

Mr. Jackson: Mr. Speaker, when I first rose in this House in the last session to speak on the Throne Debate, I stated that although I would like to congratulate you on your appointment to the Speaker's chair, I would reserve judgment until after I had seen your performance in the last session.

Well, Mr. Speaker, in spite of many rulings that went against things that I had to say, the many times that I was ruled out of order, and in spite of what happened this morning when I rose on a point of order, I do believe that you have done a good job in that chair. Not only have you been elected to it, I feel that you have earned it.

I would also like to congratulate the member for Waterloo South (Mr. Reuter) on his reappointment to Chairman of the whole House, and in doing so I would like to say that I feel—

Mr. Gisborn: Have to reserve judgment on him too.

Mr. Jackson: —maybe his temperament does not suit him to it, because many times, I am quite sure, he felt like throwing the gavel at someone and getting up out of the chair and leaving the House; and I would suggest that he either increases the strength of his tranquilizers, or gets a heavier gavel and improves his aim.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please!

Mr. Jackson: I find it very interesting listening to these members, Mr. Speaker. However, because of the time, I would like to go on.

Again, in my speech of last year, I mentioned the terrible condition, the deplorable condition, of the highways in northern Ontario, and over this last year I must admit that some work has been done. Various sections of some of the highways I mentioned have been paved; some of the holes filled in, but the only thing I can say to be real truthful is that with the work that has been done we can go a little faster between the holes.

They have not done a job on our highways that is good highway construction in my opinion, and in the opinion of most of the people in the north, I might say. We have patched, we have ignored, we have put gravel where we need pavement, we have put pavement where we need gravel, and all we are doing is perpetuating the problem that we have had for the last 50 years in the north— or for the last 25 years at least.

In particular, Mr. Speaker, in the last session I mentioned the bridges in our area. In bridge construction there are many types of bridges. There are truss bridges, cantilever bridges, suspension, and all of the different types, and not being an engineer I cannot pass judgment on which bridge is better than the other or which bridge is the preferred bridge for a certain application.

In our area, though, we do not really care what kind of bridge is put up. All we do ask is that a bridge is put there when it is needed and that it is a safe bridge. To go into this, Mr. Speaker, I would just like to read a letter into the record. It is from the ratepayers of Marquis township, and it says:

The Department of Highways put up a sign some time ago saying "Bridge Closed for Repairs"—

And, Mr. Speaker, that sign has been there for three and a half years.

But as yet there have been no repairs or action taken on this matter.

It is our understanding that The Department of Highways are responsible for the repairs of all bridges. This bridge route is used for mail and a school bus service but it has been closed. The bus will not drive over it and the plough will not plough it. As it is now the bus has to take the long way around, which makes many extra miles a day for small children living on this road to travel.

I wrote to the department and I spoke to the Minister on at least two occasions about this bridge, and I would like to read some of the Minister's answers:

The department's engineers have investigated this request and have indicated that due to many previous repairs carried out on this structure, they cannot in all conscience recommend safe repairs at present short of reconstruction.

Our investigations indicate that the school bus route and system for picking up the children, while involving some increase in mileage, can be arranged without creating real hardship warranting replacement of the structure at the estimated cost.

And I will come back to that, Mr. Speaker.

I would like to go to one other bridge. I might also mention this bridge has been out for a length of time. It is still out and I will take it from there. The bridge, Mr. Speaker, I think almost equals an Ellery Queen novel, because we could call it "The Case of the Missing Bridge". Seven years ago there was a Bailey bridge across a river. One morning the residents in that area awoke and the bridge was not there any more; it had been taken away. It was taken away, Mr. Speaker, by The Department of Highways because it was not used enough. They felt, because the traffic over that bridge did not warrant a bridge of that type, they would just take it away. That was fine; if it were the decision of the department that they would put in something else and make it work, we had no disagreement. However, a letter dated September 17, 1968, after the bridge was out for six years, stated:

In reply to your letter of August 29, 1968, in connection with a request for a culvert, I have received a report from our district office which states that steps have been taken to supply and instal 50 feet of 60-inch-diameter culvert.

This letter was in answer to a letter written by one of the residents in Pense township, a man whose livelihood is directly involved with this bridge. Without this bridge, he does not have access to his farm land, he does not have access to his bush land, and effectively he has no income because of this bridge that was taken out. Six years afterwards, the department has said that it will put in a culvert.

To go on, Mr. Speaker, I received a letter from this gentleman—and I will not read that one into the record. It says that, although the construction was started and the culvert was put into place, the job was never finished last year. And we have wondered why.

In answer to my enquiries of the department, I would like to give you just a little bit out of a letter from the engineer in the New Liskeard district:

Subsequent to that date, my municipal foreman endeavoured to instal a culvert in late September. However, we found it necessary to abandon the project due to heavy rain and breakdown of equipment. It is my intention to proceed with the bulldozing and backfilling operations later this month or in January, once the frost is in the ground to facilitate movement of equipment.

If we continue to have difficulty at that time, the project will be postponed until next summer.

I submit, to you, Mr. Speaker, that there was no intention of doing it in January—it has not been touched—and it was fully intended by the department to postpone it until summer.

It will be seven years that that culvert and that bridge have been missing. For seven years the man has not been able to farm his land, he has not been able to cut his bush in order to provide even a minimum income—all because of the disregard of this government for the little guy in the country.

But to go on again to another one: Mr. Speaker, I would like to point out that in the New Liskeard district, which takes in quite a bit of area—only a small part of it in Timiskaming—in organized townships we have 169 bridges, in unorganized townships we have 92 bridges. And I would venture to say without any fear of contradiction from the department that at least 50 of those bridges are in a state of disrepair of some sort, that at least 20 of them are to be considered unsafe at this moment. I would also venture to say that it has been brought to the attention of the department at least 50 times; each time we receive the same old answer that because of lack of use, because of expense involved, there is no reason to put that bridge in or no reason to worry about repairing it.

I have another letter here, Mr. Speaker, I would like to read. It is addressed to the road superintendent, New Liskeard, Ontario. It says:

Dear Sir:

It has been brought to my attention that since some time in December the school bus driver has been instructed to have the children leave the bus at the bridge on the Wabi river at Uno Park, walk across the bridge, and the bus follows after, because the bridge is unsafe.

It has also been brought to my attention that the other bridge on the Wabi river on the concession road between Kearns township and Harley township has also been restricted to loads of less tonnage—as a matter of fact, to a maximum of four tons, which the driver tell me is less weight than the empty school bus.

Someone from the department also made the statement that he would not even drive his car across these bridges because of the danger of the bridge collapsing.

This is a very disturbing matter. My children, as well as about 30 other families, are involved in this. The bus driver is responsible for the children from the time he picks them up until they are brought to the school or back to their homes. What happens to the children if the bus does go through the bridge, even though the children are not on it? Does the bus driver have to risk his life? The bridge that has already been restricted to small vehicles is no better; already it has been admitted that this is also unsafe.

I really don't know what your answer to the problem would be, but admit the dangers, close the bridges and don't jeopardize the lives of our children.

I disagree with that letter. Close the bridges? My opinion is that this government should do something to repair those bridges. They tell us it is not economically feasible to repair a bridge, yet they will force the school bus to drive 40 and 50 miles out of its way to force children of six, seven and ten years of age to ride a bus for another hour a day. They will force farmers to go 40 miles out of their way in order to get to their farms and to town to get necessary supplies. And then tell us it is not economically feasible to repair a bridge!

Mr. Speaker, I suggest that the people in the north pay their taxes—they pay them with some question, but we do pay them—and I think we have a right to roads and a right to safe bridges.

The Minister has said at least twice and his aides have said it many times—and I speak of the Minister of Highways—that one third of the budget of Ontario is spent in northern Ontario on highway maintenance and construction.

I am not even going to quarrel with that. But, he uses it as an excuse not to build highways, not to repair highways, not to repair bridges. When he does that, I do have a quarrel. Using that Minister's argument, that the revenue from the district does not allow the expenditure that we need, then he must take in the revenue from all sources—as this government has told us they do so many times—and put it into the general revenue fund. And if he does that, and compares the income that we get in northern Ontario from the $1 billion in wealth that The Department of Mines claims that comes out of there, then I can assure you there should be a lot more money available to look after a few roads.

Mr. Speaker, last fall we had the opportunity to join with all of the members in visiting northern Ontario. For my part, I jumped at that chance. I thought it was an excellent chance to toot our horn a little bit; for the members from southern Ontario to see what our problems were first hand and to acquaint them with the vastness of northern Ontario. This was the expressed purpose, according to the government.

I hesitate to inject a sour note into it—and I hope that I do not, because I will qualify what I have to say at the end. I found that the first part of that trip was nothing more than a busman's holiday; everyone had a good time, they enjoyed one another's company and I think that was quite correct. I have nothing against it. However, when we arrived in the first town and the hospitality of that town was given to us, the town was thrown open to us, we were treated to northern hospitality at its very best.

I can only say to this, that I expected northern hospitality because I know what it is, and these towns gave us the very best, the chambers of commerce went out of their way to make sure that we enjoyed ourselves. The companies and the employees, wherever we had a tour or wherever we appeared on mine or timber property, went out of their way to make sure that we saw their operations and saw everything there was to see.

However, I felt that the purpose of seeing the problems of northern Ontario had been forgotten, that we were there all right but the problems were in the backstreets; the problems were not where we were.

As I said, Mr. Speaker, I would qualify what I had to say. Although I injected a sour note into the proceedings today on our trip to northern Ontario I realized, as did this party after we were there for a day or so, that it was not necessary to stay with that tour and it was not necessary to be fooled by the Tory government's attempt to fool us; that if we wanted to see what went on we were quite able to do so by getting away from the tour. And I would say that the leader of the NDP (Mr. MacDonald), on his little fishing trip, found out more about the problems of northern Ontario than this government has found out in 25 years of being in power.

I, for one, had the opportunity of touring an Indian school in Kenora; a school that very shortly will be closed down. It is being closed down because the government felt it was too expensive to keep up. It is being closed down because of the re-organization of school boards—and maybe all of these things have their place—the cost, the administration. But in this particular case, this school was occupied. It was a residential school and it was occupied by children in the intermediate grades, Indian children whose parents had many problems and I am not going to go into the Indian problems because I do not think that today is the time to do it. It will be gone into very thoroughly before this session is over.

But those children have very definite problems. They are going to be taken out of a residential school and thrown back into an atmosphere of complete poverty, places where the parents do not care whether they live or die, where they do not get enough to eat each day and in fact if they go back into that atmosphere it is very unlikely that they will continue on in school either.

I suggest to this House, through you, Mr. Speaker, that if the members on that tour had seen that, they would agree with me that that school cannot possibly be closed. It has to stay open just on the basis of humanitarian principles. If we just think of the dollar bill rather than the well-being of the child, this is going to be a poor world to live in.

We had the opportunity to fly over much of the northern country and I think, at that time, that some of the members realized how vast northern Ontario was and maybe realized a little bit why we have problems—because of the vastness of the territory. But I think most of them failed to realize when we flew out of Fort William and Port Arthur—two towns that I have yet to hear anyone in this House speak about—the pollution in those areas. Yet for 50 miles anyway, out into the lake, there is a great wide streak of green scum caused by pollution from Fort William and Port Arthur and it was quite visible from the air.

The English River is so badly polluted that it is almost past the hope of ever recovering because of pulp mills and towns like Dryden that dump their sewage directly into the English River.

In Port Arthur we had the opportunity to visit the Ontario Hospital and we were quite surprised—I was for one—at the people that run those hospitals. I was amazed, when I saw the situation, that this government could find people to work in those hospitals under the conditions they do. You go into a room and find one teacher with 15 children who are hopelessly mentally retarded and trying to do a job. I am far from being a psychiatrist or psychologist or anything else, or even a child worker, but it does not take a trained person to see the hopelessness of trying to do anything for these children under those circumstances.

We spoke to the teachers in those schools and they told us their problems—where they converted boiler rooms into classrooms; where they finally had to take the auditorium and cafeteria and convert it in order to get classrooms to teach the children. And this government speaks of what they are doing for mentally-retarded children. I am sorry that the Minister is not here because he sits there with a smile on his face when we speak about it, as if it is a joke. Surely, Mr. Speaker, there is no one here that feels it is a joke.

In Longlac we were told by, I guess the press relations people of the company that was putting on the tours for us, that serviced land could be sold for $300 to $700 a lot. Well, one of my other colleagues and myself took the opportunity to visit with one of the counsellors from Longlac and the bad part about this was that this counsellor was an employee of the company that was putting on the tour and he told us that it was quite right, you could buy the lot for $700 but after you had bought it there was something like $250 to $300 a year amortized over ten years to pay for the services that went with it.

So during that tour I felt that many, many times we were misled but I also felt, Mr. Speaker, that every time we were misled there was an opportunity for these members to find out the truth, if they had taken that opportunity. And the criticism that came of the leader of the NDP was unfounded, when he decided to go with a man and spend the afternoon fishing—while the rest of the members took a boat tour I might add. The hon. member for York South decided to take a boat tour with someone who had some knowledge of the area and was willing to impart that knowledge to our leader. The criticism was unfounded, because in that short afternoon our leader came home with more information than he would have got if he had stayed on 15 of those boat tours and listened to the press relations men of the different companies and the chambers of commerce.

Mr. W. Newman (Ontario South): I do not recall that event being that way!

Mr. M. Makarchuk (Brantford): There are a lot of things the member would not be able to recall.

Mr. Gisborn: The member was lost in the trees that trip.

Mr. Jackson: I think he was maybe one of the members that took the boat trip.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Jackson: That is something I missed, and I would like to thank my colleagues for mentioning that.

When we went into Kenora we had heard, Mr. Speaker, many stories about the problems in Kenora with the Indians. We were told that when you go into Kenora the first thing you are going to be struck by is the Indians lying around the streets. They are lazy, they do not want to work, they are winos, and most of us who had never been to Kenora before took it for granted that we would see some of this. I think we were all amazed when we arrived in Kenora, by aircraft, and we walked up the streets, and I think maybe I saw one or two Indians on the street, and the rest were conspicuous by their absence.

We held a meeting that night with various interested persons in the hotel room, and one of the things they came out with when we asked about this Indian problem was, they said, "Well, how can you have an Indian problem when they have spent two days cleaning them out of town, and cleaning up the streets?" The newspaper in Kenora ran a nice little article, I do not have it here, I am sorry. It was a letter from a woman, a resident of Kenora, who stated that the members from Ontario should visit more often because she had never, never seen the streets so clean.

Now, if we are going to see the problems of northern Ontario on these tours, it cannot be done with that system. If the chambers of commerce of these towns clean up only for us, they are doing a serious injustice to themselves, because how can the members of this House do anything to solve their problems if they hide their problems from us?

Mr. Speaker, I have a letter from some interested people in Ear Falls, Ontario, which is the site of the Griffith mine and the large hydro dam. It is something that concerns a lot of us in northern Ontario — and that is bus service for children.

Since the new school boards have come in, it has meant bussing children to school sometimes an hour to an hour and a half, each way, so that children who are going to school in the wintertime leave before daylight, and they arrive home at night after dark. It is a continuing problem throughout northern Ontario.

Ear Falls has a problem that is a little different, but it is basically the same thing. They have to go across that dam to go to school, and because most of the children in the area are not the specified one mile from the school, in fact it is only about nine tenths of a mile, they are forced to walk to school. For many months, many weeks, there are extended periods of 30 and 35 degrees below, and the dam itself is ploughed for one lane of traffic. This means the children have to walk on the street, or on the road, with traffic coming both ways. There is a sidewalk, however, but if it is not cleaned off, the children cannot walk on it. Those who do walk on it, because of the height of the snow that is built up on it, risk the chance of falling over the side of that dam.

I think it is ridiculous, first of all, Mr. Speaker, that any child should be forced to walk to school nine tenths of a mile, half a mile or a quarter of a mile, at 40 below zero. I find it further ridiculous that this government, and The Department of Energy and Resources cannot keep that sidewalk cleaned off. It is their dam and a public highway, I might add. And I would ask the Minister, right now, through you, Mr. Speaker, to take steps to ensure that it is cleaned off. I would ask through you, sir, that The Department of Education take a much more serious look at the bussing of children to schools in northern areas.

White River, at the moment, is thinking of changing over and going in with the school board in Wawa. If they do, it will mean that some of these children will ride over an hour both ways to school. And, as I have previously said it will mean that they leave for school sometimes earlier than their parents leave for work and they will arrive home at times when —

Hon. A. F. Lawrence (Minister of Mines): What is the alternative; the two-roomed little red schoolhouse?

Mr. Jackson: Well, Mr. Speaker, surely a man of the intelligence of the Minister of Education (Mr. Davis) — I admit to his intelligence — can think of something.

But even in the case where they have to ride on a bus for an hour, it is better than walking, and if the Minister of Energy and Resources had been in the House a minute ago, Mr. Speaker — maybe he would like to comment after I finish on their lack of maintenance of that dam, where they do not clean off the sidewalk so the children can walk on it.

The people of Ear Falls also complain about the police service. However, I think that is something I can work out with the people involved.

Mr. Speaker, in our area, we find ourselves facing a new school board with a director of education, who has a salary anywhere up to $20,000, or $30,000, and six or seven members who are being paid up to $2,400 per year. Previous to this, we had a system that was almost volunteer. Some of the members were paid, in most cases they were not. There was no administration cost other than a small indemnity to the members of the board who appeared at meetings, usually $15 per meeting.

The school board area that I reside in has recently hired an administrator at a cost of $22,000 a year. The members will all make $1,000 a year, a cost to the taxpayers in that area of somewhat in the area of $30,000 a year, which we previously did not pay. When the Minister stood in this House, he spoke of regional school boards being the answer to our taxation problems, to our school problems, to all of the problems concerned with education.

I submit to you that, rather than cure our problems, it has only added to them. The Minister should take stock of the problems that are in the north and do something about them before we get to the point where we have to do something about them.

Mr. Speaker, the member for Sudbury (Mr. Sopha), when he spoke in the Throne Debate, put forth a rather well-documented picture of the problems of northern Ontario. And just before he finished, I felt like patting him on the back. It put forth all of the facts. It gives this House a clear picture of what had to be done in northern Ontario.

But then when it came to telling us what should be done, he reverted to what I had expected—let us have another study. One thing we do not need is another study in northern Ontario. We have had studies of the number of fish in the lakes; we have had studies of the number of trees in the forests; we have had studies of the number of holes in the road; they have counted our people seven thousand or eight thousand times; they set up regional councils, development councils; they have taken urban and rural studies. I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, and to this government, that the time for studies is almost over. But maybe the time for action is here.

I will come back to that Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a comment on the member for Renfrew South. We spoke on the problems of closing the bush to lumber operators, and how it would affect employment opportunity in the Renfrew South area, particularly in Barrys Bay. He gave us very, very good reasons—reasons which I still agree with—why we cannot close the bush to these timber operators.

On at least two occasions I have mentioned the problems we have with companies at home, which own large blocks of timber and do not cut them. Eventually this timber will overmature and it will be lost to us—lost to the people of Ontario forever.

However, his argument was not based on motives of employment, as much as it was on motives of profit. The burden that would be placed upon the lumber companies if they could not cut within 500 feet of a lakeshore, but instead would face a 5,000-foot reservation that was proposed in some of the briefs. I agree with him that if we change that limitation to 5,000 feet, it will compound an already drastic problem that faces the whole north, and all of eastern Ontario—that of unemployment. If we change this at this time without giving reasonable alternatives for employment to these people, it will mean the same as a gold mine closing down: the whole population will have to move. And I would like at this time to support that member, even though I again question the motives of the member—and I say I question. I would like to support him and say that, if this government or any agency of this government changes those rules so that one man loses his chance for a livelihood or his source of employment because of those changes, without providing an alternative source of employment for that man, then we have perpetrated a serious injustice on society, on those people.

To go back to what I was saying about the north, we have passed the point where we need all of these studies. There is no doubt that as we go along we are going to find we make mistakes. But it seems to me if we do not do anything in northern Ontario, we cannot make any mistakes; we will have another study and will put it off for another year.

They have told us that we are going to have regional government. Well, Mr. Speaker, I would like to know when we are going to have it. The people, the residents of Teck township, the Tri-town area—in fact all through the north—they have made urban renewal studies, they have made pollution studies. I am sure that this government knows—I do not have to read it into record—there must have been thousands of studies done. For what purpose, if all of these studies are in vain and the regional government—whatever it is, when it does come—nullifies all of this work? And it will, in the case of many of the urban renewal studies.

For many years, it has been suggested that some of the government departments—and I speak specifically of two, The Department of Mines and The Department of Lands and Forests—decentralize some of their operations. And I would suggest, Mr. Speaker, one of the basic moves this government can make to help the residents of northern Ontario is decentralization of government departments.

It does not make much sense to me—and it does not make much sense to a lot of other people—that The Department of Mines with 90 per cent of its concern in northern Ontario should be in Toronto. It does not make much sense that The Department of Lands and Forests with 90 per cent of its concern in northern Ontario should be in Toronto. And it does not make much sense to us, when with all of the problems of urban crowding and the problems that we have with lack of industry and lack of employment, that this government continues to centralize all of its offices in Toronto.

During the talk on pollution on the last private member's bill, I am a little sorry I was unable to get in on that debate, because I feel that the Ontario Water Resources Commission does a reasonably good job, when it is supported and is able to do so. Last summer, in fact in the last Throne Debate, I drew attention to the fact of Kerr-Addison gold mines and how they are polluting Larder lake. The Minister said he was going to look into it, and subsequently there was a study made.

The Ontario Water Resources Commission sent a representative into the area, he made a study, and I am sure he must have by this time made submissions to the department; however, when I asked the Minister when the report is coming in, he said it had not been submitted. If this is true, Mr. Speaker, that six, eight or ten months after a study is done and no report has been submitted, then the Minister is not doing his job in keeping the Ontario Water Resources Commission doing their job. And I wonder maybe if it is not just because there is a problem involved in Larder lake. First of all, it would mean challenging a court decision. Surely this government is big enough to challenge a court when it becomes necessary. It means directing a company to do something that this government failed to do 25 years ago; it means changing their point of view. But most of all, it means that if they do not do it, Larder lake will be lost to the future inhabitants of that area through pollution and through the lack—or should I say the very refusal—of this government to do anything about it.

Hon. J. R. Simonett (Minister of Energy and Resources Management): The report has been given to me, and I have met with the management of the mines. I would think that when spring comes, and provided they found the soil conditions are right, the problem will be solved. If soil conditions are not right, the gold mine will close down and 788 people will not have a job in Larder Lake. So it is at that point right now.

Mr. Jackson: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Minister for his enlightening news, but this is the old bug-a-boo they have been tossing at us for 25 years.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: It is not a bug-a-boo! This could happen.

Mr. Jackson: You know, Mr. Speaker, that the people of that area are not quite stupid enough to believe that. And they also believe that—

Hon. Mr. Simonett: I am stupid enough to believe it when I see the figures.

Mr. Jackson: I have asked the Minister for the figures; I have asked the Minister to let me see the report and he refuses. Now if he has a good point—and maybe I will agree with him that he has—his complete refusal to let us see these reports, or even tell us what is in them half the time, only leads me to believe that it is just because the government and this Minister have not got the intestinal fortitude to move on it.

This year, Mr. Speaker, the township of Teck celebrates its bicentennial. Fifty years ago it was incorporated as the township of Teck, and before I go any further I would like everyone here to know that we will hold our celebrations from July 13-19, and that they are all quite welcome and we can assure them of a good time.

I would like to point out, Mr. Speaker, that in spite of what this government has been doing in Teck township, in spite of the Kerr-Addison, Wright-Hargreaves, the Silvanite and the many other mines that have been closed down, that township is in its 50th year and will be there for another 50 years, no thanks to what this government has done for it. Because in the 25 years this government has been in power, Teck township and all of Timiskaming has gone downhill and would be continuing to go downhill if it had not been for the spirit of the people who formed Teck township 50 years ago. I can assure this government that, had it not been for the spirit of those people in Teck township, and had it not been for the attitude of this government towards Timiskaming in failing to do anything about their problems, it is very unlikely I would be here today to tell them that they are not doing their job. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. A. Winkler (Grey South): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the hon. member in view of the hour would move the adjournment of the debate.

Mr. Winkler: Thank you. Exactly. I will so move.

Mr. Winkler moves the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to.

NOTICE OF MOTION

Mr. G. Ben (Humber): Mr. Speaker, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Algoma-Manitoulin (Mr. Farquhar), Resolution No. 2 which reads that, in the opinion of this House, Ontario should establish a system of compensation for victims of crime.

Mr. Speaker, my colleague, the member for Dovercourt (Mr. De Monte), who will follow me today, and many other of my Liberal colleagues who will not have time to speak in this hour, are firmly behind the urgent intent of the resolution standing in my name. This, Mr. Speaker, is not just the isolated thinking of the member for Humber. It is, indeed, the consensus of the studied conclusions of thinking men all over the world. The regrettable fact of all this is that, while in many parts of the world, action has been taken, here in Ontario, nothing has been done; nothing that would compensate the victims of crime on a general scale, in recognition of the social obligation of the state towards the individual in this regard.

The position of this party with respect to compensation for victims of crime is well documented in this House. We welcomed the proposed legislation in 1967, willingly made our suggestions, and ultimately argued our case for minor changes to clarify the intent of the Act and avoid any possible chance of misinterpretation on the part of the law enforcement compensation board. Perhaps for political reasons these suggestions were brushed aside; subsequent events proved what an ill-advised move this was.

Let me direct your attention to section 3, part I of the 1967 Act to provide Compensation for Injuries Received by Persons Assisting Peace Officers:

Where any person is injured or killed by any act or omission of any other person occurring in or resulting directly from assisting a peace officer, as defined in the Criminal Code (Canada), in arresting any person or in preserving the peace the board may, on application therefor and after a hearing, make an order in its discretion exercised in accordance with this Act for the payment of compensation, and the decision of the board is final and conclusive for all purposes.

We have always maintained that this wording of the Act is ambiguous to the point of excluding from the interpretation those people who endeavour to stop a criminal before the police arrive. When questioned by the deputy leader of the Liberal Party, the hon. member for Downsview (Mr. Singer) about this point, the Attorney General (Mr. Wishart), on June 9, 1967, stated that:

If the action of the person injured has resulted in knocking out criminals or slowing down or stopping the commission of a crime even though the peace officer was not at that moment on the scene, I think there is a discretion wide enough to be translated or interpreted as assistance.

This was the statement, Mr. Speaker, of the Attorney General in a reply to an accusation or statement by the hon. member for Downsview that this section, that this Act, would not offer any compensation to a person who arrived to enforce the law before the police came on the scene.

The first time this legislation was tested was in the case of Larry Botrie. For those members of the House who are not familiar with this case, I shall provide background details. Ron Haggart in his Toronto Telegram column of November 2, 1968, described it this way:

As an $85-a-week Toronto taxi driver, Larry Botrie worked for his brother in a successful two car business within the black and white fleet of Metro Cabs.

During the afternoon rush hour one day in April 1968, Botrie picked up three young passengers aged 23, 15, and 14 at the corner of Winchester and Parliament streets. They told him they wanted to go out of town, to Midland, but in fact they planned to tie him to a tree on a lonely road, steal his money and his car.

On Yonge street, just north of Highway 401, Botrie became suspicious of his passengers and asked to be paid in advance. When they refused, he turned into a Shell station where he had sometimes bought gas, telling his passengers he was going to call the police.

In the front seat, a 15 year old boy pulled a bread knife from under his jacket, held it against Botrie's chest, and told him to drive on. At the same time, the 15 year old yelled to Dennis Boyd, 23, to get out the gun that was hidden in the back seat.

Botrie pulled the knife from the boy's hand, jumped from his car and shouted to the gas station attendant Fred Durzi, "Get the police, get the police."

Boyd pulled the trigger of the shotgun and Botrie fell to the ground. When he began to crawl, he was shot again, twice. Not long after, when the police had arrived, Patrol Sergeant Charles Fox faced into the same shotgun, took out his own pistol and killed Boyd with a single shot through the heart.

While he was a cab driver in Toronto, Larry Botrie sent $35 a month home to his widowed mother in Lebanon. It cost more than $4,000 to ship his body home and hold the funeral in Bshmoon.

An application by Botrie's estate was made to the law enforcement compensation board. The law enforcement compensation board decided that granting an award would be taking too wide an interpretation of the Act, that it was basing its decision on "the plain, literal, and grammatical meaning of the words" of the Act. So this test proved the Attorney-General's words of assurance to be empty ones.

Further proof that this board is little more than a token gesture by the government in an attempt to hoodwink the people of Ontario into believing that "their government cares" is the amount allocated for this fund—$10,000. Surely this is a dead giveaway that the government did not expect to be taken seriously.

I could go on for hours Mr. Speaker—days even—presenting hypothetical cases that would tear The Law Enforcement Compensation Act to pieces; rather, I intend to make a few positive suggestions for the improvement of the Act.

I suggest to you that you study The Criminal Injuries Compensation Act, 1967, passed by the Liberal government in Saskatchewan. The wording of this Act is crystal clear and leaves no room for misinterpretation. Sections 8 and 9, dealing with payment of compensation, are as follows:

Payment of Compensation:

8. (1) Where a person is injured or killed and the injury or death—

(a) is the result of an act or omission of another person that occurred in Saskatchewan on or after the first day of September, 1966, and is within the description of any of the criminal offences set out in the schedule to this Act;

(b) resulted to the person while he was, on or after the first day of September, 1966, arresting or attempting to arrest a person who committed, or was committing or who was suspected of committing or having committed, a criminal offence; or

(c) resulted to the person while he was, on or after the first day of September, 1966, rendering assistance to any law enforcement officer in Saskatchewan who was carrying out his duties with respect to the enforcement of law;

—the board may, in its absolute discretion, upon receipt of an application in writing, make an order in accordance with this Act for the payment of compensation:

(d) to or for the benefit of the injured person;

(e) to a person, in respect of pecuniary loss suffered or expenses incurred by the person, as the result of an injury to a victim where the maintenance of the victim is the responsibility of the person; or

(f) to any or more of the dependents of a victim.

(2) Notwithstanding that a person for any reason is legally incapable of forming a criminal intent, he shall, for the purposes of this Act, be deemed to have intended an act or omission that caused injury or death for which compensation is payable under this Act.

9. The board, in making an order under section 8, shall consider and take into account all such circumstances as it considers relevant to the making of the order and, without limiting the generality of the foregoing, the board shall consider and take into account:

(a) any behaviour that directly or indirectly contributed to the injury or death of the victim;

(b) the financial need of the person who was injured or of the dependents of the victim.

These two sections are worded in the only way possible in order to protect victims of crime.

If Larry Botrie had been the person committing the crime, and had been sentenced to a term in prison, provision would have been made for his family; but because he was trying to prevent a crime, to help preserve the peace and was killed doing it, no compensation is available. We are looking after two of the people responsible, but not his family. We are so preoccupied with catching and punishing criminals that we forget their victims.

Here is another example. Last year, a mother called me at the office—sorry, it was in 1967—and told me that her 17-year-old son had been attacked in a Toronto park by a 15-year-old boy with a knife. Her boy was in hospital in critical condition that might force doctors to amputate his leg.

That meant he would be crippled for life from the age of 17—making his way around with crutches or a wheel chair or artificial legs and unable to find a well-paying job. His parents would have to shoulder the enormous financial burden because, in this case, nobody was financially responsible or liable.

The boy who wielded the knife could be sued, but as he was only 15 years old he can hardly be called financially responsible, and his parents, well, they were not responsible for their boy's actions. And present Ontario law does not make society responsible either.

It makes society responsible for the apprehension and trial of the guilty boy, but it doesn't protect or compensate the victim. This family may be brought to financial ruin as a result of the knifing.

It is a prime example of what can happen when a government refuses to accept responsibility for protecting the citizens it is serving. The Conservative government of this province has been procrastinating for years in suggestions for a system of compensation for crime victims.

The scheme to compensate those who are injured while assisting police officers did not help the boy who had been stabbed in the leg with a knife and it did not help Botrie. What we need in this province immediately is a plan to compensate victims of crimes of violence for personal injuries, or in the case of death, the heirs of the victim.

To underline this point, I should like to read into the record at this time, an editorial from the Toronto Telegram of February 3, 1968, entitled: "Help the victims". This refers to a federal attempt to fill the gap left by Ontario. After saying that, the Telegram applauds all concerned with the Federal private member's bill to compensate crime victims—which incidentally was introduced by Ralph Cowan, the gentleman who represented federally, the riding I represent provincially. It goes on:

Since most of these, by statistics, come from the less fortunate groups in our society, the hardship imposed on them by the death or disablement of a breadwinner has been extreme.

Certainly such government assistance has been underplayed and understated in the struggle for the long list of social reforms achieved in the last 25 years.

Crime is on the increase in our society and so are the number of people committing murder.

Even the most heart-felt sympathy from neighbours, the community and the mass media is cold comfort when financial sustenance is no longer forthcoming to families of victims of sudden and brutal crimes.

The hardships extend beyond loss of income to legitimate debts which a family must continue to bear, including medical costs, payments into hospital and pension schemes.

There should be no argument either in Ottawa or across the country that such a payment scheme will be on a cost-sharing basis among the provinces. The two concerns are that legislation will be slow in coming—as most social legislation of this kind seems to be—and that the amount will not be enough.

Living costs are heavy on all alike, not scaled to income resources. In those enlightened places where payments are made to the families of murdered men and women—Britain, New York State, California—the amounts have never been enough to meet immediate cash and other personal requirements.

And it ends by remarking that care should be taken to see that this admirable legislative proposal includes an adequate cash outlay, in line with the size of the need, and to meet the constant inflation from which the suddenly impoverished suffer so much.

My point, of course, Mr. Speaker, is that Ontario's lack of action is underlined by federal private members having to attempt to fill the breach.

The tragic facts are these: 79 per cent of the victims of crimes of violence suffer financial loss. Only 4 per cent ever recover any money from their attackers; 42 per cent of the cases involve medical costs. Only 36 per cent were covered by insurance; of that number, less than half recovered full costs. One third of the victims of crime suffered income loss; only two per cent of this number ever received full compensation.

The total financial loss of 172 cases surveyed by the Osgoode Hall law study of 1966 was the sum of $23,329—an average loss of $251 per victim.

The British scheme, covering 50 million people, cost $2 million in its first two years, and is expected to settle down at an annual cost of $2.5 million per year. This suggests that a scheme to redress this state of affairs would cost the taxpayers of the whole of Canada, only about $1 million a year, less than one thirteenth of what it cost to refit the carrier Bonaventure.

Dr. Allen M. Linden, who conducted the Osgoode Hall study, remarks that the general feeling seems to be that if you kill the murderer you have somehow automatically compensated the victim. The law of tort exists on paper only, he says, in respect of those who don't have the money to sue, and for whom there will be, in any event, no hope of settlement from an impoverished criminal.

Most criminals just don't have the means to pay compensation these days, so the ancient Anglo-Saxon theory of tort has gone by the board in these cases. It just doesn't work.

Because the British scheme has barriers which say you must lose three weeks' salary to be able to claim, and since this loss cannot be more than twice the average industrial earnings, it is clear that the poor do better than the rich in this regard, and that people who have merely been frightened or scratched are deterred from running to the compensation board without first giving the action some thought. Both these provisions keep down costs without perpetuating injustice.

We ought not to shy away from this piece of social legislation merely through the fear that its costs will be open-ended—that they will run away with us. On the contrary, world experience suggests otherwise.

Thus, in only 11 cases did the British board award a compensation sum of more than 81,000 pounds sterling. Its highest award, 85,000 pounds sterling—about a quarter of a million dollars—was paid to a widow with two children whose husband died from a heart attack after chasing a housebreaker.

Even though I mention these large awards, Mr. Speaker, I would point out to you that the total sum paid out was at a rate of approximately $2 million a year.

Mr. D. M. De Monte (Dovercourt): That's about 54 million people too.

Mr. Ben: Roughly 54 million people; we are surmising that Britain has a population of approximately 50 million, but perhaps 54 million may be closer.

Remember, this scheme does not include property losses. This is a people-oriented scheme, which is perhaps why it is foreign to the property-dominated aspects of our law as it stands.

Yet, as Alec Samuels recently pointed out in the University of Toronto Law Journal, the chance of being a crime victim is too slight for an individual to take out his own voluntary insurance policy. It is cheaper not only for the individual, but for society as a whole, for the state to insure all its members by the kind of legislation we are now proposing. It is also fairer to the poor who are more exposed to crime.

The member for Dovercourt, I know, intends to go into some detail as to the actual coverage afforded by the Saskatchewan bill and to make some suggestions for importing this type of legislation into Ontario. I would merely end by remarking that surely the hon. members of this House will agree with me that immediate action must be taken, in order to provide proper protection for our citizens.

The sad truth is that at present, in Ontario, the cost of being a good citizen is just too high.

Mr. A. Carruthers (Durham): Mr. Speaker, before I make my remarks to this resolution I would like to point out that what the hon. member for Humber asks for appears to be an elaborate and ultraexpensive scheme of compensation for victims of crime, regardless of what he would have this House believe. This, I am sure, is what he proposes.

I would also like to point out that his suggestions and requests are not unique or extraordinary. It is not so long ago that this House heard almost similar proposals on this very subject. As a matter of fact, Mr. Speaker, the entire issue was given considerable time in this House resulting in the introduction of legislation now known as Bill 130 which deals with compensation to persons who may be injured or killed while assisting a peace officer.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I do not question or deny that the state owes a duty of protection to the individual. Many people have suffered directly or indirectly, as a result of criminal actions by others. This situation has led several countries to consider ways in which loss and suffering of the victim can be compensated. New Zealand introduced the first working scheme on January 1, 1964, when The New Zealand Criminal Injuries Compensation Act came into force on that date. Great Britain followed on August 1, 1964, and California on January 1, 1966. A number of other jurisdictions, including several Canadian provinces, have either introduced legislation more recently or expressed an intention to do so.

But I would point out that all present schemes are confined to compensation to victims of violent crime and in some instances are further restricted to victims who can establish "need". In Canada, Saskatchewan has an Act dealing with compensation for victims of violent crime who can establish "need" which is effective retroactive to September 1, 1966.

Provision for the ordering of restitution by the court at the time of conviction of a criminal charge is made in sections 628 to 630 of The Canadian Criminal Code and as a condition of probation in section 638. No statistics are available to show the extent these provisions are used and how successful they are, but it would appear that very little use is made of sections 628 to 630. Relatively frequent use is made of the provisions of section 638 but the order often proves quite fruitless.

Mr. Speaker, last year, the Canadian Corrections Association released the results of a study that was made into the possibilities of compensation for victims of crime. This study was extensive in that it recommended compensation to just about everybody for everything. It goes on to state that we are most active in catching and punishing the criminal and growing attention is being given to his rehabilitation. However, little or nothing is done apart from general welfare provisions to assist the victim of crime who may be physically incapacitated or indeed financially ruined thereby and whose dependents may be deprived of his support if he is killed or permanently injured. I think we are all acquainted with instances of this type.

Protection for the individual against injury or loss as a result of crime is closely related to protection against risks of other kinds. It does not matter whether a person is injured through an accident or through a criminal act; his loss and needs are very similar.

There are, unquestionably, groups of innocent people in this province who sometimes suffer considerable loss and hardship when they become involved in the aftermath of a crime and I am aware of a number of these. These are innocent people who are prosecuted for, or even convicted of, a crime. If the charge is serious, the individual may be held in custody for several months awaiting trial or appeal and his legal and related fees may run into several thousands of dollars. If he is convicted, he may spend several years in prison.

The Corrections Association does admit that it is difficult to establish rules covering compensation to such individuals without becoming involved in compensation of all persons charged with an offence and found not guilty. However, it does suggest that consideration should be given to finding a solution to this dilemma.

To continue, Mr. Speaker, the association report states that there seems to be no logical justification for restricting compensation to victims of crimes of violence as is done in all present schemes. Non-violent crimes can cause more serious and more permanent hardship to the victim and his dependents than those crimes of violence that cause only temporary physical injury.

A victim of a criminal act should be compensated even if the act in question does not lead to any prosecution or conviction, either because the offender cannot be found or because the evidence against the accused is insufficient, or because the offender is legally innocent owing to his young age, insanity, or similar factors. These are just some areas spelled out by the Canadian Corrections Association that we should consider. There are many more that I could bring to the attention of this House. However, time does not permit.

To sum up, Mr. Speaker, I want to go on record as supporting the principle of compensation for victims of crime. But I hesitate to go beyond simply giving my support in principle. The matter is so greatly involved and so far-reaching, that it requires extensive and exhaustive study and research by persons who are qualified to do so—persons who are experts in criminology and in areas of finances and compensation.

That is why, Mr. Speaker, I would urge at this time that this government establish a commission to investigate and study the proposals made by the hon. member for Humber. It is only in this way that we can be made aware of all the unforeseen dangers that could only serve to defeat a scheme if it was introduced prematurely.

Mr. N. Davison (Hamilton Centre): I rise, Mr. Speaker, to support Resolution No. 2. When I first introduced a similar resolution a few years ago, I told members about a person who had voluntarily gone to the aid of a policeman who was in such difficulties that he had no time to deputize him, or whatever was necessary at that time, to provide him with protection should he be injured. In fact, this public spirited citizen was injured and, since he was self-employed, he suffered considerable loss of business over a lengthy period of time, as well as medical expenses and pain—all without any compensation.

I am pleased that The Law Enforcement Compensation Act 1967, which was proclaimed last April, will now provide protection in similar situations. It is always gratifying when the government sees the wisdom of measures one has promoted and enacts legislation. Moreover, The Law Enforcement Compensation Act 1967 only accepts part of the responsibility which is ours when we endeavour to prevent crime. We try to establish law and order and to see justice done. Most of our attention, as I have pointed out before, is given to those who commit crimes.

Lawmakers and courts seem to feel that by punishing the criminal, justice has been done to the victim or to the victim's dependents. Nothing is further from the truth and other governments — Great Britain, New Zealand, New South Wales, the States of New York and California, and, in Canada, the Province of Saskatchewan — have established varying forms of compensation for victims of crime.

Professor Allen M. Linden of Osgoode Hall Law School presented a statement to the House of Commons standing committee on justice and legal affairs last year, in which he pointed out the need for this kind of legislation. He stated that while the victim has the right to bring civil action against the criminal, this right is usually a hollow shell. In addition, few victims know of this right. I take it from his remarks that neither our law enforcement agents nor our judges bother to inform the victim of this right — but in any case I could see the widow of a murdered man would have considerable difficulty recovering compensation from the murderer sentenced to life imprisonment. There would be little possibility of receiving compensation from thugs guilty of beating their victim and so on.

No, it is our collective obligation to compensate the victim of crime because we, that is to say the state, have not been able to effectively carry out the responsibility of preventing crime. The idea is not new because we have already accepted this principle in the field of car accidents and industrial accidents. Professor Linden estimates that the annual cost of a Canadian plan similar to the British, but exclusive of administrative costs, would be about five cents for each Canadian.

I was amused last year by the Liberal members' criticism of the wording of the NDP resolution. They felt the words "victims of crimes of violence" were too limiting. I do hope they forward this criticism to Premier Thatcher whose Liberal government in Saskatchewan allows compensation for victims of violent crime. Oh yes, while they are doing that they might just add another criticism — why must the Saskatchewan victim first establish need? Since when has the principle of justice been satisfied on the basis of need?

An excellent editorial appeared in the Hamilton Spectator of March 22, 1968, sparked by the report of the Canadian Corrections Association, which was headed by Dean Thomas Feeney of the Ottawa Law School. I would like to bring the editorial to the attention of the hon. members:

A national study group, the Canadian Corrections Association, has advocated a system of government compensation to victims of crime. The plan would pay for injury, income and property loss and legal fees. The concept is excellent and should, eventually, become practice. It is a Canadian disgrace that victims of criminals have been ignored like unwanted dogs. Widows with children, the breadwinner gone, have been left to fend for themselves.

Ironically, in keeping with the distorted "sob" climate now prevailing, great sums have been spent, and even tears shed, over the criminal responsible. Reform is fine; the victims deserve some sympathy at least, and some help. Some compensation schemes already exist. Three years ago Hamilton established apparatus to compensate people suffering injury or loss while helping police. No claims have been made. Queen's Park followed last year with a similar scheme. Saskatchewan allows compensation for victims of violent crime, when they can establish need.

Ontario's McRuer report on human rights recommends some broadening of Ontario's plan but would not extend compensation rights over victims of criminal violence generally. The Canadian Corrections Association would have the province provide coverage for victims of all types of crime. Corporations and businesses which the association felt should carry insurance would not be eligible.

The principle could be applied readily to victims of violence and fraud whose losses can be assessed with reasonable accuracy. If theft compensation is enacted, it must be on a straight insurance basis, with rates that reflect coverage. As in private insurance, there must be an onus on the insured to justify his claim. Theft insurance in Ontario is adequate and relatively cheap . . . The Corrections Association's ends, for theft compensation, could be achieved by making ordinary theft insurance universal.

Provincial governments should study and implement the association's proposals on a point-by-point basis, beginning with compensation for people who are injured or suffer loss of property and earning power through crimes of violence. Early consideration should be given to fraud victims—such as the elderly people swindled out of their life savings by phony bank inspectors. Fraud losses often can be accurately pinpointed by bank records.

As the association has noted, Canadian law concentrates on capturing, punishing and rehabilitating criminals, not on helping their victims. This needs correcting.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I just want to make this comment. Liberal and Conservative speakers on this subject last year placed great emphasis on the fact that the cost would be very little and this is probably right, if Professor Linden's estimate of five cents per person across Canada is correct. However, I do not believe the hon. members should be swayed by a dollars-and-cents argument. Either it is right that victims of crime should be paid compensation or it is wrong. I believe that justice cannot be completely served by punishing the guilty. Justice will only be completed if the victim is compensated. Nor do I believe the victim must be subjected to a means test to receive compensation.

Mr. De Monte: Mr. Speaker, in rising to support the motion of my colleague, the member for Humber, I am struck by the reactionary attitude from the member for Durham. It is a typical Tory reaction to forward-looking legislation which this party has attempted to foster through the years.

He speaks of the question of risk and the fact that we have a section in The Criminal Code that covers—to a very, very minor degree—compensation to some victims of crime.

I do not think, Mr. Speaker, that that section purely means that The Criminal Code intended some people to be compensated. All it intended was that on a question of suspended sentence the judge can make an order for retribution. And there are many jurisdictions in the world, Mr. Speaker, where the criminal courts do bring down judgments of retribution that they must pay certain funds to the victim of a crime.

But it is interesting to note also, Mr. Speaker, that when a criminal court makes a judgment to the payment of certain funds, usually the criminal has not got the funds to pay the judgment. I think that is why forward-looking legislators should consider an Act to cover people that are hurt by the actions of a criminal.

There is no doubt, Mr. Speaker, that we attempt to compensate many people in society for acts or omissions of other people or acts or omissions that have been committed by themselves. Workmen's compensation legislation is an illustration of payment of compensation for acts or omissions committed by a person.

The member for Humber has dealt in detail with a lamentable incident involving a taxi-driver and the tragedy of false hopes that were raised by a general belief that Ontario's Bill 130—An Act to Provide Compensation for Injuries Received by Persons Assisting Police Officers—offered wider protection than in fact it did.

Rightly or wrongly, the remarks of the Attorney General in this House gave hope and comfort beyond the actual reach of the Act, and so the letdown served to underline the urgency of the need for a really adequate statute that would fully provide for the payment of compensation in respect of persons either injured or killed by criminal acts or omissions in general.

This debate has again served to underline the fact that, here in Ontario, we do not have, as yet, an Act that will compensate victims of crime and it has pointed up the gap that therefore exists in this aspect of our just society. Let me deal with the limited case first—where people are active in preventing the commission of crimes.

Mr. Speaker, we all recoil in horror at incidents like the Kitty Genovese affair, or at reports that people have locked their car doors and driven by while a person is being victimized by a criminal. Yet this climate will not change for the better until one of the deterrents to human action is removed—the concern of a breadwinner for his prior obligation to his own immediate family over and above an act of compassion or valour toward a stranger.

There will still, of course, be the factor of fear of physical injury and pain, and this will continue to deter many people from preventing the commission of crimes or assisting those who are involved. But that other nagging thought—that one might lie for months or years in hospital, or forever in a tomb, while one's family is forced on to welfare and condemned to penury, will disappear. In this respect, a broader Act will do what Bill 130 failed to do.

But even that is not enough for me, nor, indeed for the authors of the Osgoode Hall study on compensation for victims of crime. For these people, and for an increasing number of people around the world, the moral commitment of society to its citizens must be translated into a legal guarantee, that if civilization means anything, it means protection from the law of the jungle and its consequences.

The province of Saskatchewan has recognized this broader principle and has brought down An Act to Provide for the Payment of Compensation in Respect of Persons Injured or Killed by Certain Criminal Acts or Omissions. These acts, for which the victim can claim compensation, include offences with explosives, rape and attempted rape, abandoning a child, causing bodily harm, criminal negligence, attempted murder, murder and manslaughter, administering noxious substances, setting traps, criminal negligence in the operation of a motor vehicle, drunken or impaired driving, assault of various kinds, the dangerous operation of a vessel, kidnapping, robbery, intimidation by violence or threats, and abortion.

There are many more sub-headings but this serves to show the scope of this very humane Act. It gives the members here some idea of how far the Saskatchewan Legislature has gone in recognizing society's obligation to the individual.

A board composed of three paid members appointed by the Lieutenant-Governor-in-Council (two of whom constitute a quorum) and having the powers of commissioners under

The Public Inquiries Act, may, in its absolute discretion, upon receipt of an application in writing, make an order for the payment of compensation.

A clause which I want to underline, and to which I ask members to listen carefully is this: Notwithstanding that a person for any reason is legally incapable of forming a criminal intent, he shall, for the purposes of the Saskatchewan Act, be deemed to have intended an act or omission that caused compensatable injury or death.

Compensation may be awarded by the board in respect of: expenses reasonably incurred as a result of the victim's injury and any other expenses that, in the opinion of the board, it was necessary to incur; pecuniary loss to the victim resulting from total or partial incapacity; pecuniary loss to dependents as a result of the victim's death; other pecuniary loss resulting from the victim's injury; and pain and suffering of the victim.

The board may receive evidence that would be admissible in a court of law. It may hold hearings in camera for obvious reasons where intimate sexual details are submitted, but also where the person whose act or omission caused the injury or death has not been charged with a criminal offence or, if charged, was not convicted.

In other words, if the act in itself can be defined by the board to be a criminal act, compensation can be payable therefore. In other words, suppose an insane person commits a crime, suppose a very minor person commits a crime, the interesting thing is that this Act is victim-orientated and it is designed to help people who are victims of a criminal act or omission, no matter if the person who committed the act is not convicted by a court of law.

The other aspect of the Act in Saskatchewan is that the Attorney General may make the person who committed the act responsible to pay the victim and the Attorney General can request the man to appear before the board and show cause why an order should not be made directing the person to pay to the board all or any part of the amount of compensation paid and payable.

Let us then, look to the position of the victim of crime in Ontario, and see if we cannot make it more in accord with the humane provisions of the Saskatchewan Act. There is no doubt that the Saskatchewan Act could go further. As has been pointed out, it is limited to victims of crimes of violence. I would like to point out that this resolution is a resolution that sets out that there should be compensation for victims of crime.

More and more countries around the world are realizing that this is a community obligation, an essential facet of civilization. Criminal Injuries Compensation Acts on the statute book are a sign of the progress of a country, province or state, and we, in Ontario, cannot afford to lag behind in the provision of this kind of protection.

It is, of course, entirely proper that the first call upon our legal system should be the catching and the punishment of criminals for the stability of society. But when it comes to its other concerns, then we find that the rehabilitation of the criminal has been accorded a far higher priority than has the welfare of the family of the injured or murdered victim. I do not mind the processes of justice being concerned with the things that they are, so long as they are not pre-occupied with them to the exclusion of compensation for the victim or his dependents.

It may be said that we have a law of tort, but this recourse is often beyond the means of the victim of crime. Further, he knows that, in the great majority of cases, the criminal is without means with which to help redress the wrong. Only four per cent, in fact, of the victims of crime ever get anything as the result of civil action.

Based on the British costs, an Act like this in Ontario would cost about $250,000 a year, Mr. Speaker. That is not very much money, when you consider the social benefits received by these victims.

Then there is one other aspect of the situation—the inconsistency and injustice become even more pronounced when you note that the widow of a person killed by a negligent act can collect up to $35,000 in damages from an unsatisfied judgement fund. But the victims of somebody murdered by an uninsured and penniless murderer can collect nothing. This person goes on to fall back on the welfare rolls.

In supporting this resolution, I ask this House to give serious consideration to compensating victims of crime.

Mr. J. R. Smith (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker I rise to support the general principle of the resolution placed before this House by the hon. member for Humber. I think that the tragic and brutal murder of Acting Sergeant McMurrich in Hamilton Mountain at mid-year perhaps brought this whole situation well into focus.

As I sat here, Mr. Speaker, listening to this debate, I could not help but project some of these thoughts that must be running through the mind of a friend who is in this House today in the East Gallery—a man by the name of Eliassie from the Eskimo settlement of Povungnituk in New Quebec, a community where they have not had a policeman visit the settlement, in two and a half years.

Related to the intricacy of our so-called southern civilization and its compounded problems, I want to bring to the attention of this House that the city in which I live had its own Act with respect to compensation for victims of crime—perhaps limited in many ways but nevertheless it is a start.

This Act respecting the city of Hamilton, 1965, is special in that it was made possible by legislation put through the Ontario Legislature in 1964, giving the city of Hamilton the right to incorporate the Act. The portion of the Act in which we are interested here today reads as follows:

Notwithstanding any or other special or general Act, the corporation of the city of Hamilton may in its sole and absolute discretion award special compensation as the board of police commissioners of the city of Hamilton may deem proper in circumstances, to any person who has sustained loss by reason of property or by reason of personal injuries, to the death of any person occasioned by such person having volunteered or otherwise assisted a police officer in the execution of his duty or having in other manner assisted to the administration of the law, and in rewarding any such awards the board shall take into account any companies' awards to such persons in respect to any such loss pursuant to the provisions of section 122 of The Workmen's Compensation Act.

The members of this House might be interested to know that the city of Hamilton clerk today informed me that there have been very few claims under this provision of this Act. This also makes me wonder, Mr. Speaker, that if the city of Hamilton can initiate efforts to protect its own citizens, then why not commit all other municipalities to undertake similar responsibilities. This would not only provide each municipality with compensation for citizens that best suits that municipality, but it would also eliminate the necessity of establishing what could be an involved and expensive provincial system which may in the future years actually be more a burden on our citizens.

During last year's estimates, I was interested in the comments regarding the workmen's compensation board, and so-called allegations of the red tape and bureaucracy of that body. Similarly, Mr. Speaker, the definition of the word crime, as enumerated by a previous speaker this afternoon, raises in my mind the almost conceivably endless list of crimes that might qualify for such compensation. In other words, it could very well be a Pandora's Box.

Mr. P. D. Lawlor (Lakeshore): Mr. Speaker, you know that a couple of times a week we engage in private members' hour. One of the anomalies of the hour is that irrespective of what matter is introduced by the private member, we accord it the condescension or the courtesy of the other side agreeing with it, and I thought perhaps for a moment today we would have the refreshing spectacle of a member of the government actually taking issue with a piece of legislation which the Opposition is promoting.

As a matter of fact, out of that, I do not quite know what, the hon. member for Durham finally did. He started off by saying that he felt that the cost would be atrocious, and then he proceeded to defend the recommendations made by the Canadian Corrections Association which were far wider in their scope and implications than anything in existence in legislation today in any jurisdiction, and therefore, I would assume, being wider and more far-reaching, would have cost more. Perhaps some day we will get a clarification of what I consider the relative confusion involved in this statement.

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): He agrees with it in principle but he wants it to be studied.

Mr. Lawlor: Yes, I suppose it comes down to that.

Mr. Singer: A good Tory approach to almost everything.

Mr. Lawlor: I am always gratified to have the hon. member for Downsview come floating in on his helicopter. It's always a crash landing, you will observe.

Mr. Singer: It's more effective that way.

Mr. Lawlor: The point is he never gets off the ground again.

The former Mr. Justice McRuer has some interesting things to say about the compensation for victims of crime. He does not go into it very deeply because on the whole he feels it does not fall within the scope of his recommendation, but at page 846 he says this:

There is a basic inconsistency and injustice in the social and legal system which compensates a person injured in an industrial accident, even though his negligence may have contributed to the accident, but which requires him to bear all the cost of similar injuries resulting from a criminal attack, even though he is completely innocent.

He gives a couple of other reasons in there too, as to the rationale of this legislation. In the Canadian Correction Association brief, they go on and give a wider range of reasons, the obvious ones being, as all the individuals who have spoken emphasized, "to rectify a grave injustice, which is not otherwise covered," but they also say that it would have a good effect in overcoming public apathy in relation to both the victim and the criminal.

It would help in law enforcement and therefore compensate a great deal for loss to the public generally, and compensate for itself in this way—through an increased vitality in law enforcement. They go on to say that it would also have an immediate impact on crime prevention, which again, would be a saving from the left hand of what you are giving away with your right. And you are not being given out very much, as the statistics are laid down thus far, for this sort of legislation. As a matter of fact, taking these areas into consideration, it very well may pay for itself.

The association gives a final reason which kind of interests me these days, particularly as I become concerned about men who have been released from prisons and the horrendous state of individuals who have criminal records in our society and the way we treat them, and their possibilities for rehabilitation under the present ethos.

They say here that the availability of compensation should help overcome the hesitancy that some employers feel about hiring a person with a criminal record, and it very well might have that effect, or in some cases do away with the necessity of bonding a person with a criminal record. That would be all to the good, particularly in the area that if they cannot get the bonding, of course, they cannot get the job.

The whole business sends them right back to the reform institution or to the penitentiary, simply because we have made no provision for people in these categories, and we make it worse by not bringing about legislation of this kind which may very much alleviate the situation.

You have heard talk about how expensive or inexpensive it may be. Professor Linden has estimated the cost for Ontario at about $400,000. The member for Dovercourt, in his estimation based on British projections, put it at $250,000.

In any event for the benefits conferred—for the alleviation of human misery involved, and for placing people who have been deprived of, say, a father through a murder in the family—are out of all proportion to what any projected costs that I have seen would be.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, may I say that as is usually the case, we are beginning to lag behind. Many jurisdictions have been mentioned here, starting with New Zealand in 1964, and those forerunners of decent legislation, which we are always borrowing from and never seem to be able to initiate, such as the state of California and the state of New York. In the past two years, both brought legislation into being under this head.

True, the legislation is largely confined to victims of violent crime, and the report before us has argued that there is no logical necessity or reason why it should be so confined. Other types of white collar or silk glove crime can inflict much greater hazards and much greater injury upon the head of its victims than a violent crime, but this has been initiated, it is going forward, and it is high time that this government introduced legislation to protect its own citizens under this head.

Hon. R. S. Welch (Provincial Secretary): Mr. Speaker, tomorrow we will carry on with the Throne Speech debate.

Hon. Mr. Welch moves the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to.

The House adjourned at 6.00 o'clock, p.m.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 11, 1969

The House met at 2.30 o'clock, p.m.

Prayers.

Mr. Speaker: Our visitors today are students in the east gallery from Main Street school in Toronto, and from Bishop Ryan High School in Hamilton; and in the west gallery, from the Adult Education Centre in Toronto.

Petitions.

Presenting reports.

Motions.

Introduction of bills.

THE APPRENTICESHIP AND TRADESMEN'S QUALIFICATION ACT, 1964

Hon. D. A. Bales (Minister of Labour) moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend The Apprenticeship and Tradesmen's Qualification Act, 1964.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. Mr. Bales: Mr. Speaker, the provisions of the bill are designed to clarify the intent of the Act as to persons who may work in or may be employed in certified trades.

The amendment will also provide greater assurance that only properly qualified persons are being employed in certified trades.

The amendment will also provide greater assurance that only properly qualified persons are being employed in certified trades.

THE HUMAN TISSUE ACT, 1962-1963

Mr. F. A. Burr (Sandwich-Riverside) moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend The Human Tissue Act, 1962-1963.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Mr. Burr: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to enable more effective use to be made of bodies of those who die accidentally.

THE SECURITIES ACT, 1966

Mr. M. Shulman (High Park) moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend The Securities Act, 1966.

Motion agreed; first reading of the bill.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to ensure that in addition to the liability of an insider to compensate a person for loss suffered as a result of the use of confidential information by that insider, this bill makes it an offence for the use of such information.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health has answers for two questions asked previously.

Hon. M. B. Dymond (Minister of Health): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for High Park asked two questions before the Christmas recess.

Question 440:

Part 1: Since the cost of the Yorkville hepatitis epidemic has been established, what is the purpose of the further $18,000 expenditure announced in the Legislature yesterday?

Part 2: What is the name of the person who recommended that this study be made?

I want to emphasize again, sir, that there was no epidemic of infectious hepatitis; there were only two cases of infectious hepatitis, the others were diagnosed as serum hepatitis. The experience in Yorkville, last summer, with hepatitis gave us a unique opportunity to study not only the question of serum hepatitis but also other broader aspects of a medical and socio-medical nature.

Part 2: A committee of senior experts under the chairmanship of the Deputy Minister of Health recommended the carrying out of this further study.

In answer to the hon. member's question No. 439:

Has the department received a recommendation from Dr. J. A. Gamarra of the Toronto East General Hospital, and passed on by The Department of Labour, that x-rays be required before men are allowed to work under air pressure? What action is being taken?

The Department of Labour has responsibility for supervision of the health and safety of workers in compressed air. The Department of Labour referred a submission received by it to The Department of Health. This submission included recommendations made by Dr. Gamarra dealing with medical supervision of compressed air workers. This submission was reviewed by the staff of my department.

Dr. Gamarra had recommended that x-rays of bony joints be taken as part of the pre-employment examination. While this may be of value in individual cases where indicated, it is not felt by officials of my department that such extensive x-rays were required for every worker as a pre-employment procedure. In individual cases this is a matter for the discretion of the examining physician.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Huron-Bruce has questions of the Minister of Agriculture and Food.

Mr. M. Gaunt (Huron-Bruce): My question to the Minister of Agriculture and Food, Mr. Speaker, is as follows:

In view of the fact that European buckthorn is a host to rust spores, will the Minister consider legislation to prohibit the distribution of this plant, particularly since certain distributors of nursery stock use European buckthorn as a bonus upon purchase of certain quantities of nursery stock?

Hon. W. A. Stewart (Minister of Agriculture and Food): Mr. Speaker, I can assure you that the Clerk of the House was not counselling me as to how I should reply to the hon. member's question, even though I could have used the advice, Mr. Speaker. I am sure the hon. member who asked the question will recognize that European buckthorn is really the host plant to leaf rust, not stem rust.

There has been considerable discussion concerning European buckthorn and its prevalence throughout the province of Ontario. It is known to exist in most counties of Ontario, but I think the hon. member would agree, Mr. Speaker, since the oat crop is not generally looked upon as being quite as important and prominent a crop in the cropping procedures of farmers in the province as it once was, that leaf rust, while admittedly a damaging factor in the growing of oats, is really not as much of a problem as it might have been even a few years ago before corn and barley became so prominent in growing.

Now we feel that because of the fact that this is a leaf rust problem and not a stem rust problem, and inasmuch as a great many of the newer variety of oats such as Gary, Russell, Stormont and, I believe the new one, Kelsey, that came out last year, are all resistant to leaf rust, that this really is not as much of a problem as we might have thought it to be.

I would suggest that the few shrubs that might be sold, as the hon. member suggests, as a bonus to nursery stock orders, really would not have a very marked effect on increasing the degree of leaf rust that would be prevalent in the crops. Leaf rust travelling from the buckthorn plant does not travel nearly as far as the type of stem rust that is attached to the barberry bush. It is a different type of spore, and so to generate leaf rust, it has to be almost next to the oat field, and I would suggest that even the few plants that might be sold on this bonus basis would not really have much effect.

If a farmer were ordering such quantities of nursery stock, and he was growing oats, and he recognized the problem of leaf rust being associated with the host plant, buckthorn, he need not accept the offered bonus plant—but rather might ask for some other shrub—perhaps a rose bush which the selling agency might consider as a substitute.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Essex South has a question of this Minister. Today we are asking questions Minister by Minister.

Mr. D. A. Paterson (Essex South): Mr. Speaker, I have a four-point question of the Minister of Agriculture and Food.

1. Is the hon. Minister aware that under the amendment to section 16, paragraph 1, of the Ontario Flue Cured Tobacco Growers Marketing Board, general regulations 68 and 69, the words "on the tobacco farm" have been deleted?

2. Is the Minister aware that this change allows non-performing farmers that were part of a multiple farm ownership to stay alive—that is, to not lose their basic acreage rights?

3. And further, single tobacco farm owners lose these basic rights if they do not perform in a three-year period with 50 per cent of their annual acreage allotment being grown.

4. Will the Minister consider the removal of section 16 in its entirety, or amend the regulations to permit those farmers with tobacco equipment and facilities to participate in a leasing arrangement subject to annual board approval, similar to that which is now existing in the Ontario commercial fishing industry?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Mr. Speaker, I wish to advise the House, through you, that the amendment to the Ontario Flue Cured Tobacco Growers Marketing Board general regulations to which the hon. member for Essex South referred, was filed with the farm products marketing board on January 31 last. I would advise, Mr. Speaker, that the regulation in question is made by the local board which is democratically elected by tobacco growers with the very purpose of regulating, among other things, the granting or cancelling of quotas. I am sure you would agree, Mr. Speaker, that it is not the purpose of this Act that either myself or the farm products marketing board interfere at this stage with regulations that the growers' own elected body has made to govern their own trade and industry.

Of course, if any person considers himself to be adversely affected by this amendment, he has the right under section 10-A of The Farm Products Marketing Act; to appeal first of all to the local board, and if still not satisfied, then to the farm products marketing board. In the event that such an appeal is made, the farm products marketing board has the power to over-rule the local board if it thinks it advisable.

Mr. Paterson: Would the hon. Minister accept a supplementary question?

Could the Minister advise me as to how many members of the local board are multiple farm operators? Do you know that offhand?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Sorry, Mr. Speaker, I have no idea.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Essex-Kent has a question of the Minister of Transport.

Mr. R. F. Ruston (Essex-Kent): Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Transport.

Is the Minister aware the license bureau offices in Chatham are only open for six-and-a-half hours a day, five days a week, and is he prepared to have the hours extended to what is considered a normal working day of eight hours?

Hon. I. Haskett (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, as I have just received this question and another one from the hon. member for Grey-Bruce (Mr. Sargent), as I entered the House less than five minutes ago, may I, with apologies to hon. members concerned, and the House, ask that they be put off till tomorrow?

Mr. Speaker: May I point out to the hon. Minister that I am sure that will be accepted, but I would suspect that the statement that the Minister only received it as he entered the House would leave his staff in a peculiar position, because they have had the questions for some time. I would think that it would be quite in order for any Minister to take a question as notice without that explanation. Otherwise it would be obvious from the hon. Minister's statement that the Speaker and his staff had not performed their duties of transferring these questions when they received them before 12 o'clock noon.

Hon. Mr. Haskett: Mr. Speaker, may I point out that I was tied up at the National Urban Transportation Conference at the Royal York.

Mr. Speaker: It is quite understood that the Ministers very often do not receive questions personally until they come into the House. But I would again point out that these questions are transferred to the Minister's staff when they are received—in any event not later than about 12.30 noon.

The hon. member for Grey-Bruce has a question of the Minister of Energy and Resources Management.

Mr. E. Sargent (Grey-Bruce): Mr. Speaker, could the Minister advise when the government is going to take a firm stand on the blackouts and Hydro strike, and restore 100-per-cent operation to the people of Ontario?

Will he further advise if he can operate on one third of the staff, and are we overstaffed by hundreds of millions of dollars by using the standby staff in effect today?

Hon. J. R. Simonett (Minister of Energy and Resources Management): Mr. Speaker, as yet there have been no blackouts in Ontario as a result of the so-called rotating strikes which were implemented last week. However, Ontario Hydro cannot guarantee that these practices of harassment will not result in power interruptions, although it will do everything possible to keep facilities in operation and avoid them.

In answer to the second part, Ontario Hydro does not consider itself overstaffed. Supervisory personnel is being employed in emergency situations to maintain power supply. But this is unsatisfactory and cannot be a solution except in such circumstances, and of course they know nothing of being over-staffed with hundreds of millions of dollars.

Mr. Sargent: Will the Minister clarify the banner headline in the Toronto Daily Star today, that you are buying power elsewhere to avert blackouts?

What is the true position today of the very fact that the lives of every citizen in Ontario can be—

Mr. Speaker: Order, order! The hon. member is—I am sorry, I apologize to the hon. member; he gets going and I get lost. Carry on.

Mr. Sargent: Well I do, too.

Hon. S. J. Randall (Minister of Trade and Development): Give him a club.

Mr. B. Newman (Windsor-Walkerville): He is not afraid to admit it.

Mr. Sargent: No, I think it is a very serious situation. We want to know the truth of this. The Minister says we are not having a blackout but the headline today says Hydro is buying power elsewhere to avert blackouts. Now what is the true story?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Well, Mr. Speaker, I might say that I have not read the headlines in the Toronto Daily Star. I always save that until later in the day because some of the headlines in there make me cross and I do not like to be cross during the afternoon.

Nevertheless the member is talking about buying power. Hydro is continually buying and selling power to other power companies in the power grid so there is nothing new about buying power.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member has a question of the Minister of Trade and Development.

Mr. Sargent: Are the members any clearer than before he answered that? There should be a Cabinet shake-up over there.

An hon. member: There is nothing there to shake up.

Mr. Sargent: Nothing to shake up is right.

A question to the Minister of Trade and Development. Will the Minister advise if all patents on new ideas or inventions or technological research discovered at Sheridan Park are retained, or are they in the name of the people of Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Mr. Speaker, to clarify the question, Sheridan Park is a research centre in which we have not only the Ontario Research Foundation but independent research companies. Any work done by the independent companies, of course, is their exclusive right to license, or they may maintain the patents they find out there for themselves. If they contract with the Ontario Research Foundation and do work for them — or in other words, they hire our scientists — and develop any patents and know-how, that again belongs to the man who contracts for it.

Now, if the Ontario Research Foundation, in its work, develops any licensed know-how or patents, we advertise so that the manufacturers in Ontario may have first call on it, first opportunity of refusal, and then we license anybody out of Ontario whether it be in the rest of Canada or off-shore. But, we always retain the right for an Ontario manufacturer to come back and get a licence to manufacture the same product and ship it anywhere we had previously granted a license.

Mr. Sargent: Is the Minister aware that in Japan a parallel situation exists, except that the government retains all the patents in the name of the people of Japan, so why should we finance $50 million of research when we do not have the benefit of the resulting patents?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Mr. Speaker, I do not know what they are doing in Japan except, as I say, around the world today —

Mr. Sargent: The Minister is over there enough, he should know.

Hon. Mr. Randall: I just suggest to my hon. friend that patents do not have much validity in the world today. The patent situation is breaking down in many areas. Most of the time, with patents that we develop in our research here — and in many other places where you can get a patent — that does not mean necessarily that it can be economically manufactured. We have many patents from the Ontario Research Foundation but they are not all economically feasible to manufacture.

Insofar as the research is concerned, what we are looking for is new ideas, new methods, and a lot of these are not patentable, I can assure the hon. member. But, if there is a patent there we make sure that we are well covered.

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): I thought they were not valid any more.

Hon. Mr. Randall: I did not say that; I said in many areas of the world they take a very dim view of anybody with a patent, as the member knows. We are doing that even up in Ottawa today, and if you —

Mr. Singer: The Minister just wiped out the Minister of Transport.

Hon. Mr. Randall: If you try and get patents in many parts of the world you will find that you have it for two or three years and then if you do not act on it, it becomes void, then anybody can use it.

Mr. Sargent: Would the Minister clarify one more point for me?

Does the Minister not agree that if the people of Ontario finance research to get new technology, that we should have the benefit of the patents on it?

Hon. Mr. Randall: That is just what I finished saying. If we develop any patents, the people of Ontario get first call on them.

Mr. Sargent: I mean the royalties therefrom.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Yes, if there are any royalties through the Ontario Research Foundation. I agree with the hon. member.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Wentworth.

Mr. I. Deans (Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Labour: Has The Department of Labour granted permission to The Department of the Attorney General to pay less than the legal minimum wage for the province of Ontario to its employees?

Hon. Mr. Bales: Mr. Speaker, in reply to the question, the minimum wage applies to the private sector. Wage determination for all departments is determined or dealt with by the Treasury Board and the civil service commission, not The Department of Labour.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Grey-Bruce has a question of the Minister of Municipal Affairs of last December, No. 347. I do not know whether the Minister has the answer, or if the member has the question.

Mr. Sargent: I remember the thought. I do not have the wording of it here.

Mr. Speaker: I will send the question over and it can be asked. The Minister may take it as notice if he is not prepared to answer.

Mr. Sargent: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A question for the Minister of Municipal Affairs:

What effect will the imposition of regional government have on the present local option legislation now in effect in many municipalities? And, has the government in its current study of the liquor laws considered doing away with this outmoded provision, in light of the great changes in municipal governments forthcoming in the province shortly?

Hon. W. D. McKeough (Minister of Municipal Affairs): Mr. Speaker, in reply to the hon. member's question, I would say that the answer to the first part of the question is that under section 84 of The Liquor Licence Act the readjustment in municipal boundaries would not alter the local option in effect, in a municipality or parts thereof.

The second part of the hon. member's question should be proffered to the Provincial Secretary (Mr. Welch) through whom the liquor licence board reports to this House.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for High Park has a question of the Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Speaker, for the Minister of Municipal Affairs:

Is the St. Mary's Argus Journal correct in its editorial of December 18, 1968, in which it states that the rebate from the new provincial tax assistance fund exactly equalled the local tax charged on summer cottages of American residents?

If this is correct, how did this strange situation come about?

Does the government intend to take any action in this matter?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member's question is in three parts. On receiving the hon. member's question this morning we contacted the editor of the St. Mary's Argus Journal, a paper to which we do not normally subscribe. He advised that the editorial in his paper was based on an article which he believed originated in a Toronto newspaper but he was unable to be more specific.

A quick check of our records did not reveal any situations of this kind existing either in, or within the immediate vicinity of, the town of St. Mary's.

However, we were able to confirm that two properties in the village of Grand Bend did receive rebates which equalled the taxes. Our records do not include information which would give the nationality of the owners.

In reply to the second part of the question, the tax rebate could equal the taxes levied on a property when the assessment on that particular property is low, and this happened in a number of instances throughout the province.

Three, we would advise the hon. member that this matter and other matters related to the Act are under consideration.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Speaker, would the Minister allow a supplementary question?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Yes.

Mr. Shulman: I am still a little confused on this subject. Does it not seem odd to the Minister, regardless of the nationality of the person owning the property, that the rebate could equal the total tax bill?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: This happened in a number of instances throughout the province. If, for example, the assessment were $2,000, we pay the taxes on the first $2,000, then obviously, the rebate would cancel the taxes. It happened in a number of instances.

Mr. Speaker: Does the hon. member for Grey-Bruce wish to re-submit his question about the liquor laws and regional government, or does he wish his question transferred by Mr. Speaker to the Provincial Secretary?

Mr. Sargent: Well, why can he not answer it now? That is what he is getting paid for.

Mr. Speaker: Mr. Speaker will transfer the second part of question 347 to the Provincial Secretary, and the hon. member might find his copy, or we will give him a copy and he can ask it tomorrow.

Mr. Sargent: Thank you, sir.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Clerk of the House: The first order, resuming the adjourned debate on the amendment to the amendment to the motion for an address in reply to the Speech of the Honourable the Lieutenant-Governor at the opening of the session.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

Mr. E. A. Winkler (Grey South): Mr. Speaker, I had the privilege of gaining the floor last evening when the House adjourned and I must admit that with the focus of attention in other quarters in the country, the tenure of debate here—particularly yesterday —seemed not to be so active. I think the eyes of the province are watching, with interest, the possible developments in the national capital. Nevertheless, it has somewhat of a bearing on part of my remarks later on.

Mr. Speaker, initially, I would like to report to the House that on my return to my constituency last Friday evening, I joined with a number of residents in the village of Dundalk and from the township of Proton where a number of people suffered great loss as a result of a disaster late last fall. It was my privilege to represent the government for the financial contribution that was made to the fund that was distributed, and I was asked to extend to the Legislature, to the Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) and particularly, to the Minister of Agriculture and Food (Mr. Stewart), the sincere thanks and gratitude of the reeve and all of the people there concerned.

Mr. E. Sargent (Grey-Bruce): Why did the member not mail it?

Mr. Winkler: It happened to be my privilege.

Mr. Sargent: Well, we do not get that chance.

Mr. Winkler: It had to be distributed along with the other funds that were collected, if the member will understand that system. I was invited there for that occasion and I went. If the member is not invited on those occasions, I say, "tough luck." Next, Mr. Speaker, I want to—

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): We do not understand why they should distribute the cheques.

Mr. Winkler: The members hear a lot of things that they do not understand over there.

Mr. Singer: Yes, Tory patronage is very hard to understand.

Mr. Winkler: Well, Mr. Speaker—and I will not be sidetracked in the course of my remarks at all times—when we speak about patronage, the government of Ontario looks like a bunch of kids compared to that outfit in Ottawa. Would the members like to hear about the Liberal payoff? Do they want to hear about it? I can read it to them at great length.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Winkler: Unfortunately, they know. They know only too well.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Winkler: Sounds like it will be better than yesterday, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. M. Shulman (High Park): What happened after the member's speech of last year?

Mr. Winkler: I would like to tell the member for High Park, when he talks about my speech last year, that he has proved everything I said since that time.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Speaker, the member is wrong again, as usual.

Mr. Winkler: I have the floor, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Speaker, I am asking if the member will accept a question.

Mr. Winkler: I refuse. And if the member for High Park wishes to use the floor of this assembly, Mr. Speaker, for the purposes that he has been using it: for stage play—yes, and much, much worse than that, for the disintegration, as far as I am concerned, of the rules and procedures of this Legislature and other legislative bodies—he can go ahead. But then we will know what grave he is digging. That is his own.

Mr. W. G. Pitman (Peterborough): Let's go back to Ottawa.

Mr. Winkler: The member can go if he wants to. I will stay here.

Mr. C. G. Pilkey (Oshawa): What happened last year?

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Winkler: Maybe you did not give me the floor, Mr. Speaker; I may have misunderstood.

Mr. Speaker, I would also like to refer very briefly now to the rules of the Legislature and express some personal views on the subject. There are, in my opinion, three areas which are of vital concern. One is the question period and I must say that today and yesterday were not symptomatic of the situation that has existed. Second, is the matter of supply. Third, is the length of time for the Throne and Budget debates.

There has been a substantial discussion on this subject, Mr. Speaker, in other quarters and I believe that this body can make desirable changes without limiting the time of free speech.

Since being elected to the Legislature, it has been a constant concern of mine how the Prime Minister can be so tolerant of the abuses that take place and—although I have not discussed this matter with him privately—my suggestion here is that he might discuss whatever action he deems necessary with other leaders and then implement the measures that will eliminate most of the abuses.

First, Mr. Speaker, the question period, in my humble opinion, is much too long almost every day of the week. Certainly, the rule of urgency is seldom taken into account or into consideration—particularly by the questioner. No reflection there on your judgement, Mr. Speaker. It is ludicrous, as we have witnessed on several occasions—particularly Wednesdays, when the question period lasted until 4.30 p.m. or even later, leaving one or one and a half hours for House business. I suggest that is not a healthy state of affairs.

Second, Mr. Speaker, the delaying tactics of the last session during debates on supply were equally ridiculous, in my view, and we all know there are a number of solutions to this particular problem. One would be a given period for total debate. A second solution would be, of course, time limit on speeches. The third would be a referral of departmental estimates to committees.

On the Throne and Budget debates, in these two areas, Mr. Speaker, I believe the Legislature should place either a time limit on total debate or a limit on individual speeches. This could be—

Mr. Pilkey: Closure!

Mr. Winkler: Exactly. I expected that but this is not the case. This could retain the right of every member of the Legislature to speak without curtailing in any way his or her right in supply or committee which ever course, whether it be one or both, might be followed.

In placing the recommendations before the Legislature, Mr. Speaker, I would point out that the leaders or chosen spokesmen of any party—on any subject being introduced—have the right to reply without limitation.

There are a number of other subjects too, Mr. Speaker, that I want to discuss briefly and I will endeavour to heed my own advice in doing so.

At this particular juncture, Mr. Speaker, I think I would like to say a few words about the agricultural industry, and we are aware that it has been given a rather comprehensive new approach. The current status has been placed, for the first time in my view, before the urban sector of our society in a very vivid way. There are a number of newspaper articles, and particularly do I compliment the one that appeared in the Toronto Daily Star some time ago.

The realization, first, that the people who supply the food for this country receive a dollar an hour, or less, for their efforts, and second that the return on farm capital before income tax is less than three per cent, certainly indicates that we live in a very selfish society. Urbanites should strive to make this area of our society somewhat more just.

There are many reasons, Mr. Speaker, why the people in rural areas are leaving—but opportunity, or lack of it, seems to be the greatest of all. In this regard, I believe it is important to make some remarks in regard to the population of the county that I have the pleasure of representing along with another colleague across the floor.

The population of Grey county in the last hundred years has decreased by almost 9,000 souls. There is only one very small area that showed any degree of steady growth and, in fact, one of the more rural areas suffered a loss of 50 per cent of its population in that period of time.

Mr. R. Gisborn (Hamilton East): Under the Conservative government's policies.

Mr. Winkler: Oh, the reason they left was all federal policy. Also the average income in these areas, leaves much to be desired. The recent increase in personal income tax has placed a further ridiculous burden, in my humble opinion, on the people. This, I believe, is termed as social development tax, but we know how it is being taken.

Mr. Speaker, these last few months, and this has bothered me no end, I have heard a member of the Liberal Party saying very openly and publicly that the federal government should consider a tax reduction for the higher income tax brackets.

With the present lack of leadership in this regard in Ottawa, and with the increase in personal income tax, I want to say that the most justifiable change that could be made is a substantial raise in the income tax exemption to assist everyone in the lower tax brackets. There is no just society for the farmer or the labourer when he negotiates a very small raise, or a raise of any kind in his income, if the government moves in unilaterally and takes it all from him. And that is what has happened in this past year.

We in the rural areas, Mr. Speaker, know very well the problems of the metropolis, and this may be one of the reasons for our choice of living in these areas. But I suggest that this government could play a much larger part in the development of the rural areas by releasing some of the "golden horseshoe" congestion down here and adopting a vigorous programme to make the decentralization of industry a very desirable move. I think this could be done. As a matter of fact, I think this must be done for the sake of both separate communities in our society.

In our particular area, I support those who desire and request better road access to the southern markets of the province. This, too, is a very essential part of our economy and we will not progress unless we have this improvement in transportation facilities. There is a programme which has been brought to the attention of the Minister. I was interested to hear the member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. MacKenzie). I think it was, talk yesterday about the needs of the roads in the national capital. I am very well aware of this.

It used to be a very humorous thing when we would think of the developing nations sending delegations to Canada's national capital to borrow money to build airports and access roads to airports. They would go bumping all the way out to the Ottawa airport on the most ridiculous roads you have ever seen in order to carry our money home to build their own.

Now, we feel somewhat in the same position in the constituency of Grey South. I have made previous mention of this. The Minister knows my position in this regard. He knows the roads I want and I stand very firmly for the people of Grey South in demanding these access roads which, as I have said, are very important to our economy and to our future.

Mr. Speaker, I have a number of other subjects to deal with, but I think that at this juncture I would be remiss if I did not make some passing reference to the importance of what is taking place in the national capital today in regard to our province.

I was very interested in the discussion that took place this morning. And if anyone in this province does not think they are living in a great land and in the greatest province of Canada, indeed, in North America, one would only have to listen to the Premier of Newfoundland to hear him mention the wealth and the riches and the greatness of our province. He put that very clearly.

In regard to what is happening, Mr. Speaker—because it is of great national interest, as well as of particular interest in the province of Ontario—it was interesting to hear the discussions and the areas of dissent.

Indeed, I have heard it said, and I am sure that all of us in our constituencies at some place or another have heard it said, that they are not so interested in the language aspect of what is happening in Ottawa because Ontario is an entity unto itself; and they resent, to some degree, the application of a second language on us.

This is not the right position of leadership, of course, and I am satisfied that our leader is taking the right and the responsible position at that conference, along with his colleagues. I would like to go back and quote from one of his statements on the Confederation of Tomorrow Conference, page 51, where he says:

Because, after all, whatever political forms we may create, whatever reasons we may talk about, these are created and they exist only for the purpose of serving individual people.

Mr. Speaker, in that whole catalogue of statements, this is one statement that pleased me in regard to my political philosophy more than any other. I believe that I have tried to develop my service to my people, to my country, and to my province in this way. I believe this is Tory philosophy to the bone, that we have greater respect for the individual and his rights than any other political party in this country.

Further, Mr. Speaker, quoting from the very same document, the Prime Minister of Ontario put it this way.

We stated without equivocation that insofar as it was both practical and reasonable, we would attempt to ensure that both English- and French-speaking residents of Ontario will be able to deal with their local and provincial governments, and be educated in the language of their choice.

There is no indication of imposition here, and yet it was evident and it was clear that the Prime Minister of Canada wanted to force this on that conference and on every province of the Dominion of Canada before he would discuss any other subject. Well, now, let us see why. One of the statements that I listened to this morning that was of vital interest to me, was when financial aspects were being discussed, and when I think of the fiscal and financial matters that are extremely important to us, it disturbs me when I find that Mr. Trudeau has opted out of so many programmes. This only costs this province an awful lot of money—this particularly at the expense of a province which states that it is unequivocally in favour of the equalization principle that has been implemented in the past in this Dominion.

What has happened of late? First we know, and this goes back some time, the federal government opted out of the technical training programme in this country. That cost a lot of money. Secondly, it opted out of hospital grants. Members will recall a few weeks ago the disastrous headlines in the Toronto paper about the hospitals that have to delay expansion. I have had Liberals with the audacity to tell me that was the provincial government's fault, when they have withdrawn from this programme and taken the money out of the field that was meant to construct these very facilities. Nobody can deny that—you will have your chance to speak.

The next thing is that they backed off from the health resources fund to a substantial degree. They have increased the shared cost of medical and health service to the Indians, another additional cost on the province of Ontario. And last, and the one I regret most, and maybe I should not even mention it, is the federal government's withdrawal from ARDA.

I think particularly of the drainage programme in Ontario that is so important to our rural areas and to our farmers. They have backed off this programme before they have fulfilled their commitment to the farmers of this province, and there is no question about that.

Mr. Speaker, I note that today there is some reporting here on the federal tax course in regard to agriculture. They have come down with the suggestion, following the Ontario report, that supply management is the big thing in agriculture today. And supply management for the sake of the agricultural people of this province means only one thing—it means controlled production all the way.

I believe that the report of the Ontario task force was a much better one. It was much more related to the problem as it exists for our farmers in the province of Ontario, because I must admit that in due course it may be that supply management will have to be implemented. But first and foremost I believe that the federal government has a vested interest to see that national marketing boards are put into effect for the benefit of the people in this industry.

Mr. Speaker, I was surprised two weeks ago when I attended a meeting in Ottawa and heard the federal Minister of Agriculture say that the farmers of Canada are becoming much too efficient, surpluses are again evident all over the place. He mentioned attending a meeting in Paris and he mentioned the products that are in surplus supply. Now, I do not mind him saying that, because it obviously is a fact, but here in the federal task force finding, they say that the farmers have to become more efficient. What for?

Now, Mr. Speaker, I do not deny that they will become more efficient; I do not deny that they are very efficient now—the agricultural producers of this country and particularly the province of Ontario. But I think the time has come, Mr. Speaker, when we, not only in Ontario but in the entire Dominion of Canada, have to take a little more realistic view of our position in the world. We have to start feeding the people who do not or cannot produce the proper amount of food for themselves.

There is no question about the fact that if a certain percentage of the gross national product were set aside for this purpose, I think Canadians would be proud of the opportunity to join with their fellow men in this great world and see that the areas of conflict that might exist, if it is over food, can gain from our ability to produce. I think that the farmers then, too, would be in a much better position.

In any event, there are other programmes to be explored before any suggestion of supply management is brought into effect—for instance, the two-price system which also is all involved in the argument that I set forth. But I will not accept, as it is printed anyway in the newspaper report, what has been achieved through the course of their studies.

Mr. Speaker, further with regard to the matters that are under discussion in the national capital today, and the one, of course, that I admit concerns me most, is the fact that this morning the Minister of Finance, Mr. Benson, as well as the Prime Minister of Canada, Mr. Trudeau, when they were questioned on the opt-out programmes that the federal government has left, were asked, "What will there be in way of abatement to assist the provinces to maintain these programmes?" I believe it was Mr. Benson who said to Mr. Trudeau, or it might have been the Prime Minister who said it himself, "We also have to balance our budget".

Now what is happening, Mr. Speaker—and I think the people of the province of Ontario should know this long, loud and clear—is that the federal financial situation has been one sad mess; that the great deficits that have been piled up there are now going to be paid for by the provinces because they are opting out of these programmes, and they will use the money to pay that deficit. That is exactly what they were saying this morning. That is exactly what they were saying to me this morning over that TV programme.

Mr. Singer: How about the deficit here?

Mr. Winkler: Since the member for Downsview has entered the debate, I have a couple of things to say to him, too. If the last federal estimates had been down from a year previous, I would be prepared to say that they are achieving a goal, but you know as well as I do that they are up over nine per cent, and this is absolutely disastrous.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Winkler: I happen to have a fair voice too, and I think I can stay with the member for Downsview.

I have an article here from the Star of December 17 where, on that date—and it is higher now, the federal government has said so—the interest charges on the national debt—and I am sorry the member for Grey-Bruce went out because this is very interesting to him—were $1,474 million, more than the annual expenditure of nine of the provinces of Canada.

Now, who is going to pay for this? The province of Ontario will bear the lion's share if the present trend is continued, and the taxpayers of the province of Ontario should know this, because the Liberals will use it against the present government of Ontario to defeat them.

I have here a clipping from the Globe and Mail, dated August 9, 1968, when the leader of the Liberal Party emerged from a meeting with the Prime Minister of Canada to say that this fall the provincial governments would be assembled. What for? To bring in a new programme of taxation. Why? I think that the leader of the Liberal Party should tell us what he learned that day, what kind of intrigue was brought about in the office of the Prime Minister that day. It is very obvious that the programme started then. And we shall just watch how the Prime Minister of Canada tries to invade this province on another subsequent occasion. I might not be too old in political life but you cannot fool me on that one.

Mr. M. Gaunt (Huron-Bruce): What a vivid imagination!

Mr. Winkler: Not too much imagination. The member will learn too.

Mr. Singer: Did the member lose his place?

Mr. Winkler: Yes, I did. Mr. Speaker, I say this in criticism of the provincial government, I am concerned with the degree and with the extent of the authority of boards and commissions of this government, as well as I am concerned in other spheres, in other jurisdictions in Canada, with the authority of these boards and these bodies.

I regret to say that in my humble opinion on many occasions when decisions are being made out of the body politic, they do not recognize the local or the human factors, and in such cases, we then, as the elected representatives, feel as though we are not a part of the legislative body or not a part of the decision that is being made.

Mr. Speaker, regarding area government I must congratulate the Minister of Municipal Affairs (Mr. McKeough) for his recognition of planning and action in that regard, but in the democratic sense I would caution him to use the area of consultation and flexibility in the application of this form of government. The acceptance clause of this legislation, in my opinion, Mr. Speaker, is one of the most important.

As I have said to this Minister on previous occasions, I believe officials of his department are much too dictatorial in the rural areas where there can be orderly progress without complete control. In this regard too, Mr. Speaker, there should be a much closer liaison between Municipal Affairs, the Ontario Water Resources Commission and the Ontario Municipal Board because in many matters, in many instances, it seems almost that there is an intrigue to frustrate rather than to assist the progress that should be taking place.

Mr. Speaker, as I said initially, I did not want to take too much time of the House, but I have other matters I would like to place before you.

One, Mr. Speaker, is to lend my support to those who want hospitalization and OMSIP brought together for those who cannot afford to pay for these programmes. I refer, of course, to the premium-free coverage and the methods of qualification. Further, I would like to see this government supply more coverage for the chronically ill in nursing homes through the Ontario Hospital Services Commission, or to start a separate system for this purpose.

There is, Mr. Speaker, a serious lack of accommodation in this field for the elderly and the infirm. The doctors face a double dilemma today of the proper utilization of active hospital beds as well as the few chronic beds that are approved by the Ontario Hospital Services Commission from time to time. I am aware that the long-stay patients, convalescent and chronic, are not welcome in active treatment facilities and it is therefore essential for the consideration of this field to be at the most economical level possible. I am hoping that the health committee as is constituted now will, at the conclusion of its considerations, bring some recommendations to the Legislature in that regard.

Also, Mr. Speaker, remaining in this field, I would like to draw to the attention of the House a practice now going on in the field of adoption which I think most of you will find unwarranted and extremely questionable. Perhaps you have read the item in the February edition, and I have the article here from the Telegram, in Toronto, which reports that Metropolitan Toronto Children's Aid Society is engaged in exporting children to the United States and to other countries for adoption.

Apparently, 80 such adoptions were carried out in this way last year with the Metropolitan Toronto Catholic Children's Aid Society being the most active. Now, I mentioned this simply because I believe that the Roman Catholic population of this province is equally concerned and will be equally concerned as I am, and I am sure that they are not aware of the situation that is going on.

They are just as good residents of Ontario and Canada as any one in this Chamber. The story quotes a Mr. Markel, director of the society, as saying that his society arranged 75 of these adoptions. He gives as an excuse the inability to find good homes for these children, many of whom are Indians—from the province, of course.

I find that difficult to comprehend in a province with a population reaching nearly seven million people. I also find it difficult to accept when I realize that Ontario adoption services find good homes for upwards of 8,000 children each year, including children of all racial backgrounds, and children with unfortunate disabilities. The programme in this province is second to none in the hemisphere. I would agree that the inter or intraborder are acceptable when it involves a relationship, blood lines or that sort of thing. These could be accommodated by either order in counsel or some other machinery that the government would care to establish.

But I consider it deplorable that we would deal with what society seems to regard as castoffs by sending them across the border. If good homes can be found for these children in other countries, I am certain homes of equal qualities can be found right here.

I have never found a citizen of the province of Ontario wanting in any way so far as heart or consideration is concerned and I think the record to date in this field of adoption proves that particular point. Mr. Speaker, I would further say to you that, in this regard, it is a peculiar thing that we spend a lot of money bringing immigrants to this country—a lot of money training them and so on—to make them good citizens of Canada.

At the same time we are prepared to place our children out of the country for adoption. It seems to me that they have a right to the heritage into which they are born and it seems to me that the province of Ontario should see that they stay right here. We need their contribution in the future as much as we need the contribution of those whom we allow to come by immigration.

However, Mr. Speaker, if the practice is to persist, I say why should we do it piecemeal? If we are going to get into the business of exporting one of most of our precious assets in this regard—which is people, of course—then let us be real professionals about it, instead of going about in this way. We should develop advertising campaigns, reach every state of the Union, telling Americans that Ontario wants homes for its children. That is the logical extension of the present trial programme going on now.

But I submit to you, Mr. Speaker, this is not what we want. I am confident that there are Canadian homes for these children, confident that Canadians want to accept the responsibility for any child born within our borders no matter what the circumstances of his background may be. Now, Mr. Speaker, in accordance with my opening remarks, I will conclude at this point and I will retain my contributions in other fields for supply when that opportunity presents itself to me.

Mr. G. Ben (Humber): Before going on into my own address, I would just like to comment on the speech of the member for Grey-Bruce. Either he is against hunting or he is an extremely poor hunter, because he spent the last 45 minutes doing nothing but passing the buck. I was intrigued by the way he raised his voice and shouted quite loudly on one occasion when he had a criticism to make of the federal Liberals. But in the rest of his speech, which was nothing but an outright condemnation of the way his party is running this province, he just rattled off at what you might call a ghost-speed. It is a pity that he is not sitting on this side of the House because obviously he was offering more criticisms than plaudits for this government.

Mr. Speaker, it is customary on an occasion, when a person rises and speaks for the first time after a new Speaker is in the Chair, to make some complimentary remarks about Mr. Speaker. I have no intention of doing that. I had occasion to spend eight days in the company of you and your wife and gained an extremely high regard, respect and deep affection for your person.

However, I feel that I would be a hypocrite if I were to rise and make the usual statement pertaining to Mr. Speaker. Although I have respect for the man who occupies the Chair of Mr. Speaker, I must in all honesty say that during my term in this Legislature I have developed nothing but extreme contempt for what has degenerated under this government to what is called the Speaker.

At one time, the Speaker held a very laudable position in British government, and, in some jurisdictions still does. But there seems to have been a change which is not recognized by this government. At one time the government was always seeking to extract money from the King's subjects, and it was the duty of the Opposition to try to avoid granting this money to the Crown.

Somehow, somewhere, I do not know how or when—and I find it deplorable myself, Mr. Speaker—the role has been reversed. The government is trying to avoid draining dry the taxpayer, and the Opposition parties—whatever they may be in whatever jurisdiction—are trying to persuade the government to spend more, spend more, spend more.

I do not know when that change took place, it might be an interesting bit of historical research to find out when it occurred and how it happened. We find the position where at one time the Speaker represented the people who did not want to spend the taxpayers' money, but he is now appointed by the people who do want to spend the taxpayers' money. In fact, the Speaker still represents the people who do not want to spend the money, but he is now almost a different guy.

Furthermore, at one time, the Speaker had to protect and intercede for the members of the House against the arbitrary decisions or the whims of the Crown. Now it has changed in this province to the point where the Speaker on many occasions represents the Crown against the subject. I should add, Mr. Speaker, in this regard your conduct has been laudatory, and that you have addressed the government benches as sharply—and on some occasions much more sharply—than you have members of the Opposition.

I raise this point and I open my address in this manner, Mr. Speaker, because for years the Opposition has been asking the government to revise the rules of this House and update them in its proceedings—but with no results. I feel, Mr. Speaker, that the larger share of Mr. Speaker's duty is to give the Opposition the benefit of the doubt, just as the King's or Queen's subject is given the benefit of the doubt in a court of law. That is, if there is a dispute as to whether something is in order, or is not in order, then Mr. Speaker should try to find a precedent which would favour the applicant rather than the government. That to me is the British form of justice.

What happens if there is a dispute? A clerk of this House manages to dash into his hutch like some witch doctor, rummage about his bottles of herbs, and come out with some precedent, or some custom, or some usage—

Mr. P. D. Lawlor (Lakeshore): Necromancy.

Mr. Ben: He learned it at Scarborough College. And sometimes there is a precedent or usage which is diametrically opposite to the written rules that at one time were applied in this House. What I deplore, Mr. Speaker, is that I do not have a key to that hutch, and if I did I would not know where to rummage to find all these rules and precedents and usages. Why should not the members of the Opposition have available to them this body of custom and usage and precedent? Surely we are just as entitled to have it as is the Clerk of this House. If we did have it, Mr. Speaker, perhaps we would not question the rulings of the Chair so frequently because we would know what had been decided previously.

So I offer it for the reason, Mr. Speaker, and only for the reason, that perhaps my complimentary, backhanded insult to the Chair—in which I am sure Mr. Speaker understands what I am about—might just shame this government into sitting down and appointing a committee to go into the rules of procedure in this House, update them, and create a body of written rules and regulations and precedents, which would be available to all members of this hon. House, and not something that was drawn out of the air with some hocus-pocus or neocromancy, or alchemy, or whatever it is that perhaps the hon. member for Lakeshore—

Mr. Lawlor: The member had better go to community college.

Mr. Ben: I will have to go to community college and learn all these phrases that the witch doctors use. Mr. Speaker, since you are making a valiant effort to bring back to the Chair the dignity that it once held, perhaps you might persuade this government that it is time that Parliament was given back to the people and its representatives, and they had a chance to practise what history preaches was their common law right.

Now, at the beginning of the session, Mr. Speaker, prior to the establishment of the various standing committees, a discussion was initiated by the hon. leader of the Opposition on a matter of government commissions. It was felt that a longer and more searching look should be taken at the multitude of various boards and commissions that are in existence and seem to be proliferating daily.

The whole matter was shrugged off by the Premier as being inconsequential, with the statement that the standing committee on government commissions was free to call before it any and all government boards and commissions it wished and to examine them as closely as it desired.

This was a magnificent gesture on the part of the Premier, but unfortunately the gesture was rather empty, Mr. Speaker. Why do I call this gesture empty? Because it is humanly and physically impossible for the standing committee, with the time available to it, to call before it the responsible officers of all the various boards, commissions, and agencies now in existence. It is not even possible to give a cursory examination to the majority of them.

Let me read, Mr. Speaker, the list of boards and commissions given to us by the secretary of the committee last year. I do this for the benefit of those hon. members of this House who do not sit on the standing committee on government commissions, and were not given this list. Here they are:

Crop Insurance Commission of Ontario; Farm Products Marketing Board; Ontario Livestock Board; Milk Commission of Ontario; Ontario Telephone Service Commission; Ontario Research Foundation; Ontario Energy Board; Ontario Northern Transportation Commission; Hydro Electric Power Commission of Ontario; Ontario

Water Resources Commission; Ontario Securities Commission; Ontario Hospital Services Commission; Alcoholism and Drug Addiction Research Foundation; Labour Relations Board; Ontario Athletics Commissioner; Ontario Human Rights Commission; Workmen's Compensation Board; Mining Commissioner; Niagara Parks Commission; Liquor Control Board of Ontario; Liquor Licence Board of Ontario; Soldiers' Aid Commission; St. Lawrence Parks Commission; Ontario Highway Transport Board; Ontario Racing Commission.

Mr. Speaker, the historical philosophy of democratic and representative government was that the people could control their controllers through the Legislature. In turn, elected members were accountable to the people through that same Legislature. They could be replaced periodically if they did not measure up. Yet at the same time as we have been preaching that man should be the master of his own destiny, we have been developing a giant, bureaucratic octopus, with its tentacles probing into all areas of human endeavour.

The list of boards and commissions which I read to this House establishes that. This bureaucratic octopus was developed into an almost independent branch of the civil service with only token and spasmodic control by us, the legislators.

In his book, "The Government of Canada," Professor MacGregor Dawson indicates that there has been a constant trend from merely police functions, to what are known as "service functions", the promotion by positive measures of such things as public health, housing, employment, conservation, and price stability.

Professor Corry, in his book, "Democratic Government in Politics," agrees with this statement and says that the trend has been very rapid due to the absolute impossibility of the Legislature's finding the time to make the vast number of decisions that are now required.

How much truer has that statement become even since it was made by Professor Corry. I doubt if even he visualized how fast these boards and commissions could proliferate, and yet, Mr. Speaker, the government still continues to pretend to know what the administrators, the civil service, the officials of these boards, commissions and agencies are doing, and we, the legislators, continue to pretend to be aware of everything the government is doing.

To give you an example, Mr. Speaker, after the list which I read to you was received by me, I delved into the report that had been made by Mr. Walter Gordon on "Economics in Government", and I found another list of government boards, commissions, and like agencies in that book. I passed this list to Miss Wendy Hansen, of our staff, with a request that she make the necessary enquiries to determine which of these agencies listed were still in existence, and which had either been wound up or merged into others. I was naive enough to suggest that she start with the office of the legislative council, feeling that there would be maintained some records as to when these agencies were established and whether or not they were still functioning.

Miss Hansen was unable to obtain that information from that office, but instead was referred to the office of the Attorney General, the chief law officer of this province. You guessed it, Mr. Speaker, that office did not have the answers and referred the young lady to the office of the Premier.

Mr. Speaker, she could not get the answer from the office of the Premier of this province—from the man who is supposed to have all the answers—but was told that she would have to call each agency separately and determine from each agency whether it was alive or dead. I presume if no answer was received to a call, the agency was probably dead, and the body is still lying around waiting for the hon. member for High Park to perform an autopsy and to hold an inquest.

Mr. Speaker, let me read to you a partial list of all the board, agencies, and similar commissions. Some of them may be duplications, although I have tried to eliminate them, but there are some 90 of them, aside from the ones like the accountant of the Supreme Court of Ontario, which, to my knowledge, has not been looked into in a long time:

The Artificial Insemination Board; Board of Censors; Board of Parole; Board of Review-Welfare; Board of Directors of Chiropractic; Board of Directors of Drugless Therapy; Board of Directors of Masseurs, of Osteopathy, of Physiotherapy; Embalmers and Funeral Directors; Boards of Examiners of Optometry and of Operating Engineers; and of Chiropody.

We have Cemeteries Advisory Board, Civil Service Board of Review, Civil Service Commission, Commission for the Investigation of Cancer Remedies and Commissioner of Police for Ontario.

We have committees for the designated building trades; for the designated trade of barbers; for the designated trade of hair-dressers; designated trade of motor vehicle repairers; designated trade of workers in servicing and installation of air conditioning and refrigeration equipment.

We have defence training boards—no, I will leave that out. We think we do because we have never been able to find out whether we have these or if they are still there or not. We have—and some of these have changed their name—the Governing Board of Dental Technicians and the Grand River Conservation Commission, if that is still around. I understand that the Premier has a cottage in that area.

Then we have the joint advisory council re the civil service; Lake of the Woods Control Board, if that is still around. Then, of course, there is the Liquor Control Board of Ontario and the Liquor Licence Board of Ontario. We have the Medical Advisory Board of Welfare; and the milk industry advisory committee of Ontario—I think that is gone. We also have the Milk Industry Board of Ontario and the Milk Producers Co-ordinating Board.

We have the Mining Commissioner, the municipal advisory committee, and the Macdonald Institute. Then we have a number of others, starting with the name Ontario.

The Ontario Agricultural College, the Ontario anti-discrimination commission, which is now, of course, the human rights commission; Ontario archeological and historical place advisory board; Ontario cancer institute, Ontario cancer treatment and research foundation, and another half dozen of those.

We even had the Stallion Enrollment Board and I do not know whether that was just a list of all the bucks sitting on the government side.

And then there is the sulphur dioxide committee. I would like to know what happened to it, together with sulphur fumes arbitrator, and right down to Workmen's Compensation Board, Ontario.

Mr. A. B. R. Lawrence (Carleton East): Will his speech be categorizing and pointing out to us which of these boards he would like to see done away with?

Mr. Ben: Mr. Speaker, perhaps the hon. member just came in. I trust he just came in, because if he was here from the beginning he would have heard me say that we have not been able to determine which of these boards are still in existence. A member of our research staff was sent to the legislative council and, in turn, was referred by legislative council to the office of the Attorney General. He was then referred by the office of the Attorney General to the office of the Premier, and they could not tell us which of these boards were in existence and which were not.

Mr. A. B. R. Lawrence: Are you going to suggest that any of these boards be cut out and the responsibility shifted?

Mr. Ben: I think it is rather an asinine question, Mr. Speaker. How can I suggest which of these boards be cut out when I do not even know whether they are in existence, and if they are, what function, if any, they are performing?

Mr. A. B. R. Lawrence: Why does the member not find that out first and then tell us what he would do?

Mr. Ben: I will tell you, Mr. Speaker. Since I have already gone to three top offices at least, I thought that the hon. member for Carleton East would take it upon himself to delve into this list to determine which of them are still in existence and just what their functions are. And I am sure that the standing committee on government commissions would appreciate a brief from the hon. member setting forth just which of these are in existence and what their functions are.

Mr. A. B. R. Lawrence: Well, can the member pick one that he wants to abolish?

Mr. Ben: How can I possibly tell him that I want something abolished if I do not know whether or not it is in existence?

Mr. A. B. R. Lawrence: Why does he not go and get his information and then come back?

Mr. Ben: The fact remains that there is a government member who cannot tell me which of these are in existence and he is asking me which I want abolished.

Mr. A. B. R. Lawrence: They are all in existence now.

Mr. Ben: They are all in existence! Well, that is fantastic, Mr. Speaker; that would be over 100 or 115 boards and commissions.

Hon. J. H. White (Minister of Revenue): Which would the member eliminate?

Mr. Ben: Name one? The government of the province of Ontario as run by the Tory party.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Ben: That is not very constructive. Mr. Speaker, if they are found to be alive, what then? Some of these boards and commissions, such as the Workmen's Compensation Board, the Ontario Hospital Services Commission, The Ontario Securities Commission, and the Ontario Water Resources Commission have been raked over the coals continually in this House with little or no visible effect on their decisions or policies. Others—in fact, the majority of them—have gone merrily on their way without too much discussion and certainly with no brakes being applied to their programmes.

As recently as January 5, 1968, these agencies were taken to task by William Anderson, president of the Canadian chamber of commerce at a meeting in Vancouver. The London Free Press quoted him as decrying the establishment of such a complex system of government and at the present time almost one-third of the gross national product must be devoted to the perpetuation of the agencies of control and regulation that have been set up.

Gordon Sinclair, that pillar of virtue, making comment the same day over CFRB radio, expressed concern and suggested that the day was fast approaching when all the earning from all the people would be required to keep the mammoth government and its agencies functioning.

And this is no exaggeration, keeping in mind that not only two senior levels of government, but also the municipal governments, have such boards and commissions. The municipal governments have school boards, library boards, parks boards, hospital boards, planning boards, cemetery boards, health boards, police commissions, children's aid societies, and the like.

A recent article from the Municipal Research Bureau indicated that there are exactly 101 such agencies in Metro Toronto alone. I would like to see them all abolished and the government given back to the people. Many of these boards and commissions are, in fact, controlled by provincial boards through such means as subsidies, grants, licences, permissive legislation, and rules and regulations.

In most cases, where we have established these outside boards and commissions, we have given them such broad powers that even the courts appear to have no right to overrule them and other avenues of appeal seem also to be lacking.

In fact, in many instances, review by the courts has been expressly forbidden. Professor Corry has said that boards are often, at one and the same time, detective, prosecutor, judge and jury. Those who made the law also interpret it and enforce it. The board is likely to be biased in favour of the policy it is trying to enforce.

Allowing a board or government department or anyone else to be the judge of his own case leaves something to be desired. He goes on to say that, on the other hand, it is to be argued that this combination of legislative, executive and semi-judicial powers in the hands of a board or commission is not likely to be seriously abused as long as the Legislature has the authority to take back the power it has given.

I quarrel with this argument, Mr. Speaker, for one can only control abuses if one knows that they exist. As was demonstrated by Miss Hansen, government can hardly know whether abuses exist in these departments if they do not even know if the departments exist. At least three provincial boards or commissions, the workmen's compensation board, the Hydro-Electric Power Commission, and the Ontario Water Resources Commission, seem to hold the powers that Professor Corry deplors. At the same time, they give the impression of being beyond the control of the Legislature.

They are, in fact, their own lawmakers, detectives, prosecutors, judges and juries. Probably the worst example of the power to delegate authority is to be found in The Ontario Water Resources Commission Act. This Act, as written, demands obedience. It does so with such authority as to raise the hackles of many people who have fled, or whose ancestors fled from Europe to escape the dictator or the autocrat.

It can be suggested, with some authority, that there is no actual right of appeal against the directives under The Ontario Water Resources Commission Act. The ghost of totalitarian government once more raises its ugly head.

Section 18-1 of The Ontario Water Resources Commission Act reads:

The commission and its employees and agents may at any time, for its purpose, without consent, and without compensation, enter into the lands or buildings of the province or any municipality or of any person or into any highway or road under the jurisdiction and control of any public authority, and make such surveys, examinations, investigations, inspections or other arrangements as it deems necessary.

How is that as an example of democracy in action? "At any time," "for its purpose," "without consent," "without compensation." The hon. Mr. Justice McRuer must have choked when he read that.

Section 39 is what I would call a Star Chamber section. Subsection 3 gives the municipality the authority by bylaw to enter into an agreement with the commission for the provision of and operation by the commission of water works or sewage works for the municipality.

Subsection 4 of section 39 permits council to construct works and enter into agreements with the Ontario Water Resources Commission without the consent of the taxpayer. This is contrary to the principle held valid for many years and long embedded in The Municipal Act that major and costly municipal works are not to be placed on a taxpayer by bylaw without first giving the taxpayer an opportunity to vote on the matter.

Not only is the taxpayer deprived of the right to vote on a bylaw but even the protection of having the bylaw scrutinized by the Ontario Municipal Board is almost denied to him. The following subsection, subsection 5, provides that where approval of the bylaw is required by the board, the application for such approval shall be made by the commission on behalf of the board.

In their book "Modern Government" Professors D. G. Hitchner and W. H. Harbold have this to say:

If administrative irresponsibility is not to result, administrators must be accountable to political leadership, and in democracy this means primarily to elected officials.

Insofar as the Ontario Water Resources Commission is concerned, Mr. Speaker, the only responsibility it has is to make a report annually to the Minister containing such information that the Minister may require.

A further requirement exists that the Provincial Secretary (Mr. Welch) lay the report before the assembly. I can hardly call this control in light of the various phrases used to define the commission's powers. Here are some of them, Mr. Speaker:

Section 22, subsection 4: "Upon such terms and conditions as the commission may determine."

Section 30, subsection 3: "Where, in the opinion of the commission;" subsection 4:

"As may be required by the commission;" subsection 5: "As may be directed from time to time by the commission."

Section 31, subsection 1: "As the commission may require; subsection 2: "As the commission may deem necessary".

Section 38, subsection 1: "That it is of the opinion".

Section 39, subsection 6: "Have been discharged to the satisfaction of the commission".

Mr. Speaker, let us take a closer look at this fantastic setup. Section 3 of the Act permits the appointment of a commission of between three and seven members including a chairman and a vice-chairman. The Act also allows the commission to hire, pay and direct the required staff. The present commission consists of a chairman and a vice-chairman who happens to be an hon. member of this House, and four commission members.

Under their direction is a general manager with five assistants. Each of these assistants is responsible for a variety of divisions and has a number of directors reporting to him. Most of the directors of the divisions have an assistant and staff to fulfill the duties allotted to that division. The administrative branch consists of the following: information, legal, personnel, systems and data processing, feasibility study and supply.

The divisions are: construction, finance, industrial waste, laboratories, plant operation, project development, research, sanitary engineering and water resources.

But hold on, Mr. Speaker, that is not the end yet. Within these divisions are the following branches: balance sheet, bacteriological, biology, chemistry 1, chemistry 2, projects, property, technical advice, special studies, design approvals, engineering, plumbing, boating, water quality surveys, regional service planning, surveys and projects, water well management, hydrological and river basin research. As a matter of fact, it sounds like the curriculum from the school of practical science at the University of Toronto, does it not, Mr. Speaker?

Hon. Mr. White: The member has emptied the Liberal benches pretty well.

Mr. Ben: They know all this. This is for the benefit of the uninitiated on the government side.

Hon. Mr. White: Press galleries are empty as well.

Mr. Ben: Mr. Speaker, I want to go on record that I am not trying to take any credit away from the Ontario Water Resources Commission. A thorough study of its activities indicates that the reputation they hold, as best in the world in their field, may be well earned and not just granted to them. But one cannot avoid wondering why the same organization and zeal is not applied to such areas as mental health, juvenile delinquency, the reduction of alcoholism and drug addiction and the improvement of automobile safety.

Mr. Speaker, an example of bureaucratic independence is the Ontario Hydro. If education is the sacred cow of this province then, without a doubt, Ontario Hydro is the sacred bull. To criticize the Hydro is like denying the diety, one gets no answer from either.

Last year, and the year before, I criticized the Ontario Hydro for its decision to erect a fossil fuel hydro producing plant on the shores of Lake Erie near Port Dover, rather than a nuclear fueled plant and the construction of another nuclear fueled plant was announced by the hon. Minister with considerable fanfare not too long ago.

The criticism fell on deaf ears. To me, a majority decision such as this should not have been made by Hydro officials but by the members of this House or, at least, by a committee of this House.

The decision, in 1966, that it would build a coal fired power plant in Ontario, the major uranium producing area in the world, was announced by Hydro on August 31, 1966. Two months earlier, on June 17, the Tennessee Valley Authority announced that it would build a nuclear power plant in Alabama near the major United States coal producing area, the area that the hon. Minister of Energy and Resources Management (Mr. Simonett) informed us earlier this year would be the area from which we would be buying coal to fire our fossil fueled plants.

Ontario Hydro did not release detailed cost figures for its new station; TVA immediately published detailed costs and supporting reasons for its decisions.

The TVA report showed a preference for nuclear power in every respect—capital cost, fuel cost, operation and maintenance and thus obviously, total cost.

In addition to the published comparisons between the TVA, Cumberland City (coal) and the Brown Ferry (nuclear) plants, I was able to obtain some figures for comparison with respect to the Pickering (nuclear) and the Lambton (coal) plants, since the latter costs will approximate those of the Port Dover station.

I will not, Mr. Speaker, guarantee the accuracy of my figures for the Ontario operations—the Pickering plant, for example, has run into some unexpected and costly delays—but I will say that I threw these figures at the Ontario Hydro officials last year and year before when they were before the standing committee on government commissions and they refused to deny the figures were close enough to be accurate.

These, Mr. Speaker, are the figures, and in order to understand it, perhaps one should mentally use some captions. The first one would be the item, the next would be for the TVA's Brown's Ferry nuclear plant, the next one for TVA's Cumberland coal plant, the next one for the hydro electric power commission Pickering nuclear plant and the last one for the hydro electric power commission Lambton coal plant and these are the figures.

The net plant capacity: two units in megawatts: The TVA would have 2,129,000 kilowatts. The TVA Cumberland coal plant 2,205,000; the hydro electric power commission Pickering plant 2,000,000; and the hydro electric power commission Lambton plant 2,172,000.

Hon. J. R. Simonett (Minister of Energy and Resources Management): That figure has been doubled.

Mr. Ben: I beg your pardon?

Hon. J. R. Simonett: That figure has been doubled.

Mr. Ben: Yes, it has been doubled since. It was not at the time. These figures were given to your people.

Investments in millions of dollars: For the Brown's Ferry plant $247 million; TVA Cumberland coal $258 million; Pickering $500 million; and Lambton $217 million.

Production plant: Dollars per kilowatt for Brown's Ferry 116; for Cumberland 117; for Pickering 250 and for the Lambton coal 100, which, subsequently, I learned from questioning the hon. Minister, would be closer to 135.

Energy costs, mills per kilowatt hour, interest and depreciation on plant investment: For Brown's Ferry, 0.89; for Cumberland coal, 0.90; for Pickering, 2.46; and for Lambton, 0.98.

The fuel costs—again in mills per kilowatt: For Brown's Ferry, 1.25; for Cumberland coal, 1.69; for Pickering, 0.97; and for Lambton coal, 2.81.

Now I will go down further so that I shall not bore this House with a lot of figures, although I would like to have the permission of the House that I could just give the rest of the figures into Hansard because the total cost works out this way—this is in mills per kilowatt: Brown's Ferry, 2.39 mills per kilowatt—that is per kilowatt hour; Cumberland coal, 2.90 mills per kilowatt hour; the Pickering station, 3.92; and the Lambton coal, 4.06.

So no wonder, Mr. Speaker, that at the time the announcement was made the story was going around the street that half a million dollars had been paid into the Tory coffers to induce the government to buy coal, and since that time nothing has been said or done to dissuade me from believing that statement.

Incidentally, Mr. Speaker, when I presented these figures to the officials from Hydro, Mr. H. A. Smith, the chief engineer of the hydro electric power commission stated that I had obtained these figures from one Winnett Boyd. As usual he was wrong. I am indebted to Mr. Boyd for much of the knowledge I have managed to acquire on nuclear energy, for I have read the brief he presented to the House of Commons special committee on research during the 1960-61 session of the Parliament of Canada, the papers he delivered to the first Canadian conference on uranium and atomic energy, held at the King Edward Sheraton Hotel in January of 1950, and the luncheon address he delivered in October of 1959 at the Ottawa regional technical conference of the Engineering Institute of Canada. But, then I am also indebted to others for much information. For example, to Mr. Smith, for much of my information concerning the Canadian systems came from Mr. Smith himself and his illustrious boss, Mr. George Gathercole, the Chairman of the Hydro Electric Power Commission of the hydro electric power commission.

The figures on the American operation, of course, came from the "Comparison of coal-fired and nuclear power plants for the TVA System" as quoted in Nuclear Industry of July, 1966, but most of the other information came from "Present and Future Development for Bulk Supply of Electricity in Ontario" by the chief engineer, given by him to the annual meeting of the Engineering Institute of Canada at Toronto in May of 1965; "Energy Transportation Costs and their Effect on the Market for Nuclear Power in Canada", a paper presented to the Canadian nuclear association conference in Winnipeg in May of 1966; and "Power Pace", an address by Mr. Gathercole to the electrical day luncheon at the CNE August 31, 1966, a copy of which the hon. gentleman sent to me.

The point I am making, Mr. Speaker, is that most of the figures for the Canadian operation came from the illustrious gentlemen who operate the Hydro electric power commission of Ontario.

Before analyzing the figures which I just gave, I think it would be proper to give to the members of this House, through you, of course, Mr. Speaker, some basic information about nuclear power.

Basically, Mr. Speaker, a nuclear power plant is similar to a conventional thermal plant, with the reactor acting as the furnace. The uranium serves as fuel in a nuclear reactor just as coal, oil or natural gas is used as a fuel, in a conventional thermal power plant.

The heat produced by burning either fossil fuels or uranium, converts water into steam to rotate turbines which, in turn, drive electrical generators. The energy produced is fed into transmission lines and on to the final users.

There are different types of reactors, using various forms of uranium as fuel in use throughout the world. Basically the different types of uranium fuel may be divided into two classes: natural uranium, and enriched uranium.

The natural uranium element is composed of three uranium isotopes:

- (1) the uranium-235 isotope, which constitutes only .71 per cent of the uranium element as found in nature;
- (2) the uranium-238 isotope which constitutes 99.25 per cent of the uranium element found in nature;
- (3) the uranium-234 isotope which constitutes .01 per cent of the uranium element found in nature.

The essential ingredient is the fissionable material contained in uranium-235 isotope, i.e., the U235 atom which readily splits when struck by neutrons.

Neutron fission takes place when a neutron, slowed by passing through a moderator—usually heavy water or graphite—strikes the nucleus of the U235 atom and splits into fission products which fly apart creating heat. At the same time more neutrons are given off to permit a continuation of this fission process.

There are three basic types of reactors; the type using natural uranium metal or oxide clad with zirconium alloy, the type using enriched uranium, and the fast breeding types. The last is still in the prototype stage and when fully developed will be the closest thing to perpetual motion there is.

Enriched uranium is natural uranium in which the percentage of the fissionable uranium—U235—has been increased from .71 per cent up to four per cent. The enriching of natural uranium is carried out by a process of gaseous diffusion.

The United States owns three gaseous diffusion plants and Great Britain and France one each. The American plants represent an investment of about $2.5 billion and they consume about 50 billion kilowatt hours of electricity per year—equivalent to about 40 per cent of Canada's total current yearly consumption.

Obviously Canada could not afford to establish such a facility for its own use but the new centrifugal process being developed by Germany could be put into operation at a cost of between $50 and $100 million and could be built in many countries by private enterprise.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Where did the member get those figures?

Mr. Ben: These? I got these particular figures from "Uranium, the Fuel Source of the Atomic Era" put out by Burns Brothers and Denton. The Minister can get them free, but if he wants, I can get him a copy.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: He had better check out that last figure.

Mr. Ben: From $50 million to $100 million—let the Minister give us the correct figure; I will be very happy to get it, I would be very happy to have the correct figure.

Mr. Singer: Sit down while he gives it to you.

Mr. Ben: Oh, I would have to grow old and be like Rip Van Winkle.

Because Canada did not have available to it until quite recently enrichment facilities, it proceeded with the development of the Candu, or natural uranium type reactor. Unfortunately our reactors are of the Candu type.

I say unfortunately, for although such a type is cheaper to build, the fuel costs are, in the long run, higher and therefore so is the cost per kilowatt hour as demonstrated by the figures I gave you earlier.

But to get back to the comparison of costs. The delivered cost of coal to the TVA plant was 18.9 cents per million Btu or the equivalent of 1.69 mills per kilowatt hour including interest on inventory. Annual requirements would be about 6.5 million tons and this is the figure if you will recall that came from the hon. Minister in response to a question that was put to him by me last month.

Four U.S. suppliers quoted on a coal supply for periods ranging from 10 to 20 years with delivery by unit train or barge. The coal bids were subject to escalation. In contrast the nuclear fuel costs were firm until 1974.

For the purpose of arriving at the figures I gave you it was assumed that the Ontario Hydro coal-fired plant will require approximately the same quantity of U.S. coal—6.5 million tons, and as I say, I got that confirmation from the Minister. This will cost us $32 million annually in U.S. dollars plus an escalation in price.

In addition there will be the transportation charges from the U.S. mines to Port Dover. This is estimated at $2.66 a ton for another $17 million in Canadian funds, again subject to escalation, and for the benefit of the hon. Minister, Mr. Speaker, I might point out that these figures I am giving are 1966 figures when I first raised this issue with the Minister with regard to the other plant.

With costs of mining and costs of transportation increasing annually you can now see where I arrived at the annual cost of $50 million U.S. annually.

In the letter to me which enclosed the speech of August 31, 1966, of Mr. Gathercole, the hon. member for Muskoka (Mr. Boyer), the vice-chairman of Ontario Hydro, emphasized:

To achieve maximum efficiency and the lowest kilowatt-hour cost, a nuclear station must be operated continuously with a minimum of stops and starts. When electrical consumption during the course of a day shows wide variation which must be met instantaneously, modern coal-burning plants can be operated much more flexibly than nuclear installations to meet this type of variable demand on the system.

However, subsequent checking of Ontario Hydro data reveals that this is misleading. Hydro is planning to use its big coal-fired plants for base load as well as peaking of output. In fact, this makes good economic sense, for the large capital investment and fuel handling and storage required could not be justified by infrequent use. Indeed, Hydro assumes an 80-per-cent capacity factor to reach the figures I gave you. If the capacity factor drops to 58 per cent, the cost rises to 4.53 mills per kilowatt hour.

All that I have given you, Mr. Speaker, leads me to ask these two questions: One, why is the Hydro not calling for competitive tenders on nuclear power plants of proven design and performance? In not doing this, it is being derelict in its duty to the citizens of Ontario. Two, why is the Hydro allowing the delays in the Canadian nuclear power development programme to force it into building more coal-burning power plants which will saddle us with a U.S. coal bill for as long as they run?

I might point out, Mr. Speaker, that the figures I was giving here dealt only with the cost of the one coal-fired plant that was announced in 1966. There was a coal-fired plant that was announced last month or during this session, by the hon. Minister.

The plant being of almost similar capacity, similar amount of coal being used, it will double; in other words, our deficit in U.S. funds will amount to $100 million annually.

Up to this point, Mr. Speaker, I have dwelt on the economic advantages of nuclear fuel as against fossil fuel or coal. But there are many other advantages to the use of nuclear fuel.

First, nuclear fuel needs no large storage area for stock-piling. A coal-burning plant requires a large storage area.

Second, nuclear fuel causes no pollution of the air. A coal-burning plant causes pollution in two ways: the coal dust which blows off the stock pile, and the sulphur dioxide and other chemicals that pour into the air from the smoke stack.

Third, any nuclear fuel that is required to keep the reactor charged can be brought to the plant in a truck. A coal-burning plant needs complex dock or railhead facilities.

Fourth, the cost of nuclear fuel is rather constant. The Hydro can obtain a long-term contract at a fixed price. Coal, because of labour and transportation problems, constantly fluctuates—usually accelerates—in price.

Fifth, a strike of coal miners or of transportation workers, if it was of long duration, could virtually close down the plant. We could always bring coal by rail from the east coast but there is a subvention of approximately $7 per ton and the Prime Minister has already pointed out that we pay 40 per cent of the federal bill. It would be the taxpayers who would be paying the subvention or the greater part of it. In essence, we would be in the power of a foreign power for our power.

Sixth, using coal as the source of power is going to cost us approximately $50 million annually in much needed foreign exchange per plant. Nuclear fuel would be purchased in Canada with Canadian dollars.

Seventh, the use of coal as a power source creates jobs for American workers. The use of nuclear energy would keep Canadian workers at their jobs.

The announcement to build the new plant came at a time when Canada's uranium industry was going abroad, as the Minister of Trade and Development (Mr. Randall) was going abroad to extol the merits of buying uranium and nuclear reactors from Canada. I wonder how they explain away Ontario's action to prospective buyers. The decision of Hydro makes fools not only of the uranium salesmen, but of our Minister of Trade and Development, who also, as I said, travels the world shouting "Buy Canadian". He must now be doing so with tongue in cheek.

I repeat, Mr. Speaker, a decision of this magnitude, involving a capital investment of over $200 million, plus an annual expenditure of $50 million, should have been made by this House. But I am afraid that is like throwing words into the wind as far as this government is concerned. We will continue to have a deficit of some $100 million while we supply jobs for American workmen, and perhaps we may even see a future shutdown of the uranium industry in Elliot Lake and Blind River. The government will probably say that we want to cut inflation and that is why we are cutting jobs.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: I would doubt that very much.

Mr. Ben: The Minister would doubt that very much. Well, I will tell him, if the miners up in Elliot Lake and Blind River are digging uranium it is no thanks to this government.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Mr. Speaker, if it was not for the Ontario government and Hydro we would not be opening up Elliot Lake at this time.

Mr. Singer: On what point is the Minister rising? Only one member can have the floor.

Mr. Ben: Mr. Speaker, I welcome that interjection because this is as of January, 1968. The hon. gentleman, the Minister who sat down, implied that it is this government—by building one or two measly inefficient nuclear plants—that is keeping the miners of Elliot Lake and Blind River working. Let me read to you a list, Mr. Speaker, of the number of plants that were under construction or scheduled for operation throughout the world in January of 1968:

Oyster Creek, Jersey Central Power and Light, supposed to have gone into operation in 1968; Nine Mile Point, Niagara Mohawk Power, November, 1968.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: All enriched uranium.

Mr. Ben: Oh, not all enriched uranium, no.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Tell us the truth.

Mr. Ben: I will read the Minister what they are. They are not all enriched uranium. And if they were all enriched uranium, I might point out that only one of them here is a Candu type, which is a condemnation.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: What is the Candu?

Mr. Ben: Candu is using the raw, natural uranium.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: That is what I am getting at.

Mr. Ben: All right. Only Ontario—and I think in India—are they using this type. They cannot sell it anywhere. And only this province is fool enough to go and buy it.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: This is developed by your Canadian government, a Canadian industry—

Mr. Ben: Canadian industry, nonsense! It was some idiots up there who made a bad guess and they will not change their mind. They are going to continue to say that Candu is the type when the Minister well knows, Mr. Speaker, that it is the breeding type that is going to be the nuclear reactor of the future, because it is sort of self-perpetuating. As it burns uranium it is creating more uranium. This is a perpetual motion machine, a perpetual power machine.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: But there are none developed yet.

Mr. Ben: I did not say it has been developed, I said it was going to be the one of the future.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: It has never been developed.

Mr. Ben: But the fact is that all over the world they are using enriched uranium reactors.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: So we are better than the United States.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Ben: Oh, it is all right, he is just pretending he knows something.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: I do know that much.

Mr. Ben: The Oyster Creek plant is 640 kilowatts, Mr. Speaker; the Nine Mile Point 600; Robert E. Ginna, Rochester Gas and Electric, 470; Millstone Point, Northeast Utilities 650; Indian Point No. 2, Consolidated Edison 1,033.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: These are all enriched.

Mr. Ben: Yes, and these are kilowatt hours. Dresden No. 2, 3, Commonwealth Edison, 809; Quad-Cities No. 1, 2, Commonwealth Edison, both 809. These are thousands of kilowatts.

The list continues: the Palisades, Consumers Power; H. B. Robinson No. 2, Carolina Power and Light; Turkey Point No. 3, 4, Florida Power and Light; Brown's Ferry No. 1, 2, Tennessee Valley Authority, of which I spoke to you. Monticello, Northern States Power; Point Beach No. 1, Wisconsin Electric Power, Wisconsin Michigan Power; Oconee No. 1, 2, 3, Duke Power; Vermont Yankee Nuclear Power Corporation. Incidentally, there are only a few of them that are less than half a million kilowatts.

And then there are applicants for construction permits: Malibu, Los Angeles Department of Water and Power; Fort Saint Vrain, Public Service of Colorado; Public Service Electric and Gas (with Philadelphia Electric), Atlantic City — a joint development; Diablo Canyon, Pacific Gas and Electric; Peach Bottom No. 2 and 3, Philadelphia Electric, with Public Service Electric and Gas participating. When I say No. 2 and 3 I mean the second and third. And all down the line, as I say, the only one that has a Candu type is some place in India and in this province. Why? Because it is more expensive to construct, but the fuel is cheaper, so that in the long run it is cheaper to operate.

The rest of the world uses our fuel too. They get it enriched but they operate the plants cheaper. They buy fuel from Ontario, enrich it and sell it all over the world. There are enrichment plants in Britain, they have enrichment plants in France, they have enrichment plants in the United States. And the United States government has decided that it is going to allow other countries to use these plants to enrich the fuel.

At one time, when the Kennedy programme was developed, the United States government did not enrich uranium for other governments but that policy has long gone by the board.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I just wanted to point out the enthusiasm of the so-called government commissions and how they operate—without our knowledge, without even our concurrence, or even our consent, they give powers out to themselves.

I could go on Mr. Speaker, and do the thing with a few other departments, but I think that the point has been made. I also had intended to go into the subject matter of housing, however, that would involve another 40 minutes. However, I think maybe I will.

Mr. Speaker, our current housing programme, which theoretically at least, is designed to fulfil one of the three basic elements of the living standard — food, clothing and shelter — has piteously failed to satisfy that fundamental and very pressing need.

The housing programme—and particularly the housing programme here in our own province — has failed, and is failing to such an extent that sociologists, housing experts and the vociferous press, have taken to referring to our housing programme — both public and private — as a mess.

The supply of new housing in recent years has been steadily and consistently outdistanced by the demand — a demand I might add, that shows not the least sign of lessening. Quite the contrary; demand for housing is increasing daily.

Like most major problems, the elements of this particular predicament are deceptively simple. Supply no longer can keep pace with demand. In essence, we are endeavouring to squeeze a quart into a pint pot. This endeavour, noble though our motivations may be, is in itself an enlightening exercise in frustration.

Experts, of course, differ in their opinions as to what to do about the housing problem. However, all would appear to agree that our housing programme has failed in several ways.

It has failed essentially because housing construction is falling far behind the population increase. In 1966, for example, fewer than 135,000 dwellings were started in this country. There should have been at least 150,000 according to H. W. Hignett, who is president of the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation.

Last year's housing starts again failed to keep pace with demand or with housing needs. Again they lagged far behind the demand, estimated to be at least 190,000 units by the Economic Council of Canada.

These figures, of course, are nationwide, but since our own province of Ontario houses approximately one-third of this nation's entire population, we have been served a correspondingly large portion of the housing mess of pottage. Ontario has not been the least to suffer as a result of this housing crisis.

I hesitate to use the word crisis, which by implication denotes a chronic condition. But what is the housing situation in this province if not chronic? Chronic also implies a deciduous condition, thereby presenting the very real hope for a remedy. Meanwhile this perplexing situation persists — a true Gordian knot that will be cut only when this government decides to take swift, concrete and realistic steps to provide the solution.

The demand for adequate housing in Ontario, which is as great, and in many instances greater, than that prevailing in other provinces of this nation, has been intensified, and is continuing to be intensified, by urbanization, by immigration and by net family formation. The situation is further aggravated by demolition of existing housing — demolition to make way for highways, expressways, subways, and ever-increasing number of public buildings and for re-development.

We are confronted with the considerable problem of providing shelter for 100,000 additional persons every year. And this is no mean task.

Immigration alone accounts for a very large percentage of this province's families seeking homes. In addition, we have the quite understandable boom in births of the immediate post-war period contributing to the increasing demand. The so-called war-babies are now reaching adulthood. They, in turn, are getting married and creating families of their own.

Natural births are—or until the advent of the Pill, were—on the increase. All this is being compounded by the current massive movement of people from rural areas to the cities. This persistent perennial migration means that much good rural housing is being simply abandoned. It also means crowding in the cities, and soaring land values. These skyrocketing land prices speedily reflect on the net housing costs.

The Monetary Times, for example, reported that in April 1964, 17 per cent of all new houses in Toronto could be bought for less than $16,000 each, and that only four per cent cost more than $30,000. The average cost per house then was $19,297.

A scant 14 months later the housing scene underwent drastic changes. In June, 1965, fewer than one per cent of new homes were obtainable for $16,000, while 31 per cent cost more than $30,000, bringing the average cost to $27,622.

This highly unrealistic metamorphosis, I hasten to point out, occurred in little more than one year.

As we all are quite well aware, the change did not cease there. The price of houses—as in all commodities affected by supply and demand—kept on increasing. The outcome of these artificially swollen prices has effectively placed home ownership beyond the reach of an ever-increasing segment of our population. This is hardly a situation in which we can take pride. Far from it.

The opportunity to acquire adequate housing accommodation is—or most certainly should be—a basic, inalienable human right. A right to be exercised by everyone.

Dr. Albert Rose, a professor of social work at the University of Toronto, says that he considers the assurance of the opportunity to acquire adequate housing accommodation to be a basic human right; that he considers this to be a self-evident truth.

When an important proportion of a national community's population is unable, through its own resources, to satisfy one of the three basic elements of the living standard—in this case housing—there is a prima facie case for government action in what has been a personal or private matter for hundreds of years. This is Dr. Rose's opinion. It also happens to be my opinion. He adds:

It is now acceptable more and more throughout Canada that many of our efforts in such fields as education, maintenance of sound employment standards, and fulfilment of reasonable productivity goals as well as many more economic and social objectives, are subverted by the absence of adequate housing accommodation for many thousands of Canadian families.

We support the expenditure, or at least the raising or lending, of hundreds of millions of dollars each year to accommodate families who might otherwise find it absolutely impossible to acquire homes. This is primarily because most Canadians feel that this is a matter of importance to the entire Canadian society.

Because we have set a relatively high standard for ourselves among the nations of the world, we Canadians are tremendously concerned with our failure to ensure adequate housing for every individual and family in our nation.

We feel consciously that it is unreasonable to expect thousands of elderly people to live in miserable, inadequate, cold, unlit and unventilated single rooms in the remaining old buildings in the centre of our large cities.

We feel that it is unreasonable to expect thousands of our families to raise their children and to expect their children to escape the circumstances of their parents, if they must live crowded together in smaller and poorer accommodation than we feel can be made available at reasonable cost to every family in our society.

Dr. Rose adds that our interference in the housing market through the passage of national and provincial legislation is designed to assist those families whom we select on the basis of certain criteria as the most appropriate beneficiaries of our programme. Contrariwise, we attempt to eliminate from consideration those individuals and families whom we judge on the same or other criteria to be able to take care of their own housing needs.

In the course of time we have created in Canada a simple tri-partite division of families on the basis of a simple income distribution.

We have assigned to each of these three layers in our society a certain role with respect to their capacity to meet their own housing needs.

In the upper third, or upper stratum, of our society—a segment which is roughly ten to 15 per cent of our population—those individuals and families, by the very virtue of their incomes, can afford to buy houses almost without regard to price. The sole exception to this might be the ultra-luxurious accommodations which are beyond the financial capacity of all but a mere handful of families within any metropolitan community.

This upper stratum is the only group in our western industrial society who can meet their own housing needs with their own resources and their own capacity to borrow in a money market.

The middle layer of stratum of our society is composed of those families and individuals in the 60 to 90 per cent region in our total income distribution scale. This group, which is by far the largest in Canada, now benefits substantially from the housing operations supervised by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation in its administration of The National Housing Act.

Ten years ago, Dr. Rose says, we would have included the entire middle stratum group as those for whom the provisions of The National Housing Act were intended.

But over the years we have watched the provisions of The National Housing Act become less and less available to families in the lower half of this middle stratum of the income scale. These provisions are being increasingly utilized by the upper income half of the middle stratum group.

Dr. Rose calls these facts a truly social and economic phenomenon of the first importance in Canada, because, without admitting it, a very substantial proportion of those in the upper half of the income distribution are in fact subsidized in their search for adequate housing accommodation.

The bottom layer of Canadian families and individuals, those in the lowest income scales, are the persons for whom direct public intervention in the housing market has always been intended; those for whom, in the most part, public housing has been considered justifiable, in particular, public housing where the price to be paid by the buyer has been subsidized by one or more sets of taxpayers.

These families are judged by economists to be almost entirely incapable of acquiring sufficient housing accommodation adequate in space and quality to meet their needs.

In Dr. Rose's opinion, this division of our population into three main groups, classified by income, amounts to a set of judgements that have guided us either consciously or unconsciously for more than 30 years—a set of judgements that have influenced our approach to providing legislative and financial resources to help Canadians attain a basic element in their standard of living.

This, of course, is only one sociologist's opinion—an opinion based without doubt on findings arrived at through protracted and profound studies of the housing situation. It strikes me as being a very reasonable and accurate opinion indeed.

The cause of the ailment, and I think we must acknowledge the fact that our housing programme is certainly ailing, is one thing. The remedy is quite another matter. What exactly is to be done to alleviate this very unfortunate and distressing state of housing affairs?

I think that none of us, even had we both the desire and the inclination, wants to stop population growth. Having due regard to certain biological functions and necessities, it is my firm opinion that a power much greater than that wielded by this House would be necessary to cause a complete cessation of natural births.

Our country is under-populated; therefore, we must maintain the flow of immigrants to these shores. Again I am confident that not one of us wishes to cut off this immigrant flow even though immigration accounts for a great percentage of this province's families seeking homes.

But by the same token we must not ignore the consequences of over-population through concentration. Immigrants, very understandably, want to settle in the cities for the very sound reasons that cities offer the greatest employment opportunities and higher wages.

This continuing mass influx to our urban centres places a fantastic strain on our already overstrained housing situation. It does not require an expert to see that our cities are literally bursting at the seams.

Normal population increase and the additional increase caused by immigration is further compounded by the drift to our cities from rural areas. This migratory trend continues, and will continue, unless something is done to check it. It is my considered opinion that the migratory trend can indeed be checked.

We are all fully aware of the casual agency behind normal population increase, and I trust we are all in agreement that we should leave well enough alone in this regard. I trust we are also in agreement that to tamper with immigration would be foolhardy, to say the least.

So what about the migrants—those thousands of rural area dwellers who, year after year, pull up stakes and head for the cities? What is this magical magnetic force that causes people to abandon their rural homes and draws them citywards?

The answer would appear to be a simple one, superficially at least. People flock to the cities first of all because of the amenities city living offers. In the cities we have a concentration of those things that are indicative of the affluent life. For one thing, there are employment opportunities in the city that are all but non-existent in rural areas.

Cities need a constant, reliable work force. Cities offer theatres, a wide selection of schools, social centres, various institutes of advanced learning and other cultural institutions. Cities offer a particular brand of social life and they offer numerous welfare services.

All these amenities make the cities appear very attractive. These are tremendous drawing cards to those country dwellers who perhaps consider their rural lives to be less than ideal. This, in effect, is a clear case of Mohammed coming to the mountain. If this migratory, nomadic trend is to be discouraged, there is only one thing to do—take the mountain to Mohammed. Carry the mountain of social amenities right into the backyards of the country dwellers.

If the migratory flow is to be stemmed, then the first step would be to supply all these things in rural centres, centres other than Toronto and the larger cities. Let us take our cultural amenities to the smaller rural towns.

A good start has been made to provide a mobile, circulating Royal Ontario Museum. Follow this up with a circulating art gallery for each small country town.

The art gallery in Toronto has thousands upon thousands of dollars worth of art treasures, paintings and sculptures, lying in the basement collecting dust simply because there is no room to display it. Why not dust off these art treasures and put them on display where they belong? Let them see the light of day. Take these treasures into the rural areas where I am sure the people can appreciate the beauty of a Rembrandt or Cezanne every bit as much as those of us who live in the cities.

Follow these circulating exhibitions with a mobile theatre company—called the Ontario Theatre—and with a mobile ballet company. Let us provide travelling shows, concerts—take the Toronto symphony on tour—carry the mountain right to Mohammed's front door.

It is up to us to create a cultural upheaval, a cultural revolution, in this province. It is up to us to provide schools to ensure an adequate supply of trained personnel. It is up to us to provide the amenities of city living for each small provincial town.

If we can do this, if we can only make a start, then the glamour of city living will perhaps be less appealing to those in rural areas. Perhaps they will lose the seemingly overwhelming desire to migrate to the cities. Who knows, perhaps we will not only stem the flow, but reverse the trend completely.

At the moment, those of the administrative or executive class are extremely hesitant to leave the city to go to smaller towns. Small towns lack what these people want for themselves and their children. These people demand more than merely a good salary. They demand good educational, recreational and social facilities for their families and themselves.

If we can only make rural living more attractive by providing all these amenities, then one day the drift might even be away from the cities instead of towards them.

If we can accomplish this or even a small part of it, then I feel that it would be a major step in distributing more equitably the undue stress and strain that is weighing on our housing, a strain that is bogging it down into a morass from which it daily becomes more difficult to extricate ourselves.

Housing is simply not being built fast enough to meet current demand or to substantially reduce the backlog of slums and overcrowded dwellings. Decent housing has become far too costly for ever increasing numbers of middle and lower income families.

Homes are not a luxury, they are a necessity. People need a place in which to live. This is irrefutable fact. They need a place not only in which to live, but a place in which to eat, sleep, bring up their families and to relax.

But there is more to a home than just that. The psychological benefits of a place of one's own are truly enormous. There is no yardstick by which these massive benefits can be measured. This, in a sense, is the manifestation of the territorial imperative, the driving force exhibited by even the humblest of the Creator's living animals, let alone man.

Lack of adequate housing can be the root cause of countless social ills. Child welfare authorities report that bad housing is an important factor contributing to child neglect, to ill health, to family breakdown and to delinquency. Experts and housing consultants say that housing simply cannot be separated from other services that aim to increase human well-being.

Bad housing does nothing to increase human well being. Bad housing can, and often does lead to physical and mental illness, disturbed children, poor study habits, truancy, drop-out and marriage breakup. The general poor environment is a hazard that I feel it is our duty to eliminate—an obstacle that we must surmount.

We must also recognize the fact that although bad housing may be the root cause of these distressing conditions, good housing does not necessarily cure them. However, there is not the slightest doubt that good housing will do much to create a much more congenial environment.

Dr. Rose points out that housing is a fundamental, constitutional responsibility of the provincial governments in Canada. The decision, he says, to pass legislation and to provide the legislative resources to enable Canadian families and individuals to acquire adequate housing accommodation is a political decision that will be taken when and if it appears politically advisable, and not necessarily because it appears socially advisable.

The significant expenditures required to improve the housing conditions of thousands of Canadian families and individuals can only be sought through the borrowing capacity and tax-raising facilities of the federal government.

Ottawa can make substantial amounts of money available, either directly or on loan, to the provincial governments who have constitutional responsibility.

According to G. E. Mortimore, a former welfare writer who is currently reading for his doctorate in social studies at the University of Toronto, the provincially owned Ontario Housing Corporation has been a trail-blazer in public housing. The Ontario Housing Corporation has bought and built far more public housing than any other agency in Canada.

But, Mr. Mortimore points out, the achievement of the Ontario Housing Corporation is measured in thousands of units. The need, he says, is measured in hundreds of thousands.

Even the most generous estimate of what the Ontario Housing Corporation has done, the hon. Minister's estimates of 13,500 units built, planned or under construction, represents only a mere nibble at the edge of the total need. It is time for the hon. Minister to stop nibbling and to sink his teeth well and truly into the problem facing this province.

A major cause, perhaps the most significant one, of the housing scarcity, is the high unit cost. Spiralling housing costs due in large measure to the increasing demand and the diminishing supply have made houses so expensive that between one-third and one-half of Canadians cannot afford to buy or rent homes of their own.

That was the opinion of the Toronto architect, James A. Murray, who reported the result of this nationwide research in a book, "Good Housing for Canadians". Since the report was issued in 1964, housing has become much more costly as I showed previously.

A year ago, the cheapest possible house in Metropolitan Toronto which could be financed through mortgages, assisted by the federal government—a $17,500 three-bedroom house in the suburbs—demanded a down payment of $3,500 and an $8,000 a year income to keep up the payments.

For a family of three or four children, a down payment of $5,000 and an income of $10,000 a year is the absolute minimum, and these figures are probably conservative. Perhaps these figures are conservative in more ways than one.

These down payments, which in far too many cases are impossibly high, have the effect of forcing more and more women out to work to help their husbands eke out the family income and in order to accumulate enough money to make the down payment. For years, married women could go to work or stay home, just as they chose. If they wanted to earn some pin money, they went out to work. If not, they stayed home to look after their husbands and children, the choice was theirs alone.

Now it appears that in too many cases women have no alternative. They must go to work. As a consequence, home life suffers.

What exactly causes the high cost of housing? First of all, scarcity. Too many people seeking too few houses results in a seller's market. Secondly, available land is not being used to its fullest advantage. Too few units per acre are being constructed. Increase the number of units per acre and the unit cost must of necessity come down. This is simple arithmetic.

The cost of servicing lots also adds appreciably to the overall net cost to the buyer. Let us not insist that developers provide services that the purchaser has to pay for now. Payment for services such as roads, sidewalks, sewers and utilities results in the astronomical down-payments. Why not let the government capitalize this cost of services and permit owners, or prospective owners, to pay for them over five, ten or 15 year periods. This would appreciably reduce the amount of the down payment that is now required, and bring house purchase within the range of a much, much larger group of the population.

The government could also make money available for second mortgages at more reasonable interest rates than those now prevailing. Does it not make sense to this government that to cast its bread — and I assure you there is no pun intended — upon the waters, is the obvious, logical procedure to follow? Cast thy bread upon the waters, for thou shalt find it after many days. That scriptural advice is 2,000 years old, Mr. Speaker, but it is still topical.

Surely it is clear that this particular type of bread-casting would, beyond any year or nay, result in the immediate alleviation of our housing problem.

If this government could also be prevailed to avert its fond gaze from the large metropolitan centres and glance occasionally towards the smaller towns, it might find some glimmer of hope in this direction.

For example, provide expanded rail services for smaller towns, systems like GO-Transit. Provide commuter services for country dwellers who aspire to work in the city. The workers would then have the best of both worlds and it would serve to ease the strain on scarce city housing. If adequate commuter services were provided, then there would be no need for the much vaunted satellite cities. Satellite cities, per se, can never solve the housing problem; they would merely shift the problem to some other locale.

Cities, like Alice when she drank the contents of the little brown bottle, keep growing and growing until they at last become quite unwieldy and unmanageable. A limit should be placed on their ultimate growth in order to keep them within workable limits.

It is becoming increasingly difficult to create a balanced, spacious environment in existing cities. It is becoming more and more difficult to find suitable land to provide housing for the population. The larger the city, the greater the possibility that older houses will deteriorate into slum dwellings.

Dr. A. J. Dakin, head of the division of town and regional planning at the University of Toronto, says that everyone talks about slums and the high cost of housing, but nobody does much about the problem. Mark Twain said exactly the same thing about the weather.

If Canadians are in earnest, Dr. Dakin said, they should do what several European countries did long ago — set a minimum standard of decent housing for everyone, and use the power of the public treasury to work for that standard.

In the ratio of housing completions to increases in population, Canada lags far behind Britain, Sweden and West Germany. We also trail some distance behind Belgium, Denmark, Finland, Italy, France, the Netherlands and Switzerland, and a short distance behind the United States. Canada actually stands in twelfth position among industrial western nations in the ratio of housing completions to population increase.

Canada should not stand in twelfth place, she should be setting the pace for the rest of the world to follow instead of trailing behind.

One reason for the slow pace and high cost of housing in Canada is that building methods are old fashioned and inefficient. Elliot Yarmon, president of Tankoos Yarmon Ltd., was quoted some months ago in the Monetary Times as saying:

You watch a house going up, it is a cumbersome, old-fashioned sight, with three men standing around smoking while one drives a nail. And this feather-bedding approach continues at a time when skyscrapers can be raised by two floors a week.

The revolution, if there is to be one at all in the housebuilding industry, must come in techniques and engineering and construction.

Another factor contributing to the high cost of housing is that people want, even demand, houses completely finished with every modern convenience and appliance.

People are demanding finished recreation rooms with built-in bars; they demand garages, wall-to-wall broadloom, dishwashers, eye-level ovens, air-conditioning, landscaping and other luxury appurtenances that could very easily be done without to begin with. Builders, of course, are only too willing to supply all these things since it means a larger net profit to them.

These frills are certainly not necessary; they are luxuries, while the house itself is not. All they do is add appreciably to the cost of the house and to the amount of the down payment required.

New housing projects have been known to swamp schools, with unexpected numbers of new pupils. There is federal aid for housing but none for schools. Cost of education is one of the greatest single expenses borne by present day governments and the government simply must endeavour to keep these education costs down.

In recent years, education seems to have assumed the qualities of the golden calf, to be worshipped by everyone. Although we must acknowledge that education is of the utmost importance, it must be kept in perspective. In order to exercise this phantom educational golden calf, the government might provide the solution by building its own schools, thereby saving on architects' fees. School designs might easily be standardized. After all, a classroom is a classroom.

The classroom itself is relatively unimportant, it is what is taught in that classroom that counts. Of course, schools ought to be esthetically pleasing, that is not my objection. Schools must be bright, comfortable and airy, providing an atmosphere conducive to sound work and study habits of our children. What I do object to is the wide variation in individual school design.

No two schools built in recent years look alike. Yet they all succeed in looking like schools. Schools, like churches, have a characteristic appearance that cannot be disguised. But the physical differences, so far as I can see, are useless and perform no worthwhile function, at least for the benefit of the students.

There is, however, one thing these design dissimilarities bring about, and that is increased cost. Thank heaven we have long ago graduated from the little red schoolhouse era. But surely a realistic standardization of design would be a feasible answer in beating the astronomical education costs, and particularly the cost of school buildings.

The building block type of construction which was demonstrated so dramatically by Expo's Habitat could easily be modified and adapted for school construction. Standardized units, pre-built in a central workshop, could be added to existing school buildings as and when necessary.

To those people who may feel disposed to criticize this suggestion on the grounds that these units may be esthetically displeasing, may I just say, take a long, hard look at our existing school portables. I have seen beaten-up army huts that look like palaces by comparison.

Another field in which the provincial government might easily become interested is the provision of heating for homes. This heat could be supplied from nuclear and thermal power plants, now or in the future as more are constructed.

Nuclear power requires a great quantity of water, therefore plants must be built adjacent to lakes or some other plentiful source of water. When the water passes through the reactors it is heated to very high temperatures. This hot water is then dumped into the lake. Why not utilize this hot water for heating homes and factories instead of sluicing it away as waste? The water is clean; it is very hot, and therefore very useful.

In Iceland and New Zealand natural hot water geysers are utilized for just such purposes. Why not in Canada? The benefit of this low cost heating could be passed on to home owners. I realize that nuclear power is far removed from the housing situation, but I think it is important that we explore every avenue in seeking the solution to the crisis.

It is a frustrating thing to watch the housing crisis go from bad to worse while thousands of Canada's old houses, which should still have many years of useful life, fall into disrepair and decay simply because not enough incentive, financial and otherwise, is given to the owners to keep them in a state of repair.

It is frustrating to watch while dozens of areas in our cities deteriorate into slums. Slums and overcrowding seem to go hand in hand. Overcrowding is an evil, or rather, the results of overcrowding most certainly are. Recent riots and violence in the streets of American cities were spawned in the overcrowded ghettos. People were herded together in their tenements and their high-rise slums until they had no elbow room. They were stifled; they had no breathing space and something had to give.

It was simply a case of the hypothetical, irresistible force encountering the immovable object. The position grew to be altogether intolerable, so it erupted in violence, in riots, in shooting, killing, looting. Mob rule prevailed. It was the call of the wild—evolution in reverse. People reverted to animal instincts, the most powerful of which is self-preservation.

And who was the culprit—the real culprit? It was no individual or individuals. It was sub-standard, overcrowded housing that sparked the upheaval.

There is no excuse or no need for overcrowding in Canada. We have enough land—land to spare. We still have countless millions of acres of virgin land in this country of ours. The land is there, all we need is someone to do something with it.

If necessary, let us take our cities to the country. Russia is doing this with apparent success. If they can do it, why can't we? It is high time we rid our minds of the concept that downtown Toronto is Canada's true mecca. It is high time we faced the housing problem squarely and come to grips with it.

The current cry is for national Medicare. Medicare may cure an existing ailment, it will not prevent the ailment. For too long, far too much money has been spent on cures and not nearly enough on prevention. Adequate housing, rather than Medicare would do much to prevent the countless physical, mental and social ills that beset our society.

But there must be a degree of priority in the housing field until all demands are met. Large houses should be restricted or reserved for large families. If two people choose to live in a ten-room house, then penalize them for this luxury.

Let there be a loosening of restrictions on zoning, as in wartime. Why not permit people with adequate accommodation, like many of our senior citizens who own large homes, and who live alone, take in roomers if they so desire?

This would be a two-fold benefit; it would serve to relieve the abject loneliness of many of these older people and it would provide them with a modest income to supplement their bare existence. It would also serve to provide temporary living accommodation for small families and individuals, thus easing the housing shortage.

At the moment, we subsidize rentals for welfare cases. Then why not subsidize the cost of houses, subsidize the mortgage by forgiving a portion of it every year if certain standards are met and maintained.

There are many things that can be done to relieve the housing crisis. Others will no doubt deal with these at much greater length and in greater depth than I. But the problem will certainly not solve itself, neither will it accommodatingly go away if we close our eyes.

To use the words of Shakespeare's Macbeth, who also had certain work to do with some dispatch, "If it were done, when 'tis done, then 'twere well it was done quickly". The thing to do is to start, and the best place to start is at the beginning. I would suggest that this government:

- (a) Draw up a clear list of goals.
- (b) Launch mass production housing immediately.
- (c) Step up production of public housing.
- (d) Offer long-term, low-interest loans for house purchase.
- (e) Set up a pool of publicly owned land for building sites.
- (f) Offer worthwhile incentives for owners to fix up old houses.
- (g) Make sure that urban redevelopment projects bring a net gain in housing, not a loss.
- (h) Concentrate on private rather than commercial projects, homes rather than office buildings.
- (i) Work in fact to bring about a uniform building code for the whole province.

Mr. J. W. Snow (Halton East): I see the member has been reading my speeches.

Mr. Ben: Oh, I read them, and they were very good. I only hope that the government reads them.

In Metropolitan Toronto, right at this minute, there is something like a surplus of two million square feet of office space. There is no rhyme or reason in redevelopment of this nature. There is a notable lack of sound organization methods behind it. This is lopsided planning.

This prompts me to question the wisdom of mortgage and trust companies who invest in excess office space while there is a dire shortage of housing space.

There was a furore recently when the multi-million dollar Eaton centre aborted in its early stages of gestation. This may not be the tragedy that some people think it was. Had the Eaton complex got off the ground, that would have taken much more money out of the mortgage market, channelling it away from house builders and developers.

Mr. Speaker, we must relieve the housing shortage. We must provide our people with adequate living accommodation. We must permit people to have a degree of pride in their lives and homes. Surely that is the right of every Canadian.

And I hope, Mr. Speaker, that in dealing with this subject the government members took cognizance that I was not criticizing them but offering concrete suggestions for the benefit of the people of this province and I hope that you will pay some heed to those suggestions.

Mr. P. D. Lawlor (Lakeshore): Mr. Speaker, in joining this second debate on the Speech from the Throne in which I have the pleasure to participate, I would like to say a word of congratulations to the Lieutenant-Governor, the man whom I think we will all agree is both a diplomat and a gentleman. And nowhere was this shown more clearly than in a little note left on our desk in the past few days—I never received a more subtly worded invitation to have a drink in my life, and I thank him for it.

Mr. Speaker, I wish to extend my congratulations to you, in your capacity as Speaker, without going overboard on the way you handle this House. Sometimes it strikes me that you have some of the capacities of a Supreme Court judge, with just a touch of the curmudgeon. I suppose in their cases they are constantly being fretted, and as they grow older, it seems that their bad days come to outnumber the good. Your capacity as a Speaker thus far is numbered in the number of your good days. They have been very numerous. Your bad days have been very few and far between. We can pretty well detect them in advance.

But I suspect that on some occasions before I leave this House—on some of those gloomy and jaundiced days, the House will be emptied or at least certain members over here will disappear out the door. I trust this will not take place. But you know, the hazards of human nature are such, and the tempers on occasions are such as to lead to this eventuality.

I would like to turn my congratulations upon the new Minister of Revenue (Mr. White), a man for whom I have the greatest affection, believe it or not. A person who sits over here and does not know the Minister very well can gauge his character and disposition only from the rather raucous rejoinders he makes. This is a rather misleading portrait of this man.

In the long hours of the summer when we sat together on that committee we would often go from eight o'clock or nine o'clock in the morning until midnight with a break for lunch and dinner, and he handled the internal affairs with the utmost diplomacy. He was always, in his own interest and in the interest of the government, angling for a consensus. It practically broke his heart on any occasions when any of us would really take a strong and adamant stand against his position, indicating we were not so likely to change.

This seldom happened, largely because of this man's adroitness. Sometimes I even felt, it hurts me to say this, that we were being taken in, as a subtle masquerade; that to this government's necessity of conducting affairs on the economic level of this province with greater acumen, the device was to suck the members of the Opposition into agreeing to major proposals and then toss it back in our teeth at the end of the day.

I am sorry the Minister is not here, because he would no doubt remember this, and begin to toss back when the occasion arises, which will not be long.

He has a touch of a statesman about him, and the sooner he gets away from the disposition of the gut politician and increase the capacity of his statesman's qualities, which he has, the sooner he will be in a position to become the future—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Lawlor: I did not think all those accolades should fall on deaf ears. This is the last time it will happen to you so far as I am concerned. I think it is worth repeating to this extent because it may operate as some kind of index on your future conduct. I was saying that perhaps at the moment he is too much of the gut politician, that my experience with him in the summer indicated that he has the qualities of a statesman; an ability to look above issues and to be a bigger man than what he appears to be slumped over there.

And I was recommending that he develop the one set of qualities and play down the others. As a matter of fact, I think he has been doing that, with an eye to his future leadership potentialities. Because if they have not recognized these capacities, and I am sure they have, then it would not at all offend me as a member of the Opposition to see him sitting in the seats of the mighty, in a higher seat than he is at the moment.

This man who could work from eight o'clock in the morning until midnight in a driving way, and who after midnight, would come and propose that we go out on the town and spend a few hours and come back and start work again. That really tickled me. Anybody who has got that ability should be the Prime Minister.

I am not going to speak further because he will have the opportunity on the Budget Debate and in his estimates, as they come forward, to establish his credibility as the new Minister. I would simply take this occasion to remind him of what we did say on that committee. And when considering the legislation that he will bring down shortly in taxation matters in this province, I would ask him to keep very much in mind what, in effect, we all committed ourselves to.

I would like to read from paragraph 9, and paragraph 15 of the preamble. It says:

The major premises on which our recommendations are founded, is that the combined provincial and municipal tax burdens should be allocated in a manner which recognizes the ability to pay principle. It is the opinion of your committee that this requires a progressive distribution of burden, to achieve this. We think that an increased reliance on corporate and personal income tax is necessary and we strongly recommend that when additional revenues are required, these two taxes be used to yield an appropriate share of the increment. We may further note that there are other reasons commending a more intensive use of these taxes but we shall defer for the moment our discussion of them.

And then, after our ill-fated food proposals, he says in paragraph 15:

By applying their principal recommendations to fiscal 66-67 the Smith committee estimated that the provincial tax revenues would have increased by $381 millions and that the revised retail sales tax would account for approximately 66 per cent of this increase. We assert that this sales tax share is intolerably large. It is more appropriate that greater reliance be placed on the personal and corporate income tax, and this we recommend. There are theoretical difficulties concerning the incidents of the corporate income tax, but this does not merit the lessening of its relative importance in the provincial tax structure. I shall abide the results—and I suppose these matters are not entirely in your hands—but if you are half as persuasive with your own Cabinet as you were on that committee, some of these goodly words might come into being.

The one thing one learns psychologically on this committee is that everybody objects to taxes. I mean, one knew it ahead of time but it came home with a terrible force. Smith who recommended an array of taxes in various forms, very inequitably, would never, never tax newspapers. This was taboo for Smith. The churches, of course, do not want to tax the churches, we have had evidence of that.

The New Democratic Party, and the rest of the world, as far as I could find out—except for the Liberal Party in this House—would not dream of taxing food. I know a man who is opposed to the taxes on prayer shawls.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Lawlor: That passed the member by, did it? Well, take a look at your own report and you will see there is not a word about taking any exception to or objection to that food tax. You were caught with the proverbial pantaloons in your hand.

I shall take the opportunity to drive the point home. I know some people who are opposed to the taxation of prayer shawls, and others to the taxation of electric light bulbs. The Minister of Revenue, the chairman of our committee, had a peculiar penchant of his own. He would never tax books. This was a sacred subject. At no time should they come under consideration. The people of Great Britain, in the depths of their agony, would not tax books and therefore there was some kind of sentimental aura about books which somehow drove the Minister to think that they were so precious as to be beyond taxation.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Lawlor: He is beyond that, is he?

The next item I would like to discuss, Mr. Speaker, has to do with a certain newspaper article that has appeared recently connected with the bar association. I am a little irritated by the article and I think I will say a word or two on it. The hon. Attorney General (Mr. Wishart), who is unavoidably absent here today, can speak for himself and the government in the passage of this bill, but as a member of the committee who worked it over, I do find that there is a certain amount of insouciance, if not downright ignorance, involved in the statements made by a four-man committee, and others, at the current meeting of the bar association in Windsor.

They should be taken to task on this sort of splendid show, because of what they have claimed here. Mr. George Mace, corporation counsel for metropolitan Toronto predicted that the new statute with its vagueness and contradictions would become a gold mine for lawyers.

He goes on, "instead, a whole new Act was brought in instead of accepting the old Act." In other words, which they had already learned, and, you know, it is pretty difficult to change after 45. He had learned the rules of the game, but we had brought in new rules and it was going to upset him for a day or two, sitting in his bath. I think he would have to pull up his socks and learn what we are trying to do.

Instead a whole new Act was brought in, set out in vague language, which is most difficult to understand. You see, he finds it difficult to understand. I thought it was as clear as most legislation, but, there again, Mr. Mace described the new Act as putting heavy and cumbersome obstacles in the path of the movement towards giving equity to expropriated property. Well, the man could not have read the thing. This is a city solicitor?

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister of Correctional Services): Is he a lawyer?

Mr. Lawlor: Well, I agree with you, in part. They are all lawyers. He is probably a good Conservative lawyer.

And then my friend, Hyliard Chappell says some appalling things, which I am sure he will be ashamed of at the day of judgement. They go on down the page with the belief that—

The Ontario government has failed to consult the legal profession and other interested parties before going ahead with the new statute. This was voiced later at the general meeting of the Ontario branch which ended the three day annual meeting. A tough resolution which regretted the tendency of the government to depart from the practice of consultation with the profession was watered down (which is pretty much in character) to regretting the occasions in which this was done. It was adopted by only a handful of lawyers.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Watered down at the bar.

Mr. Lawlor: I think I'll get a little watered down myself.

Mr. Gisborn: How about the Liberals taking the vote off every one over 50?

Mr. Lawlor: Well, the fact of the matter is, as we all know, that the young lawyers had an adequate opportunity to present their position. The report of the Ontario Law Reform Commission which formed the substance—to a great degree the very words which were placed into this new statute—was issued September 21, 1967. How can they say that they do not know what is going on? If they do not know, it is their own fault. They have had plenty of opportunity.

They are caught asleep at the wheel half the time, making so much money that they cannot possibly attend to the affairs of the public weal and then complain afterwards as to what their responsibilities are. As a matter of fact, on the other hand, a number of very distinguished lawyers did appear before the committee, on several occasions—I will not go over the list of names—but they made very fine recommendations and seemed to understand. Certainly they took no exception of this kind to the statute as it went through.

Now, in the final summing up of the debate on this, I, too, stood in this place, and said that there were ambiguities, unresolved conflicts and difficulties, in the statute. You do not have to be a legal genius to detect that. The fact of the matter is that this Act establishes a completely new principle, and to say that you can amend an old Act or modify it somehow — as some of these ginks say — and still catch the flavour is wrong. The whole thing had to be rethought. This new principle of equivalence for accommodation — a home for a home — is valid, and it was a most commendable principle that this government brought in. For them to miss the boat, miss the point as to what has been attempted here in the terms of a piece of legislation which cannot, in my opinion, be matched in any other jurisdiction, seems to me a dereliction of their responsibility.

I have no doubt that in ten years this Act, the bill that we put through, will be twice as large as it is at the moment. In other words, with all the acuteness in the world, the Legislature — and the lawyers had better come to realize this, I only realized it when I came to this House — legislation cannot dot all their "i's" for them. Legislation is becoming infinitely complex. You cannot spell out, in its full ramifications every possible situation as they did 25 years ago.

The legislation, when it comes down in its new form, sets up a skeleton, and it is up to the legal profession and the courts to put the flesh on that skeleton. We can give guidance, we can give direction, and we can show the intention of the Legislature. We can go deeper than that, we can give the structure, and we have done that in my opinion. Now the testing of courts will show where its defects are. For them to blandly and bluntly say that it is defective without knowing this in advance and not having studied it as we have, again, is a piece of impertinence. Apart from the fact that they had the law reform commission report — it was available to them — they had plenty of opportunity to appear before the committee, particularly as we sat in the evenings after seven o'clock, as you remember. They would have been free from their offices had they so wished to attend.

The one concrete and valid suggestion that I have seen in this article touching the thing, is one that the member for Downsview and I raised ad nauseam throughout the whole thing; that the expropriating authority is one and the same legal person as the approving authority. If they would look at the debates in Hansard — I could not condemn anybody to doing that — but if they did glance at it before they spoke, they might have seen the numerous recommendations we made.

We launched into the field of the relations between mortgagees and mortgagors—a completely new field. I would say there was fairly excellent drafting in that particular area, and even at such points where we did not make any great inroads we pretty well confirmed the existing law of injurious affection. What are they talking about?

If they wish to raise this kind of stink then let them have the decency to pay attention to what goes on in this building and to come before us, if they have valid recommendations to make. We would be most pleased to listen, we always do, but to push this any farther seems to be a bit wretched.

Now, no longer in the capacity of a hard-headed legal eagle, but in my capacity as dreamer, I want to launch out into a philosophical dissertation. The balance of my speech, Mr. Speaker, is divided into two parts. All Rome was divided into two parts, we can take either part as we please.

One will be our constitutional problems, about the division of power. An attack was made by the hon. members of the Opposition last week upon the government touching their complete and utter failure to tackle this most crucial issue. Everybody stands up and admits this issue is central to the whole debate going on today in Ottawa, but our government has not given us any forthright guidance on it, or any real indication of their intentions about it.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Lawlor: The only thing I have seen in this regard is the statement made by the hon. Minister of Financial and Commercial Affairs (Mr. Rowntree), saying he was prepared to turn over pricing policy and the control of prices to the federal government, which I thought was a very intelligent thing for him to be prepared to do, but apart from that just what have you recommended in terms of division of powers.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: There is no leader of any government in this country that has ever informed his Legislature in as comprehensive a manner as our leader has in this matter.

Mr. Lawlor: Not on this matter. I mean you can defend his position on other grounds but not on those grounds. You can say he is a subtle fellow and he does not want to commit himself in advance when he wants to see what everybody else says and then move in as an honest broker, or as—I do not know what—in order to save the situation because he is not committed to anything in advance.

If that is the sort of argument you use, I would not buy it, but I would say it has some sense. To say that you presented any kind of policy to us is nonsense.

This is an area which I would like to explore in the next little while but I think, so that the blood pressure does not rise, I shall turn to the subject of philosophy. I want to talk about the nature of man, about human freedom and about rights. Up until the past few years there has been a certain theory of man in western civilization. It has always been that man was a rational animal, and this is pretty well the accepted idea, that he had a nature of a fixed kind, that we knew what man was all about.

But new winds are blowing in the world in this regard. The claim now is, by some of the best boys in Europe, that man has not a nature at all, he is infinitely malleable, infinitely adjustable, he has no terminal; there are no ends for human activity. Human activity is a self developing sort of thing; man is to the heart of his being an historical being; he is shaped by history and he shapes history; and he shapes history through shaping himself.

Therefore, you come to the theory that man is really not determined in his nature at all, but is constant, on-going, self making. Now this "self making" means, in terms of our life, that man has for the first time in history entered into a path of full responsibility for himself and for his environment, and this is a new thing in the world—full responsibility for himself; for shaping himself; for the act of consciousness; and for the act of reflection; whereby he comes back on himself; growth in terms of consciousness; in terms of intensification, of deepening, an ever on-going deepening of himself—without end; an endless, infinite act of self knowledge.

This is what has happened and it imports all kinds of political things—for instance about planning and about the need to bring intelligence to bear, not to work by chance as the Tories operate—very often in Liberal philosophy too. You have too much dependence upon chance; you leave gaps in the universe; you let chaos reign and call chaos good, and this chaos leads to all kinds of—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The member started out with philosophy and now he is getting political.

Mr. Lawlor: You are getting pure political philosophy.

Mr. J. E. Stokes (Thunder Bay): Political philosophy?

Mr. E. W. Sopha (Sudbury): Pure Marxism!

Mr. Lawlor: Who said that?

Mr. J. L. Brown (Beaches-Woodbine): Marx said it.

Mr. Lawlor: The heritage of capitalism—the background of it—however it might have modified itself. The beast bears the same spots; it has been to treat man inhumanely; it has been always to treat man as a thing, as a cog, as a machine among machines; and that includes the managerial class, the executives, everybody is treated in the same impersonal, inhuman fashion.

It is this attempt, approach or attitude towards human beings that is subject to condemnation; it leads to mental illness and a widespread diversity of mental illness in our society. It also leads to a debasedly material approach to everything, so that in a civilization such as ours a poet, for instance, has no honour in his own country.

These are tertiary people; we toss them off as being unimportant. We shall indulge them once in a while because we happen to have time, but as far as matters of this kind are concerned this is a part of the whole mentality. It also affects our whole educational system, not only affects it, but afflicts it.

At lunch hour today, or earlier this morning on the committee, Lloyd Dennis appeared before us on education and Dennis' remarks would have shaken the members up a bit, I suspect, as to his knowledge and his insight. This report embodies exactly the sort of thing I am trying to say, that man is a changing creature; the change is not only all around us but accelerating, and it is not in any way to be discounted or regretted; it is to be accepted and redeemed.

Change is not good in itself, but the direction that we give to change is the important thing, and that direction must be in terms, of course, of increased consciousness in human development, and you can only do that by supplying the material base.

If it cannot be done by the individuals themselves, it must be done pervasively and wholeheartedly by the community, and at the centre of this philosophy, is the theory of community.

The government has not got a concept of community—which is a form of amity and mutuality and friendship which our economic institutions lead to binding men together. Your economic institutions divide men, cause alienation in the society, deep distress to each other. The whole tendency is the opposite. All Dennis is trying to do is the simplest thing in the world—change human nature.

An hon. member: What do you think of Marxism?

Mr. Lawlor: Oh, I think Marxism has certain fundamental defects—its limitations on the powers of the human being in terms of self development to transcend himself. I think there has to be a religious dimension, otherwise you cannot transcend.

An hon. member: Is the member not glad he asked?

Mr. Lawlor: Therefore, that is the first. The thing is that they have a deeply totalitarian structure in their society; and thirdly they have a dialectic operative there. But, as you know, it is a material dialectic, but you are closer, in the Tory philosophy, to materialistic dialectic—the dialectic of matter, if I may say so, than people like myself are, because you have the same material components. A firm, same, material component has been the life-blood of this society as the Marxists do and therefore your party.

An hon. member: Did you hear that?

Mr. P. J. Yakabuski (Renfrew South): I do not know what it means but it sounds good.

Mr. Lawlor: Last year I spoke about a Jesuit by the name of Teilhard de Chardin. In his theory there is a kind of drive—a divine drive—in human nature that is taking us to higher and higher positions, a gain of consciousness, of awareness, of self awareness, and therefore at this height of self awareness we can shape ourselves and shape our society, and move things to a human image, etc.

I do not believe in this doctrine insofar as an internal necessary development is concerned. Really, there is no theory of progress. There is only a theory of what I call precariousness. We hang on the edge. And in this regard I would like to quote from the great Jewish philosopher, Martin Buber, whose "Paths in Utopia", which I would recommend to the Minister of Reform Institutions, as this man's knowledge of Israel and the way in which that society shapes itself is in quite grave contradistinction to the nature of the society that you on that side of the fence promulgate and promote.

Buber says, "Man is not travelling along the high road at all, but is picking his precarious way along a narrow edge between two abysses." And that is just about it.

Man has no fixed human nature. He is a deeply historical creature, oriented therefore onto the future. And it is those people whose eyes are focused not on the past and it cannot be focused on the present, but on to the future, trying to ferret out to the best of our intelligence what the shape and size of that future will be and the projections of what we think human beings do and because we have seen them do it and be it in our own lives, to shape the society in that direction and to—

Mr. Sopha: In other words, we must invent the future.

Mr. Lawlor: We must invent the future, that is a good phrase, thank you. Invent the future now, because the future is already here in that sense. It is because of what we want it to be that it will be if we want it to be enough. Otherwise you again leave everything to chance, to chaos. You know the old Tory philosophy of blundering from left to right, ameliorating here and patching up there but never really launching forward in a forthright programme to bring the thing up to date, into the 20th century, and encourage and advance human progress.

In this particular context, I have only one other word to say. It has always been traditionally held, as in Aristotle, that man is a rational animal thing, which he is not at all, because man is no sense an animal. At the best, man in an incarnate spirit—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Lawlor: Oh, rationality enters into it and spirit as well, but first of all he is not an animal. Where the rationality comes into it, we will deal with later.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Lawlor: Rationality has to do with deductive logic. Human beings, in my opinion, do not operate by a deductive process, that is, a standard or norm policy. The important process is intuitive and the terms of any syllogism is always set up in an initial insight or intuition. How you get from one to the other is part of rationality. But man is an intuitive creature, not a rational creature.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The member should put that in his next election pamphlet.

Mr. Lawlor: I never thought I could get worked up over that. The end of man is not happiness. Happiness at the best would be a byproduct. Too often it seems this is a fault in our civilization. Happiness, being identified usually with pleasure, whether it is or not does not matter, is not or should not be taught as the end of the human being.

We are made for more heroic stuff than that. We do live in states of risk and the states of risk, as I just indicated, are the things that should be our driving forces. And self-sacrifice is inevitably involved in this sort of thing and that is the price that has to be paid.

For people to go around whining about happiness all the time and expecting it to be conferred upon them one way or another seems to me to undermine all the marrow and all the gumption they may have. Man, as I said, is a self-rationing being. I will not go into the religious dimension, there are possibly other courses operative there. But at the heart of his being lies his will and the will means freedom. And it is on freedom that the development of the human race and human beings depends — in theories of freedom of the proper kind. It has very little to do with free enterprise which is a game of chaos and old might. It is an abrogation of human freedom because you do not make decisions in that particular circumstance, at least, not on a macrocosmic level. You make it down there individually. You just do not accept the full impact of the 20th century when you say that sort of thing.

I want to talk, therefore, about freedom for a few moments because a great deal is mouthed in this House about this concept, as it is being mouthed at the moment even by me.

There seems to be two distinct ideas of freedom. The first, which I will call English freedom, is valid, in my opinion, but not by itself. It is essentially an approach to, and a necessary condition for, a second kind of freedom which will I call, French freedom. It probably should not be called French, it is Latin. It comes out of Greece and Rome largely, but I will call it French because of the debate that is going on in Ottawa at the moment.

This division between two concepts of freedom is deeply rooted in the minds of these two people, not that there are a good many Frenchmen who are under the delusion of the English freedom, and not that the odd Englishman who happens to have seen what the French form takes, etc., but part of the welfare of our present political problems, and part of our present troubles, are caused by misconceptions or unclear notions of what is involved in these two ideas of freedom.

May I say, before going on, that they are usually set up in contradiction, as though they are mutually exclusive. But the contention, and it is a fairly novel contention as far as I know, is that they are one dependent upon the other. One has to be achieved in the process of achieving the other.

In other words, they are mutually inter-related, they are in a state of dialectical tension. The English freedom has a very little—

Hon. Mr. Crossman: I pity the poor Hansard reporter —

Mr. Lawlor: The mood of the moment is dialectic so you cannot escape it; it means that you do not take things categorically, one thing implies another, that is all. The English freedom has very little intellectual content, as befits the English. It is negative in conceptualism and direction. It is a matter of emotion and disposition. It is, as they normally put it, as a freedom from — actually, it arose as a tossing off of tyrannies; of the denial of certain state rights such as the divine right of kings. It was getting rid of something. It is almost exclusively concerned with the individual.

It is individualistic and it dislikes law, any form of imposition has precisely that, as an oppression or an imposition, and it is known as freedom of self-realization. It can be seen as an amoral freedom. It is never moral. It can be amoral; at its worst it is immoral freedom because it stresses absence of restraints and constraints, all external restraints of whatever kind, physical, institutional, legal, spiritual, as necessary to freedom.

For this freedom everyone is isolated, a naked savage on his way to some nebulous personal autonomy. It says, "I am free, if at all to do what I like, and if I cannot do what I like in the free enterprise system, and in the economic realm or any other place, if I am not free when I like, or whatever the reason —"

Mr. T. Reid (Scarborough East): Would the hon. member accept a question?

Mr. Lawlor: "— for whatever reason, then to the extent that I cannot do what I like, I am not free." It is the freedom sought by —

Mr. T. Reid: Is the member free to accept a supplementary question?

Mr. Lawlor: — the child.

An hon. member: He is exercising his freedom.

Mr. T. Reid: Could I ask the hon. member, if I understand the member correctly, is he saying that man cannot be free unless there is tyranny? Is this correct?

The second question I would like to address to the hon. member, Mr. Speaker, is: Would the hon. member say that a man is free if he wills himself to be unfree?

Mr. Lawlor: In the first instance, what I was saying was something historical. This is the way this English freedom has arisen. Historically—as a result of the Jacobites and others through the divine right of Kings or jettisoning, or a refusal to have—and so it has a deep animosity against law. It thinks that the state or any form of imposition cuts back on my freedom. Now John Smith feels it is necessary to do that in order to live. But the fact of the matter is that it resents any kind of authority as being an imposition. The second point is that you did not ask to ask the supplementary question, so I will not answer it.

Mr. T. Reid: I will get you.

Mr. Lawlor: I say that this English freedom is a freedom sought by the child prevented from having his own way. As Rousseau said, it is to obey myself alone—the fundamental British right to do as one pleases without interference from anyone, especially the government. It has to do—

Mr. Sopha: Well, that is the modern phenomenon of anomie, is it not?

Mr. Lawlor: Yes, that is right, that is involved there too. He is a good Marxist, this fellow. It has to do with mobility, with the ability to move around and to move around mentally without let or hindrance. It has enormous merits and has made a single contribution to the human race, particularly to the theory of democracy. It is the freedom of a bird to fly. Some philosophers call it freedom of spontaneity as contrasted with the second freedom, freedom of autonomy.

But it is still a defective, immoral, anti-social, and really quite narrow freedom if taken all by itself and in the absence of the second French freedom. The second freedom is freedom of maturity. It is a freedom not of self-realization merely but one working on a wider context of freedom; freedom of self-perfection which can only be achieved in society socially and in accord with development of all the virtues.

This second freedom introduces two elements not found in the first freedom. It has the moral dimension which preconditions, which means also, in turn, a social dimension having to do not with my personal likings or dislikings but with personal responsibility. It tends to lie in a cluster or family of concepts like duty and law and as an instrument of growth and guidance and a regard for legitimate authority.

Freedom is a positive power of doing or enjoying something worth doing or enjoying. It implies not merely a legal but an actual probability of developing human capacities. It implies that human beings have structures, directions and functions which have developed to make them more fully human beings, and that there is no end to becoming more fully a human being in its strictest Kantian form. It has a puritanical power.

I am free only when I am doing my duty, but it has other features more in line with the Bible where St. Paul says that the truth shall make you free. In this context only the truth will make you free. Untruth will make you unfree, obviously. John Stewart Mill says untruth, truth, do not matter, all will make you free provided that it is not imposed upon you. Which means the truth shall make you free, which also means that anything else—untruth, perfidy, lying—will enslave you.

It imports the notion of self-enslavement, which the English freedom leaves out. For in English, there is only one sort of slavery, a master with a whip. But for this second freedom of autonomy with its moral dimension, the person can enslave himself while trying to realize himself, when he subjects himself and becomes the victim of his own appetites, passions and self-interest. These are then the two freedoms, English and French. They have always been opposed and usually kept separate and distinct, but I think—

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the hon. member might adjourn the debate and give the members the opportunity to digest his philosophical discourse, and tomorrow he then can continue uninterrupted.

Mr. Lawlor moves the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. R. S. Welch (Provincial Secretary): Mr. Speaker, we will continue with the Throne Debate tomorrow.

Hon. Mr. Welch moves the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to.

The House adjourned at 6.00 o'clock, p.m.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

---

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 12, 1969

The House met at 2.30 o'clock, p.m.

Prayers.

Mr. Speaker: Today we have many guests present in the galleries, and later we will be joined by others. At the present time in the East Gallery, we have students from Gladstone senior public school, Toronto; and in the West Gallery, from Glenview senior public school, Toronto; and at 3.00 p.m., later today in the West Gallery there will be students from the University of Western Ontario, London; and in the East Gallery, about that time, students from Windsor high school of commerce.

Petitions.

Presenting reports.

Mr. A. B. R. Lawrence, from the standing private bills committee, presented the committee's second report which was read as follows and adopted:

Your committee begs to report the following bills with certain amendments:

Bill Pr3, An Act respecting the city of London.

Bill Pr11, An Act respecting the city of Cornwall.

Bill Pr 15, An Act respecting the town of Mitchell.

Bill Pr18, An Act respecting the board of education for the city of Windsor.

Mr. Speaker: Presenting reports.

Mr. S. Apps in the absence of Mr. N. Whitney begs leave to present the first report of the standing agriculture and food committee, which was read as follows and adopted:

Your committee begs to report the following bill with certain amendments:

Bill 17, An Act to amend The Milk Act, 1965.

Mr. Speaker: Presenting reports.

Motions.

Introduction of bills.

THE MENTAL HEALTH ACT, 1967

Mr. M. Shulman (High Park) moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend The Mental Health Act, 1967.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Speaker, this bill requires that when the courts refer a prisoner for a mental examination he be seen by a psychiatrist. The purpose of this bill is to clean up the very bad situation of the Don Jail.

Mr. Speaker: Introduction of bills.

Mr. J. Renwick (Riverdale): Before the orders of the day, I would like to take the earliest possible opportunity to express to you, sir, and to this House the total dissent by this party from the statement made by the Prime Minister in Ottawa yesterday to the effect that Medicare is, in his opinion, one of the greatest frauds ever perpetrated on people in this country—

Mr. Speaker: Order, the hon. member, of course, is not in order because the statement of the Prime Minister of Ontario—whatever it may have been—is one which he was entitled to make as leader of this government.

The problem of privileges of the members of this House does not arise, nor is it a point of order.

Mr. J. Renwick: Without questioning your statement sir, may I say that I very carefully selected the first occasion on which I had the opportunity under the rules of this House—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member did not have the occasion to rise when he was out of order. The first occasion would have been when he partook in a debate or when the particular matter in question was raised. It is not a point for debate now, it is not a point of order, it is not a point of personal privilege. Therefore, it was not the first opportunity the hon. member had. The first opportunity, he took, but not the first opportunity that he had.

Mr. J. Renwick: Mr. Speaker, this is the first opportunity that I have had on the occasion of this session of the House —

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: State your point of order.

Mr. Singer: Once you have made a ruling, the ruling stands and the debate cannot be continued.

Mr. Speaker: That is quite correct, and I am sure the hon. deputy leader of the New Democratic Party realizes that.

Mr. J. Renwick: On a point of order, the question I raise is a very simple one. Does it mean that in this Legislature there is no opportunity for a person to stand and express his dissent about a matter which is taking place in Ottawa and which is of the greatest concern to the people of this province?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member, I think is confusing two or three things. First of all, the hon. member had the opportunity—if he felt that this was of urgent public importance—to place a motion in the hands of Mr. Speaker at the proper time today, and to have it debated if it were proper as a matter of public importance, which he feels affects all the people of Ontario and is urgent. I would call to his attention that it would probably be the proper way to proceed.

Secondly, the hon. member certainly is not in order in endeavouring to debate in this House speeches made by officials of the government outside this House unless, as I pointed out, they do reflect upon the personal privileges of the members or a member of this House. And I think that is a reasonable ruling based on our rules and precedents, and a fair one. And certainly it was open to the member to proceed as I had suggested first. Whether it would have been accepted as being of urgent public importance by this House and debated, I do not know. That would be for the House to decide.

Mr. J. Renwick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for your guidance, and I will leave any further comment to my colleague, the member for Lakeshore.

Hon. J. H. White (Minister of Revenue): Well, the hon. member has proven the point.

Mr. E. W. Sopha (Sudbury): Well, it was a shocking thing for a responsible statesman to say.

Mr. Speaker: Order!

The hon. member for Essex South has a question of the Minister of Energy and Resources Management.

Mr. D. A. Paterson (Essex South): Yes, Mr. Speaker. What action is the Minister planning during the present session to prevent pollution of our waterways by refuse from pleasure craft? Are holding tanks and cleaning facilities part of the Minister's programme at federal and provincial dock installations? Will such facilities be managed by his department?

Hon. J. R. Simonett (Minister of Energy and Resources Management): Mr. Speaker, in answer to the first part. Ontario Regulation 365 is now in effect and no further legislative action is planned for the present session.

Second part of the question. The programme for facilities to pump out holding tanks on boats. We expect these facilities to be installed by various organizations and it may be that there will be federal and provincial installations. And the third part. These facilities will not be managed by the Minister's department.

Mr. Paterson: Might I ask a supplementary, on a point of clarification? Is the Minister making arrangements, say with The Department of Lands and Forests, to create facilities of this type at some of their dock facilities in the northern part of our province?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: I understand that OWRC are contacting all departments in government as well as private marinas and those that are interested in pump-out stations.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Wentworth had my eye, and he has a question of the Minister of Highways, I believe.

Mr. I. Deans (Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, to the Minister of Highways: Has any investigation been undertaken by The Department of Highways to determine the table level and flow pattern of water under the Ancaster subdivision, known as Perth Park, both prior to and since Highway 403 construction began?

Hon. G. E. Gomme (Minister of Highways): Mr. Speaker, the answer is no, and from my information, the high water level is well below the elevation of the basements of the houses in this subdivision; therefore, a survey is not considered necessary.

Mr. Deans: Could I inquire, Mr. Minister, how you could then have determined that there was no flooding problem the day before yesterday if you had not investigated?

Mr. Speaker: I would like to ask the hon. deputy leader of the New Democratic Party whether he or someone else in his party would wish to place a question of the Minister of Highways which stands in the name of the leader of his party on February 6 last, and have it cleared. It is quite in order, if you wish, to place questions for another member.

Mr. J. Renwick: Mr. Speaker, I think I will wait until the leader's return tomorrow.

Mr. Sopha: No doubt he will have something to say about that statement too, when he returns.

I have a question of the Minister of Labour. Does the Minister anticipate that there will be a larger number of arbitrations involving police forces and municipal police commissions this year, and, if such be the case, does the department have a sufficient number of arbitrators to deal with them?

Hon. D. A. Bales (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, in reply to the question from the hon. member. Where arbitrators are required to be appointed, in reference to a police arbitration, the appointment is made by the Attorney General under the provisions of The Police Act. If the Attorney General wishes to use a list of arbitrators that we have in the department we shall be pleased to supply it.

Mr. Sopha: May I ask a supplementary question? Speaking hypothetically, supposing the Attorney General has a surfeit of arbitrations and resorted to this department; would the Minister then have a sufficient number of arbitrators to furnish the Attorney General?

Hon. Mr. Bales: Well, it would depend on the situation at the time, but we have a fairly substantial list which we could make available.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Oshawa.

Mr. C. G. Pilkey (Oshawa): A question to the Minister of Labour: Can the Minister advise the House when The Ontario Labour Management Arbitration Commissions Act 1968, which received Royal assent on June 13, 1968, will be proclaimed?

Hon. Mr. Bales: Mr. Speaker, in reply to the question, the Act will be proclaimed as soon as the personnel for the commission has been settled. I believe that will be within the next month.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Thunder Bay.

Mr. J. E. Stokes (Thunder Bay): Two questions, Mr. Speaker, for the Minister of Health.

Is the Minister aware of a plan proposed by Mr. Paul St. Jacques, of Sault Ste. Marie, and concurred with by some doctors, dentists and optometrists, that health services could be provided to people living on remote northern reserves?

Will the Minister co-operate with all concerned to facilitate such an arrangement to provide these much needed services?

Hon. M. B. Dymond (Minister of Health): Mr. Speaker, the answer to the first part of the hon. member's question is no. We have heard some rumours of this but we do not know anything about it. In answer to the second part, we are trying to get the information to the end that we may co-operate in every way possible.

Mr. Stokes: I have a second question for the Minister. What provision will be made to provide health services for people living in Pickle Lake and Central Patricia when the health nurse is moved from that location to Osnaburgh by The Department of National Health and Welfare?

If no alternative services are provided, will the people from Central Patricia and Pickle Lake be allowed to seek health care from the nurse who will be relocated on the reserve at Osnaburgh?

Will this nurse be required to serve all people in the area or will she only provide health care to treaty Indians?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: In reference to the first two parts of the hon. member's question, Mr. Speaker, our information from The Department of National Health and Welfare is that when the nurse is moved from Central Patricia to Osnaburgh she will serve both areas.

The third part of his question: This will depend on The Department of National Health and Welfare policy. Their usual practice has been that while the nurse's main responsibility has been to treaty Indians, some services have been provided to other residents of the area. Through my department, a public health nurse and public health inspector make periodic visits to the area.

Mr. Stokes: Will the hon. Minister accept a supplementary?

Is the hon. Minister aware that the nurse we are speaking of is serving an area of approximately 20,000 square miles, and it is impossible for her to get around to these areas? Is it possible the Minister's department might indicate that they would put some personnel in the area for that express purpose?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Speaker, we are not so concerned with the areas, but the number of people being served and how they are scattered over the area. I think the nurse's ability to provide the services is dependent upon this.

We are trying to get this whole matter of Indian services straightened out but so far we have not succeeded with my counterpart at Ottawa. Nevertheless, he too is trying with us, to find a solution to this very great problem.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Grey-Bruce has a question transferred yesterday from the Minister of Municipal Affairs to the Provincial Secretary. He might perhaps ask it.

Mr. E. Sargent (Grey-Bruce): Yes, Mr. Speaker; has the government, in its current study of the liquor laws, considered doing away with this outmoded provision in the light of the great changes in municipal government forthcoming in the province shortly by regional government?

Hon. R. S. Welch (Provincial Secretary): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member and I have exchanged correspondence on this subject earlier at which time he was assured that the liquor laws and regulations of the province were currently under review. I am not prepared today to discuss whether or not the government has any plans along this line, because the study is still going on and it will be a matter of government policy, once that study is completed, as to what the outcome will be.

Hon. Mr. White: He should declare a vested interest in these questions.

Mr. Sargent: A question to the Minister of Tourism and Information: What are the terms of the contract of the new director of the centennial project?

Why is it necessary to have a continuing consulting contract with the retiring director who is now living in England, and what are the terms of his contract?

Hon. J. A. C. Auld (Minister of Tourism and Information): Mr. Speaker, if I may, I would like to take this question as notice. I would explain to the hon. member that the new director general is a civil servant.

Mr. Sargent: Did the Minister explain to me?

Hon. Mr. Auld: I am saying that the new director general is presently a civil servant and will continue to be, consequently the civil service commission will have to set a salary for the position. The previous director general was a contract employee and the same conditions will not apply, but I will have all the information the hon. member wants in a short time.

Mr. Sargent: A question to the Minister without Portfolio: Is it true that the Minister has an assistant and an office staff?

(2) How many?

(3) Why?

(4) What are the salaries involved in the setting up of this office?

Hon. T. L. Wells (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, at the present time I have a staff of one. I have a full-time secretary who is paid in accordance with the salary schedules established by the Civil Service Commission of Ontario.

Next week I will be engaging an executive assistant who will be coming to work with me to assist me in my duties as a member of the Executive Council of the province of Ontario. He will be paid in accordance with the salaries established for similar positions in the public service.

Mr. Sopha: Will he have an office?

Hon. Mr. Wells: Of course. All these things, Mr. Speaker, will be reported in the public accounts in due course.

Mr. Singer: In two years.

Mr. Sargent: Could the Minister answer a supplementary question? What are his duties?

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Singer: He needs all that assistance.

Mr. Sargent: A question to the Minister of Economics and Development.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps I might advise the hon. member so that he can be right when placing questions, the department is now Trade and Development.

Mr. Sargent: Trade and Development—thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Will the Minister, as per yesterday, advise the House of the amount of revenue accruing to the province from the sale of patents from the Research Foundation over the past 10 years?

Hon. S. J. Randall (Minister of Trade and Development): $11,480.

Mr. Sargent: Would the Minister answer a supplementary? Is he justified in spending $50 million to get $11,000 worth of technology? This is the intelligence of this department—$50 million for $11,000.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Sudbury East has a question?

Mr. E. W. Martel (Sudbury East): A question to the Minister of Energy and Resources Management. How many megawatts of power were purchased from the United States on November 14, 1968?

How many megawatts were purchased from the United States throughout the month of November, 1968?

At what cost per megawatt was this purchased from the United States?

What was the selling price per megawatt in Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Mr. Speaker, I will have to take the question as notice. It has been difficult these last two or three days to get the answers we require from Ontario Hydro.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Mr. Speaker, I have one unanswered question here from the hon. member for Oshawa. If I may I would like to answer that question he asked me the other day. I shall repeat the question. How many jobs were lost to Ontario in the last five years because of American takeover of industries?

I think, Mr. Speaker, in assessing the impact of American takeovers of our industries the net effect on employment rather than gains or losses should be considered. Precise data on U.S. control of Ontario companies and its net effect on employment in the province are not available, but examination of overall statistics suggests that secondary manufacturing employment increased from 680,000 in 1963 to an estimated 803,000 in 1968. This is an increase of 18 per cent over the five-year period, which compares favourably with the performance of the Canadian economy.

During this period, 251 branch plants of U.S. companies were established in the province. These plants employed a total of 20,145 persons on their staffs. These data seem to suggest that the effect of American takeover of industries may not have been negative but rather positive on our employment. It does not include the employees that went into the UAW with the automotive pact and those that went into the farm industries and the machine industries since. In other words, these industries have expanded and are not included in the 20,145.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. Minister of Transport has answers to questions previously asked.

Hon. I. Haskett (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, yesterday there were two questions directed to the Minister of Transport that I asked to be put over until today because of my being involved in the morning with the National Conference on Urban Transportation. I did not receive the questions until I came into the chambers, as I explained. I wonder if the member for Essex Kent would like to ask his question, or the member for Grey South his question.

Mr. R. F. Ruston (Essex-Kent): Is the Minister aware that the licence bureau offices in Chatham are only open for six and a half hours a day, five days a week? Is he prepared to have the hours extended to what is considered a normal working day of eight hours?

Hon. Mr. Haskett: Mr. Speaker, this is the first complaint that I have had of our agent in Chatham. The office there maintains normal business hours, I understand, but this may not be adequate at this time of the year. We expect our issuers to give good service to the public and I have already directed that steps be taken to extend the services required.

Mr. Sargent: Is the Minister aware that tens of thousands of used Volkswagens have been sold to Americans as new cars? Will the Minister advise as to the situation in Canada, and what steps are being taken to protect the Canadian public?

Hon. Mr. Haskett: Mr. Speaker, I have read in the newspaper of the situation in the United States to which the hon. member refers. We have no evidence that a similar situation obtains in Canada and the best information I can get is that the importation of used cars into Canada is prohibited by the federal government, except in special cases such as those of settlers' effects and the like.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Speaker, would the Minister accept a supplementary?

In view of the fact that over a million people have not bought their plates yet, will you extend the date beyond February 28?

Hon. Mr. Haskett: Mr. Speaker, I do not accept that as a supplementary question to the first. It is of interest to us all.

Mr. Speaker, before the Christmas recess, the hon. member for Grey-Bruce raised the question of including a coloured photograph of the holder in his driver's licence in consequence of a recommendation on page 122 of a report of the Ontario Police Commission in 1964. At the time, as the report was not identified, you will recall, I was not in a position to provide a proper answer. When subsequently the hon. member did identify the document, I indicated I would look into it. Accordingly, I now offer this statement.

Licences are issued to indicate that the holder is qualified and entitled to operate a motor vehicle in Ontario. This is the measure of my department's responsibility in this area. However, the driver's licence is widely used as a primary identification document and the value of a forged licence lies in the facility it provides in this way, rather than in its use as a driving authority.

Very little trouble has been experienced through the use of forged licences for driving authority and the particulars contained in the licence, together with the additional information contained in our files, have proved sufficient to identify the proper licence holder.

At first sight it might seem that the inclusion of the holder's photograph would improve the licence as an identification document. Nevertheless, the person who is consciously setting out to provide himself with a false identity will welcome any device which will make his forged documents appear even more tamperproof; and licences bearing photographs, even when in colour and produced as a single sheet of paper can be easily and quickly forged.

When a driver changes his address, he is required to notify the department and is then sent a new licence. In order to have a photograph on this new licence he would have to attend personally at one of our offices and be photographed. I suggest that the inconvenience this would cause to more than 3,000 drivers each day would result in address changes remaining unreported with the consequent loss of accuracy in our files and additional burdens being placed on enforcement agencies in tracing drivers.

The inclusion of a photograph would increase the cost and time of licensing while the results achieved would not increase the effectiveness of the licence for its primary purpose.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Ottawa Centre has a question of the Minister of Social and Family Services.

Mr. H. MacKenzie (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, a question of the Minister of Social and Family Services:

1. Would the Minister consider directing the field workers of his department in the Ottawa area to use the full rent paid in calculating the required budget allowance for those on assistance rather than an arbitrary figure set by the field workers until the housing crisis on low rental housing units is ended?

2. Would the Minister consider establishing a programme of assistance for those in the Ottawa area on low incomes who are suffering hardship due to unconscionable rent increases until a sufficient number of low rental housing units can be erected to stabilize the market?

Hon. J. Yaremko (Minister of Social and Family Services): Mr. Speaker, I came directly to the Chamber from Ottawa and I shall take those questions as notice and perhaps have the answers for tomorrow.

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day I would, with a great deal of sadness, like to advise all members of the House that I have just learned of the death of the hon. member for Middlesex South (Mr. Olde).

I am sure that we would all agree that this particular news will leave a void in this House. He was a kindly, quiet and much respected gentleman and no doubt tomorrow, on the return of the three leaders, we will have an opportunity to pay a more adequate tribute to the memory and to the work of this much respected gentleman.

In the meantime, with your permission, Mr. Speaker, perhaps we could rise to pause for a moment in our deliberations today to mark this very sad news.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Clerk of the House: The first order, resuming the adjourned debate on the amendment to the amendment to the motion for an address in reply to the speech of the Honourable, the Lieutenant-Governor at the opening of the session.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

Mr. P. D. Lawlor (Lakeshore): Mr. Speaker, I shall shortly resume my heavenly flight from yesterday. But to come plummeting down to the earth on a rather more mundane matter for the present moment.

Yesterday, in the headlines of the Toronto Daily Star it reads "Robarts calls Medicare a Great Fraud" and in the body of the article it says:

The federal government's Medicare programme is one of the greatest political frauds ever perpetrated on the people of Canada, Ontario Premier John Robarts charged today, at the Confederation Conference. Looking Prime Minister Pierre Elliott Trudeau straight in the eye, Robarts denounced Medicare as a "Machiavellian scheme that will cost Ontario people $225 million a year—"

The paper goes on to tell who Machiavelli is and what his schemes are.

I would say just in preface to the thrust of my remarks that the language utilized here is, to begin with, indecorous, intemperate, inaccurate, ill-considered, misguided, petulant, and obtuse.

An hon. member: That is a pretty accurate—

Mr. Lawlor: He spoke of a great political fraud, we will come to that in a minute. He spoke of a Machiavellian scheme. Well, that is to say the least a misrepresentation of the position of poor Machiavelli himself, he "out-Machiavelled" Machiavelli; because for the Florentine, schemes of this nature were supposed to be covert, quiet, hidden, no one is to know about them.

People in this country have known of this scheme since 1919 and before. It has been around for 50 years in the forefront of many political debates. How can it be called "Machiavellian"?

In fact look at the voluminous Hall Committee Report. I do not see how any of you can really take exception to it as well as statements by my leader in the House earlier this year, have both shown that Ontario can afford Medicare. The only thing that one can say is that the Medicare scheme for this country is just the reverse of Machiavelli. It is the only honest, open, efficient, intelligent way to handle a grave social ill and great need.

The Premier is prejudiced.

Hon. S. J. Randall (Minister of Trade and Development): Have you had a look at the U.K. economy lately—?

Mr. Lawlor: The Premier's prejudice so confuses his mind that he cannot even get his history straight. And it is pure prejudice. How can he possibly say, and what basis has he got for saying that he represents the opinion of the majority of people, either in this country or in the province of Ontario? He went to the polls in 1963 and again in 1968 on the pretence that he had a Medicare scheme. He did not explain its ramifications. He suppressed all that information. If there is a fraud involved here, it is a fraud of the Premier of this province and his party upon the people of this province. The PSI has just raised its family premiums 46 per cent to $19.40 a month—$232.50 a year.

The government has recently raised its OMSIP premiums by 18 per cent to $177 a year. Taking these combined totals of the PSI and the Hospital Insurance premiums it comes to $1 a day per family or $365 a year.

Now under the federal scheme, if you opt in you can have this virtually cut in half. What is your pretext, what is your reason for saying just the opposite?

Interjection by an hon. member.

An hon. member: Bankrupt Tories, bankrupt Tories!

Mr. Lawlor: It is one thing for the Premier of this province to disagree with Medicare on a philosophical basis. It is another thing for him to go about the country calling it a fraudulent scheme. And secondly, for him to state, without proof or foundation that he speaks for the people of this province in this regard—

An hon. member: Forty-two per cent of them!

Mr. Lawlor: This is a matter of straight opinion. He is entitled to his, but to presume to go to Ottawa as the official representative of this province and to explode into an intemperate statement about a matter which is fundamentally a personal prejudice or arises out of his alliance with the insurance industry in this province—is nothing short of irresponsible..

Where, where is the carefully cultivated picture of calm deliberation now? Where is the neutrality, the objectivity, the equitable temper and the neutral point of view? The Premier has done himself and this country a great disservice in the way he conducted himself on occasions at this conference.

I shall quote from a statement made by my leader.

Having failed to pressure Ottawa into reneging once again on its commitment to introduce Medicare, the Ontario Tories are now using their influence to bolster sentiment that the province should not participate. They used two arguments; I will only give you the first.

The first is that Ontarians cannot afford to contribute towards medical costs in other provinces. This is a sentiment which comes poorly from a government whose leader only last Christmas was talking of a billion dollar Canadian development fund to which Ontario would make a large contribution.

It is a sentiment that runs counter to the whole underpinnings of Confederation.

He is up there presenting a fair face, pretending on one hand to make contributions to regional development and that Ontario, one of the wealthiest provinces, should carry its fair share and weight in order to unite us, to keep us together.

On the other hand he undermines it, on the chief and fundamental—and possibly even the last—major piece of social security in this country which will have the benefit of raising the health standard, and therefore the productivity of everybody in this country.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: I would point out to several members on each side of the House, that this is the opportunity for the hon. member for Lakeshore to make his contribution to the Throne Debate, and I would ask that he be given a hearing.

Mr. Lawlor: Mr. Speaker, I said, as pointedly as I know how, how I believe that far from aiding and abetting the cause of Confederation on this fundamental issue, there is a great undermining going forward; and the Premier will not soon be let forget it.

Mr. Speaker, I wish to return to the constellations. As I indicated to you yesterday, I allow myself, if I can put it this way, at least once a year, an indulgence.

I personally make what I consider a fair contribution on all kinds of concrete issues. But I think that once a year, the House and the people in the province can afford, so far as I am concerned, to deal with what I would think are background issues, the things that shape our lives and our ways of thinking. These unconscious assumptions make us take the positions that we finally end up with, perverse as they may be from the other side of the House.

My contention is that the perversity arises from poor thinking. If we could just have a little stirring at some higher level, it might trickle down to bringing about progressive, intelligent, social policies. It is the obtuseness and the intelligence that is blocked, that unblocked, could bring about the kind of things in the working lives of people that we on this side of the House, in this party, stand for.

Yesterday, I had gone over just briefly what I was presenting to this House as a new dynamic conception of man, as a self-maker, fully responsible for himself and for his world.

Man has come into his material inheritance, and he now sets about to humanize himself and the world about him. This can only be done in some theory of community. It means in part that intelligence—not chance and not fate or some impersonal, economic or other mechanism—must guide us.

The parties and the governments of the west, particularly in North America, with the last dregs of irrationality—the Tory government over there, and the Republican Party in the United States, that sort of thing—are slowly creeping out of credibility.

They are the ones who, because of their belief in a fundamentally chaotic universe and irrational modes of thought, bring about most of the social ills; or at least do not amend them, do not ameliorate them. In other words, what I want is that the Invisible Hand become visible; that we plan and direct our own future with a view to heightening human life.

Some of the members think that the policies we are putting forward over here would not heighten it, but would possibly lower human life. But I suggest that it is their passive posture before faith, wherein lies the seed of decline and decay and the shuffling off of primary social responsibilities.

I also mentioned in this context that control to this idea of man, in order that he may have the scope in which to shape himself, is the fundamental, deep idea of freedom. Under this heading, I outlined what I thought were two distinct theories of freedom, mostly held to be irreconcilable.

One of them I called English theory and it had little intellectual content; I called it a "freedom from". It is freedom that is disrespectful of, or at least, sceptical towards all types of authorities, laws, institutions, governments and everything but the isolated, atomic individual.

This is also called a freedom of self-realization or spontaneity or exercise. All these words in different philosophies are the ways of expressing this mode of freedom.

The second mode of freedom I chose to call French; simply, I suppose, because it is part of the Latin mentality, and because of the contrast between two modes of thought involved, which is reflected in the constitutional debate, as to the way in which both these parties approach problems, of say, fundamental human rights and as to what they think human society is all about.

This is a "freedom for"; it is called sometimes a freedom of autonomy or of self-perfection. It is a freedom not from, but of, law, within the law. It is a mature, socially and futurely oriented freedom in responsible possession of our lives.

Therefore, we have the two freedoms. They have always been opposed and usually kept separate and distinct. I think, that although they seem to be contradictory they are actually complementary. That is, they are reconcilable. One cannot exist without the other if full human liberty is to be achieved.

The one exists, in what we called yesterday, a dialectical tension. The French I have said, depends upon the English freedom in a certain way, in that although I may be free in my spirit, even while locked in a dungeon, this cannot really be considered a very ideal mode of existence.

The entrance to the house of freedom begins in freedom from external physical coercions, and it requires customary morality, that is the morality that is engendered from heaven knows where, and which imposes its opinion upon everybody as to the way they should dress, think and act—it requires that customary morality, the unthinking force of gossip and opinion which irrationally binds men to be relegated to a place which does not coerce. That is what John Stuart Mill spent all his time talking about in his book called "Liberty". He pointed out—he went so far, as a matter of fact, in this regard, as to say that he wanted to promote eccentricity for its own sake, because the weight of public opinion upon men's minds was becoming increasingly greater in his day. It was the chief scourge of liberty and, in a large measure, remains the chief scourge today, over against the state, which has largely, in my opinion, emacipated men, at least materially.

Primitive societies are known by the number and weight of their totems and taboos, their conventional wisdom. Only after these initial conditions of external force have been removed can the second freedom really come into its own. That is, a self determination in righteousness, and in human amity, can be gained only in a social context.

Freedom of licence can be turned into freedom of law, moral or legal. Law is to be obeyed, to be absorbed and to be lived into, provided, of course, that it is just law. The freedom has its own disciplines. It is a discipline and not a vagary, as the English think. A man's freedom, the ideal, I would say, lies in his ability to do as he ought. This is the foundation and not the enemy of liberty.

These two freedoms come together in any theory of human rights. Human rights come from inside us. They evolve and expand and become more definite as the centuries go on, because we are men. Just because we are men, because a man is a man, just because of that, he has rights. He has rights to life and to all the available means, material and otherwise, to the development of that life and community.

This is basically an act of faith — it cannot be proved, and it is on that faith that the whole development, the structure of the life of democratic societies rest. When faith is lost in this, then there is a disintegration of the role of man. Unless you believe in a fundamental equality, and unless you believe and give all the means to life. This is socialism in operation. And the law, the external arm —

Hon. J. H. White (Minister of Revenue): The NDP advocates breaking laws.

Mr. Lawlor: Oh, never, never. I fail to understand that statement. If you Tories over there erect a structure of unjust laws, then I think the best thing to do is to oppose it. And it is very lawful to encourage the breach of the law if the law is not just. That is the duty of good citizens.

Hon. Mr. White: That destroys your whole argument.

Mr. Lawlor: No. You just do not follow the argument.

The only law that is binding is a just law. Any law that you make to set up arbitrary standards, to defend the interests of a particular segment of society, those laws are not just and therefore ought not to be obeyed. Any man with a conscience should run against them. He does not have to do it violently, now, that is why we are here, to change them.

Mr. M. Makarchuk (Brantford): It has been legally decided at Nuremberg.

Mr. Lawlor: I am here at the moment to try and change you, and that is rather more difficult. So we will stick to the line. The law is there to see that rights, but not privileges which are the opposite to rights, are abided by. Rights are the guideposts to human dignity and to just law. If they are interpreted in the English fashion, in an extreme way only, they are rights without responsibilities, and if incorporated into the French context, they are seen to involve not just an external relationship or mutuality of people, but a binding, natural covenant among men.

That is the condition of an internal, a willed, a voluntary mutuality in society. A right is fundamentally a moral concept. It is not an artificial creation of the law or some pact or some special contract made somewhere along the road. That is in most doctrines, which say ultimately that rights are mights, which also means that "might is right", and that is the law of the jungle. And that is the law that prevails and continues to prevail and which you people over there continue to defend and which you continue to promote, and which remains the raison d'être for your existence.

It is not the rule of the strong, the shrewd or the cunning as in our society. They are not concessions by which to live in some questionable peace. In the thought of Stoics and Scholastics, and increasingly in modern jurisprudence, they are seen as intrinsic and natural to men. They are not created by man, they are recognized by him, in an always deeper recognition, or refusal to recognize as in the case of all fascisms, incipient or real, and in the case of communism.

They are not mere legalities set up to secure people against force. They are derivable, they are not, as Bentham says, creatures of the law, derivable from their governors. On the contrary, they govern the governors. They are not powers, as Spinoza said: "Every creature has as much right as he has power." They make power. They make power human. They contain and they shape power. They turn power to virtue. They are not to be identified with the strong arm. They transcend law, but they have their efficacy as embodied in the law.

There is a curious relationship between the theories of rights and the theory of righteousness. In other words, unless the theory of rights develops and entrenches and gives some deep, solid entrenchment to the development of minds, and leads in that direction it is useless. It must not be used as an instrument against them by conferring rights, sometimes called privileges, upon segments in society, then it is self defeating.

The right to liberty; the fundamental rights are to liberty and equality, because it is a matter of faith that all men are ultimately equal. That is what the present distribution of income, for instance, in Ontario denies.

Now, Mr. Speaker, having set up this background as to man in the modern world, the problems of freedom and the human rights.

I now wish to turn to the import of those thoughts with respect to the constitution of Canada. How can we help but be aware of what is going on in Ottawa at this present time? It seems to me, regrettably, that our country has reached a nadir in its development.

It is at a very low point, and the confusion and the squabbling that is taking place in our capital has been contributed to, as I have indicated earlier, by our province itself. The ingrained selfishness, the posturing for special positions, the renegeing from an overall philosophy whereby we must bind ourselves into unity to preserve our identity against the incursions of American culture, all these things can cause — in any citizen concerned about these matters — deep, deep feelings of sorrow. We, in this province, who have the impetus and the carriage of these affairs, as I suggest no other province has, have to some degree, at this stage at least, failed in an initial responsibility, to produce more fleshed-out proposals with respect to the division of powers.

We are doodling at the present time and while we doodle, Levesque continues to rise in the forum of his own province. You know, in the old days we used to use England as a foil against American modes of life and culture. This was our means of sustaining our identity. It seems to me now that Britain has faded and no longer exercises that perspective, that influence, that the only thing we can possibly do which will give us distinction, which will make us decisively different from the United States, which will give us a hegemony and a direction of our own, is to ally ourselves as intrinsically and deeply as we possibly can with the French side of our culture.

This is the barricade. The French will save us, we will not save the French. We will go down the drain in 50 years without question. You have already sold out over there economically. From the point of view of a person like myself, the economic sell-out is almost fundamental. You cannot retain your identity in these concepts if you have given away your material basis for that identity. Human beings are so fashioned—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Lawlor: You think that a man is a truncated creature, his head in one place and his feet in another. This is a grave tragedy that is happening here. Quebec has tried in its own power to offset it. It has set up the Quebec Development Corporation.

It took over the electric facilities of the province. It is trying to arrogate its economy in a way that is self-determining. In the meantime, the Minister of Trade and Development gives away the largesse of our wealth, and so on. There was never a greater sell-out than is taking place here, all in the name of trade and some kind of posturing, some kind of economic opportunism; he must give credence to this.

Mr. E. W. Sopha (Sudbury): He would sell the whole of Ontario to the Americans.

An hon. member: He would give it away.

Mr. Lawlor: But he will pay them to take it, too.

Hon. Mr. White: The member does not understand the situation at all.

Mr. Lawlor: In any event, my suggestion here—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: It could be that the debate would proceed much better without the verbal interjections of certain members of the House who know better and, I would hope, would show that they know better. The hon. member for Lakeshore has the floor.

Mr. Lawlor: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

You know, they are up there debating about who has jurisdiction over external affairs. Sometimes I think they all have jurisdiction over external affairs. Each one of them acts as though the other were an external affair. We have international relations with Quebec and international relations with British Columbia and vice versa all the way around the table. You would think a number of foreign countries were sitting down to discuss things together. They may as well have offered the constitution under this particular head.

But I want to return in order to reinforce what I said before about the degree and kind of co-operation that we English-speaking Canadians ought to accord Quebec. In other words, I said to you that Quebec may be our salvation and not the other way around. If we enter into that sort of thinking, that our distinctiveness, uniqueness and possibilities, the development of our destiny in this country would be in that direction—and, thank heaven, on the whole the thrust of the government over there so far as language is concerned (not economics), has been in that direction. In other words, of spreading the dual languages to the deepest possibility right across the country. That is our only hope. If it is not done forthrightly, and done with great immediacy, I think we will go down the drain.

Where will we stand if Quebec does declare itself independent? Certainly we cannot raise our hand or dream of doing so should it do so. We may not accord with Rene Levesque's idea of a common market in trade and economic relations once that position is achieved. We may try to punish them; I have no doubt that we have it in us to do so. We have always done so, as I shall try to prove in a few moments, to react vindictively with respect to the demands of the province of Quebec. But unless this basic ancient animus on the part of the people is overcome, unless they rise above themselves in this hour of our destiny, I see little hope.

Once Quebec separates, we are all done for, as far as I can see, at least as far as I am concerned. I am bereft, I see no future. What will happen to the Maritimes? Their natural gravitation will pull with the U.S., Quebec—they have ancient loyalties—and it will be hard for them to pull out, but the pure weight of economic circumstances will bring that about. There are always rumblings in British Columbia on separatism. Once Quebec is out, the same thing will happen there. A total disintegration of our country will take place. We will be absorbed into the American maw. The benefits of the American dream are fine, but they can have it.

We have a dream in this country of our own, and it is in quite contradistinction to the dreams that they have. They are too moved by emotion, they are not sufficiently balanced in their approach to the problems of life and they are swept by internal dissension, a dissension of which we want no part. These people, friendly as they may be, have in my opinion a low cultural tone. Our possibilities in the realm of education, in the intelligence of our people, in the business of being able to order our own lives in a different tenor, to add another colour to the spectrum of the world—which is what our task really should be—will all be voided the day Quebec pulls out, as far as I can see.

Mr. A. B. R. Lawrence (Carleton East): The member sounds like Rene Levesque himself.

Mr. Lawlor: I cannot accept that. I have been saying that I believe in unity, and I think we have to bend over considerably from our previous attitudes with respect to this unity and somewhat further than what we have and that our goodwill is not yet sufficient unto the need. One of the proofs of it is our position on medicare. But there are a number of other proofs of that. We are making gestures, but thank heavens we are, otherwise it would dissolve. But the fact is that we have a long way to go in terms of attitudes and in terms of sympathy and insight into the French fact, than what we have thus far got.

However, I am saying that Rene Levesque is the boy who wants to pull out. He thinks the whole operation is a joke. I do not think he has thought his position out very well. For instance, in the case of the Bank of Quebec—he wants to set up their own bank—he thinks they can handle their credit and conduct their own economic affairs. He does not say what role the Royal Bank of Canada, for instance, would play in that province, and I would daresay the powers and potentials of the Royal Bank of Canada over any conceivable Bank of Quebec would be quite overwhelming. But he does not spell this sort of thing out and, as I indicated earlier, he does not have any real indication that we might be prepared to go along with that even if we reach that stage. But let us not talk about that. I mean not that we do not face it. The fact is we must not allow that to happen. The position taken by the Union Nationale has sufficient merits and sufficient grounds that we can find some kind of accord by way of the proverbial Canadian compromise whereby we can weld ourselves into some kind of unity. It is my purpose to discuss that.

The first point I want to mention touches The Official Languages Act. You know The Official Languages Act in this whole context is not something fundamental—it is elementary. If that cannot be passed and accepted throughout this country—and gladly—then we have good grounds for despair, because that is an elementary first step towards any type of accord or understanding at all.

I want to refer the members of the House, if they have not already seen through the arguments used the other day in the Globe and Mail by Eugene Forsey, which I think are devastating as against the position of the former Justice Thorson, whose position so far as I can see is not only purblind but legally unsound.

Now as far as our history is concerned—you know I am not going to rehearse that tragic story—no nation on the face of the earth, I expect with any length of life, has any worse history than ours. I suppose, on the other hand, that the history of Turkey cannot be said to be any better. It is just that—if you look at English history for instance, its long periods of relative peace where people were forging some kind of unity and getting together—and we are able, because of the length of the perspective of British history—we are able to see bright spots and dark spots. But looking at Canadian history, I regrettably have to say that I cannot see very much but dark spots. It is a twisted history full of animus and full of violence and full of all the worse human emotions and vindictiveness to which we English people are prone. In other words, the people on the other side of the fence are not shining examples, but at least they were a subject people who tried to live on their own and any time they tried to raise their heads, even in accord with our principles, we would step on them.

I do not want to document this. I do want to make a mention of a couple of facts in connection with this just to confirm it. This is the context out of which we have to operate. This lies in the memory of Quebec. This is the way they talk, because unconsciously it is the heritage that they suffer from. There is disrespect; there is suspicion and there is also fear. They know that in the past we have not been up to much good you know.

In Burinot's Manual of the Constitutional History of Canada, he talks about General Murray on page 9. He was appointed Governor of Quebec on November 21, 1763. He was the first Governor commanded to execute his office according to his commission and, accordingly, to make laws with the advice and consent of the council in the Assembly.

The persons duly elected by the majority of the freeholders, "the respective parishes and places were required before taking their seats in the proposed Assemblies, to take the oaths of allegiance and supremacy and a declaration against trans-substantiation." At the very beginning nobody would take any oaths and so they did not offer any representatives and they were not allowed to sit on the Assemblies and this went on for 50 years.

These tests, and so on, were rife in Great Britain at the time and were introduced here in a context, where 50 to one were Catholic citizens of this country. That is the kind of context out of which they operate and which they react from.

In this regard, there is a magnificent document which I have not read until recently. It is Lord Durham's report. A few years later, when the two races could not possibly get along together—you know, the insurrections of 1837-38 took place—Durham was sent out here to try and find some grounds for pacification.

As a result of this he recommended the unity of the two largely, so far as I can see, so that the French imbalance in numbers would be offset, although this was offset anyhow by various schemes and manipulations to keep the council a form of the executive council. And the constituent assembly were in a position where they could override the numerical French representatives.

But in any event, the same observation has been impressed upon me—the conviction (by the way, he writes marvellously well) as he says: “for the peculiar and disastrous dissensions of this province there existed a far deeper and far more efficient cause, which penetrated beneath its political institutions into its social state. It was a cause that no reform of constitutions or laws that should leave the elements of society unaltered could remove, but it must be removed ere any success could be expected in any attempt to remedy the many evils of this unhappy province. He continues:

I expected to find a contest between a government and a people. I found two nations warring in the bosom of a single state. I found a struggle, not of principles, but of races and I perceive that it would be idle to attempt to any amelioration of laws, of institutions, until we could first succeed in terminating the deadly animosity that now separates the inhabitants of Lower Canada into the hostile divisions of English and French.

What a commentary that comes down to us! To haunt us! The sins of the fathers in our own country!

Pierre Elliott Trudeau makes mention of this in his book. He said the end result was that for the mass of the people, the passage from French to English rule was remembered, not unnaturally, not as an enslaving defeat but rather a liberation from Bourbon absolutism, but regardless of how liberal were the conqueror's political institutions, they had no intrinsic value in the minds of the people who had not desired them, never learned to use them, were not taught them, but who finally only accepted them as a means of loosening the conqueror's grip.

Trudeau goes on in this particular theme to recite the history of our defaults and defects in this regard; the Riel rebellion; the schools question, not only in Manitoba but in Alberta and Saskatchewan; the issues of conscription, the high-handed and arrogant way in which we acted in all these matters down through the years.

But as I say, what point really is there in flogging an issue of this kind, of regretting our past, unless to remind us that we have a great deal to regret, that we have a great deal to overcome, that we have a great deal to repent for. Only in that mood and only from that standpoint is it possible for us to reach an understanding with one of a very different type of mentality than ours in the case of the Frenchmen. We can all understand generosity; we can all understand the magnanimous hand and we had better practice and exercise it to a greater degree than we have up to this time.

But leaving this, I wanted to make mention of another passage which I noticed today in Pierre Trudeau's book. This was written, you know, while he was still an NDPer, so it is an extremely enlightened document. I notice that he has gone downhill ever since he became a Liberal. Have you not noticed that?

Pierre Elliott, in a footnote on page 69 mentions a man I knew once, Murray Ballentyne of Montreal. Speaking on the English network of CBC, back in 1954, he said:

We English-Canadians cannot have it both ways. Either we limit the life of the minority to a single province, in which case we cannot blame the French-Canadians for putting that province first; or else we accept their right to their language and their schools, wherever they are. Are we or are we not prepared to consider Canada a fundamentally bilingual and bicultural country?

That was in 1954; it is only beginning to dawn now—perhaps it is beginning to dawn too late.

Returning to the constitution itself, I would like for the next few minutes, Mr. Speaker, to run through some of—not, by any means, all of—the Propositions of the government of Ontario which were handed to us late last week.

The first point is that there has been some argument, whereby biculturalism is put forward here, too, as maintaining the constitution just as it is. This is a status quo. Trudeau says that it has internal flexibility enough. Besides, this fact it is ignored that we have to fight bitterly every time we want to make the most minor change. This is one of his basic points.

This is where he was, I suppose, an incipient Liberal in this passage of this book, which says that all the constitution need not be changed. Of course, this is accompanied by a great shrug of shoulders.

The constitution need not be changed, but the fact is that the Ontario government, going up to Ottawa at the beginning of this week, thinks that the constitution should be changed. It points out on page 3 of the brief that the following sections of The British North America Act should be repealed because their provisions are spent, because they are now provided by appropriate legislation. They run to 19 various sections that ought to be repealed.

I want to point out to this House that 14 sections of the Act (there are 147 sections in The British North America Act) 14 have already been repealed and another 19 certainly have to be repealed. It is beginning to add up. There had been 21 sections modified—modified quite radically. And six provisions had been added by 1962. Then they go on with four sections which have to be updated. They have to do with the list of the four original provinces, seats of government, provincial government, that sort of thing.

Three more sections of the Act have to be drafted—in their opinion—having to do, for instance, with Royal discretion as to assent of the legislation. In addition, three more paragraphs should be repealed. These concern disallowance powers of the federal government. This government very often does show some sound good sense in this issue. Then there are the magnificent Quebec documents outlining their proposals. I mean, they really go into the matter—give it a public airing unlike ourselves. They, too, favour these disallowance and reservation powers.

How can provinces that have come into some degree of self responsibility, like ourselves—a mature Legislature—why should we be subject to these disallowance powers which keep the provinces in tutelage?

He then goes on with five more sections that should be concerned wholly with the internal constitution of the House of Commons and now have nothing to do with such an Act, and should not be embodied in the constitutional document at all.

In other words, on the base of running through what is otiose, what is completely outdated and what has no longer any efficacy at all so far as the running of other governments is concerned, we have many outdated sections. The constitution simply has to be amended.

Now, regarding the preamble to the constitution, Ontario again ought to be given credit, although I don't suppose too much credit is involved. It is obvious enough that we are no longer a colony of Great Britain, and it says we are. And as they say, that is the place for a preamble to a constitution, the place for aspiration, a place where they can set up certain ideals as to the possibilities of this country. It is at least something to turn to in terms of the great language of men; it is something binding to turn to in terms of hard words.

As to The Bill of Rights, after a lot of unbelievable waffling over there that this decision would not have been arrived at a long time ago. But the Attorney General fooled around with it. Finally they have agreed that we do need a Bill of Rights and that it ought to be entrenched in the constitution.

Well, yes, fundamental rights. But even the unfundamental ones were not given much cognizance until very recently, so that is a good move, and I think with a considerable measure of accord can be reached—and of course we are all in favour of that. You cannot trust men. I mean, there are too many vacillations in human affairs, too many pressures exerted upon us, not to have these things in writing.

You may say that the German is of a certain temperament, or the Russian has no tradition of democracy and responsible government—that sort of thing—therefore, for these cultural reasons they did not have a Bill of Rights. But the fact of the matter is—I can very well envisage it now on this continent, we have had something pretty close to it in the States at times. Men could go off the deep end, become incomparably disturbed over some future issue, where they would trample over the rights. It has been known to happen. Think of the padlock law in Quebec and the rather subtle use of power exercised even in this province.

We have to have these things written down in the Act as a barrier—they are hard to alter. Men must abide by them; they have it in black and white. It helps to stamp it on their memory, to become part of their bloodstream. Laws very often create the attitude and the atmosphere in which the things which are of a personal nature then can come into effect. The rights, place our fundamental liberties into a text, and embody that text in the constitution.

The real problem, of course, is the problem of the division of powers. May I say in preface to my remarks in this great issue that I would ask the government—the Prime Minister, particularly, Mr. Speaker—to give some consideration at this stage to setting up a constitutional committee in this Legislature.

The province of Quebec has had a constitutional committee studying its documents. That is a part of the reason at least why it is so much in advance of anything we have before us. They have been studying it, they have a committee listening to experts, papers to refer to, they ask the right people. The papers are referred back to the government and the members of the Legislature are given an opportunity to debate. Apart from some statements incidentally made in this House by the leaders of the various parties, there has been in my period of time here at least, no fundamental debate on this issue at all.

I mean, one can be dead wrong about distribution of powers, as to where they should lie in the future constitution. But if somebody does not start throwing out some sparks which somebody else can react to and get their teeth into, then I think we are going to be left holding the bag. I am certainly not prepared to let the civil servants of this province dope it all out for us and hand it to us on a platter.

That could very well be what happened in the terms of tax structure committees and onviewing inter-governmental bodies that are far removed from this Legislature and about whom once in a while, by a visitation from the Premier, we are informed about as to what they are doing.

I do ask you to give consideration to setting up a constitutional committee. It is an extraordinary situation we are in at the present time. I think we all agree upon that and therefore, the need for it is very great.

Now I want to speak for a moment about a somewhat touchy subject — special or particular status. This was bootied around quite beneath the level of intelligence throughout the last federal campaign, with misrepresentations all over the place.

May I say that on this problem of particular status, it is a misrepresentation to claim that the position the Liberals then took regarding the position the New Democratic Party took at that time is not in line with our history and with the constitution itself.

You know Quebec has always had some kind of very particular status. It is written right into the constitution. The terms of appointment to judiciary. The use of the civil code in Quebec. The special language rights they are given in conjunction with English but Quebec is designated. Quebec is set apart in a way, in terms of our constitution, in terms of section 94 of the Act, in the problems, as I say, of schools.

In all these things, right from the initiation, everyone recognized that Quebec was in a rather unique position and that she had certain formidable interests which, on a growing English continent, simply had to be protected to that extent and at that depth, and I cannot see what the quarrel is all about.

I notice that the Quebec Liberals under the influence of Gerin-Lajoie in 1967, adopted a similar position recognizing the same sort of historical facts but then had a change of mind or a turn of coat. Now they have repudiated the position or at least, verbally have pretended to repudiate the position and yet, looking at the report of the meeting of the federation of the Quebec Liberal party held in Quebec last October, I would like to read you section 47 of that. It says:

It is to meet the profound objectives of Quebec and the rest of Canada at the same time.

That is pretty mealy mouthed.

. . . that we are proposing a type of federation of our own, invented by Canadians to meet their own situation. This distinctively Canadian federation would give Quebec jurisdiction in fields which it considers essential to the development of its collective personality while permitting the other provinces to entrust, to the federal government, a large share of its authority.

Now having repudiated, the special status, verbally and having drummed Levesque out, what on earth is that but special status, of one kind or another?

I think there is a certain hypocrisy present here and while I am not an advocate in my own personal opinion of special status as I will come to, as defined in terms of social-economic planning and as to the use of the economic instruments in the country, there is an area in which this very well might have some validity.

Incidentally, about this particular problem, I would like to know where the Ontario Liberals stand.

Hon. Mr. White: They would like to know too.

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): The member's repartee is just so quick and sharp!

Mr. Lawlor: Moving on and into the areas of the various heads of power — they are very quiet Mr. Speaker, this is most unlike the deputy leader to — on a challenge of this kind, to retire —

Mr. Singer: Well, we are polite.

Mr. M. Gaunt (Huron-Bruce): We are listening. We will have our say.

Mr. Lawlor: Very good. Very good.

I want to refer to an article contained in a publication which was circulated among the members, articles from Le Devoir earlier this year which peruses a great many attitudes and articles, conflicting articles, taking various points of view. A very valuable document this, and I am referring to the article of my friend (Andrew Brewin), in this book where he says:

I suggest that the federal authority must be preserved in such fields as credit, banking, investment, monetary and fiscal policy, tariffs and transportation. There is no room here for any particular status for Quebec or for any other province.

Again just what is being recommended by either the Liberals in Quebec under this head or by Le Parti Quebecois, René Levesque's party in this particular way insofar as, credit, for instance, is concerned is something that is very interesting and I will spell it out.

As you know, Le Parti Quebecois insists upon, within this common market proposal, using the currency of Canada. It continues to recognize the dollar as legal tender, and so on, within its own fields but just how it could go on recognizing the Bank of Canada, its expansion or contraction policies, which will undoubtedly affect the situation, how it can continue to operate or think of operating credit policies of its own, at least—let me put it this way.

There are areas in which a province can exercise fiscal and monetary responsibility particularly, fiscal. It can have an in-built credit expansion or contraction policy. It can have its own investment policy. We are recommending it every day for this province. But that can only be done, in my opinion, in very close co-operation with the federal government and its policy.

If one policy is an inflationary credit policy withdrawing money from the market and the other policy happens to be expansionist and deflationary, then I would think that the country will run off the rails. This is just the problem of the counteracting policies.

The basic problem at this stage, to kind of anticipate what I am going to say towards the end—is that what has happened here, fundamentally is the lack of co-operation between the two levels of government.

Now this has been pointed out, it was pointed out the other day by one of the speakers on the Conservative side, pointing out and lambasting the Liberal government in Ottawa for its refusal to engage in a number of policies.

In other words, Pierre Elliott Trudeau, as he became Prime Minister, adopted in effect what was the policy of the separatists in Quebec. In other words, he has a water tight compartment theory of the constitution. He wants to divide up the powers into nice little packages and each one of them to have its own power, but, he just wants to leave them as the present powers basically. Fundamentally that is what he wants and he will not supply the money either if they want to operate within the ambit of their own particular power as granted by the 1867 constitution. Now, this airtight theory is unworkable, is unbelievable, in the constitution. This causes him to refuse a whole area of programmes of mutual co-operation and an internal consultations, and it is the breakdown at this stage—and it is getting worse—of the federal's government's consultative machinery that is one of the chief causes for the Balkanization that is upon us.

The degree of ongoing, immediate, day-to-day permanent consultation between all levels of government, between provinces and federal government has never been encouraged and this is the only way in which a co-operative federalism can be made viable. This is the failure on the part of the federal party. The provinces are all clamouring to consult because they have overwhelming obligations to their people, but this government sits in some kind of cool aloofness, abiding by an outworn and ancient constitution.

I will not go over the ground of hospital construction, the withdrawal of manpower, ARDA, a whole host of areas which we have seen the various premiers on television in the past few days raising and lamenting. This government then when it does move into a budget policy eats up this justification for the Tory party in this particular regard, in my opinion, against the Liberal Opposition here in this regard.

Every time there seems to be any area for expansion into available economic resources, the federal government enlarges its defence policy or enlarges one of its own arrogated fields, it expands its diplomatic corps, it does everything in its power, as far as I can see, to cut off, truncate and diminish the role of the provincial governments. It cabbages funds and will not make and has not made provision, it is obtuse to making, adequate consideration for increasing needs of provinces.

The needs of the United States—and I am sure the same figures of the provincial and the local governments taken together have increased sixfold in the past 15 years over and against the needs of the federal government in the United States and I am sure the same applies here. Nevertheless, no cognizance—this is the basic reason for our rupture.

If there was economic stability and peace in Quebec, if they had anywhere close to adequate resources flowing from the federal government with its all encompassing taxing power, then I am sure that the acrimony and all the threats of pulling out that we face today would not and could not have taken place.

The economic has aggravated the cultural, and we are going to get the backlash. It is by refusing consultations that our major problems have arisen. In the United States, again at the present time, they are moving ahead in their constitution they have—somebody has created the phrase “a creative constitutionalism”. They say the economy of that country is no longer like a layer cake with the three layers laid one on top of the other, all acting in complete separation, all acting as distinct units with the lower units not having adequate resources with which to do their job. They claim the way in which their system is beginning to operate is that it is not a three-layer-cake, it is a marble cake. The colours are worked right in to the fabric of the cake.

You cannot segregate one area off from another. Irrespective of what the area that occurs to you might be, there are interleaving, overlapping responsibilities at all levels of government, to give cognizance of that area, to assist each other in that particular regard.

Now, at the present moment from our point of view here in Ontario, as presented in our brief so far as it presents anything at all, and from the point of view of Quebec and the other provinces, we are going in a directly contrary direction. Again that gives me great pause because if the thrust, if the dynamism of contemporary economic situations is such as to require an alignment of powers and an interfusing of functions, if this is necessary and built into this economy, then how on earth can we preserve the vitality of our union and still have all this segregation and distinct powers that everybody is talking about? That is refusal to face up to the demands of the twentieth century and to this country.

In the other hand, what we have to do seems to me to go somewhere down the middle, as usual, usual in Canada, because the demands are there and Quebec does demand a special kind of recognition and this is even true about this province.

Mr. E. Sargent (Grey-Bruce): What can the member do about Quebec?

Mr. Lawlor: On the other hand, the needs of the economy mean that there is complete penetration right through, that there are no special powers, that there is no area that any particular province could arrogate to itself in exclusion of any other level of government, particularly the federal. And federal funds are necessary.

We had a solution, you know, back in 1941, to all this, which, largely because of the war, we were unable to accept, the Rowell-Sirois report gave complete taxing power, right across the board, 100 per cent taxing power to the federal government and then made arrangements to transfer funds back to the provinces on the basis of consultation and need.

That, if it had been adopted—again the boat was missed—and as so often in our history, and so that our final dilemma, the one we have come to today is that the whole direction of our policy on a social level runs counter to what must be the direction of our policy on an economic level. That can only bring about the gravest type of dislocation and collision and again the very possible breakup of the country.

In problems of immigration, Quebec is demanding that she be given the right to—some selective right to—the immigrants coming into that province, but I think we can concede that to Quebec, there is no particular problem there, I would not think. I mean, even constitutionally at the present time she has some area there of self-determination touching the immigration policy.

Then in foreign relations—it seems to me that there again Quebec on her own hook, without consulting the government of Canada, ought to be able to conduct some foreign relations. For instance, if there is a conference involving the government of Quebec on the civil code, a conference of jurists somewhere, why would the federal government be particularly interested in being in attendance or having representation?

The next step is over to the problems of education. If the education problem is peculiar to Quebec, while there may be some consultation in advance with the federal government or some letter of credit type of thing, I see no reason fundamentally why the province of Quebec cannot have her own representatives on that sort of negotiation.

In other words, if the whole ambit of any particular field falls under all levels of government, as I am claiming, then the nice job in framing a constitution—and it is a nice job, it requires great delicacy and refinement now to indicate, to give guideposts to those areas in which primacy will fall here and where primacy will fall there.

If the education conference is international and concerns largely problems of French language or things that are peculiar to the culture of Quebec, I see no reason in the world why the federal government ought to take such a huff and puff stand on this particular thing. This applies too in the realm of communications and telecommunications. Could anyone here tell me why Quebec should not have her own satellite? There was an awful hubbub the other day about her sending up—if she wants to construct and pay for a satellite to transmit the French language and some pictures from Paris, France over to Quebec, I do not see any reason in the world why she should not be able to do so, or to instruct the people of Louisiana what is happening up here.

Yet, the federal government under Trudeau raises their hands in holy horror and says that this is a breach of the whole idea of confederation. Unless that sort of flexibility is shown in this division of powers business, we are not going to get any division of powers—we are just going to get a division of minds, and a division of the country.

I have noticed that Ontario made one gesture which I think I mentioned the other day, in terms of economic policy. The hon. Minister of Financial and Commercial Affairs stated that he was willing to have the federal government exercise authority over prices.

Now, that would be a magnificent instrument, an extra instrument. We have had great difficulty bringing about economic rationalism because of a division of this power, and the failure to determine who really exercises it. It is like the things that upset and caused so much misery in the Privy Council during the Bennett regime, when one power was denied to the province here and then the federal government could not exercise the same marketing power and the whole thing was left in some limbo when nobody had any power, in a no-man's land.

This is the way our constitution was interpreted, and this spread because one could not control those areas of the economy, all sorts of dislocation, and therefore human beings suffered by it, and that is what it is all about.

In terms of marriage and divorce, this is being discussed. Why does the federal government have to have jurisdiction over marriage and divorce? Quebec wants it. I say, give it to her. She has her own peculiar religious institutions. She has her own way of regarding marriage.

We in the English speaking provinces have become, perhaps, more pluralistic with regard to our notion of what marriage ought to be and to the availability of divorce, to keep people happy. Therefore, this is a kind of a cultural revolution that is taking place where, in effect, marriage is breaking down under the English regime, and then the French at least, who want to consolidate the family unit, ought to be given some jurisdiction in this.

Mr. Sargent: Would the member let them have it?

Mr. Lawlor: Of course, I would let them have it.

Mr. Sargent: Can they not have divorces?

Mr. Lawlor: In the whole area of taxation, again our friend John Stuart Mill was the author of the distinction between direct and indirect taxation. Nobody, as has been pointed out, ever pays any attention to the direct or the indirect, but, nevertheless—and I come back to this—as things now stand, the federal government usurps the areas of financial growth and the areas of financial revenue for the various provinces. They move in ahead, they eat up the bundle; they are the firstest and the mostest, and Ontario and the other provinces are invariably ending up with less and less room in which to move on the tax angle.

And for Joey Smallwood, I listened to him last night, Mr. Speaker. Unbelievable. Here is a province, vastly subsidized by the rest of the country, and the subsidies pour in with which to maintain and alleviate the life of his people, and he taxes certain things like liquor at a greater level. Then he blames the province of Ontario for not meeting these demands, when it is Ontario that makes it possible for them to exist at all. The confusion involved in this particular chicanery and that way of talking should be pointed out.

The area that is the real area of concern and difficulty, Mr. Speaker, is the area of social welfare. Just what do you do with social welfare? Rene Levesque demands that they have control, and so do Union Nationale. They want to control social welfare; they say that it is a cultural function. It gives hegemony to their people—and no doubt it does—but if it comes to a position where old age pensions, the Canadian Pension Plan, family allowances or baby bonus plans, unemployment insurance, and finally, Medicare, are supposed to devolve into the hands of the province, then it is simply unworkable. And I cannot believe that these leaders really think that it is, you know. Take unemployment insurance. Curiously enough, leafing through their various works and arguments, which are quite vehement and venomous at times, I see nothing said about what Levesque wants to do with unemployment insurance.

He talks a great deal about manpower training as being a provincial responsibility. That is fine, but I think again that the only viable kind of constitution that we can look forward to is redividing social welfare, not in terms of watertight compartments again—quite the contrary. By recognizing in the constitution the responsibility for all levels of government with respect to social welfare, and dividing the pie in the sense, at least, that the collection facilities and the disbursement of money were liaised with Ottawa, it gives our country centrality, it gives it uniformity, it gives it a kind of unity. These social welfare schemes—and I argued a moment ago in terms of Medicare, too—make an enormous contribution to welding us in unity, and will do some more in the future as their impacts become more felt. Therefore they should be maintained at the federal level. But the dispersal of funds, the administrative chores can be very well delegated to the provinces, which they are not at the present time. And therein lies—and not just therein, but especially lies—the great defect in our constitution touching the problem of delegation.

There are some moot questions about it, but on the whole, Privy Council decisions have not allowed delegation to operate, and that would be fundamental, not only in the business of an ongoing consultation far deeper and more intimate than anything we have ever known. That is number one nostrum in this direction. But delegation of powers back and forth according to the exigencies—things change; constitutions sit there like rocks. It is very difficult, but if you write right into a constitution the conditions of its change, then you have something that may last quite a while and which may suave over all kinds of difficulties. And then that interdelegation of powers can be done in a multitude of ways. If a particular jurisdiction has a peculiar problem in terms of its agriculture, in terms of its regional development, then the kind of delegation that is appropriate to that particular province or circumstance can take place without disrupting, without requiring complete unanimity and uniformity across a country. A country as vast as this and as little populated, with such a diversity of regions, needs an inbuilt flexibility of principle.

This is the only solution. That sort of reasoning, that sort of approach to the constitution would be the way in which to preserve us. If we are going to get one, let us not have it on the Trudeau or on the Bertrand principle of dividing everything up.

Mr. Sargent: The member never had a chance to make any policy down there, so what is he worried about?

Mr. Lawlor: I think it is high time we did have a chance. It is high time that you jumped into the whirlpool and made your contribution, because I am sure that what you would have to say on the point would change a great deal up there.

As a matter of fact, it is very difficult to come down with a list of headings that would be under exclusive jurisdiction of the province of Quebec, let us say, or under any particular province. I am willing, as I indicated, to concede marriage as being one of these things. And of course, municipal affairs—but even in municipal affairs, these days, in terms of highway construction, in terms of housing policy, as has been pointed out, the interpenetration of governments, particularly the penetration of the federal government, is not only crucial to the development of these schemes, but is taking place. That leads to the creative constitutional theory. If Quebec, again, wants to conduct its own housing policy, I would concede that. I mean, the monies are raised in Ottawa; let the Quebec people disperse their monies. They say that they designate that a particular department must spend it. That may be true. There has to be some kind of control over the spending power, but there should be large areas, too, where per capita grants are given. The widest area of self-determination, of autonomies in the province, ought to be preserved at all times.

The penal institutions: again, as in the present constitution, there is a wide variety of types of penal institutions. Again, I do not see the wiser heads in Quebec saying that any fundamental alteration of that should take place. I think that Levesque thinks that by opting out of having to spend money on defence, that he will have these extra funds with which to run such institutions and that he would set up his own penitentiaries in this regard. But it is hardly a responsible attitude to allow the federal government, in effect, to defend the province of Quebec without making a contribution to that defence policy, however benighted I think the defence policy to be up at Ottawa.

Well, Mr. Speaker, to wind up my contribution to this debate, I am calling for a creative federalism of ongoing and immediate consultation between all provincial governments and that we should have a permanent secretariat in Ottawa and that we should be kept informed. Also that Ottawa ought to be open and generous in its consultation; ought not to make decisions vitally affecting the life of a province without consulting that province in advance. That seems to me to be almost simplistic, but that is exactly what I say has not been done.

I therefore then go on, at the second point, to recommend that delegation be written into the constitution. The third point I wish to bring before the House is a request that we have a constitutional committee where the various members here can sit down and discuss these matters together. I felt a great emptiness in this regard, and I thank you for your kindness.

Mr. J. Root (Wellington-Dufferin): Mr. Speaker, I notice almost half of the members of the third party left the House during that long oration.

Mr. Speaker, since this is the first time that I have taken part in the Throne Debate or the Budget Debate since this Parliament convened—I did not speak in the session last year—I want to join with other members in paying my tribute to you, Mr. Speaker, and to your Deputy for the way you preside over the proceedings of this House, keep order, and sometimes try to bring order out of a little bit of chaos. I want to congratulate you on the way you are handling the affairs of the House in a fair and impartial manner.

Mr. Speaker, I crave your indulgence and the indulgence of the House while I put a few comments and thoughts that I have into the record. I had hoped to make these comments during the Throne Debate prior to the Christmas adjournment. However, that was not possible since other members wished to speak. Some members spoke at very great length and used the time that could have been divided among the various members who were anxious to make some comment.

First, let me make some comment about the riding of Wellington-Dufferin, the riding that I have the honour to represent. For the benefit of new members, Wellington-Dufferin is one of the few ridings that are, in the main, rural.

However, with the tremendous industrial development that has taken place under the sound policies that have been carried out by the Progressive Conservative Party over the past 25 years, we are now feeling the impact of the industrial development.

There are many people, particularly in the southern parts of the riding, that are commuting to work in the industries that are locating in the Guelph-Fergus-Orangeville area and further south in the Oakville-Burlington-Milton-Acton and Metropolitan areas. Mr. Speaker, I would like to put in the record some statistics to back up that statement.

In 1950, the population of Erin village was 625. In 1968, it was 1,161. In 1950, the population of Erin township was 2,418. In 1968 it had grown to 3,362. In 1950, Eramosa township had a population of 2,398. In 1968 the population had grown to 3,295.

In other words, these three southern municipalities had grown from 5,441 to 7,818, a gain of approximately 45 per cent in a period of 18 years. This growth has accelerated in recent years as more and more people are establishing their homes in this attractive part of Ontario and commuting to work on the fine road system that has been built by The Department of Highways.

I might say that further acceleration of development is anticipated as industries are establishing and looking for places to establish in this growing part of Ontario. Some of the smaller villages and towns have already secured industries, and others in Wellington-Dufferin are in the process of negotiating.

This development has been stimulated by the incentive programme that is carried out by the department headed by the Hon. Mr. Randall, namely Trade and Development. New subdivisions are starting in some of the smaller villages, and further evidence of the growth that is taking place is the fact that the school population has greatly expanded. Many of the schools are using portable classrooms to accommodate this growing population.

Mr. Speaker, with regard to the growth in the school population, let me put into the record some statistics. In 1950, in the County of Wellington there were some 5,346 pupils in the elementary schools and 1,089 in the secondary schools, for a total of 6,435. And by 1966, just 15 years later, there were 18,647 in the elementary schools, and 6,092 in the secondary schools, for a total of 24,739, a gain of 18,304.

In a 20-year period, we have seen the population of the city of Guelph, which is located in Wellington County, more than double. We have seen similar growths in other urban areas in the Wellington-Dufferin area. The rural population on the farms and in the hamlets and villages has grown by almost 50 per cent. Mr. Speaker, great changes have taken place in our communities as the result of the changes that are taking place in world affairs, our country, our province.

Following World War II, many people, many industries, looked for a more attractive land in which to establish. In the eyes of the world, Canada is a land of opportunity, a land of space, resources, mineral wealth, timber, water, energy of all kinds—oil, gas, coal, uranium, hydro power. We have recreation facilities almost unlimited, and the fertile acres to feed many more people. In Canada, we have freedom of speech and of worship and of action within the law. We are free to elect the men and women who make our laws. And so, our population has grown to over 20 million people.

In Canada we draw our blood lines from many racial origins. Let me say the people I have the honour to represent cannot get enthusiastic talking about two races or two cultures. We like to think of ourselves as Canadians.

Mr. Speaker, Ontario has been described as the keystone in the arch of the Canadian Confederation. We raise approximately half of the nation's budget. Over half of the New Canadians coming to Canada since World War II have settled in Ontario. We are one province, in a nation of ten provinces and two territories.

Over half of the new industries that have established in Canada since World War II have established in Ontario. Our population has grown from about four million to over seven, and is approaching seven and-a-half million. When you realize that Metropolitan Toronto contains fewer than two million people, we can get some idea of the impact of an extra  $3\frac{1}{4}$  or  $3\frac{1}{2}$  million people on our society and on our economy. Our population cannot move south because of the Great Lakes, which are on our international boundary. There are only two ways for the population to move and that is either up, or move north. As I mentioned earlier the population that is moving north is creating many changes in the area that I have the honour to represent.

Mr. Speaker, Ontario has pursued policies during the past 25 years that have made expansion possible. We think of the power development programme providing over 500 per cent Hydro expansion. With new plants very recently announced, we have piped in gas from Western Canada. We are developing nuclear power, power to turn the wheels of industry. Industrial expansion providing jobs for new people, highway expansion, development roads, roads to resources, the Seaway development, air transport, all of these stimulate trade and development of our resources.

The great changes that have taken place in our educational facilities provide the training for our young people moving into the professions, into industry, into business and into agriculture. Health units and capital grants for hospitals and many new social and family services help to make Ontario, our communities, attractive areas in which to establish a home, a business, an industry.

Improved highways and development roads and greatly increased municipal grants have made possible open roads for 12 months in the year in our municipal systems. Open roads make it possible for people working in industry, business and professions to live in attractive rural areas and commute to work in larger centres. Open roads, with year-round bus service, make possible larger school units offering educational facilities not available in the one-teacher, one room school.

Conservation authorities are developing many fine recreational facilities for our expanding population. Reforestation is an important part of the sound conservation programme. Conservation authorities are creating large water storage areas that will play an ever-increasing role in the development of our area and our province. A constant streamflow is necessary to dilute treated sewage effluent from expanding urban areas.

Growing population and expanding industry are placing an ever-increasing strain on our water resources in southern Ontario, indeed in all parts of the province.

Mr. Speaker, the government that I support has been wise in planning for the future use of our land and water. Wise in planning for the education of the rising generation, some of whom will leave our rural communities to take their place in the large centres. The government has pursued sound policies to provide adequate health service for our people, and to make provision for those who, through no fault of their own, are denied the necessities of life.

Mr. Speaker, I have mentioned some of the things that have made Ontario an attractive place in which to live, to establish a business or an industry. I mention the impact of the population growth on the economy of the area I have the honour to represent.

Through the years I have had the privilege of representing Wellington-Dufferin, we have witnessed many changes. Highways have been built, rebuilt, resurfaced. Many miles of development road have been built, taking the burden of taxation off the local economy. Increased municipal grants have made it possible to keep our roads open, giving the farmers ready access to the markets—and the people who have moved into the community to traffic arteries on which they can commute to and from work.

While I am speaking of traffic arteries, I would remind the hon. Minister of Highways that Dufferin County and my home township of Erin are looking forward to the day when decisions here will be made that we hope will extend Highway 25 north through the Grand Valley area to join Highway 89 between Mount Forest and Shelburne. For the benefit of hon. members I could point out that there is a 30-mile stretch between Highway 6 at Mount Forest and Highway 10 at Primrose without a north-south highway.

People in the area feel that a highway between these two highways would not only develop the local area but it will give a short route into the Georgian Bay area for many tourists who would like to avoid the heavily congested area north of Toronto.

Mr. Speaker, I would not want to leave the impression with the House that we in Wellington-Dufferin are not grateful for the tremendous improvements that have been made to our highway system under the 25 years of Conservative government. We are—but we feel that another north-south highway in the area will make it easier for industry and population to decentralize in close proximity to the great developments that are taking place along the north shore of the Great Lakes system.

Mr. Speaker, I was pleased to be one of the members who took part in the members' tour of northwestern Ontario to see the developments that have taken place in that part of the province. I remember the first members' tour that I took part in in the early 1950's, in northeastern Ontario when, I believe it was in early September, we drove from Cochrane north-west to Kapuskasing on Highway 11 that was not paved at that time; it was heaving. Great changes have taken place since that trip.

I remember my first trip into northwestern Ontario, when former Premier Frost cut the ribbon to open the highway to Atikokan and then signs went up "on to Fort Frances".

Again, it was my privilege a few years later to travel when the new highway and causeway, the Noden Causeway, was opened and made possible a circular route into the Rainy Lake part of the province. This summer, in connection with the Water Resources Commission work, and indeed last spring, I drove over that fine new highway up into Red Lake in the Kenora area. In all parts of the north we see new traffic arteries developing, roads into Manitouwadge, connecting links being built from Timmins to Wawa, a new highway on the north shore of Lake Superior—all playing their part in the development of this great province of Ontario.

Quite frankly, Mr. Speaker, I have been a little surprised at some of the speeches I have listened to from members in northern Ontario who have benefited from the tremendous developments of road systems that have taken place. Not only road systems, but power developments and new mines.

I remember one of the first policies that was introduced by the Conservative Party when they came into power was to stop the export of raw pulpwood. And that has meant the ability of new pulp mills to establish in new towns.

I was at Atikokan when they were pumping out the Steep Rock Lake. This year, we saw the development of the Great Griffiths Mine at Bruce Lake, south of Red Lake in northwestern Ontario. Not many months ago, I sat on the industrial waste hearing that preceded the development of the Sherman Mine at Timagami. Truly, under the sound policies of this government Ontario has developed as it has never developed before in any similar period of time.

Mr. Speaker, I want to make a comment on a few highlights in the Wellington-Dufferin area during 1968. Many people, from all parts of Ontario, attended the international ploughing match that was held just north of Guelph, in the county of Wellington. Divine providence blessed that event with wonderful weather, and I believe records were established with regard to attendance.

As you hon. members may know, the county received its name from a great historic figure, the Duke of Wellington, and for the ceremonies in connection with the ploughing match, Mr. Bill Urquhart, of the Midwestern Ontario Development Association, dressed in appropriate uniform and took the part of the Duke of Wellington to give colour to the ceremonies. The match was held on the farm on Mr. John Gilchrist and other farms in the area.

Another highlight in 1968 was the winning of the Queen's Guineas by Mr. John Curtis of Belwood. Mr. Curtis is a Dufferin county young farmer and brought great honour to his county, to his family, and to himself in winning this coveted award. Mr. Curtis is typical of the fine young people we have on the farms in the Wellington-Dufferin area.

I would like to bring to the attention of hon. members the fact that since 1947 young farmers in Wellington and Dufferin have won the Queen's Guineas 12 times. That is an outstanding achievement when you realize these are some 37 counties in the province.

Other interesting information regarding the winning of the Queen's Guineas is the fact that Kenneth McKinnon of Hillsburgh, in my home township of Erin, won the Queen's Guineas two years in succession, in 1947 and 1948, something that has never happened since.

In 1962 and 1963, two neighbours in Eramosa township in my riding won the Queen's Guineas, namely Ron Storey and Sandra Peart. In 1964 and 1966, two members of another family won the Queen's Guineas, Linda Hasson and David Hasson.

Others who have won the Queen's Guineas between 1947 and 1957 in Wellington-Dufferin were Helen Anderson in 1957 from Dufferin county; Bert Tupling in 1965 from Dufferin county; Alex McIntosh from Wellington county in 1950; Bill Dunbar from Wellington county in 1952; and Ross Graham from Palmerston in 1953.

Mr. Speaker, in spite of the fine soil and the fine young people growing up on our farms, agriculture has been faced with problems. The great expansion of industry in the province has created a great new, consuming market for the products of our farms. At the same time, the short work week, with rising costs of labour and equipment has presented problems to the farmer who is engaged in a vocation that cannot be rigid in its working hours.

The farmer works hand in hand with the great architect of the universe, and is dependent on the weather and is responsible for the care of his livestock seven days a week.

This makes it difficult for him to fit into the short work-week that is enjoyed by many other groups of people. I realize that the 48-hour week does not apply to farmers, but at the same time I am aware that the farmer has to bid for his labour in the labour market.

Marketing legislation has helped the farmer to bargain collectively. Opens roads 12 months of the year make it possible for him to get his produce to market quickly and in good condition. Junior farmer loans have made it possible for many of our young farmers to establish a farming operation.

The advancing costs of bank money and other sources of credit are presenting great problems. Many young people are asking if it is worthwhile taking the chance. The older people cannot farm indefinitely, and with the new tax policies that are being promoted by the federal government, it is going to make it very difficult for even parents to help their family carry on the family farm.

Mr. Speaker, I would want to say that the capital grants programme that was instituted by this government has made it possible for many farm people to improve their farming operation, and I would be remiss if I did not convey that message to the government and to the Legislature.

Mr. Speaker, I was not sure who made the interjection about the cost of education, but this government—in my area—is paying an average of 77.5 per cent of the cost of education and in some of the boards, well over 80 per cent.

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): How about your urban colleagues? Let them say that.

Mr. Root: Well, Mr. Speaker, I will go on with my remarks.

In addition to the problem of hiring labour in a labour market that is protected by the short work week with advancing wages, and the problem of financing with today's high costs of money, the farm people are confronted with the problem of having to compete with imports that come in from other countries, probably from areas where the labour costs and the costs of production are not as high.

I asked for a few statistics regarding the exports and imports. I would like to put in the record some interesting statistics from the Dominion Bureau of Statistics regarding trade of Canada—exports and imports of the same products.

For example, in 1967 we imported $26.5 million worth of beef. We only exported $14.9 million. We imported $10.3 million worth of pork, and on this item we did export more than we imported. We exported $28.8 million.

We imported $13.4 million worth of lamb, and we only exported $83,000 worth of lamb. We imported $2.7 million worth of turkey and other poultry. We only exported $227,000. We imported $9.1 million worth of eggs; we exported $1.5 million worth.

We imported $2.5 million worth of butter; we exported $36,000 worth of butter. We imported $14 million worth of cheese, and exported $11.2 million. We imported $1.2 million worth of powdered milk. Here we had a bit of a gain—we exported $17.7 million.

We imported $6.1 million worth of potatoes; exported $14.3 million.

We imported $85.4 million worth of vegetables and exported $32.8 million. We imported $205.6 million worth of fruits, and exported $29.9 million. We imported $42.1 million worth of corn, and exported $784,000. On those commodities that I have mentioned, in 1967 we imported $419.4 million worth of these products. We only exported $152 million.

Mr. Speaker, I realize that our international trade is largely controlled by the federal government, but here again we have a problem where, on the commodities I have mentioned, we are importing nearly three times as much as we are exporting.

Again, a problem confronts the farm people. I only put these figures in the record in the hope that the federal people will keep in mind that agriculture is still the basic industry, and that our economy is not strong enough to import all the foodstuffs we need if we are to feed our people. Agriculture cannot be subjected to a cheap food policy if we are to keep our young people on the farm and bid for labour on the labour markets, and for money in the high cost financial markets.

Mr. Speaker, I want to comment very briefly on something that has caused me great concern in the last session of this Legislature, and again in this session. I am referring to the amount of time that some members take in the various debates, making it almost impossible for other members to present the views of the people they have the honour to represent.

I could understand that in the first session, many new members wanted to speak at great length about their riding and problems that had been brought to their attention, but it seems to me that it is not fair to the taxpayers that 117 members, as well as their staff have to sit for days listening to one speech.

For example, this session the member for High Park (Mr. Shulman) an educated man, a doctor, took something like 69 pages of Hansard to make his Speech on the Throne Debate. The hon. member for Scarborough East (Mr. T. Reid), a university lecturer, I believe, a professor, took some 55 pages of Hansard. The hon. member for Riverdale (Mr. J. Renwick), a lawyer, took some 27 pages, and the hon. member for Sudbury (Mr. Sopha), another lawyer, some 25 pages.

Mr. E. W. Sopha (Sudbury): I wonder why I was so constrained that day.

Mr. Root: Thank goodness you were.

In other words, these four members—educated men—took 176 pages of Hansard. If everyone of the 117 members spoke as long as the hon. member for High Park spoke on the Throne Debate, it would require some 8,073 pages of Hansard to complete the Throne Debate. The time used during the Throne Debate by the four hon. members I have mentioned equalled almost three per cent of the total time used during the last session.

It would be interesting to know how much this would cost the taxpayers. I understand it costs over $20 a page to print Hansard, let alone record it and edit it.

An hon. member: $23!

Mr. Root: Somebody has interjected $23. If 117 members took this amount of time on the Throne Debate or in any debate, it would require 8,073 pages in Hansard, which adds up to 1,850 more pages than the total number used for the last session, and it ran from mid-February to late in July. In other words, there would be no time to do the business of the House. Under present rules of the House, we cannot—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order! There is absolutely no excuse for members of the House, who have been pointed out by the hon. member speaking—intelligent, educated people—reducing discussion to bedlam as has been done now. The hon. member is making his speech, and is entitled to the same courtesy as the hon. member who just interjected received when he made his speech. The hon. member for Wellington-Dufferin has the floor.

Mr. Root: I will make one reply to one comment on my per diem allowance. Every dollar that I have earned is related to time that I have spent whether on the hourly basis or per diem basis, any time that I have spent in a day over seven and a quarter hours, I give free, gratis. There are many days when I work 14 or 15 hours a day. There is no overtime pay after seven and a quarter hours.

Mr. Speaker, the point I am trying to make is that I feel hon. members should realize that they should have a sense of responsibility if we are to live within the present rules of the House. We can't spend all of our time talking; we have to do some business.

I will say that when you look at the amount of press that was associated with the long speeches, the press did a pretty good job of sorting out the wheat from the chaff. In other words, there wasn't as much wheat by a long measure as there was chaff.

Mr. Speaker, I have brought this matter to the attention of the House in the hope that all hon. members would use a little discretion if we are to get on with the business of the House which is what, I believe, the taxpayers want us to do. If hon. members are not going to use discretion, then it may be, Mr. Speaker, that the Legislature will have to take a look at the rules of the House. I have no desire to make it impossible for any member to speak, but I would like to see that there is a bit more fairness in the amount of time that is used by the hon. members.

I would also like to make another comment. As the sessions have got longer, we have the situation where some members come in and make long speeches and then maybe disappear for days at a time and leave it to other members to carry on the business of the House.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Root: Mr. Speaker, with regard to interjections; I will put my record of attendance and the time I have been in this House against any members who sit in this House.

An hon. member: How could you make $10,000 a year and be here at the same time? How could you do it?

Mr. Root: As I have said before, every dollar that I have earned is related to time that I have spent on government business. The Water Resources Commission is a very important part of the business, and if you do not believe that—

Interjection by an hon member.

Mr. Root: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member, if he would read The Act, knows that there is nothing in the Act that says that I cannot be paid for water resources work while the House is sitting while I am on water resources business. Now, do not try to mislead the people.

Mr. Speaker, I would also like to make another comment. As the sessions have got longer we may create a situation where the conscientious member who wants to diligently attend to the business of the House, feels that he cannot give the time at the present salary. I am not sure that there are many people who are not aware that the members of the Ontario Legislature are only paid two-thirds of what the members of the Quebec Legislature are paid. We have many dedicated members who are here day after day, and there are others who come and go. The thought that I want to leave, Mr. Speaker, is that if we are going to be plagued with these long harangues that really do not add up to very much by men who, after they make their speech, may leave the House, sometimes for days at a time, we may have to consider the remuneration for the men who stay in the House and carry on the business. And, if we are to keep our budget in line, perhaps look at docking people for any unreasonable amount of time they are out of the House on other than parliamentary business.

Mr. Speaker, I only mention these two points, because I feel that the taxpayers of Ontario would want to be fair to the men who conscientiously attend the House, and who restrict the amount of time they take in order to get on with the business. I feel that they will object to paying 117 members and the staff to sit in the House and listen to speeches that take 69 pages of Hansard.

Mr. Speaker, I want to make a few comments about a matter that has caused me a lot of concern, and I am sure raised the eyebrows of many of the taxpayers of Ontario. On July 15, 1968, the hon. leader of the Opposition was speaking about statements made by the now Prime Minister Trudeau in the federal election.

The hon. member for Brant said, and I quote from page 5602 of Hansard:

I hope we will not think that Trudeau's statements having to do with economic equality of opportunity were election window dressing, because I believe that these economic equality procedures are going to be put into effect in the next three years and it will mean that we in Ontario will be paying the larger share of the cash required.

And then, on the next page 5603, the hon. member went on to say:

If the government of Canada is going to carry on these programmes, and in my view they are going to be accelerated rather than slowed down, then the heaviest responsibility as taxpayers is going to rest right here on the economy and citizens of Ontario to meet these requirements. In my view, Ontario is prepared to accept these responsibilities.

Mr. Speaker, that was quite a statement for a man who hopes some day to be Prime Minister of Ontario. I hope that statement was not the statement that led the federal government to take the hard line they have taken in dealing with the provinces, and in particular, with Ontario.

I noticed in the Toronto Telegram of Friday, Dec. 20, 1968, under heading, "Benson: Ontario spending detriment to Canada," and I want to read this item into the record:

In a rare burst of public criticism, federal Finance Minister Edgar Benson has accused the Ontario government of fiscal policies that are not in the best interests of the province or the country.

The federal Minister revealed to newsmen yesterday that he had told Ontario Treasurer Charles MacNaughton his deficit financing "is not in the best interests of the people of Ontario."

Privately, it was learned, Mr. Benson told Mr. MacNaughton his government's policies were a "detriment to all Canada."

Mr. Speaker, in my earlier remarks I mentioned the fact that Ontario, under Conservative policies had developed programmes of power development, highway construction, educational facilities, recreational facilities that have made Ontario the most attractive province in all of Canada in which to establish industry, business, and homes, with the result we have attracted half of the new industries, provided the jobs not only for half of the New Canadians coming to Canada, but for many thousands of Canadians who come from other provinces. Because our fiscal policies and overall policies have stimulated this growth, although we are really about one-third of the population of Canada, we have become the source of almost half of the federal budget, to carry on the programmes that they develop.

Every intelligent person knows that this influx of people has meant the building of schools, hospitals, and all the facilities that go with an expanding population. In addition to financing our own programmes, we have been the economic basis for many of the programmes that have been initiated by the federal government.

When I read the quotation from Mr. Benson's comment, I decided I was going to find out just how much money Ontario had contributed to federal taxes through personal income, corporation, and estate taxes. I was able to secure the figures from 1959 to 1967—nine years.

In that period, we contributed $7,891,438,000 in personal income tax. I must say that 1967 is an estimate, and the source of information is taxation statistics, Department of National Revenue.

In corporation tax we contributed $6,177,305,000. This figure is estimated in '65, '66, '67. In estate taxes, $180,308,000, or a total of $14,249,051,000.

Mr. Benson says he doesn't like our fiscal policy. Now, what did they do with our money? I asked how much money was paid to the various provinces in equalization payments by the federal government, and we know that this programme was instituted by a Liberal administration. I have the figures for 11 years starting in the fiscal year '57-'58 to the fiscal year '67-'68.

In that 11-year period the federal government distributed in equalization payments some $2,314,950,000. Now then, Mr. Speaker, let us take a look at who got the benefit of this $2,324,950,000. The province of Newfoundland, $194,542,000 — and I can agree with what the member for Lakeshore said about Mr. Smallwood's suggestion that we raise taxes here — Prince Edward Island, $48,375,000; Nova Scotia, $267,250,000; New Brunswick, $218,497,000; Manitoba, $194,702,000; Saskatchewan, $270,131,000; Alberta, $88,818,000. They did not receive any equalization grants in the years 1965-66 to 1967-68. I think at that time the government had brought natural resources into the plan. British Columbia, $49,032,000. They were in a similar position to Alberta, and they were dropped from equalizing grants after the year 1961-62. The province of Quebec received $985,578,000, and the province of Ontario, which generated most of this revenue, receives exactly zero — nothing. And yet, Mr. Benson says our fiscal policies are not good for Canada, and the leader of the Opposition here in the Ontario House probably whetted his appetite when he suggested the people of Ontario were all in favour of Mr. Trudeau's programmes for equity.

Mr. Speaker, we are all good Canadians, and we want to help all parts of Canada, but I think it was very improper for the federal Minister of Finance and the leader of the Liberal Party here in Ontario to take the attitude they have taken with regard to these important matters.

I think that the leader of the Liberal party here in Ontario would have been in a much better position some day in the future had he taken the position that Ontario did have good fiscal policies and that we were making a great contribution to Canada.

Mr. Speaker, I should continue my sentence and say instead of whetting Mr. Benson's appetite to take another — what was it; a billion, one hundred million from the taxpayers? And I suppose Ontario taxpayers will put up over $500 million of that.

Mr. Speaker, there was another point that I noticed as I went over these statistics, and that is that next to the province of Quebec, the province that is in second place with regard to high equalizing grants was the province of Saskatchewan, which for many years had to struggle along under the dead hand of socialism. In fact, they elected their socialist government about the same time the province of Ontario elected a Progressive Conservative government, a government that developed a booming economy, attracted industry and has the highest wage scale in the country. Because of the industrial development and the high wage scale, we are contributing approximately half of the national budget, making possible the payments that I have just mentioned. And while we were growing by nearly two million people under sound Progressive Conservative policies many thousands of people were getting out of the province of Saskatchewan to get out from under socialism.

Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to speak at any great length at this time about the work of the Ontario Water Resources Commission. I may deal with that programme, which is expanding every year, in greater detail at a later date, but I do want to make one or two comments about certain statements that were made by the hon. member for Brant during his speech in the Throne Debate. In fact, he made reference to myself on two occasions. I will say that I read his remarks regarding the work of our commission with great interest. Many of his comments are worthy of study. However, some of the statements he made, I am sure, were secured from people who lacked accurate information. He mentioned on page 117 of Hansard:

As a case in point, that the commission decided in 1966 that St. Thomas should accept water from a commission pipeline for 50 cents per 1,000 gallons, even though St. Thomas had an adequate system delivering water at 10 cents per 1,000 gallons with proved resources to cope for expansion into the foreseeable future.

The hon. member went on to say:

The OWRC decision was prompted by their commitment to provide pipeline water to the new Ford plant near St. Thomas and their effort to spread the cost over the nearest population centre. Now in order to force the city to accept an obviously bad deal the Water Resources Commission stopped approving subdivision plans in St. Thomas in March 1967. This freeze on development was based on the commission's statement that the city was grossly polluting nearby Kettle Creek.

Mr. Speaker, these statements by the hon. member for Brant are not based on reliable information; in fact, some of them are not related to fact. We have in the commission files the resolutions passed by the city of St. Thomas and the townships saying that they would take water from a pipeline if the Ford plant located in the area. With that commitment from the elected representatives of the people in the area, we did give a rate to Ford, and Ford located, and has provided many people with employment.

To meet Ford's deadline, we started construction of the system on the basis of the resolutions that had been passed by the properly elected people to represent St. Thomas and the townships. While construction was proceeding, the agreement was worked out. I, myself, sat the head of the table for some three days when the lawyers from St. Thomas and from the commission, representatives of the councils and the PUC and our staff worked out the agreement.

When the agreement was completed to the satisfaction of all concerned, the date was set for the signing. The rate that was in the original agreement was 35 cents per 1,000 gallons (not 50 cents as the hon. member for Brant stated in his speech). That rate was subject to escalation or de-escalation, depending on how the bids came in for the various parts of the construction of the system. However, before the agreement was signed there was an election in St. Thomas. A new mayor and a new council were elected, and they decided that they would not carry through on the commitment that had been made by the properly elected people who worked out the agreement.

Mr. Speaker, the next misleading statement that I want to correct is the statement that the member for Brant made when he said:

Now in order to force the city to accept an obviously bad deal, the Water Resources Commission stopped approving subdivision plans in St. Thomas in March 1967. This freeze on development was based on the commission's statement that the city was grossly polluting nearby Kettle Creek.

Our division of sanitary engineering advised the commission that it requires between 30 and 40 cubic feet per second of flow in Kettle Creek to avoid serious pollution. In 1967, flows of less than 30 cubic feet per second were recorded on 157 of the 326 days for which records are available. Flows of less than five cubic feet per second were recorded on 105 days, and for a period of 13 weeks starting on July 12, remained almost continuously below this value. For the information of the House, in 1968 the flow was below 30 cubic feet per second on 141 days, and flows of less than five cubic feet per second on 12 days.

Mr. Speaker, my only purpose in putting these figures in Hansard is to correct the misinformation that was supplied to the member for Brant. I am not suggesting that he deliberately misled the House but he was misinformed and he put on the record statements that were not related to fact. It is not the policy of the commission to try to slow down development. We are just as anxious as anyone in Ontario to see development take place, but we have a responsibility to the people who live below sewage treatment plants. This is a policy that has been used all over the province; in fact we work in very close co-operation with the planning branch of The Department of Municipal Affairs. When they ask us, "Have you ability to treat sewage?", we either say yes or no, depending on the circumstances. "Have you enough water to supply an area?", we say yes or no depending on the circumstances. It just happened that in the case of Kettle Creek we had to say no. There was not sufficient dilution water. The hon. member mentioned that we had released a number of lots in St. Thomas. Perhaps we were wrong, but we were led to believe that St. Thomas was ready to sign an agreement. Since we were just as anxious as anyone in Ontario to see development take place, we did withdraw our objections to the development of certain lots because we knew that if an agreement were signed, there would be water there before the houses could be built. We are just as anxious as anyone in Ontario to see development take place.

I note, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member's comment that there was some influence that made it possible for London to get water cheaper than St. Thomas. Mr. Speaker, the Lake Huron pipeline system extends some 30 miles, and there are nearly 200,000 people in the area that can be served from the line as well as the industries in the area. The Lake Erie system, on the other hand, is probably 10 or 11 miles long, with an extension on to the Ford plant, with probably 25,000 people and maybe even less, and the extension on to the Ford plant was not carried in the rate that was submitted to St. Thomas. My only reason for making these comments is the fact that the member for Brant suggested that there was some special influence in the London area. There has never been influence exerted on the commission to provide water at a reduced rate. Our term of reference is to provide water and sewage services at cost. One does not need to have a very advanced education to realize that with 200,000 people, with all the associated industry on a 30-mile pipeline, as against probably less than 25,000 people on a 10 or 11-mile pipeline, you are bound to come up with a different rate.

Now, Mr. Speaker, if there is any thought of equalizing the rates all over the province we would have to throw into the rate pool some of the very high cost rates of say $3.00 per thousand in the Red Lake area, subject to escalating or de-escalating costs, and there are other areas where the rates are very high. Our term of reference has been to sell water and sewage service at cost, and this is the term that we follow. I want to conclude my remarks with one or two very brief observations. I am sure that everyone is pleased that we have signed the agreement with the five municipalities in the southern part of Peel county. I am sure that this development will lead to tremendous development and expansion in that part of the province.

I am sure that if we sign agreements in the St. Thomas area and I understand that agreement in principle has been reached in the Grand Valley area, and in all parts of the province that pollution control and adequate supplies of water will similarly lead to development and expansion.

For the information of the House, let me advise that since the commission was established we have issued approval certificates for over $1,600 million worth of works, and of this amount, approximately $125 million is for industries that do not treat through municipal systems. And I want to put this in the record: most of our industry treats through the municipal system.

We have completed nearly 400 projects for municipalities, and at the present time there are some 300 projects of various types in the mill in various stages of development or construction.

Hon. members know that we hold public hearings when we are installing sewage works. This is one of my responsibilities. This is where I spend some of my time. It has been my privilege to sit on almost 100 public hearings in the last two years, with the largest percentage in 1968, nine public hearings having been held already in 1969. And I merely put these figures in the record to indicate the way our programme is developing and growing, a programme designed to create a healthy environment for future development and expansion in all parts of the province.

Mr. Speaker, I want to thank you and the hon. members of the House for the courtesy you have extended to me in listening to my remarks. Thank you.

Mr. E. Sargent: Mr. Speaker, I think I speak for our group, and I guess for all of the House, when I say that all of us have lost a very dear friend in Neil Olde. Neil, in the past six years, even though he was a very strong Tory, was a very close friend of mine, and he was such a real gentleman that I cannot express it today. But I want to say that every time my mother had a birthday, she got a card from Neil Olde. He did not have to do that, but he was built that way. I am proud to call him friend, and to thank the hon. Provincial Secretary for his nice gesture at the start of the proceedings today.

Mr. Speaker, having said that, I would like to say that on occasion you have established yourself as a friend of the underprivileged here. But on the whole, I personally believe you have worked diligently to make this House, as far as possible, a very cohesive useful instrument, in spite of the many pressures on all sides put on you.

I recall the day that the hon. Provincial

Treasurer threatened to take you aside and tell you the facts of life, and that day I admired your position when you told him off and told him to go peddle his papers, even though no one would buy them because they were so heavy with red ink.

I think that you have made, sir, a very distinctive contribution to this House, and as we have reached another milestone in the history of Ontario you have, through your experience, given us, on the whole, very good administration as Speaker of the House.

However, having said that, I do want to say that there is a censorship problem that we have concern about on this side of the House, regarding questions submitted to the Chair and the answers we are allowed to give. I think of the story about a fellow who was in the Korean war. He wrote back to his professor and said: "Because of censorship I cannot tell you where I am, but last night I shot a polar bear." The next letter he wrote to his professor said: "I cannot tell you where I am, but last night I danced with a hula girl." But the next letter he sent to the professor said: "I cannot tell you where I am, but the doctor says I should have danced with the polar bear and shot the hula girl."

Now, I feel that this expresses a story on censorship that may not go too well in Hansard, but it is apropos of the fact that we are concerned from time to time with the censorship you hand down.

And, while I am on my feet, before I launch into my remarks, I think last week we had a remark from the hon. member for High Park (Mr. Shulman). We have heard a lot about the alcoholic content of some members of the government benches, implying that they have a tight organization.

Now, I have always found the hon. Minister involved to be very able in his job. I have found him to be very fair and I think that this is a new low in the Legislature, when any member can take advantage of another with this type of ethics. There is not any one of us who has not a skeleton in his closet some place, and I think it ill behoves any one of us to take a low pot shot. There are many times when listening to that member speak could drive anyone to drink. I think there is no place in this Legislature, Mr. Speaker, for any man, in sport or politics, who hits below the belt.

The situation in Ontario today, Mr. Speaker, is that this province has been looted and drained of its financial resources and for the past two years our outgo has exceeded our income by over $1 million per day. So this is the reason why the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) and the hon. Treasurer (Mr. MacNaughton) go down with the bushel basket to Ottawa—to get them to bail Ontario out. And so the stage is set for this Parliament.

Now, Mr. Speaker, as I understand it, the Speech from the Throne is a course of action for the twenty-eighth Parliament, and referring back to the epistle read by his honour, the Lieutenant Governor, one sees that we have overtones of back slapping on the part of the government, and a warning from the federal government on the other side—unless, unless, unless.

If you will recall, Mr. Speaker, prior to this, when the Prime Minister and the Treasurer woke up one morning and found they were in a financial nightmare, to use their words, they threatened a tax on food and they threatened a tax on churches. So they tossed them out to the various Ministers and said: “Run this up the flagpole and see how the electorate go for this.”

Now, Mr. Speaker, there was not a chance of a snowball in hell of these taxes going into effect at any time, it was simply conditioning the people of Ontario of the serious plight that Ontario is in. But it seems, Mr. Speaker, that every time this government under this hon. Prime Minister, get into trouble, they soak the little guy. They go after things like sales tax, which hits everyone on every strata: gasoline, cigarettes, beer, even so far as our OMSIP premiums. Every time he gets in trouble, this is the route he travels—sock it to the small boy who can least afford it. And so collectively this group over here and the Treasury benches have galloped into this mess by playing ball with the big interests.

Oh, listen to the chuckles over here. Now you fellows will remember that we had a private bill come up about Union Gas and they were going to tax Union Gas and it was going to supply about $70 million of new tax revenue for municipalities through taxing Union Gas equipment on each locality. But what happened? This was going to cost the big boys a lot of money, here is a lush—

Hon. J. R. Simonett (Minister of Energy and Resources Management): When was that?

Mr. Sargent: A couple of years ago. If the Minister will think back, he will find it—he wants to hide that one. I was there.

Mr. L. C. Henderson (Lambton): What happened?

Mr. Sargent: What happened? I know what happened. The big boys from Bay Street were all sitting there, all the brass in the row was there, and so what happened? The bill, although it was almost unanimous, Mr. Speaker—

Hon. W. D. McKeough (Minister of Municipal Affairs): Whose bill was it?

Mr. Sargent: The Union Gas.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Sargent: It is starting to hurt to hear this. So what happened? I think somewhere along the line some of these boys came to see the Prime Minister and said, “This is going to cost us a lot of money, how about $1 million for your election pot? Let us call the bill off.” And the bill was pulled back and rescinded. This is what happened.

Now, today the honeymoon is over. The world junkets of the Prime Minister and the Treasurer and the Minister of Trade and Development (Mr. Randall) at public expense, stupid planning, flagrant waste, verging on corruption, all these things have come home to rest. Not having the political guts to admit a binge of reckless spending and all this waste, they have jockeyed themselves into a real corner, and now they try to take the offensive position that we are facing a financial nightmare.

Last June in this House one night I took about an hour to present this to the Provincial Treasurer. I charged all these things that the economists were saying, that insolvency was approaching Ontario, that they were in trouble. That jovial, happy wonder over there laughed and said we did not know what we were taking about, things were never in better shape. Two months later one morning we picked up the paper and the Prime Minister is quoted as saying “We are in a financial nightmare”. They realize that the roof has caved in.

Nothing has changed, but now we find out it is worse than we expected. Now we are going to sit here while you sweat for a while.

How bad is it? Well, let us see how bad it is, Mr. Speaker. Last year, the debenture debt, the gross debenture debt of this province, was $2,622,993,000. Today, the gross debenture debt of Ontario is $3,237,000,000, an increase of some $600 million in a 12-month period; a 20 per cent increase in debenture debt in 12 months. $600 million!

The interest on this my fellow sufferers over there, is about $1½ million per day.

The Prime Minister and the Provincial Treasurer and their families took a jaunt across the pond in the holiday season at our expense to raise some money.

They came back telling us they had a very successful deal; they raised some $60 million in German marks. Is that not the greatest deal you ever heard of? All this will do is pay the interest on our debt for 45 days, so here we have them, 45 days later, making another trip.

Mr. Speaker, we are talking in millions and billions, like Amos and Andy. To get it back to things you and I can measure, if any of you over there had an extra $1 million in cash and told your wife to go out and spend it on clothes at the rate of $1,000 a day, and not come back until she had spent it all, you would not see her for the next two years and nine months. But if you give her $1 billion and told her to go out and spend it at the rate of $1,000 a day, you would not see her for 2,739 years.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: It is a pity Walter Gordon did not have the benefit of the advice of the hon. member.

Mr. Sargent: He has had it.

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister of Correctional Services): I think he has.

Mr. Sargent: You are the greatest; you are No. 1 and No. 2 they tell me, I do not know. But the Provincial Treasurer was so right, too. He said, about eight months ago, that we were all crazy and he was right. Now you are the one who is saying we are crazy. See how good you are, because you are making a real job of your portfolio.

You can see why the Treasurer and the Prime Minister and all that Treasury bench should stay in politics because private business could not afford them.

Mr. J. E. Bullbrook (Sarnia): Talk about the tax rebate programme.

Mr. Sargent: And the taxpayers of Ontario cannot afford them either, I will tell you that.

But being objective, Mr. Speaker, what we do here is pointless unless we can relay or communicate—

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Especially now.

Mr. Sargent: It will not be because there is not too much up in the fourth estate here, I guess. These are all efforts in futility but some time it is going to wear through. We are talking about bringing in television into the House here, and the need or the chance to let the people know exactly what does go on. I am not suggesting that any of us are any TV images over here, but if the facts got through you could take a powder any time.

An hon. member: They would be blown out.

Mr. Sargent: We are grateful for the fact that the press is our only way of communicating to the people; the press, television and radio media.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: That is not what the member for Parkdale says.

Mr. Sargent: But we are concerned in our economy about the future of journalism, of what is happening in communications with people. We have progressively seen newspapers being corralled in the economy to the south of us. There are probably only three cities in New York, and Boston, Washington, Chicago, where there is more than one opinion. We have captive audiences progressively across this economy of ours. Fortunately, in Toronto, we are happy: we have three outlets for opinion.

But I say that there always will be room for newspapers. The technology is bound to change. It has not changed much in the past 200 years but soon, the superb team of the woodchopper, the newsprint maker, the reporter, the editor, the compositor and the press will not be prey to a flat tire on a truck or the newsboy's bad aim. The technology now says that the family's morning newspaper possibly may emerge from the household TV set or a facsimile machine that will soundly print the news of the day while you are asleep. It will be on your livingroom floor in the morning or be home on your doorstep when you get there in the evening.

However exotic the technology, Mr. Speaker, the reporters will always have to gather the news; separate the wheat from the chaff every blessed day. Editors will have the eternal task of separating that harvest, and those who live by the charmed life of commentators will rise and fall on their interpretation of what the news means.

There is perhaps only one achievement that computers will never be able to take over and that is the simple job of witnessing a happening and describing it swiftly, clearly and honestly.

How difficult that triple play can be; how warmly rewarding when it is realized. I spent but 15 to 20 years in the news business, not on the same level as the fourth estate here, but I think that they will all die in the business if they have the opportunity.

Where else can a man hope to build a bridge between himself and others every day? On what other field of endeavour, Mr. Speaker, is a competitor called upon to come up each day with words and thoughts not used the day before? Every time a reporter picks up a phone to call in a story or spins a fresh piece of paper into his typewriter, he shoots his roll, like a craps player going for broke.

So call it vanity; call it arrogant presumption—call it what you wish, but most of them would grope for the nearest open grave if they had no newspaper to work for, no need to search for and sometimes find a ringing word that just fits and no keen wonder what each unfolding day may bring. Besides, it is better than working for a living too.

But having a look at this situation in Queen's Park today, the mess the government is in . . . but before I get to some of the possible solutions, I would like to discuss some of our major problems. I would like to discuss a problem that is very important to myself and the member for Grey South (Mr. Winkler) regarding the arrogant powers of the Ontario Hospital Services Commission.

Now many times we have talked about the evils of government by commission and here we have, Mr. Speaker, a living example of the Frankenstein monster that is being created by the OHSC. Now yesterday the member for Grey South made reference to some changes in grants coming from Ottawa to Toronto insofar as hospitals are concerned.

He must have known he was on shaky ground. He did not flog it too much because he knows what is going on in his own home riding, by his colleagues in government.

The truth of the matter is, Ontario Hospital Services Commission has threatened to close down three hospitals: Chesley, Walkerton and Durham in favour of an area hospital in Hanover at a time when there is a great hospital bed shortage. Let me tell you about the arrogance of this OHSC and their dictatorial powers insofar as the people of Ontario are concerned.

Last fall, people from Chesley came to me and asked for a deputation with the Minister of Health (Mr. Dymond). He very kindly arranged to receive the deputation in his very lush offices. I had never seen them before and I was very much impressed and the doctor was most hospitable. This was prior to meeting the head of OHSC. For many years I have skied with him. He was a top surgeon up our way and was a tenant in my building. But now he is a big wheel in the OHSC—and he is really a big wheel, because he makes decisions.

He came before the meeting and said: Your being down here is a waste of time. I said: what do you mean, Wally? He said: Well, I think we are going to close the hospitals. I said: you have and he replied: Yes, I have, and my decisions stick.

I said: Who are you, God? He said: You are wasting your time, the decision is made. We had the mayor and the reeves and all these leading people and they had the newspaper there. We are sincere people as far as this hospital in Chesley is concerned.

The Minister gave us a good hearing while this OHSC head doctor looked on; looked out the window—was no help at all in the meeting. So next day in the House, I went across to the Minister and I said: What goes on? And he said: Believe me, these people have the power. I can do nothing about it. When they make the decision it sticks.

Now, here we have a very powerful body—the most powerful, moneywise I guess, outside of education in the province of Ontario. They are not responsible to the people. And they can make these decisions in Queen's Park affecting the lives of people all over the province. It is not healthy.

Now, that is your deputation story. But anyway, getting back to the things that are very important to us, in the area of Durham, in the member for Grey South's riding, they have a hospital built there in 1965, a beautiful hospital. And so the recommendation is to close that hospital. So we have a public meeting, and people who cannot get in are hanging from the ceiling of this school. Eric walks in with a pile of letters this high from all his constituents opposing this move. Now, he is as concerned as I am—and he fought a good fight. But I felt sorry for him that night, trying to bail this government out.

I guess that night he wished he had stayed in Ottawa. But, to make a long story short, I am not going to nail him because he is in a tough spot anyway.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Sargent: Well, I will tell you this, the member went up to that meeting—he was sweating blood that day—and told the people that "with the last breath of my life I will guarantee, and the Prime Minister will guarantee you, that we will never close a hospital in this area."

You put words in the Prime Minister's mouth and it is on record up there. You did a pretty good job, but they did not believe you. So we have it on record that this is not going to happen. Then last week, the people of Chesley were told that the hospital was going to be phased out of operation.

I think this is important in the interest of all of us—it could happen to any of you. I have the word of one of your Treasury bench. The Minister stopped me in the Royal York hotel and said: "Eddy, is it right, they are going to close my hospital. The corridors are full of beds in my hospital. But they are going to close us down."

He said the OHSC has too much power. This is happening in an area servicing 7,500 people and will affect thousands of people.

Let me show you, Mr. Speaker, how an arrogant group run by a commission can affect the lives of so many people.

Mr. Speaker: Unless the hon. member has a suitable place to adjourn in the next two or three minutes he perhaps might adjourn the debate at this time.

Mr. Sargent moves the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. R. S. Welch (Provincial Secretary): Mr. Speaker, we will continue with this debate tomorrow.

Hon. Mr. Welch moves the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to.

The House adjourned at 6.00 o'clock p.m.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

---

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 13, 1969

The House met at 2.30 o'clock, p.m.

Prayers.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, before we begin the business of this day I would like to say to the House, that it was with a great sense of sorrow that those of us who were in Ottawa yesterday learned of the death of our colleague, Neil Olde.

Neil is, of course, from my part of Ontario and an old, old friend. Prior to his entering this Legislature, he was one of those quiet but very effective men we seem to be able to produce from some of the smaller communities in our province. He went about his business in an unassuming way and yet, when one looked at the total of what he was able to accomplish over the years, one became aware of the fact that he was a very effective man indeed.

He served his country well in World War II, in the army. He maintained that connection into the years of peace. He entered this Legislature in the general election of 1963 and was re-elected in 1967.

He had been ill for some considerable time but even that does not make it any easier when a man of Neil's stature dies. He had been in bad health for some months.

So it is, with great sorrow, that we recognize his death and extend to his family our sincerest sympathy. He will be buried tomorrow afternoon at 3.00 o'clock in the cemetery in Melbourne, the town in which he lived and I propose, with the consent of the House, to move that the House not sit tomorrow so that those members who wish to attend his funeral will be free to do so.

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I was shocked and saddened to hear of Mr. Olde's death yesterday. We have all been aware of his valiant fight for life and health for more than a year and we were certainly glad indeed, when he was able to join us earlier in this session.

Many of us came to know Neil personally and very well as we served together on the select committee on conservation. There, I got the kind of appreciation for his abilities and humanity that the Premier has already referred to. He was a thoughtful person and yet, his involvement in his community and in many ways his high spirits showed through in the way he entered into his public responsibilities on that committee particularly, where I worked with him for many hours and in the way he was prepared to discuss many items.

We will miss him here in this House. I know he will be missed in his community and I want to join with the Premier in extending our condolences to Mrs. Olde and the family.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Mr. Speaker, as the Prime Minister indicated Neil Olde had been ill for quite some time. But earlier this session when he joined us once again I know we all rejoiced at the fact that he appeared to be on the road to recovery and therefore, the sudden notice of his death was all the more of a blow.

I know we will miss him, not only in those friendly exchanges on select committee visits and friendly greetings around the Legislature as well as that rather pleasant capacity of his to joke with you, and to indulge in friendly needling.

I would like to join with the Prime Minister and with the leader of the Opposition, in expressing our sympathy on the occasion of the bereavement, to Mrs. Olde and to other members of the family.

Mr. Speaker: This afternoon, our guests in the east gallery are from Listowel District High School in Listowel and from New Toronto Secondary School in New Toronto. Later this afternoon there will be guests in both galleries from Ridgetown College of Agricultural Technology in Ridgetown; and later, in both galleries, from Stamford Vocational Institute in Niagara Falls.

Petitions.

Clerk of the House: The following petitions have been received:

Of the corporation of the University of Windsor praying that an Act may pass modifying the composition and numbers of the board of governors and Senate; and for other purposes.

Mr. Speaker: Presenting reports.

Motions.

Hon. Mr. Robarts moves, seconded by Mr. Nixon, that, out of respect to the memory of the late member for Middlesex South, Neil Leverne Olde, whose funeral services will be held tomorrow, when this House adjourns today it do stand adjourned until 2.30 p.m. on Monday next.

Motion agreed to.

Introduction of bills.

THE PARTNERSHIPS REGISTRATION ACT

Hon. A. A. Wishart (Attorney General) moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend The Partnerships Registration Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I would mention, Mr. Speaker, the main purpose of this amending Act is to provide a central registry for partnerships that would, without doing away with the present system of registering by districts and counties in the registry office, but bring all the registrations into the Registry Office in Toronto so that one search there would ascertain the particulars of all partnerships.

THE COMMISSIONERS FOR TAKING AFFIDAVITS ACT

Hon. Mr. Wishart moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend The Commissioners for Taking Affidavits Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Speaker, this Act makes several small amendments enlarging the class of officials of municipalities who may take affidavits, defining their powers in that respect, making the ordinary commissioner of that nature not an officer of the court as the Act now provides, and some other small features which are set forth in the Act.

CONSOLIDATION AND REVISION OF THE STATUTES

Hon. Mr. Wishart moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to provide for the consolidation and revision of the statutes.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Speaker, this Act will provide for the consolidation and revision of the statutes to be known as Revised Statutes of Ontario (1970), replacing the present current revision RSO (1960) and bringing it up to date.

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the Attorney General would permit a question on that?

How much of the work involved in the revision of the statutes is it anticipated will be done by the civil service and how much will have to be farmed out?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I am very glad to answer, Mr. Speaker, and I am glad the question was asked.

We intended, and it is our intention, to have the work done by legislative counsel who are civil servants, but with this extension: If there had not been the many recommendations which we received in the matter of human rights, and the effect which they will have on so many of our statutes, we have felt that in order to review the statutes, and in the course of the revision, it would be wise to have someone who might go through the whole area. Not just the statutes from 1960—the annual statutes—but also the statutes RSO (1960) and do some annotations, some indexing, defining, and so on, of those areas which will be affected or are affected by the amendments we are bringing in—amendments which have been made, amendments which we would want to make—so that we would have a complete review of our statutes and where they would be touched by recommendation in the area of human rights, as well as those amendments we have carried out.

So we will be engaging, I think—I am not sure we have been able to make the complete arrangements—we want one person, a very knowledgeable, capable person, possibly someone who may have served with the commissioner in his study of human rights, to assist us perhaps for the year, or part of a year, in order to do that very essential and important work.

CONSOLIDATION AND REVISION OF THE REGULATIONS

Hon. Mr. Wishart moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to provide for the consolidation and revision of the regulations.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Speaker, this will do for the regulations what was done in the revision of the statutes—bringing all live, or living, regulations that are in existence up to date and consolidating them as Revised Statutes (1970).

THE SUMMARY CONVICTIONS ACT

Hon. Mr. Wishart moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend The Summary Convictions Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Speaker, this amendment will permit a warrant of committal for default in payment of a fine to be executed by a peace officer anywhere in Ontario, and arises out of a recommendation made by the Hon. Mr. McRuer.

THE CHANGE OF NAME ACT

Hon. Mr. Wishart moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend The Change of Name Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Speaker, my explanatory note indicates that the amendment will make available more reliable information necessary for amending vital statistics records in Ontario or other jurisdictions as a result of a change of name order. Particularly, I would say it will assist in getting statistics as to the place of birth and date of birth of the parties whose names are changed.

THE MATRIMONIAL CAUSE ACT

Hon. Mr. Wishart moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend The Matrimonial Cause Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: This amendment, Mr. Speaker, will provide that the disbursements of the Official Guardian in investigating and reporting on matters affecting children in a divorce action will be paid by the parties, and not by the province.

THE DESERTED WIVES AND CHILDREN MAINTENANCE ACT

Hon. Mr. Wishart moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend The Deserted Wives and Children Maintenance Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Speaker, this again arises from a recommendation in the report from the hon. Mr. McRuer. In that Act, the limit which a father may be ordered to pay for the maintenance of any child is $20 per week. This amendment will remove that ceiling and allow a judge to order larger amounts.

THE JURORS ACT

Hon. Mr. Wishart moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend The Jurors Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Speaker, the number of petty jurors fixed for the county of Carleton was 225. This would be enlarged for the area of Ottawa-Carleton, and this amendment will fix that number now at 350. That compares, I might say, with 800 in York county, 350 in Wentworth county and 225 in all other counties.

THE JUDICATURE ACT

Hon. Mr. Wishart moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend The Judicature Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: The amendment, Mr. Speaker, gives the Chief Justice of Ontario, instead of the Lieutenant-Governor-in-Council, the duty of fixing the date for the annual meeting of the Council of Judges of the Supreme Court.

Mr. Singer: What violent reform!

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Does the member want one with reform in it?

Mr. Singer: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Here it is.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE

Hon. Mr. Wishart moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act respecting The Department of Justice.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Speaker, the bill continues The Department of the Attorney General as The Department of Justice, and vests in the Minister of Justice and Attorney General, the functions set out in section 6 of the bill; functions which have heretofore been unwritten are made statutory as recommended by the Royal commission on civil rights.

THE FINES AND FORFEITURES ACT

Hon. Mr. Wishart moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend The Fines and Forfeitures Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Mr. Singer: The last two were a little better.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Speaker, this again arises from a recommendation of the Royal commission inquiry into civil rights. It prohibits the payment of any portion of a fine to persons who act as informers or prosecutors, the duty being left to the Crown, and removes reward to any private person who informs or prosecutes.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, on that bill I wonder if the Attorney General could advise whether it would be necessary to amend statutes that have that kind of provision now? For instance, The Elections Act presently has numerous provisions along that line. I am sure there are several others. I think there are some in The Municipal Act and probably several other statutes.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: My opinion, Mr. Speaker, is that this amendment will cover any of those statutes where reward is offered for informing or carrying through to prosecution. That reward will not now be available to the informer or prosecutor.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. Minister of Agriculture has a statement.

Hon. W. A. Stewart (Minister of Agriculture and Food): Mr. Speaker, I would ask your permission to make a statement at this time that carries with it considerable significance to Ontario farmers.

The recently received report of the special committee on farm income noted a number of problems associated with the provision of a comprehensive farm credit programme in Ontario, and called for a "bold new approach to farm lending."

Among other things, the committee noted that there was in fact, a duplication of effort in the provision of first mortgage money in Ontario with two Crown agencies, the Ontario Junior Farmer Establishment Loan Corporation appearing to be in competition with the federal government's Farm Credit Corporation. The committee made a number of recommendations in this regard and prominent among these was the recommendation that a federal-provincial farm credit bank be established. Implicit in these recommendations were the provisos that:

(a) farm credit should be made available bearing interest rates comparable to non-agricultural areas, and

(b) much greater emphasis should be placed on credit counselling and farm management in order that the risks and uncertainties of lending and borrowing might be reduced.

It is true, there has been a measure of duplication of effort in the farm mortgage field in Ontario. The federal government has for many years been involved in the provision of first mortgage funds as a matter of national agricultural policy. In 1952, in order to provide encouragement for young Ontario farmers who could not acquire mortgage loans under the Canada Farm Loan Board, this Legislature passed The Ontario Junior Farmer Establishment Loans Act, and we became involved in the provision of long-term credit.

When the government of Canada reorganized its farm credit policy, and passed The Farm Credit Act in 1959, there appeared to be no further justification for provincial participation in the field, and in 1960 the government of Ontario withdrew from the field. However, within a few years it became clear there was still an area not being fully serviced by the Farm Credit Corporation at that time, and in 1962 the province re-enacted the junior farmer loans programme to assist young men who wished to establish themselves either on the family farm or as a member of a family farm business.

In recent years the two agencies have performed a useful service, operating side by side in the credit field. But during those years the Farm Credit Corporation has been given much broader scope. Their plan has been considerably improved, increasing the maximum limits of loans, and providing for new conditions. These amendments have in large measure cleared the way for all farmers to qualify for credit through the Farm Credit Corporation on the same basis as that provided through junior farmer loans.

During the discussions on farm credit at the recent Ontario conference on agriculture, there was considerable interest in and a great deal of unanimity for the committee's recommendations regarding the establishment of a single farm credit agency for all Ontario farmers. Recognizing this, we have pursued the matter.

On January 31, senior representatives of The Ontario Department of Agriculture and Food accompanied me to Ottawa for a very worthwhile discussion with Hon. H. A. Olson, federal Minister of Agriculture, and senior members of his staff. The matter of farm credit and the recommendations of the special committee on farm income in this regard were thoroughly discussed at this meeting.

On the basis of these discussions with Mr. Olson, and his staff, there was agreement that no useful purpose was being served by the duplications of services now being provided by the federal and provincial lending agencies.

It has been decided that the government of Ontario withdraw from the farm mortgage loan field. We are satisfied that the mortgage money needs of Ontario farmers can be filled by the Farm Credit Corporation, and that the special circumstances that generated the implementation of the junior farmer loan programme in this province no longer exist.

Therefore, with some reluctance, but with full confidence, I wish to advise that effective this date, no further loans will be made to Ontario farmers under the authority of The Ontario Junior Farmer Establishment Loans Act. Any applications received by the board up to this date will be honoured and processed in the normal manner.

It is our intention to maintain sufficient staff to service those loans which are still outstanding. While we believe that junior farmer loans have provided a useful service to Ontario farmers, the time has come when efficiency dictates that duplication of service like this should be eliminated.

Much of our discussion with the federal officials centred on the provision of improved services to farmers in Ontario in the future. We have adopted the position that while the provision of long-term credit for farmers can best be served by the federal agency, the provision of a number of important and closely associated professional services is a provincial responsibility and we intend to expand our facilities in these fields.

It is the intention of The Ontario Department of Agriculture and Food to substantially expand our staff in the fields of credit counselling, farm management and professional advisory services associated with farm adjustment. We intend to allocate greater resources for the provision of improved farm accounting service, and to place increased emphasis on the need for modern accounting methods on our commercial farms.

This is a logical development, and one that falls within the provincial jurisdiction. We are continuing to discuss these matters with our counterparts in Ottawa in order that this new development in federal-provincial relations will provide more efficient service to the farmer-borrower in Ontario.

Mr. Speaker, at the appropriate time I shall be making formal representation for budgetary consideration as necessary to carry out these new responsibilities.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, might I ask a question of the Minister as a point of clarification? I presume that the Minister is willing to answer.

The result of his statement will be really that the credit available to young farmers will rise in cost from five per cent to 7.75 per cent; would he agree with that?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Well, it will be what the farm credit rate is and I cannot say for sure that is what it is.

Mr. Nixon: I believe it is 7.75 per cent, and I understand that the Legislature has approved a programme and the expenditure of funds that would make it available at five per cent, and I regret very much the announcement that this —

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Mr. M. Makarchuk (Brantford): Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the hon. Minister of Agriculture and Food.

Mr. Speaker: On this statement?

Mr. Makarchuk: On this statement.

Mr. Speaker: Well, if it is for clarification of the statement, it is permissible.

Mr. Makarchuk: Could the Minister indicate what assurance he has received from the federal authorities that Ontario farmers will continue to be served, or will be able to get adequate loans?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: They have every assurance that the Farm Credit Corporation will provide money to any who qualify under their criteria for a loan — no problem there.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice has a statement.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Speaker, before the Orders of the Day, I wish to advise the hon. members that the Lieutenant-Governor-in-Council today appointed the hon. Mr. Justice Donald A. Keith to inquire into certain circumstances respecting the conduct of provincial Judge Lucien C. Kurata. Mr. Justice Keith will conduct the inquiry pursuant to the provisions of section 4 of The Provincial Courts Act, 1968. Mr. Gordon Ford, Q.C., has been appointed as counsel to the inquiry.

In view of some publicity which has been attendant upon the circumstances, Mr. Speaker, I should advise this House that the information which has led to this inquiry was given to me last fall. I thereupon submitted it to the judicial council under the authority of section 8 of the statute which this Legislature enacted last year. On January 28, 1969, the judicial council, after inquiry, recommended to the Lieutenant Governor that a public inquiry be held in the manner which I have already indicated.

In view of the suggestions that have been made that criminal charges should be laid, I wish to advise the House, Mr. Speaker, that in the opinion of my advisers there is not at this time sufficient evidence to warrant the laying of criminal charges. There is, however, sufficient evidence to warrant the inquiry recommended by the judicial council, which has now been undertaken and which shall continue in the interests of the public and the administration of justice.

I am sure the hon. members will understand, Mr. Speaker, that I may not discuss the facts relative to the inquiry and that any further comment should await the report of Mr. Justice Keith.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I might ask the Attorney General, by way of clarification: would it be correct to interpret his comment that if there were adequate evidence to warrant criminal charges, in any case at all of this nature, that the government would do so, and in effect skip the step that has been set forth in this Act?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I would not want to say in every case. If one had the opinion that a criminal charge could be made and carried to a successful prosecution—if one had a very strong feeling that that would result—I think we would move to prosecute for criminal conduct.

But there are many cases, of course, where one may have the feeling that a charge should be laid, but that the outcome is doubtful. I would not say that in every such case that one would then move, to prosecute because the opinion that it would sustain a criminal charge and be a successful prosecution could be open to doubt.

In such a case I think it would perhaps be very wise to follow the provisions of The Provincial Judges Act which provides for an inquiry by the judicial council, in camera. Then, on the finding of the—if they should recommend a public inquiry, which undoubtedly would probably follow in the case that the hon. member suggests—then the public inquiry might very well intimate, or even direct, or recommend, that criminal charges should follow. In any case, The Department of the Attorney General would be free, upon having the public inquiry, to pursue it further by way of criminal charge.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. leader of the Opposition has a question.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Premier. With the results of the federal-provincial conference in mind, is the Premier giving further consideration to convening a Confederation of Tomorrow Conference, as requested by Premier Weir of Manitoba?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, no; although as you no doubt know, while I was away Mr. Weir wrote to me in this regard and I answered his letter. I have had no approach to reconvene the conference from any other Premiers.

If you will recall, when the Confederation of Tomorrow Conference ended, we established a committee of four Premiers to decide what the future of the conference might be. Now, two of those Premiers are gone. Mr. Manning has retired, and Mr. Johnson of Quebec has since died. I was asked this question at a press conference yesterday afternoon and my answer was that the Confederation of Tomorrow Conference was called originally because we did not think there was enough action being taken to face some of the constitutional problems that faced the country. I think it would be fair to say that the Confederation of Tomorrow Conference stimulated the conference of a year ago and stimulated the conference that was completed yesterday. In other words, I am inclined to doubt that either of these conferences would have been held in the form in which they were held, had it not been for the Confederation of Tomorrow Conference. I think this is just a matter of fact. It is nothing more than that.

As long as these matters are being dealt with, it is my own opinion that the need for the Confederation of Tomorrow Conference is being shown in this other way. If at some time there are some matters that are of concern to the provinces alone, the machinery stands ready to be used as the provinces choose to use it. But it is my own personal opinion that, particularly in view of the fact that it was indicated yesterday that we may, and undoubtedly will, be meeting more frequently than we have in the past, it may be that the need for the Confederation of Tomorrow Conference no longer exists.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, I am always amazed at the Premier's modesty. It is almost as great as that of the Attorney General who is claiming that his programmes were the best in the world. Really, I was just struck down with the modesty of the Premier's position.

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister of Correctional Services): The member should be proud of that.

Mr. Nixon: And only those seals presently in action would agree.

But, as a supplementary question, I wonder if the Premier would agree with me that the one thing different about the conference that he convened is that, in fact, at that conference he does speak for the people of Ontario, but at the federal-provincial conference he cannot presume to do so alone. Is there some significance in the difference in that machinery?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Well, there is nobody else up there speaking for Ontario.

Mr. Nixon: I do not consider that a rhetorical question, because, Mr. Speaker, I would say—if I could recall it to your mind—I am sure that you heard the Premier of Ontario say this in the presence of the Prime Minister of Canada, that he speaks for the people of Ontario.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. leader of the Opposition has asked a question; now he might give the hon. Prime Minister the opportunity of either not answering it, or answering it.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: I have heard this argument made. I think it is a specious argument, and I do not choose to enter into a debate; we may have a chance to do that later. But it is a completely specious argument. Certainly the Prime Minister of Canada speaks for the people of Ontario within his own jurisdiction. I feel that I must discharge my responsibilities, I must speak for them, too, in the areas in which we have our Constitution. Now, what is so difficult about this?

Mr. Nixon: But in Medicare he shares it.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Well, that is a good question, but I do not know that this is the place to debate it. However, I want to put a point of view that I think is held by the people of this province.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, if the Premier, and I put this to him as a question, in fact believes he does not share the responsibility for Medicare but has it all himself, then why is he not making an application to the court—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. leader of the Opposition's question is not now supplementary to his original question. It is supplementary to his supplementary question, and therefore it is out of order.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, under your direction, I would pass on to a second question for the Premier. Can the Premier give the House more information on his threatened cutback in expenditures relating to Ontario Hydro, which he raised twice at the federal-provincial conference?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, perhaps you could take from my remarks that interpretation which is implicit in this question. I did not intend it that way. I had no particular item in mind. What I did say—and I might mention I was not reading from a text—was that among other programmes this government has, is the responsibility for providing power, and of course, it is providing power. We are deeply involved with Hydro, for instance, in the development of nuclear power in the province, and if we are to have wholesale cutbacks across the province I think it will be necessary to look at all the areas in which we are presently spending money.

It was in that context I made the comments, and frankly I am not going to justify them in this House in answer to a question such as this. I have explained it. I made it, as the hon. member for Sudbury (Mr. Sopha) is fast to point out, on television, and all the people of the province heard it, and I will stand by it.

Mr. Nixon: If I might ask a supplementary question that is more specific. Was he, in fact, referring to the $30 million head office programme at the corner of College and University? That is the one justifiable cutback the government could make in Hydro; I do not know of any others.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: I am surprised I did not really twig what was behind this question, because the hon. member was at this subject earlier in the session. It was a real oversight on my part, I did not really see deeply enough behind the question. I did not see what he was really after, and I would simply say that expenditure, if it is to be made or not to be made, is a question for Hydro and not one in which this government would share.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, my next question deals with Hydro, and I might say that any suggestion that we do not provide the funds for the development of power in this province is really incomprehensible, and in fact, irresponsible, and I would like to—

Mr. Speaker: Order, order!

Mr. Nixon: I would like to ask the Minister of Energy and Resources Management, does the fact that the Canadian heavy water plant in Nova Scotia cannot produce a product of sufficient quality for service in an atomic reactor, have any effect on the scheduled power production from the Pickering electric development?

Hon. J. R. Simonett (Minister of Energy and Resources Management): Mr. Speaker, I was unable to get an answer from Hydro before I came to the House, but as I understand it, it will not affect the plant at Pickering.

Mr. Nixon: Then there will be sufficient supplies of heavy water to bring Pickering on line as scheduled?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: I understand that.

Mr. Nixon: I wonder if I might ask the hon. Minister, Mr. Speaker, if he answered my question from last Friday during my absence, about the cost of imported power.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Mr. Speaker, I cannot recall any question last Friday from the member on the cost of imported power.

Mr. Nixon: It was last week, either Thursday or Friday. I asked the Minister for the cost of the importation of power during December, 1968, and January, 1969. He said he would get the figures going back 25 years, as I recall.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Yes, that was last Thursday, Mr. Speaker, and I might say I have not received the figures as yet. As the member knows, they have a problem in their office this week. They are running on a skeleton staff and I would think they would have to wait until they have a full staff back before we can get the figures that the member requested.

Mr. Nixon: If the Minister will recall, I just want them for December and January.

If he insists on going back 25 years we will look at those with interest, but I am not insisting.

I have a question for the Minister of Education, Mr. Speaker, if this is a convenient time to put it. Has the Minister had any meetings with Lloyd Dennis, co-author of the Hall-Dennis report, since June, 1968? Will the Minister be acting on this report in 1969? Will further advice be sought by the department from Mr. Dennis?

Hon. W. G. Davis (Minister of Education): Mr. Speaker, the member for Peterborough, I think, has a similar question. I might answer both at the same time.

Mr. Speaker: It might be well to depart from our order and have that placed now.

Mr. W. G. Pitman (Peterborough): Mr. Speaker, a question to the Minister of Education.

Would the Minister clarify his position on the Hall-Dennis report, in view of the remarks made by the co-chairman of the committee as quoted in yesterday's Toronto Daily Star and Telegram that he might be studiously staying away from the implications of the document?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, hopefully to clarify this once and for all, the first point that must be made, because some members of the committee have reminded me of this on occasion, is that Mr. Dennis was not the co-author, as pointed out by the member for Peterborough; he was the co-chairman. In other words there were several members of the committee that prepared the report. Mr. Justice Hall was initially the sole chairman, and because of matters of health, Mr. Dennis moved in to give him some assistance.

Mr. Nixon: The Minister is not suggesting he wrote it himself?

Hon. Mr. Davis: No, in fact it is really somewhat amusing, Mr. Speaker, because as I travel about the province and discuss this report with people on an informal basis, those who are very enthusiastic about it suggest that because we have not implemented all 256 recommendations to date, that we are opposed. Those who are opposed to the report quietly suggest that we had a hand in writing it. Of course, neither position is correct. Mr. Dennis was asked to—

Mr. Pitman: Mr. Speaker, I did not say co-author, as the Minister suggested. I said co-chairman.

Hon. Mr. Davis: No, I think it was the leader of the Opposition who said co-author.

As I recall the situation, Mr. Speaker, after Mr. Dennis and his colleagues finished the report I requested Mr. Dennis to remain in the department—and I cannot tell you the specific terms of his contract—with the understanding that he would for a period of time. It was initially to be March 31, 1969; subsequently we extended it at his request to the end of April. That part of his task would be to explain the report to the public generally, particularly to those who had a specific interest, such as the teachers, the ratepayers' associations, and what have you.

Over the past few months, Mr. Speaker, I think Mr. Dennis has done a commendable job in acquainting the public generally, and those with specific interests, with the report, and I wish to give him full credit for doing so.

During this period of time, and when discussing it with him as recently as about one o'clock this afternoon, the understanding has been—and I think it is relevant—that I personally have not said that we will implement all 256 recommendations. If I had said this last September or October, what purpose would there be in having the discussion with the profession, with the public generally, because quite obviously the whole concept of the report involves an understanding by the public and by the teaching profession if it is to be effective.

As I understand it from Mr. Dennis, this is also his understanding. As to the question from the member for Peterborough, that we have been studiously avoiding the implications, we are really pursuing the policy suggested by both the leader of the Opposition and the member for Peterborough.

As I recall, about a year ago now when we were debating the implementation of the county school areas, it was suggested to the Minister of Education that on something as significant as this, we should have some dialogue with the people concerned; let us involve those who are directly affected, and this, of course, Mr. Speaker, is what we are attempting to do. The department is studying this and has been very careful. There are certain real significant economic implications apart from the educational that must be assessed.

We are co-operating with the Ontario Teachers' Federation who, over the next, I believe, three to four months, will be having one day seminars within the county areas for the teaching profession, related specifically to the Hall-Dennis report. In fact, we are preparing certain visual aids to help them in their presentation.

Mr. Speaker, I think one really must accept the fact that with a report of this significance, with its complexities, it will take a period of time, (a) for understanding, (b) for some indication as to those areas that will be specifically implemented.

And I would anticipate that during the estimates of the department and during committee hearings that we can get into some of the specifics that have been, of course, detailed in the report.

There is one very relevant aspect of the report that has been implemented, actually prior to the report itself, which is really very basic to a lot of the philosophy in the mechanics of introducing many other aspects of the report. That was the introduction of the county school or divisional board system which enabled much of the report that is being suggested to be carried into effect.

I hope it is very clearly understood, because as I am personally concerned — I said this at the time the report was received — that it is, in my view, one of the most significant educational documents that has been prepared in this province. At the same time I indicated — I hope very clearly — it needed a great deal of intensive study.

There is not unanimity; there never will be on a report of this kind. I am sure even some of the members opposite are not in complete agreement with all aspects of the report. These things must be discussed by the public and by the profession and this position is, with respect, Mr. Speaker, a very valid one.

Mr. Pitman: May I ask a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker?

In view of the fact that the Dennis report was mentioned in the Speech from the Throne, and there were indications that legislation would be provided for this Legislature to consider, I wonder if the Minister could indicate what particular areas he feels it is necessary to move ahead with at this present time?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I do not recall the exact wording in the Speech from the Throne. I think there was reference to the Hall-Dennis report, the fact that we would be discussing it, and there may be some aspects of the Hall-Dennis report that will be referred to by way of policies that will not necessarily involve themselves in legislation per se.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, on a point of privilege, if you will permit, the Minister of Revenue (Mr. White), has drawn to my attention an article in the London Free Press, printed on February 12, by a Mr. Gerry Toner, in which he leaves a misrepresentation that I believe is serious enough to correct.

I quote from the third last paragraph of his interesting article in which he said:

Mr. Nixon would water down conflict of interest legislation so drastically it might well be abandoned.

I hope, sir, that both you and the Minister of Revenue would assist me in perhaps educating Mr. Toner to the fact that the recommendation that I put forward in that very fine visit to London was the specific recommendation on conflict of interest that was entered into unanimously by the select committee on The Municipal Act and related Acts reporting in 1965. It may well be that the new Minister of the Crown, as well as Mr. Toner, are perhaps misinformed on that important matter.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. leader of the Opposition has a question which in my files has not been asked of or answered by the Premier with respect to financial assistance to municipalities in connection with telephone briefs.

Mr. Nixon: Yes, if I might put the question to the Premier now.

Does the government intend to provide financial assistance to the municipalities preparing briefs in opposition to the Bell Telephone application for a rate increase?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Apparently there has been some consideration, but no decision made.

Mr. Nixon: When he says, "apparently some consideration," does he mean there is presently some consideration?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Yes.

Mr. Nixon: Am I correct in the information that has been given to —

Hon. Mr. Robarts: It has been suggested that we might. What I am saying is no decision has been made.

Mr. Nixon: Am I correct in the information I have received that when the last application by Bell Telephone was put before the federal board, the government of Ontario did in fact assist the municipalities to the extent of $18,000 in the preparation of that brief?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, reaching back into my memory I believe there was some such arrangement and we paid a part of it on some basis that we were represented in that group as well. I do not recall the details.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Sudbury.

Mr. E. W. Sopha (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, I have a question — which returns us to the Ottawa conference — to the Prime Minister from one of the viewers he said he was speaking to. It is in three parts.

1. Upon what set of facts or other considerations does the Prime Minister contend that the people of Ontario are opposed to participation in the national Medicare scheme?

2. Would the Prime Minister inform the House of the intentions of the government concerning the participation, or otherwise, in the national Medicare scheme?

3. If the government does not intend to participate in the scheme, is the Prime Minister prepared to let the people of Ontario indicate their preference by such a device as the taking of a referendum on the question?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, to start with the first question, I suppose my opinion in this matter is based upon the facts that are open to anybody in this particular line of endeavour. I get mail, I read newspapers, I talk to people. There are a whole host of areas in which one receives information.

I might say that one of the things that led me to believe that this might be the case was that in the election of 1967, the position of this government was very firmly known, but the matter was not raised by either of the Opposition parties to any great extent that I can remember. It was an issue that distinctly was never mentioned. This strengthened my belief that the position of the government was one that was accepted.

On the second part of the question, Mr. Speaker, I asked the formal question at the conference but have not yet received a formal answer. Until I do it would be impossible to even comment on the second or third questions.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Sandwich-Riverside has a question of the Prime Minister from last week, in connection with anti-ballistic missiles.

Mr. F. A. Burr (Sandwich-Riverside): A question of the Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker.

Can the Prime Minister assure the Legislature that the United States government will not establish any anti-ballistic missile sites near the Ontario border in general, and near large Ontario cities such as Windsor in particular?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, I could give no such assurance. Frankly, I am not privy to the decisions the government of the United States might make in reference to the defence of its own territory.

Mr. J. L. Brown (Beaches-Woodbine): He speaks as Premier of Ontario.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: I do my best.

An hon. member: That is not good enough.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: There is a—

Mr. Sopha: Even if he does mistake their beliefs.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: There is a second part to the question, Mr. Speaker, perhaps the hon.—

Mr. Burr: Yes, I am sorry. I should have read that at the same time.

Is the Prime Minister satisfied that effective machinery exists either directly between the Ontario and United States governments, or through the Canadian government, to ensure that the Ontario government is kept informed on a continuing basis of any developments in this matter?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Once again, Mr. Speaker, I would have to say that we have no direct hot-line between the government of the province of Ontario and the Pentagon or the White House. As to whether I am satisfied that effective machinery exists through the Canadian government I would have to say that I am. I think the federal government is quite competent to look after our interests in this matter. There is a lot of consultation that we all know about, and joint participation between the government of the United States and the government of Canada, so my answer to the second question would be that I am satisfied. But I might say that the federal government does not keep us informed on a continuing basis as to what developments it may be dealing with in the area of defence.

Mr. Burr: Mr. Speaker, a supplementary question. Does the Prime Minister not feel that his weight would be helpful in letting the federal government know of his concern for the people of Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, until I received this question I was not aware that the government of the United States was considering the establishment of anti-ballistic missile sites. I am quite certain if I were to approach the federal government they would give me what information I require.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Kent has a question of the Prime Minister from last week.

Mr. J. P. Spence (Kent): Mr. Speaker, is it the intention of the government that standing committees of this Legislature shall deal only with matters referred to the committee by the Legislature? If so, does this not contradict previous observations by the Premier on functions of such committees? And if not, will the Premier clearly reiterate his view that the committees might exercise initiatives in their own right, for the benefit of the officers of this assembly who may be taking a narrower view of this role?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, I might say at the outset, in answer to the question, I have said nothing about standing committees that I did not mean and I do not want their functions to be limited. I have gone into this very briefly in the time at my disposal since I saw the question late this morning, and there are certain matters that are referred to the committees which they must deal with. This does not prevent them from exercising their own initiative.

On the other hand, in a strictly legalistic way, unless something is referred to them by this Legislature, then there is no basis upon which they might report back to this Legislature although they might do many things for their own edification. I propose to go into this question quite carefully. It involves several procedural matters that are not embodied in the question itself. I propose to go into this with the Clerk of the House and with the Speaker, in order that we may clarify the situation.

But I will go back to my opening remark: It is my personal wish that these committees have as much freedom to function as is possible, but you can well understand that they are only extensions of this Legislature and what they are doing should in fact be approved and have the benediction and blessing of the Legislature itself.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Grey-Bruce has two questions; one of the Prime Minister—one of the Premier. Perhaps he would place them.

Mr. E. Sargent (Grey-Bruce): Question to the—

An hon. member: Is that other fellow over there, too?

Mr. Sargent: These are kind of juxtapositioned here. The one I wanted to ask the Premier has been given to nuclear energy—

Mr. Speaker: The one addressed to nuclear energy was withdrawn by the member's office.

Mr. Sargent: Will the Premier of Ontario—not the Prime Minister, the Premier of Ontario—advise the House how Ontario Hydro was able to borrow $75 million on the New York market last week, and the Premier and the hon. Treasurer (Mr. MacNaughton) take a trip to Germany to borrow $60 million? What goes on?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member might be interested to know that in the continuing debates about whether it is the Premier or Prime Minister, I was reading an English newspaper the other day and in the opening paragraph of one story, the Prime Minister of the United Kingdom was referred to as Premier and Prime Minister in the same paragraph in the same story. So apparently these terms are interchangeable in jurisdictions other than Ontario. I hope some day we will be able to put this whole thing to bed because it has lost—

Mr. Singer: We will call him "King".

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Joey Smallwood says it should be "Emperor", but—

Mr. Nixon: I thought it had been settled—

Hon. Mr. Robarts: There was no settlement I ever agreed to among others.

Now, sir, to go to this question. There is only one comment I will make. The loan that we negotiated in Europe is about to be finalized, and when it is, I will be happy to make a complete report to the House about it, because I detect some misconceptions among the members of the House as well as among the public.

However, the question itself says the government is "forced" to go to Germany. May I make it very clear that we are not forced to go any place. We could have obtained what we needed elsewhere but we go where we get the—

Mr. Sargent: It is a good time for a holiday.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: We go where we get the best deal for the people of Ontario, and in due course I hope to be able to make this statistically clear.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Speaker, a supplementary. He did not answer the question at all.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: The member will get his answer in a few days.

Mr. Sargent: He does not know the answer then?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Yes, I do.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member has another question.

Mr. Sargent: Oh, this is ridiculous.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Well, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Sargent: He does not know the answer—

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, maybe I did not make myself clear. I will get this down into the simplest terms I can.

An hon. member: So the member can understand it!

Hon. Mr. Robarts: The agreement under which this money will be borrowed has not yet been signed. Therefore, it would be premature for me to answer this question. The transaction will be completed in the very near future, and at that time I will be very happy to come in here and clear up some of the member's misconceptions.

Mr. Sargent: Thank you, Mr. Premier. Question to the—

Mr. Speaker: Sorry, the question has been redirected to the Prime Minister by—

Mr. Sargent: Second section?

Mr. Speaker: Yes, at the request of the member.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Speaker, in view of the plans for a programme to the extent of $413 million this year for Hydro, will the Minister explain: (1) why it is necessary to sign a letter of intent with Hydro Quebec from 1971 to 1977 at a cost of over $95.5 million; and (2) how many other power corporations are we presently contracted with to supply us with power?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, it is not an unusual arrangement at all for Hydro to enter into an agreement with Hydro Quebec. This whole thing is dependent upon Churchill Falls in Labrador coming into production. When it comes into production, Hydro Quebec will have surplus power. We can buy—when I say we, I mean Ontario Hydro—can buy that power from Hydro Quebec at a price that is about the equivalent of the cost of production here. As long as that surplus exists in Hydro Quebec, then, of course, Ontario Hydro is not faced with the necessity of making the capital investment to produce an equivalent amount of power in this province. So it permits Ontario Hydro to postpone some very large capital outlays, while we assist our sister province to use up the power that in fact will be flowing from a great project in Labrador which belongs to that poor little man in Newfoundland, when it does come into production.

That is why these arrangements are not unusual. Hydro informs us that it has a firm power agreement with Quebec Power Commission, Ottawa Valley Power Commission, and Great Lakes Power Commission Limited. Those, I believe, cover specific contracts. In the supply of hydro-electric power in North America, I think that sometimes it would be fair to say Ontario power ends up as far south as Florida. The systems are interconnected because of their power requirements. This agreement also covers situations, for instance, where it will only be available in a peak period in one jurisdiction when one other jurisdiction may not need all the power. The whole purpose of these agreements is really to share all the power that is produced over a very large area on the most economic basis. With the development of various power grids throughout the United States and North America, every year it becomes more possible to tie together more grids, and thus, in the overall picture, to get a much more efficient use of the total power supplies of a very large area. That is really the purpose of this agreement. It is a long-term project.

The power requirements are increasing in this province at a rate of about 10 per cent a year. It means that in the ten years between now and 1979 we will have to reproduce everything we presently have. Any methods that Hydro can find to spread this cost and to make it less costly, they will use. This is one of the ways to start.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Hamilton East has a question of the Minister of Social and Family Services.

Mr. R. Gisborn (Hamilton East): Yes, Mr. Speaker, my question to the Minister is:

Why was the decision made to cease construction of the home for the aged, Dorchester Manor, at Niagara Falls? Will the Minister reconsider the situation and recommend construction as soon as possible?

Hon. J. Yaremko (Minister of Social and Family Services): Mr. Speaker, to begin with I think I should point out to the hon. member that Dorchester Manor is a proposed rest home, not a home for the aged. I must also say that the hon. members for Welland (Mr. Morningstar) and Niagara Falls (Mr. Bukator) have been in continuous touch with me with regard to this matter by way of correspondence and by delegation.

Construction was not made to cease. The home was only in the planning stage and approval to proceed at this time had not been granted.

The decision results from the review of capital spending being undertaken by the department. This project continues to be a part of that review.

I might add that the county of Welland will open, on February 28, a 90-bed rest home in Port Colborne. My department assisted financially in the building of this home, which we trust will provide a beneficial service to the people of this county.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Wentworth has a question for the Treasurer.

Mr. I. Deans (Wentworth): Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps we will have the Treasurer in his seat in a minute.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, to the Treasurer: Does the Treasurer agree with the statement of the chairman of the civil service commission as quoted in the Toronto Daily Star, February 12, 1969, namely: "That no employee"—and it should be of the province—"on stand-by is required to be at his place of work."? If so, should this policy be applied to relief supervisors of detention and observation homes, thus leaving the children in such homes completely unattended during the stand-by period?

Hon. C. S. MacNaughton (Treasurer): Mr. Speaker, I think I can best answer the hon. member's question by making reference to the regulations governing stand-by time. These are established under The Public Service Act, regulation No. 11, and stand-by is defined as follows:

Stand-by time means a period of time that is not a regular working period, during which a public servant, on written instructions from an official of a department, keeps himself available for recall to work.

An employee on stand-by must be in a location where he can be reached immediately, and which permits him to reach his place of employment promptly when called. When on stand-by, of course, he is not actually working. As for the second part of the question, I understand the particular situation about which the hon. member may be concerned no longer exists. But for specific information concerning the institutions he made reference to, I would suggest that he direct his question to the appropriate Minister. I think in this instance, it is the Minister of Correctional Services.

Mr. Deans: May I ask a supplementary question related to the Minister's answer?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Yes.

Mr. Deans: He said that the particular instance that I am referring to no longer exists. Could I take from that then that the people involved have been paid the full amount that was owing to them?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: I would say that if the situation warranted full payment, yes, of course, that would be the case. As a matter of fact, if they were called off stand-by time where they received less than full pay, they are entitled to time and a half. They get paid at time and a half if they are called off stand-by time.

Mr. Deans: May I ask one more question? Is the Minister aware that these were the only people in the building? There was no supervisor. They were the only people in the building, other than the children, and they were claimed to be on stand-by.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: No, Mr. Speaker. My answer to that would have to be no. It was at that point that I suggest the member might refer to the Minister who would have knowledge of the situation—I think, in this instance, my colleague, the Minister of Correctional Services (Mr. Grossman). I think it is the Minister of Correctional Services with respect to detention homes—or the Minister of Justice.

Mr. Deans: I believe it is the Attorney General.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Port Arthur has a question of the Minister of Transport.

Mr. R. H. Knight (Port Arthur): For the hon. Minister of Transport. Will the Minister indicate when legislation requiring slow-moving farm vehicles to display slow-moving signs will be extended to include all slow-moving vehicles in the province?

Hon. I. Haskett (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, because of the myriad of situations, any vehicles may, at least temporarily, be slow-moving vehicles, it is not practical to contemplate any generally applicable legislation such as this question seems to suggest. However, our department is giving consideration to the possible extension of present requirements to certain other clearly definable segments of the vehicle population.

Mr. Knight: Supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Why is it always the farmers of this province that have to be hit first with this kind of legislation? Why have they been singled out? When the government has not been able to move on a united front, why have they been first?

Hon. Mr. Haskett: Mr. Speaker, I would say that this was because the farmers themselves saw the problem and asked for this action on it. It was out of consideration for the farming population that we brought in this legislation.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Kent has a question of the Minister of Education.

Mr. Spence: My question to the Minister of Education comes in two parts:

Does The Department of Education set out a schedule of salaries as a recommendation to county school boards for payment of administrative officials for the county school boards?

Also, is the Minister considering a review of salaries as a result of the resolution of the Chatham city council which complained of the high salaries?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, the salaries relating to the new board—the administrators and directors and so on—have not all been finalized. We will be making a study of them under the existing grant regulations.

For the directors and the senior administrators, basically the directors—and I am going a little bit by memory—there are grants paid on the basis of $900 per month, times the number of months they are employed, with a maximum of $10,800 per year. This is the amount upon which we pay grants. That, too, is subject to the rate of grant paid to a particular board.

In other words, if the rate of grant were 50 per cent, the maximum that we put out in our grant regulations would be $10,800. That means that they would be able to recover, by way of grant regulations, say $5,400. This applies to the senior personnel.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Sarnia has a question of this Minister.

Mr. J. E. Bullbrook (Sarnia): A question of the Minister of University Affairs:

Would the Minister advise what steps he has directed to be taken to rectify the illegal acts of students at the University of Windsor in seizing administrative facilities?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I am informed that the head of the administration of the University of Windsor has discussed and entered into negotiations with these students and some faculty members who were involved in this particular situation. There were discussions this morning, and I understand the situation is in the process of being negotiated at this time.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Sudbury East has a question of the Minister of Energy and Resources Management.

Mr. E. W. Martel (Sudbury East): Mr. Speaker, a question of the Minister of Energy and Resources Management:

How many megawatts of power were produced on November 14, 1968 by the emergency combustion turbines?

How many megawatts of power were produced in Ontario during November, 1968 by the emergency combustion turbines?

Why was it necessary to use the combustion engines so much in Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Mr. Speaker, the amount of power imported from the United States at the time of the East system peak demand on November 14, 1968, was 475 megawatts. At the same time, 334 megawatts were being exported, leaving a net import of 141 megawatts of which 100 megawatts was an intentional purchase and the balance was unintentional flow.

The second part of the question: Since the hon. member has asked for the megawatts throughout the month, it has been assumed that he is interested in the amount of energy purchased during November, a measurement which is usually quoted in megawatt hours. The gross import from the United States in November, 1968, by the East system totalled 310,762 megawatt hours, of which Ontario Hydro purchased 145,257 megawatt hours. Energy generated by rented units in the United States accounted for 23,103 megawatt hours and the balance of 142,402 megawatt hours was circulating and/or unintentional.

In answer to the third part: Charges for purchases from the United States relate primarily to energy. However, emergency purchases are assessed an additional charge, based on the maximum megawatt taken. A total of $786,241.70, Canadian funds was paid for the 145,257 megawatt hours purchased from the United States. This is equal to an average cost of $5.41 per megawatt hour.

And in answer to question four: The information on Ontario Hydro's cost of power has not yet been—

Mr. Speaker: May I interrupt the Minister long enough to say that I have been lost in his answer for some time and now I am much further lost because there are only three parts to this particular question. He is either answering another question—

Mr. Singer: He makes up questions to answer.

Mr. Speaker: Does the hon. member follow that?

Mr. Martel: That was yesterday's question.

Mr. Speaker: Well, perhaps he will complete his answer to this one and I will then realize it is one taken as notice yesterday; and then we will have the answer for today's.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: I am sorry about that, Mr. Speaker. This question was sent up to me by Hydro after I came in the House and I did not even look at it when I came in.

The answer to No. 4 of yesterday's question: The information on Ontario Hydro's cost of power has not yet been determined for 1968, but the cost trend study indicates a rate of about $7.35 per megawatt hour in Ontario.

Mr. Speaker, in answer to the question of today, I might say I am sorry I have not received it from Hydro yet; in fact I thought this was it that was sent in the House this afternoon.

Mr. Speaker: It will be taken, then, as notice.

The hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville has a question of this Minister?

Mr. B. Newman (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, the question of the Minister is: What legislation is the Minister planning, to regulate United States pleasure craft on Ontario waterways to prevent pollution by wastes from such pleasure craft?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Mr. Speaker, under Ontario regulation 365-66, which became effective January 1, 1969, United States pleasure craft are required to comply either with existing regulations in their home states which are compatible with the Ontario regulations, or they must meet the requirements of the Ontario regulations.

Mr. B. Newman: Mr. Speaker, if I may ask of the Minister a supplementary question: Is the Minister aware that the Michigan Water Resources Commission regulations affecting wastes from pleasure craft will not go into effect until January 1, 1970?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Yes, I understand their regulations will not go into effect until then. I think a year ago we decided we would bring out our regulations on July 1, but we extended that to January 1 and gave everyone lots of notice. We have discussed this with the state of Michigan and all adjoining states, and again I do not think we should extend our regulations any longer, we should continue as they were planned.

Mr. B. Newman: If I may, Mr. Speaker, I would ask the Minister if he plans on forbidding U.S. pleasure craft that do not conform with Ontario regulations from coming into Ontario waters?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Mr. Speaker, that is what I said; they would have to conform with our regulations if they were in our waters. Of course, they do not have to have holding tanks; if they have macerator chlorinators they are allowed in Ontario waters until 1971.

Mr. B. Newman: Is the Minister aware of the effect this may have on the tourist industry throughout the province of Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Mr. Speaker, we are faced with the matter of cleaning up pollution or the tourist industry, and I think anyone who wants to come in here badly enough this year with his cruiser will have a macerator chlorinator. In fact, many of them have them now in their craft.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Essex South has a question of this Minister — a series of questions.

Mr. D. A. Paterson (Essex South): Mr. Speaker, I have a seven-part question of the Minister of Energy and Resources Management:

(1) On Tuesday, January 28, at 3.15 p.m., were tenders for the "Woodslee" water area system opened? How many tenders were opened, and what were the amounts of the bids?

(2) When such tenders are opened, is this information automatically public information? Can the press or interested citizens be present to watch the proceedings?

(3) On the date in question, and in relation to the opening of tenders for the Woodslee area water system, how many tenders had the commission expected to receive?

(4) Was the secretary of the commission aware that one or more tenders in the proper Ontario Water Resources Commission tender envelopes for this contract were in the offices of the Ontario Water Resources Commission on Monday, January 27?

(5) Why was this, or these, tenders not included among those opened at that occasion?

(6) If there has been negligence on the part of any Ontario Water Resources Commission staff in this regard, has this official been reprimanded by the commissioners of the Ontario Water Resources Commission, and if not, why not?

(7) Has the contract been signed by the Ontario Water Resources Commission for the Woodslee area water system? If not, will the Minister intervene in this case, to open all properly documented tenders that were in the offices of the Ontario Water Resources Commission prior to 3.00 p.m., January 28?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Mr. Speaker, I will have to take the question of the hon. member as notice as the commission was meeting when I received the question and I have not been able to get an answer at this time.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Kitchener has a question of the Attorney General.

Mr. J. R. Breithaupt (Kitchener): Mr. Speaker, my question of February 7 to the Attorney General:

Is Provincial Judge A. D. Barron correct in his interpretation of the proposed law society Act, that continuation in his position would prevent his return to private legal practice should he retire after the said Act comes into force?

If so, will the Attorney General propose changes to prevent this situation being forced on those who are now holding these positions; or prevent this being forced on judges in the lowest tier of our courts, whose decisions are not binding on each other?

If not, will the Attorney General reassure this House and the members of the provincial bench as to the future rights of these judges to practice law on their retirement?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Speaker, I do not feel called upon, really, to offer an opinion upon a draft bill which has been prepared by the law society, and has not even been prepared or drafted by the law department of this government. It may have that effect, but it would be a matter of opinion. I would say this to the hon. member, that when we present a bill, we will have taken into account the question he asks of the proposed legislation which is offered, and we will consider many other items which, I may say, have been drawn to my attention through correspondence, comments, and in various ways. But to offer an opinion on this draft bill, which is not our bill, I think is not called for at this time. I assure the hon. member that we shall be studying this particular matter as well as many others.

Mr. Breithaupt: Perhaps the Attorney General would answer a supplementary question, and that is, when might we expect to have that bill placed before us?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: We are working on it; considering it, Mr. Speaker. I think hon. members are aware that there has been some critical comment on it in various areas. These we are studying, and I would not want to offer any firm date, but I should think it would be fairly soon.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member has a further question of this Minister?

Mr. Breithaupt: Yes, Mr. Speaker. Does the Attorney General agree with the comments of his Honour, provincial Judge Joseph Addison, as reported in the Toronto Daily Star on February 8, 1969, that serious abuses exist in the operation of the legal aid plan? If so, will the Attorney General inform the House what proceedings are now being introduced to resolve the abuses, and whether any of the solicitors involved in abusing the plan will be disciplined.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member seems determined to get me to offer an opinion. I do not, again, feel called upon to either agree or disagree with the opinion of the judge. I think he is free to offer his opinion. It is not necessary for me to say whether I agree or disagree with it, in this House.

I would like to assure the hon. member, Mr. Speaker, that we are aware of certain flaws in the procedure under the legal aid plan. We have been aware of situations and we have been studying them, investigating them. And now, with the Act having been in operation for the length of time it has, we are able to spot very quickly any abuse that may arise.

I think the hon. member is aware of one particular case where a member's conduct was investigated. He was ordered to pay the costs of the investigation which amounted to some $2,000, and was reprimanded by the law society. I can assure you we have a very thorough investigation going on to prevent some of the things about which Judge Addison complained.

Mr. Breithaupt: Perhaps, the Attorney General, might accept a supplementary to the point that if these complaints have been made, will he or his deputy or a member of his staff be discussing these specific items with Judge Addison?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I can assure the hon. member that I do not know that I would discuss it with Judge Addison myself. But the committees, the legal aid executive, the committees which advise and which are particularly directed to the study of the operation of the plan, would report to me; I am sure they would be aware of these and would be investigating. This is not something new; we have been aware of some of these situations.

We are doing everything possible, I think, and I will be able to report to the House later as to what we have done to remedy some of the situations we have discovered, and I assure the hon. member that we are on top of the situation.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Beaches-Woodbine has a question of this Minister.

Mr. Brown: Question of the Attorney General: Will the acquittal of Mr. and Mrs. George MacMillan be appealed?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Speaker, I have not yet had an opportunity to read the transcript of the judgment and the reasons for judgment. As a matter of fact, I have not yet received it. But I shall be getting it, and I will not make up my mind until I read the judgment with the reasons therefor. Then I will make a decision.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Timiskaming has two questions of this Minister.

Mr. D. Jackson (Timiskaming): With your permission, Mr. Speaker, I would like to withdraw question No. 540. The Attorney General has indicated that he is looking after that problem.

The second question, Mr. Speaker, is for the Attorney General. Has the Attorney General completed his investigation in the case of Regina vs. Gary Perly? And secondly, what action has been taken against P.C. Woodhead?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Speaker, the case of Regina against Perly was the case of a man arrested in April, 1968, on the charge of obstructing the police. It is a case which was remanded eight times and then dismissed, a case where Judge Bigelow allowed the accused to conduct his own defence.

An investigation was carried on by the Crown Attorney. I did not investigate it personally, other than through the Crown Attorney, and he has examined the matter and reported that in his opinion there is no evidence that would warrant action being taken against the police officer.

Mr. Jackson: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker: Does the Attorney General not feel that when a man lies in court he is guilty of perjury?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Speaker, that is rather a general question. When any man lies under oath, there is only one answer—and that is perjury.

Mr. Jackson: Another question, Mr. Speaker. In the transcript it states, and for your information, sir, I quote: "Woodhead indicated to me that he did not tell the truth in court because of the fact that he thought it was improper." This is his admission in the transcript.

Mr. Speaker: Order! What is the supplementary question the hon. member is asking? This is not a debate.

Mr. Jackson: I am just wondering how the Attorney General can say that he did not say it.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the hon. member could wonder by a properly worded question at another time, because that is not a supplementary question. If he has one that he wishes to place I am sure the Minister would be glad to hear it at least.

The hon. member for Dovercourt.

Mr. D. M. De Monte (Dovercourt): A question to the Attorney General.

Is the Attorney General willing to reopen the investigation into the death of Nicola Di Federico at the Algoma Steel Corporation, Saulte Ste. Marie, on January 4, 1969, due to the refusal of the acting Crown Attorney, N. D. Gaetz, to admit the representation of Local 2251 of the United Steelworkers of America at the inquest which was held on January 24?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Speaker, I am getting a report on this matter. I have not yet got all the information and I cannot answer the question until I do. I shall examine it when the information comes to hand and then give an answer.

Mr. De Monte: Does that mean that the hon. Minister will give me an answer when he gets the report, Mr. Speaker?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: That is what I meant to say.

Mr. De Monte: Thank you.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Hamilton East has a question for this Minister.

Mr. Gisborn: Yes, Mr. Speaker, my question was tabled February 6, and I would like to say that subsequent to that there has been an announcement by the RCMP that they have completed a partial report to my question. My question to the Attorney General is, did the Attorney General order tests made, to determine the safe use of the chemical Mace? If so, are the results available now?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Speaker, some time ago, we requested The Department of Health, through the RCMP to test Mace in all its consequences and effects. We have not yet received the results, but we do expect them soon. One reason for not getting them was that one of the chief questions was that of long-term effect of contact with Mace, and it has been a matter of months since we made the request for the tests.

In order to get a reasonably correct answer, it is necessary to let the tests go on for a period of time to study the long-term effect. We do expect a report very shortly.

Mr. Gisborn: May I ask a supplementary question? I was going to add it but I thought it not proper. If the use of Mace is found to be safe, does the Attorney General intend to consider restrictions on its use and availability that might be necessary?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I should say this, Mr. Speaker, that we have given consideration to some amendment to one of our Acts which might enable the Attorney General to exercise a control that he does not now have as to the equipment or items which policemen may use. This is under consideration.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Welland has a question for the Minister of Labour.

Mr. R. Haggerty (Welland South): Mr. Speaker, when will the Minister recommend that Bill 142—The Ontario Labour-Management Arbitration Commission Act 1968—be proclaimed in view of the fact that it was given Royal Assent on Thursday, June 13, 1968, eight months ago today?

Hon. D. A. Bales (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I answered a similar question of the hon. member for Oshawa yesterday, but to help the hon. member, the Act will be proclaimed as soon as the personnel for the commission has been settled and that will be, I believe, within the next month.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Peterborough has a question of this Minister.

Mr. Pitman: Mr. Speaker, there is a correction in the first question: Why have no further meetings taken place between the Peterborough Examiner and the American Newspaper Guild since last December?

Perhaps I might ask all three questions and the Minister could then answer, if that is his pleasure.

2. Is it true that the Peterborough Examiner has requested meetings with the guild but has been discouraged from such action by officers of the conciliation services of The Department of Labour?

3. Has the department followed up the change in policy on transfers embodied in the company's advertisement in the Peterborough Examiner, December 20, 1968?

Hon. Mr. Bales: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the change. I was a little confused at the reference when I read it, but I would say that officials of my department's conciliation branch are keeping in close touch with the representatives of the parties. If and when they feel it will be helpful to have further meetings they will certainly be arranged.

In reference to the second part, I looked into that and I am informed that no such meetings had been requested, at least through my officials.

And in the third part, I have no information concerning the advertisements to which the hon. member has referred.

Mr. Pitman: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I could ask a supplementary question?

I wonder whether the Minister could indicate whether there will be meetings in the near future? Perhaps I might contact the Minister about the change of policy in relation to the advertisement rather than try to give this information across the floor, but does the Minister know of any meetings which are expected in the near future between these two bodies?

Hon. Mr. Bales: Mr. Speaker, I do not know of any meetings that are definitely planned. I know that last Friday there were casual discussions between a representative of one of the parties and my officials.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy and Resources Management now has the answer to—The member has left, we will have the answer tomorrow to 586.

An hon. member: Tomorrow? Monday!

Mr. Speaker: Next sitting day.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Mr. Speaker, I have answers to two questions asked by the hon. member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. MacKenzie) yesterday. Question 1:

Would the Minister consider directing field workers of his department in the Ottawa area to use the full rent paid in calculating the required budget allowance for those on assistance, rather than an arbitrary figure set by the field workers, until the housing crisis in low rental housing units is ended?

I assume, Mr. Speaker, that the hon. member is discussing the role of the field workers in the administration of the family benefits programme. The field workers do not set arbitrary rates. The actual rent paid up to certain maximums is included in the allowance calculation. The maximums are established in the regulations under The Family Benefits Act. A municipality may wish to provide to assist families experiencing extraordinary problems. It may do this through supplementary aid which is shared by the province.

The second question was:

Would the Minister consider establishing a programme of assistance for those in the Ottawa area on low incomes who are suffering hardship due to unconscionable rent increases until a sufficient number of low rental housing units can be erected to stabilize the market?

The answer, Mr. Speaker, is that the legislation does not provide for supplementary assistance to low income persons who are employed.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Clerk of the House: The first order, resuming the adjourned debate on the amendment to the amendment to the motion for an address in reply to the Speech of the Honourable, the Lieutenant-Governor at the opening of the session.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

Mr. E. Sargent (Grey-Bruce): Mr. Speaker, in continuing my remarks of yesterday, before I launch into the balance of my presentation, I would like to say that we have today the members of the Stamford Collegiate Institute, who are the constituents of my very fine colleague, the member for Niagara Falls (Mr. Bukator), here in the east gallery.

Yesterday, Mr. Speaker, when I was paying tribute to you and the job you do in the Chair, I was remiss in not acknowledging the great job done by the chairman of the House committee, the member for Waterloo South (Mr. Reuter). Here he comes now, so I will have a soft time from here on in today, I guess.

I did not know my timing was so good, Mr. Speaker, but I do want to say to you, sir, that your very trying responsibilities over the years have endeared you to us all in the fair way you handle us. From time to time you are very rough on the underprivileged over here, but we do thank you again and hope you have continued happiness in the job.

Mr. Speaker, the most current thing in front of us all today is the television debates at Ottawa and I think maybe the whole motivation for these hearings was television. It is a chance for these premiers or personages to get exposure at top level on television. And watching on television last night the Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts)—or the Premier, or the first Minister—I said to myself: Here is a prime example of faith. This man actually believes that he is God's gift to television. He actually believes that he is the saviour of Ontario. This is faith in real living colour.

I am thinking of the story about the three nuns, Mr. Speaker, who ran out of gas on the highway in their little car. They walked back to the service station and they wanted to buy some gas, so the service station attendant said, "Well, I would be glad to sell you some gas but I have no containers".

They searched around and finally found a chamber—you know, the old kind that sat under the bed away back. So they filled this container—the chamber—with gas, and the three nuns go back down the road to their car. They have a funnel there and they start to funnel the gas into the car with the chamber. A driver coming along the highway sees this and he says: "You know, I have been an Anglican all my life, but I have never seen such faith as this".

Now here is an example of faith in the truism that the Premier thinks that he is the saviour of Ontario.

In his speech—in his presentation to the Throne Debate—the member for Sarnia (Mr. Bullbrook), talking about the shelter grants, used the words "the greatest fiscal fiasco ever perpetrated in government". Those are the words of our backbencher, the member for Sarnia.

Now our Premier, "the impressive Premier", according to the press—I do not know who he impressed, but he certainly did not impress the people of Ontario in his tax situation—but he used the same verbiage as our member here in describing the Medicare programme.

Now if Medicare is fiscal fraud then we have almost a parallel in the tax shelter grant in Ontario. He has $150 million involved in the tax shelter grant, which benefits very few people because all the rents are raised to make up for it by landlords, as I will describe later. Further, this TV image, the kick the Premier is on, has cost us millions of dollars. He has the crass lack of finesse, Mr. Speaker, to come on camera and say that "I am speaking on TV to the people of Ontario." He says: "On behalf of the people of Ontario I speak for Medicare." Well he certainly does not, and do not forget it.

Any opposition that the Prime Minister of this province has to Medicare is strictly motivated by his interest in being tied to the London Life and the insurance companies.

This man is always trying to project the image of the good guy. He is a "help the have-nots," but when he jockeys himself into a jam like he has today—I note that he has not the intestinal fortitude to stay here with MacNaughton to hear us read these remarks. When he jockeyed himself into a jam like we have in Ontario today, he says, in brief: "I want my money back."

Mr. Speaker, Premier Smallwood called Ontario a fat sow at the convention. In my opinion of the convention, insofar as the representations by the Premier of Ontario, all I saw on TV was a bore.

How long are we going to be subjected to this McLuhanist hunger for TV exposure on the part of the Premier of Ontario? If he wants to go this route I suggest he tie up along with Joel Aldred and start a quiz programme: How to con seven million people in Ontario.

Mr. Speaker, I do want to thank those who have stayed in the House. I think it is a real trial for them to stay and listen to a Liberal berate them and their perfect attention will not embarrass me in the least.

But personally, I want to say that this province is in dire financial straits. All one has to do is look at the record and it is quite evident that there is need for new thinking, a completely new approach. Most members will be biased in their views of what I have to say about the preconceived views of the establishment. But there is an old saying that goes, "if you have been doing it this way for a long time, it is probably wrong." And you now have put us into a position where, as I said yesterday, we increased the debenture debt in Ontario by $500 million in one year, a 20 per cent increase and we are getting close to insolvency.

Mr. Speaker, yesterday I was presenting to the House the iniquitous and dictatorial policies of the Ontario Hospital Services Commission and I said we had been told by the Ontario Hospital Services Commission that they were going to close three hospitals in Grey and Bruce counties.

Particularly, the town of Chesley, in this hospital, which now serves a population of 7,500 people, there are three now active doctors who cover Chesley, south to Elmwood, north to Allenford, west to Paisley, east to Desboro, Chatsworth, Williamsford and Dornoch.

This is one of the hospitals they would close. This hospital serves a population of elderly people of over 70, more than any other place in Bruce county and there are 104 nursing home beds in Chesley. Moreover we have there, a Mennonite population of approximately 200 people and among these people is a very high birth rate and they make use of our hospital there but they do not have cars. As we are in the biggest snowbelt in the country, being 25 miles from the nearest hospital is a dangerous situation.

The hospital is presently enjoying 150 per cent occupancy. I go on to tell you of the many iniquities, the things they do not have there—there is no waiting room for visitors; a patient for X-ray has to sit in the office; in the operating room there is no room to move; the records are kept in the cellar or the attic and they employ 54 people and the monthly salary is over $12,000.

For this to disappear in a small community would be a real hardship for the community. In the Chesley district high school there are 26 teachers for 450 pupils; ten teachers in the Chesley public school with 250 pupils. Elderslie township school 13 teachers with 229 pupils; Arran and Tara 15 teachers, 400 pupils, and Sullivan township school, 300 pupils—in all about 2,000 pupils there would be left without a hospital.

We have three factories employing 225 men and the milk plant in Tara employs 62 people.

Due to storms there are 513 pupil days of absence in the high school. Our snowfall there is 126 inches per year as against 61 inches in Toronto. We have no stand-by lighting in the hospital.

This is the place they would close a hospital. Now they were going to close Walkerton and Durham hospitals too. The Walkerton hospital was built in 1965—built to meet expansion; so we build a new hospital which has debentures going until 1986, they are going to close it.

In Durham they built a hospital in 1963, built for expansion, a beautiful hospital. They are going to close that.

In the report, to justify closing these hospitals, the Ontario Hospital Services Commission came in and said, "we took a survey and we find that the rail services are good." But when you check the rail services to Durham, there is no rail service. There is only a hand car. But they say in this snow belt, if people have to go to the hospital they can use a snowmobile.

At the big public meeting we had, Mr. Speaker, the member for Grey South (Mr. Winkler) was there with about 2,000 petitions from people asking them to justify the position of the government. He pleaded with them that this thing would never happen.

The hall was packed and I could have taken advantage of the member for Grey South, made a political issue of it if I had wanted to, but I saw that he was as concerned at that point as I was, and as the people were.

To get back to the basic root of this thing—my friend from Grey South is from Hanover and this is where they are going to put the new hospital. So, he was on the spot, a very bad spot. Before that, his concern was not about the people in the rest of the riding, whether or not they closed the hospitals.

But it develops in the publicity surrounding the whole affair, that it was rumoured that the hospital in Hanover had been sold and it is alleged that one of the purchasers of the hospital there in Hanover was a brother-in-law of the member for Grey South.

Now if this is not correct he can tell the House that there is no conflict of interest on his part through his brother-in-law. But this is an established part of the affair in Grey South. That being as it may, the member for Grey South told the assembly that, at no time as long as he drew breath, would they ever close a hospital in these areas and he said he would guarantee that the Prime Minister would back this up.

But the glaring fact is that the Ontario Hospital Services Commission, Mr. Speaker, can walk into any area regardless of what the Minister of Health (Mr. Dymond), wants, or what the people want, and say we are going to close down all these to put up a monument to medicine.

My point, if I have done nothing else today, is to show the House, and in Hansard, what a Frankenstein's monster we have in the Ontario Hospital Services Commission which is, in effect, nothing but government by commission, government by appointed people who are not responsible to the people who elected them.

Over the years I have been in this House and seen the government, when they get in trouble — the crime bill and so on — appoint a police commission to stash these things off in a corner; to cover things up so the people do not know what is going on.

Mr. Speaker, the very important thing facing the people of Ontario today is in the area of municipal affairs. Now, proof of the overtaxing in this area is to the extent of about $160 million. And the motivation here was to play politics. I called attention to it in our last election campaign. I said the municipalities were in a bad spot, and that the ordinary taxpayer should be relieved of the cost of education. We recommended that 80 per cent of the cost of education be absorbed by the Ontario government. But, this government, not wanting to acknowledge that there was merit in the move, said that they would overtax by $150 million and give it back to the people.

Now, it cost about $5 million to return this money to the people. It cost about $500 thousand to launch the publicity on the getting back of the money; and I would like to ask the Attorney General (Mr. Wishart), sometime how much it is going to cost to fight these cases.

In Hamilton—I understand there are 265 informations laid in the city of Hamilton. It would be interesting to know the increased cost of implementing these in Ontario.

The Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Wells), does not agree that if the landlords raise the rent, it would make up for the return of this money. Well, he has lost all touch with reality because, he knows this is a fact. It is an insult to the intelligence of this House, to say this is not true. He will probably get a couple more assistants to find out what the facts of life are.

Hon. T. L. Wells (Minister without Portfolio): I said nothing of the sort.

Mr. Sargent: The Minister has the chance to say something now if he wants to.

Hon. Mr. Wells: The member said that this programme did not benefit very many people in Ontario. I say he is wrong. It helped over two million people.

Mr. Sargent: The facts will show the Minister is wrong.

An hon. member: They will show the member is wrong.

Mr. Sargent: Millionaires from the States have cottages along the Lake St. Clair area and they get a cheque from the Ontario government. Anybody who owns a cottage gets a cheque on this land. It is the biggest fiasco that ever happened. But I would say to you, Mr. Speaker, that if the province does not decide to go this route again, and it probably won't, it should not—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Sargent: I am talking about $150 million.

An hon. member: The member should ask some of his constituents about it.

Mr. Sargent: I should say this to the Minister, he is the only one in the House who hears any one over here.

I suggest the government should not weasel out of this repayment to the people of Ontario; it is justly theirs. I do not believe in the way the government is doing it.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Sargent: As I have mentioned to members, they did not have the courage to go the route that was proper, to give equity. But they do not know how to do things properly.

Mr. S. Apps (Kingston and the Islands): I am wondering if the member knows what the rebate is equivalent to in the city of Owen Sound. I might point out that in the city of Kingston it was the equivalent of about 18 mills on the tax rate that the people received back from the government. I think that is quite a substantial reduction in tax. I was wondering whether the member might have any indication as to what—

Mr. J. E. Bullbrook (Sarnia): Can the member tell us the administrative costs in Kingston?

Mr. Apps: I would say less than one per cent.

Mr. Sargent: Tell me how much the rents were increased to make it up, and I will answer the member's question. I will find it out.

Interjections by hon. members.

An hon. member: I would say that with the great majority of landowners, the rents were not increased out of proportion at all during—

Mr. Sargent: What does the member mean?

An hon. member: I think everybody will admit that there were some who took advantage of it, but I do not think they were very large proportions of landowners.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Speaker, I have a letter from lady who has some cottages. She says:

I own two cottages at Wasaga Beach and the tax reduction on the two was $57.68. During this summer, I had 10 tenants. Now, should I have figured up the proportion for each and mailed it to them? If so I should have been better not to have received the reduction at all. I think it would be absolutely ridiculous.

She phoned me, wanting to know what she should do. I told her not to do a damn thing. How ridiculous can you get? This is a kind of nonsense to keep people—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Sargent: I understand, Mr. Speaker, that, come the Budget, you are going to take over all assessments in Ontario, put it under government control and appoint your assessors, county and city, as civil service.

We are getting into a situation whereby it is time someone quit playing politics and looked at the facts of life. Because we are gradually losing the right to govern ourselves by this regional take-over.

I have been in this business of serving people about most of my life. I am afraid of the bureaucracy working into our lives. We have central control of everything we do.

I think what should go into the records is this submission from the county of Wentworth on what is happening to our way of life in the regional government take-over. I will tell the government this: as long as you have the Minister of Municipal Affairs (Mr. McKeough) going the route he is going to go, and the Provincial Treasurer (Mr. MacNaughton) going on that tax route, we hope that you fellows keep up this thing for the next two years, because you are going to be in real trouble when you go to the polls.

This is the most important document I have read in a long time, insofar as the rights of people is concerned, this submission about regional government. And my colleagues think I should read it into the record, but time does not permit. But it is so important—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Sargent: It says:

This association opposes any movement for the reform of the municipal structures that has as its purpose the centralization of power at the provincial level of government. Because we believe that such a purpose is contrary to the federal system of government, as contemplated by The British North America Act which is the basis of our economic traditions in this country, and which has roots in the basic system of government.

And this goes on to tell about the association not being opposed to reform of the municipal structures.

But our association is opposed to a speedy reorganization of the municipal government that has been the grass roots or bastion of democracy in this province, in the country, for 100 years, without first a thorough study of not only all of the relevant facts, but full opportunity to be heard must be given to the elected municipal representatives, to the people to be affected.

There must be a full review of the experience and the studies and recommendations for reforms and various other factors as carried out in the United States and the United Kingdom as well as parts of Europe.

This can start a crack-up in our communities and the substitution of an asphalt jungle. Therefore, the government of Ontario should be notified that we are dissatisfied, that we do not favour a reform of the municipal structures.

In almost every case, the government has moved in with some theorist telling them that this is a good spot to put a regional government. And so they move in there without a mandate from the people. These things should be put to referendum. They are using a rake instead of romancing the people.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Speaker, this should be required reading for every member of the Legislature.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Sargent: In this Department of Municipal Affairs, we have complete chaos in the subdivision sections. Ask any lawyer or any citizen who has tried to subdivide or sell a lot. Take the case in point of a good friend of mine who has a beautiful shoreline lot. He does not want to sell the land, he wants to deed it to his son and the government will not let him give away his land, his own land.

Mr. Apps: That is the federal government.

Mr. Sargent: We have, Mr. Speaker, on the manipulation of public funds through the Ontario Development Corporation and The Department of Trade and Development, we have the Caswell situation—

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): We should take the member for Kingston and the Islands and teach him a few facts there.

Mr. Sargent: There is a multi-millionaire, Mr. Caswell, a great Conservative up north, receiving a loan from the Ontario government. He does go the route, but he obtains the loan from the Ontario government because it is a forgivable loan; he does not have to pay it back.

And so we have the Ontario government loaning our money to Caswell and his multi-millionaire chain. We loan money to the Holiday Inn group, a multi-millionaire chain. They would rather borrow it from the Ontario government because they do not have to pay it back. We have a large U.S. corporation, at cost to our economy—

Mr. E. W. Sopha (Sudbury): What did Smallwood call Ontario?

Mr. Sargent: We have large U.S.-based corporations, which are in the excess profits bracket, but they are borrowing money from the people of Ontario, from the taxpayers, for expansion plans.

I was in Calgary last week and an interesting thing happened. I was talking to the airport manager and he said, "Your Premier is coming into town". And I said, "How did you know?" He said, "Oh, we are having a Conservative convention down at the Palliser here. An interesting thing happened. We had a sign made up in the airport, 'Welcome, Premier Robarts'. They had us take it down and change it to 'Welcome, Prime Minister Robarts'." This is the corny approach that he has—the idolatry he has of himself—this man who is the Premier of Ontario.

As you get off at the airport in Calgary and go downtown you see a fantastic big structure called the Husky Oil tower. This Husky Oil tower is a multi-million-dollar structure built by a multi-million-dollar company, and I thought how ironic this could be. Here I am in Calgary, a taxpayer in Ontario, and we loaned them $400,000 last year—the Husky Oil Company—in collaboration with a Tory ex-member of Parliament. This is what happens by this front row in the Ontario government. Taxpayers' money! No wonder the Premier is down to Ottawa, with a bushel basket, trying to get some money because he is in deep trouble.

Now we find the hon. Minister of Trade and Development is going to go to Osaka. He is going to spend a chunk of money over there—

Mr. Sopha: He is there every second week, is he not?

Mr. Sargent: One week we go to Germany to borrow some money and we give it to "Uncle Stan" to go back to Osaka to spend it.

Mr. Sopha: Well, he and the member for Scarborough West (Mr. Lewis) wave to each other as they pass.

Mr. Singer: From Biafra to Osaka it is just a short trip.

Mr. Sargent: And it is a matter of record. As I told the House yesterday, Mr. Speaker, the Premier is going to borrow $60 million over there. Now our municipal debt is over $3.6 billion, and the interest on that is $1.5 million a day, so he borrowed enough money to look after our interest rate for 45 days.

Mr. Apps: What was that figure again?

Mr. Sargent: So he can go back again in another 45 days to get another $60 million.

Mr. Apps: What was that figure about $1.5 million a day?

Mr. Sargent: The member can figure it out, he is a good stick-handler.

Mr. Apps: That is about $500 million a year.

Mr. Sargent: That is what it is and the government should be ashamed of it.

Mr. Apps: On $3 billion? The member had better figure that one again!

Mr. Sargent: I want to suggest that we have come to the end of the trail insofar as solvency is concerned.

We have things like the Minister of Transport (Mr. Haskett) and his under-the-table deal with the R. L. Polk company. The R. L. Polk company is in a situation where it can have access to all records in The Department of Transport, but no agency, no other citizen, can have access to these figures. The Ontario government should be realizing about a quarter of a million dollars a year from this, but all they are getting is about $30,000 a year.

We have known for a long time about the rigged prices we have with The Department of Highways in the oil and paving deals. We have known about that, but one year they caught 11 firms and they really rapped it to them. They did not send them to jail, but they told them they could not bid for three months on a deal. They are a ruthless bunch here.

Mr. F. Young (Yorkview): That was during the winter, too.

Mr. Sargent: It is not uncommon, Mr. Speaker, to read of some poor citizen in this province who has taken a little too much to drink on a weekend. It could be anybody who has created a disturbance and is convicted of being drunk and disorderly.

An hon. member: In Owen Sound?

Mr. Sargent: In Owen Sound. And a lot happens up in our Indian reservations. They really rap it to those boys up there on weekends. And the citizen has been sentenced to a week or two, or perhaps a month, in jail.

May I say that despite the fact that in this country for more than 50 years we have had legislation prohibiting combines which are designed to overcharge the public for goods purchased by the public, it is a matter of record that no single person has ever been sent to jail.

In the field of combines legislation, the record is clear that our law courts have been lenient; they have not taken the law seriously. The law provides that where companies or individuals are guilty of conspiring one with the other in the creation of a combine, they shall be fined or sent to jail. In 50 years, no one has ever gone to jail.

I recall I was on the public utilities commission in Owen Sound for a number of years, and we had been buying generators, big new equipment, from Westinghouse and General Electric. Always two bids came in—and they took turns in bidding—but the prices were almost within small decimal points. So they nabbed these fellows, and we found out that over the province of Ontario there had been literally hundreds and hundreds of millions of dollars overcharged through this monopoly control and price-fixing. Nothing happened.

A fellow taking too much to drink over the weekend is put in jail, but the big companies can get away with murder. This is what happens in this province; there is one law for the rich and one law for the poor.

But more important than anything else, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. P. D. Lawlor (Lakeshore): They are not much better up in Ottawa.

Mr. Sargent: They are not pure up there either. But where we can affect this fact, we should do something about it. And when we are in government we are going to fix these things.

But more important than anything else, the Prime Minister last week, in his opening remarks, said something along the lines of the concern that I have been talking about for a long time with my colleague, the member for Windsor-Walkerville (Mr. B. Newman)—that is, about the need for jobs for students in the summer months, to have money to go back to school. And repeatedly the Prime Minister has said to me, or to the member for Windsor-Walkerville, "We are not in the employment agency business. That is not our line." Well, Mr. Speaker, I think that he is very, very lax, and something will have to be done in this regard.

I am going to stick to my remarks in this regard, because it is so important to get this across. I will read this because I am not a textual deviate: It takes more than talent or determination to acquire a university education today. It also takes money.

A student living in residence at an Ontario university may expect to pay around $2,000 a year for room and board, plus his own fees. If he is a good scholar, he can get some of this back through scholarships.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Sargent: Well, I have two of them in school and I think those members are a bit out.

But for those who are the sons and daughters of middle- and low-income workers, and who are only average students, the traditional method of financing is a summer job plus a dip into the family pocket book. And last summer, Mr. Speaker, was a disastrous summer for students who wanted to work. Teenage employment was away off and there were few jobs available. The Manpower Department says there are 150,000 students in Ontario looking for work this summer.

This money bind is a national problem, but we must do something about it here in Ontario. The Economic Council of Canada has made it quite clear that economic progress in this country depends on a well educated population. The report said:

We recommend that the advancement of education at all levels be given a very high place in public policy, and that investment in education be accorded the highest rank in the scale of priority.

There is really no alternative, Mr. Speaker. We must educate our young people up to the limits of their ability.

We claim to be unable to afford free university training; then governments will have to provide more financial assistance. Student aid is not a charity, it is an investment, and if we care about the future of this country, then we are going to have to do something in Ontario to come to the rescue of these fine young people who need the education to build for the future.

In New York they have a programme going now for student jobs. They get them into government and they pay them $2.50 to $3 an hour during the summer months. High school students in this country are treated like slave labour. They make less than $1 an hour; they do all the menial jobs. If they go to Banff or Jasper they make $100 a week and they are treated like nothing. The way the big corporations treat students is a shameful and a shocking thing.

Mr. Apps: Mr. Speaker, I would like to disagree with that. The member is talking about jobs. My daughter went to Jasper and she had a delightful time.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member for Kingston and the Islands may direct a question to the hon. member for Grey-Bruce but he may not make a statement or comment.

Mr. Sargent: Did she come back with any money, that is the main thing. I feel so strongly about this, Mr. Speaker, that we need to have, in Ontario today, a minister of youth, a department of youth in government today in Ontario.

Mr. Apps: I agree with the member there.

Mr. Sargent: Well, I am glad. The member might get the job. I think there will have to be a dynamic move towards giving students jobs in the summer time.

I read in this morning's Globe and Mail that the hon. Minister without Portfolio, was lecturing to students that they would not get any loans, or they would not get any jobs if they did not behave themselves, because the Prime Minister of this province would tell industry not to give them jobs if they did not behave themselves. What a bunch of deceit and nonsense.

It says in this big press story in the Globe and Mail this morning that the Premier had personally appealed to the Canadian Manufacturers Association and the Canadian Chamber of Commerce on behalf of the students. Well, is that not just great? He appealed to industry to give them jobs. I bet that carried a lot of weight with the industries that cannot pay their taxes, and the Premier is the guy who put them there. This is so ridiculous.

Mr. Speaker, the point I would like to make is that somewhere along the line in our campus situation, the student demonstrations are a shocking thing. The student campus today is about a thousand light years away since the time that you or I were on campus, either at high school or university. A lot of us do not really comprehend what is going on, and those of us who have children talk to them and we try to get to the bottom of this, and find how much out of step we really are.

I think there is a position point that we are going to have to take. I say that we are light years behind, but I do not think that values, behaviour and responsibility should change.

I believe, personally, Mr. Speaker, it is time, in view of the recent developments we have read of in the press the last few days — such as the takeover of buildings in our own province, property damages, and maybe the most important thing, the disruption of educational process of other students—that a position point be taken by the Premier of this province, by the Minister of Education (Mr. Davis), or even by the Attorney General — maybe that is the slot it should be in.

Along the line that any student, or groups of students, who do not adhere to the abiding guide lines that all other adults have to adhere to, that they be treated like the law-breakers in other areas, in the courts of the land.

I was talking to the secretary manager of Western University Students Union and he has 10,000 students in Western University under him. I said to him, "How many of the 10,000 students you have are demonstrators, or are the ones to worry about?" He said, "Less than half of one per cent."

On the other hand, I read of a story of a priest in Québec. He was the head of a university there, where 400 or 500 students went on strike. He was out on the steps and he took a microphone with him and a P.A. system and he said, "Students, I agree you have beefs, that there is something we should talk about. But as I am the head of this institution, I have a watch in my hand and if you are not all back in your classes in five minutes, you are expelled." And in five minutes they were all back in their seats in their classrooms.

Mr. I. Deans (Wentworth): What was the lesson to be learned?

Mr. Sargent: I suggest that the lesson is this: That 99 per cent of the students in our schools today, who are daughters and sons of all of us, have target dates to get through school. They have economic targets to meet, because their dad or mother cannot give them the tuition fees to get there. They are not the ones who are out on strike or demonstrating, I will tell you that. You would not see any of my girls out demonstrating. So, anyone who has a target date in life, or economic factor to meet, are the ones who are suffering.

Mr. Deans: If they were not out demonstrating how could they go back in?

Mr. Sargent: And it is not my view that one per cent of the school population should affect the future of many, many hundreds of thousands of students.

I think it is time we had a position point by the government insofar as this is a very important thing. These are the people who will run this country, and be our leaders. All of us were revolutionary when we were young but we did not have the nerve to go out and burn buildings or to occupy them, because our parents would not stand for it. I think it behooves us to take a position point in this regard.

Mr. Lawlor: Was the member once a revolutionary?

Mr. Sargent: I was even an NDP member at one time.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Sargent: But as you get along and get responsibility, you see what a snow job you have here. In no other system in the world could you operate the way you do under the free enterprise system, as long as you know what to do with it.

Mr. Speaker, I want to say a few things in regard to justice and my good friends, the lawyers, may not agree with what I have to say. But I think that somewhere along the line there is a need for a new deal in justice. So with great respect I say, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Deans: How about the schedule fee!

Mr. Sargent: I find that the legal fraternity have too much control over our economy. They write the laws to suit the bar association, and there is no closer association in the world, unless it is the doctors.

Mr. C. G. Pilkey (Oshawa): What about hotel operators?

Mr. Sargent: They are all broke!

But I say—and I say it kindly—they take advantage of their position to frame the laws and frame the public. In virtually every business move you make today, you have to pay tribute to a lawyer somewhere along the way and I do not suppose my remarks are going to change a damn thing.

An hon. member: That is right.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Sargent: But they are allowed to do such things as if you wanted to change a piece of land—a title—if you wanted to change it two or three times a year, every time you change title you have got to pay $200 or $300 for a title search for this piece of land. So a lawyer who does a title search for a housing subdivision of, say, 200 houses, ends up with a cheque of about $60,000 for going through a piece of routine. This is the law today.

I have been reading, Mr. Speaker, a book called "The Lawyers." It is an American publication. And if we ever need any money for funds, we are going to tax the lawyers first.

What is going on? A lady wanted a divorce recently in Toronto. She could not afford to pay the stipend—the $700—to a lawyer, so she went out and went to work on it herself. She ended up getting a divorce for about $50, $60 or $70.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Sargent: The overhead is important in any business, but to consolidate, my feeling in this thing is that we have gone this whole route.

The submission of Allen Linden in Reader's Digest was a very wonderful effort and when he analysed the whole situation, believe me, he was dumbfounded. He is a lawyer, yes, but he said it is like something out of Dickens, the hoi polloi here.

An hon. member: New legal term.

Mr. Sargent: I will quote him. He says:

Basically a land registry office is where you go, or hire a lawyer to go for you, to check that property. Your money really belongs to the person from whom you are buying it and this involves a check of every single document pertaining to a given parcel of land.

This goes on to show the intricacies of title search from thousands of documents and this is how the system is set up.

Now he suggests that it can be made computerized. You go into Air Canada to buy a ticket; there's some slot to put in the ticket and find out that you have got a flight.

So he suggests that the land title search can be computerized by people in the law society. You could say, "We will computerize this and give people a title search by putting a ticket in and getting it out like that."

Mr. Pilkey: They would not make so much money.

Mr. Sargent: They would not make so much money—that is the answer.

I think I should not do this because I have a lot of good friends who are lawyers. But it is time—

Mr. Bullbrook: The member had a lot of good friends!

Interjections by hon. members.

An hon. member: Who is the member going to speak to now!

Mr. Sargent: We said:

We have surrounded the law with a hoary mystique that makes progress seem highly impudent and that alienates the public the law is intended to serve. Judges wear robes largely because judges have always worn robes and are simply referred to as "my Lord."

Now he mentions a guy who got a jaywalking ticket. He says:

That we are there to command you, in Her Majesty's name, to appear before—

All this nonsense.

Then, he goes on to say that it is quite a thing to see what happens in the courts of Canada in 1969.

To summarize what I am saying there was a famous lawyer called Elihu Root—and again I will not deviate textually, I will read this. He says:

Our procedure ought to be based on this common intelligence of the farmer, merchant and labourer and there is no reason why it should not be. I say, not without experience in legal procedure, there is no reason—

And this is the key:

—there is no reason why a plain, honest man should not be permitted to go into court and tell his story, and have the judge before whom he comes, permitted to do justice in that particular case, unhampered by a great variety of statutory rules.

We have got our procedures regulated according to the trained, refined, subtle, ingenious intellect of the best practised lawyers and it is all wrong.

Mr. Speaker, *res ipso locatur I believe means "the thing speaks for itself" in Latin.

I would like to say, Mr. Speaker, at this time, somewhere along the line today the Minister of Agriculture—

An hon. member: Is the member through with the lawyers?

Mr. Sargent: Yes. Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Agriculture and Food (Mr. Stewart) took a shot at agriculture today when he said he is going to reduce the loans and cancel loans for junior farmers and from here in the rate would be from 5 per cent to 7.5 per cent.

An hon. member: Seven and three quarters!

Mr. Sargent: Seven and three quarters. This is a clear indication, Mr. Speaker, that the government has no regard for the difficulties agriculture is in today, and that will be developed later in the debates.

But there is a great area that is not being considered in this province today—the area of the small businessman. Everybody gets grants, and they get recognition, but nobody in the area of small business has any support from any government in this country. In the United States the small business loans operation is a great boon to a great section of the economy and I suggest that we are not doing the right thing by a great segment of our people.

I have a letter here from a man named Pete McFarlane. It pretty well tells the story and I think it should go on record. He is an Esso dealer in Owen Sound. He says:

Please be notified that I am going out of business on October 26, 1968. Also please let it go down on the records that I feel that the government does not want small businesses to operate any longer. There is nearly enough extra work to keep a full time bookkeeper going, but not enough extra money. It is my contention, therefore, that the government either start paying for these services or start making special consideration for the smaller businesses such as this one, or stop demanding these extra time-consuming services.

And he is right. The government can walk into your office any day of the week and put you out of business by grabbing your books and holding up your staff. The powers they have are hard to believe, especially the federal income tax people, and the people that belong on the sales tax end of this government.

He says:

Lengthy records have to be kept on behalf of the following: Unemployment Insurance Commission. Treasurer of Ontario retail tax. Workmen's Compensation Board. Department of Energy and Resources Management. Department of Labour and labour standards. Income tax remittances. Canada pension plan remittances.

He says:

I agree with the necessity of these items, but in a small business there is neither the time nor the money to look after these things. If they are not looked after the governments are very quick to send out penalties and fines.

Also included are both the federal and provincial governments in the "fleets of bookkeepers" category. I feel that the small businesses of Canada really make up the backbone of our country, and that if this complaint is not remedied there will soon be a lot fewer small businesses in this country.

If you could possibly help, then bring this matter out into the open. I have done something about it; I have gone out of business because I am fed up to the teeth with it. A person is much, much better off to go out and work for a large company with wages and time off and security, pension, union protection, etc. which are much more than the small businessman could ever expect.

I could go on and on. The unions and governments have looked after the average worker to the point that he has so much power in job security that he can almost tell his superiors what to do. How about doing something for the small businessman for a change?

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Does the member believe that?

Mr. Sargent: Well, it is a pretty good shot there. Good to have the member back.

We live in the age of the big take over, the concentration of everything into one, so we need to do something for the small businessman. He is human too; he pays taxes too.

Mr. Speaker, I thank you for your time. I want to finalize by saying that we have talked about the inequities, the reasons I am opposed to this government. Every member there, I know, is doing a great job in his own mind for his people and collectively they do a great job. But I am opposed to the policies of this government in their tax position, and I want to say that Ontario is not a province like any other.

It is an economic empire with a gross provincial product of $22.8 billion and a spending power exceeding half of the member nations of the United Nations. We account for one-third of Canada's population, and half of the country's output of manufactured goods, with an aggregate personal income more than 40 per cent of the national total. We in Ontario contribute as much to national revenues as all other Canadians put together.

The Minister of Revenue (Mr. White) makes a crack. I had a letter from the hon. member for Niagara Falls the other day that was sent to him and the Minister jointly. The man was fed up to the teeth with the taxes. He said: "Instead of having a Minister of Revenue—since we do not have any money, we are broke—we need a Minister of Efficiency". Now this pretty well tells the story insofar as he is concerned. We need somebody that is going to give us efficiency in government instead of someone to look after money we do not have.

We know the strength of this province, but I say, Mr. Speaker, our financial resources have been wastfully plundered and drained. If we had a hundred problems, the constitutional heroics of the Premier would be the one hundred and first problem. The last thing we want from him, is to be a father of confederation, to talk about constitution.

Why would he go on national television and talk about these problems when he cannot look after his own? The worst mess in Canada is right here in Ontario. He could not run a glorified county council yet he is telling the rest of Ontario and Canada how to run their show.

I think we are getting a bit fed up, Mr. Speaker, with him blowing through his moustache at the taxpayers' expense. Payday is here; let us have some action.

The Liberal policy in this country of ours—and the Ontario policy of my leader and my party—is that we stand for the average Canadian, for the unorganized and the inarticulate—not for special occupational groups or social classes. We believe a major share of the benefits flowing from the economic growth should not go to the investors, risk-takers or corporate managers, but should be distributed by the government to the less privileged individuals. That is our policy, and we do not get into bed with the big boys like you do—the banks and the insurance companies—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Sargent: I firmly believe in free enterprise but I also believe, Mr. Speaker, that we must do the things that are necessary to retain control of our economy and to maintain our independence. If we here in Ontario, needing the finances as badly as we do, fail to tax the United States corporations on a more demanding basis to make sure that their earnings stay in this country, then we can acquiesce to becoming a colonial dependency of the United States.

Two-thirds of our Ontario manufacturing capacity is owned by interests outside our country. Nine out of ten factories employing over 5,000 people are U.S.-based and U.S.-owned. I suggest to you, why cannot this octopus pay its fair share of our responsibilities? Why cannot the Ontario government tell these people that the corporate wealth of their whole operations should be owned 51 per cent by Ontario people, as it is in Mexico? It is such a threat today, Mr. Speaker, that an American oil and mining company can dictate depletion oil allowances to our government, federally and in this province.

Mr. Deans: Is that the Liberal government policy federally?

Mr. Sargent: I am saying this is a fact. And they are so powerful, I want to tell the hon. member, that the White House in Washington ordered the Canadian government to rescind legislation to put an advertising tax on Time magazine. It is a fact of life—the control that the American economy has on our economy. The point I am building up to is do we own or run our affairs—I think we only think we do.

I suggest we do this. We start the ball rolling in Ontario to tap the rich untapped vein of U.S. controlled industry, to force them to pay more of their rightful share. Mr. Speaker, I think that since cities are the children of the province, and they are taxed to the limit, that we will have to accept a new role in the mustering of new resources.

I suggest taxing U.S. corporations more; they are a great source of new revenue. It may be capital gains, it may be getting a bigger chunk from the insurance companies and the banks, but part of the challenge before us reaches far beyond the immediate needs of cities and service. I think to do the job we must have at least—

Mr. Deans: Careful now, the member is getting into the bag men.

Mr. Sopha: Just a minute now. Your bag men are in the United States. They are in Pittsburgh. I am referring to the NDP. Their bag men are in Pittsburgh.

Mr. M. Makarchuk (Brantford): The member does not know what he is talking about.

Mr. Sopha: The United Steelworkers of America and the United Auto Workers are in Detroit. Those are their bag men, if the member wants to speak about bag men. That is where they are.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Speaker, I will close off by saying that if we are to do this job that we have to do, this government does not seem to be able to cope with the situation. The fact is they are almost to the point of insolvency now. I think they are going to have to go the route that some other economies have gone, and no doubt the Minister of Revenue has his economists looking at the New York state picture. But I think we are going to have to set a goal—geared to our population—of $5 billion investment for this province for the next ten years.

Mr. MacDonald: Is this the hon. member's budget?

Mr. Sargent: It is not my budget, it is a budget of smarter people than you or I, and you could learn something, too, by checking up on a way out of this, instead of criticizing all the time.

Mr. MacDonald: I hope I do not talk in contradictions.

Mr. Sopha: Every time someone speaks for Canada, the hon. member for York South opens his mouth in opposition.

Mr. Sargent: You are right.

Mr. Sopha: Every time.

Mr. MacDonald: The leader of the Liberal federation in B.C. says that they have just lost confidence in Trudeau.

Mr. Sopha: He has done that to me. When I spoke for Canada he opened his mouth in opposition.

Mr. Deans: Does the member speak for Canada?

Interjections by hon. members.

An hon. member: They are speaking for Inco.

Mr. Sargent: It is obvious, Mr. Speaker, that the government cannot launch and sustain a programme of such magnitude through the expediency of the inflationary depths of financing. Instead it must apply the key lesson—to be read into the growth of the economy itself—and that is the imaginative and responsible use of credit. That is how everything operates in the world, the use of credit.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Sargent: What a painful operator. You build up a speech to something important and then you have a clown like that come in. What are you going to do?

Mr. Pilkey: The member is hitting below the belt; remember, the belt.

Mr. Sargent: I am hitting pretty high on the clown first.

Mr. MacDonald: A little below the belt—

Mr. Sopha: Control yourself for the soliloquy of Hamlet.

Mr. Sargent: Precisely such use of credit has been pioneered in New York state. I was talking of the Minister of Revenue in New York state, and in the past ten years they have met, and are dealing with problems similar to those in Ontario today. They got to the point of insolvency. And if you think we are not there now you had better check up and find out.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Sargent: I am not asking the hon. member; I am telling him. Under creative federal leadership and co-operation of Ottawa—

Hon. J. H. White (Minister of Revenue): Mr. Speaker, for clarification!

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order! The hon. member for Grey-Bruce has the floor. If he will permit a question the hon. Minister may direct it to the hon. member.

Hon. Mr. White: Am I correct in thinking that the hon. member has suggested that we have a smaller deficit and make greater use of our provincial credit; is that the suggestion?

Mr. Sargent: I would like a chance to tell the Minister; in another two minutes I will have finished and then he can kick it around.

This is an exercise in futility, because basically it breaks down to three ways that this public credit will have to be used.

First, for the construction of facilities that are not self-supporting, such as parks, schools, mass-transportation. And the states and municipalities should authorize full faith and credit bonds with some form of Ottawa guarantee.

Second, the projects which are physical facilities and which can be made self-supporting. These include hospitals, universities and middle income housing. And for these physical facilities, the state, the province and the municipalities again would provide support where necessary. They should create agencies and authorities to issue revenue or self liquidating bonds.

Third, is the area of public credit, but it cannot do the job alone. Incentives to attract private capital for the rebuilding of slum areas must be provided. This can be accomplished on a large scale by agencies such as the New York State Urban Development Corporation. The key is with the authorization of the issue of $1 billion of self liquidating bonds, and a wide range of incentives. This corporation can attract $5 billion of private capital.

Mr. MacDonald: Remember the Wintermeyer bonds!

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Speaker, this is a proven point; it has worked. If the Minister does not know about it now, he is derelict in his duty, and I suggest to you, in closing, that the tools are available. Mr. Speaker, the job can be done, and if we are to renew the whole promise of peace and justice and progress in the life of Canada, which we are trying to do, we cannot make less of a commitment. Thank you very much for your time.

Mr. M. Makarchuk (Brantford): Before I go into the main portion of my speech, Mr. Deputy Speaker, I would like to congratulate you in your other capacity, and also the Speaker, for the manner in which you both conduct the business of this House.

I would like at this time, to digress a little from what I had planned to say and just mention a few things about political finances.

The source of NDP funds is public. If anybody wants to know where we get our money, from what particular sources, from what individuals, information is available. All we ask in this particular party, is for the other two parties in this House to make public the same information, and if they have nothing to hide, then I do not see any reason why they are trying to keep it secret.

One only has to look at where their sources come from. You hear these rather feeble protestations as to how they are concerned about Canada, and you find out that the same corporations that feed the funds are also the same corporations who have their continentalist inclinations, who wish to tie in the economy and who wish to make this particular country a colonial empire of another country. Your two parties are, in sense, playing footsy with them.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to comment a bit on the manner in which the business is conducted in this Legislature and examine some of the operations of this House. I think you could start with the tedious opening exercises that many of the members have to endure before the start of every sitting. For a start, Mr. Speaker, I would suggest that you make some effort to update the prayers. I would suggest, besides the fact, Mr. Speaker, that there is no reason why we should dwell continuously in antiquity. It has always puzzled me why the Queen should be the only one that receives God's blessings. Why not include some of her relatives? And in the interests of an egalitarian society, include all the other people in the world. Concern for the British Empire perhaps could be more concretely expressed by asking for some divine intervention on behalf of the pound sterling. Perhaps in times of a Commonwealth conference you could add an extra request to the deity, something to the effect that the Prime Minister be blessed with women who have curvatures, and also tongues.

With a bit of imagination, Mr. Speaker, there is no limit to the number of matters that could be brought up for celestial consideration. For the Treasurer (Mr. MacNaughton), a balanced budget; or a surplus, because he believes in it. For the Adam Smith economist in the Liberal Party, a balanced budget so that they would shut up. Inclusion of a request for some divine assistance in passing a bill would probably indicate to the House much better than the order paper the matters of concern or the legislative trust of this government.

Of course, Mr. Speaker, if imagination starts to falter, there is no reason why you should not ask for some divine inspiration on your own behalf. If anything, Mr. Speaker, your job will take on new meaning. In short, you will become the chief liaison officer between us mere mortals and the deity.

At the same time, you will introduce new excitement into this House. Each day the opening exercises would provide something new for the members. Instead of spending much time in the ante-room agonizing over their conscience, waiting for the opening ceremonies to end, we could all be inside in our seats, looking forward to another meaningless, but at least new and entertaining performance by the Speaker.

Mr. Speaker, during this session and times in the past, hon. members have expressed criticisms regarding the secretarial and office facilities provided for the members. Last year,

Mr. Speaker, through the use of telephone answering service, I was able to keep track of calls made to my residence by constituents. In June, 1968, I received 205 calls. In July, 207. In August, 147; September, 313; October, 382; November, 358.

This is over and above the calls that were answered by myself. I do not believe that mine is a unique situation. I know of other members who have to deal with as many calls or more. The point here, Mr. Speaker, is that most of the callers are having problems and expect answers from their elected members.

On an average, a member will probably get about eight to ten constituency problems thrown into his lap every day. Many of these, such as inquiries about OMSIP mix-ups, can be handled by the secretary providing she has time. However, when you have a ratio of about three or four members to every secretary, not only does she not have time to do any constituency work but generally is unable to finish typing the normal daily correspondence.

As a result, the member is forced into finding out why Mrs. Jones' welfare cheque was not sent out or why Mrs. Morrison had her OMSIP cancelled, or any of the other many problems that a constituent may want to bring to the attention of his member. At the same time, the member is forced into doing a considerable amount of routine work such as filing and telephoning. The member is also expected to attend all committee meetings, caucus meetings, meet with delegations, go through enormous piles of mail, do his research, write his speeches, make speeches and spend time in the House.

Mr. Speaker, I am not complaining about these responsibilities. As Harry Truman said, if you do not like the heat, you should get out of the kitchen. With this I agree. The point I am trying to stress is that it is only right for a citizen of this province to expect to have somebody intervene on his behalf.

At the same time, it is the responsibility of this government to ensure that the member has adequate facilities to carry out his duties to the people that he represents. The responsibility of running this province is not for dilettantes, or part-time political dabblers or for gentlemen of leisure. It is a serious, demanding responsibility of an ever-increasing complexity.

Hon. J. H. White (Minister of Revenue): Well, the member's colleagues do not realize that; they are never in the House.

Mr. E. W. Martel (Sudbury East): The Minister should just take a look at his own benches.

Mr. Makarchuk: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I would suggest to the hon. Minister that he should look at his own benches to see the number of seats that he has vacant on that side before he starts commenting on this matter.

Hon. Mr. White: We do not have one member who is absent like your members are.

Mr. J. E. Stokes (Thunder Bay): There were six over there yesterday.

Mr. Makarchuk: Mr. Speaker, there is a civilized, efficient way of going about this business of government. In a province such as Ontario, which produces more than half the wealth of this country, it is pure stupidity to deny the member adequate secretarial help and it does not matter on which side of the House he sits.

In my mind, Mr. Speaker, I am convinced that the members also do not receive adequate compensation. Unless a member has other sources of income, his legislative salary and expenses are not adequate to cover the expenses of maintaining two residences for eight or nine months of the year.

Mr. Martel: Except if you are a Cabinet Minister.

Hon. Mr. White: These Socialists are quick to jump into the trough.

Mr. Stokes: What about the Minister's party chief Whip?

Mr. Makarchuk: Mr. Speaker, many times in this House we have discussed the possibility of an ombudsman. And although I have considered this to be a commendable idea, at this time I feel that this particular function can and should be carried out by the individual members. In the first place, no single ombudsman could ever hope to begin to untangle some of the contradictions that pass as bureaucratic decisions in this government.

This province would require about ten ombudsmen alone just to solve some of the mysteries that emanate from the OMSIP department. In many cases I have been approached by individuals who have tried to straighten out their own particular problems. In talking to them, I find out that the individual has exhausted all the usual avenues of approach and has lost confidence in the government.

He has written, phoned, and in some cases, has even made a personal effort to find the person responsible for his predicament. He comes away from this frustrating experience convinced that the government is an unresponsive monster with tentacles, with a body but no discernible head.

Naturally, Mr. Speaker, this generates within a person a series of impressions, most of them hostile, regarding the purpose and the responsibility of this government and this Legislature. He starts to wonder if the legislative process is really relevant to his existence or his problems. If he approaches the member and the member is successful in coping with the man's problem, then there is a certain restoration of faith in the government.

A single ombudsman, Mr. Speaker, would be swamped the day he went into business. As an example, if the government persists in its basic shelter exemption bribery, this alone is guaranteed to tie up the ombudsman for at least two months of the year, as he tries desperately to pacify the enraged populace.

Mr. Speaker, the basic shelter exemption grant is quite a puzzle. Offhand, one would be tempted to inquire as to what the Cabinet was smoking when they decided on the plan, or just who was the fearless innovator who sold them on the idea. At a time when the public sector of our society is desperate for more investment, when the municipalities are pleading for money, this government decides to throw away $150 million and then increase taxes and borrow more money.

Resorting to one of the oldest tricks in the book, trying to bribe the people with their own money, indicates not only the mental sterility of the Tory party, but also provides conclusive evidence to the desperation that exists in the Tory ranks, as they struggle to preserve their existence. If this were 1970, the basic shelter exemption legislation could probably be described as "Robarts' Last Stand". As things are, legislation which will be "Robarts' Last Stand" will probably appear in 1970 or the spring of 1971.

Mr. Speaker, one of the matters that concern me is the functioning of committees in this Legislature. There seems to be some confusion in the minds of a few of the members as to what powers the committees have to request people to appear and testify.

At this point, it seems that the matter is being clarified to a certain extent. As I understand it, the committees have the power to subpoena individuals to appear and to testify before the committees. If this is the case then I feel the committees can play a meaningful role in the functioning of the Legislature and its relevance to the people of this province. To them, Mr. Speaker, this Legislature is the court of last resort. In many cases they have nowhere else to turn to seek redress, air their grievances or find answers to their problems except through this House, providing it is prepared to act.

In the process of these public hearings by the committee, some light and at times a considerable amount of publicity, will be shed on the affairs of the province. Perhaps we may even find that the Legislature will start to re-assert its role as the institution that guides the affairs of this province.

In my case, Mr. Speaker, I am on three committees of the House; they are labour, agriculture and food and natural resources and tourism. At this time, Mr. Speaker, I give notice to the chairman of the labour committee, the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands (Mr. Apps)—and I hope he calls a meeting soon, we are waiting—that I will introduce a motion demanding that the management of Thompson Newspapers and representatives of the Toronto Newspaper Guild appear before this committee to answer some questions. Through the action of this corporation, peoples' lives are being seriously threatened, individuals may lose their homes, their places in the community.

Their families and their children are being affected. I can assure that the members in this party are not prepared to sit on the sidelines and watch the corporate cannibal proceed to destroy the hopes and aspirations of the individuals who are involved in that strike in Peterborough.

In the same motion, Mr. Speaker, I will include the management of Proctor Silex and also, representatives from the International Union of Electrical Workers.

If the Ontario Hydro dispute is not settled, then I would suggest that representatives from Hydro and the union should also be called to appear before the committee to present their versions of the dispute.

I would suggest that representatives from The Department of Labour, particularly conciliation officers, should be invited to participate in these discussions. There is no reason why any other labour dispute in this province should not be subject to scrutiny by this committee.

When we were selecting the chairman of the natural resources and tourism committee, my colleague from Timiskaming (Mr. Jackson) moved that representatives from Texas Gulf and other mining companies be invited to appear before the committee to testify and answer questions concerning their particular fields of operation. At that time, the chairman, the member for Fort William (Mr. Jessiman), was more interested in having the committee spend its time watching movies, but after some persuasion he assured us that it would be a lively committee.

Well, Mr. Speaker, if it is going to be lively I hope the resurrection will come about pretty soon.

I can assure him now that motions will be introduced to have the mining companies appear before the committee. One of the intents in calling Texas Gulf is to find out what they plan to do regarding the smelter for northern Ontario. It is no use trying to ask the Minister of Mines (Mr. A. F. Lawrence); he does not seem interested in volunteering any information. Perhaps he does not know and perhaps he does and would prefer to be silent.

The point, Mr. Speaker, is that the resources of this province belong to the people of this province and it is about time that somebody around here started to take an interest in what happens to the wealth that lies in our ground or stands in our forests.

The corporations and their henchmen have demonstrated over the years that they can look after themselves or their kind. This Legislature should now start demonstrating that it can look after the people.

The other committee on which I find myself is the agricultural committee. During our first meeting I introduced a motion to have representatives from the meat processing industry—processors, food warehouse operators, agricultural equipment manufacturers, fertilizer manufacturers, and other groups associated with the agricultural industry—appear at one time or another before the committee. The Tory members of the committee, who are quick to recognize where their interests lie, hastily voted against the motion, and it was defeated. However, we did eventually settle on calling equipment manufacturers and fertilizer producers to appear before the committee.

On Tuesday, the chairman of the committee, the member for Prince Edward-Lennox (Mr. Whitney), announced that the committee's secretary will send out invitations to representatives of these groups to appear at some future meeting. At this time I want to put on notice to the hon. member for Prince Edward-Lennox that at the next meeting of the agricultural committee I will once again introduce motions to have representatives from all other agribusiness operations appear before the committee.

It is time that farmers in Ontario knew why tractors cost $2,000 or $3,000 more here than they do in England, or why potato harvesters manufactured in Canada or the United States sell for about $7,000 in England as against $11,000 to $12,000 here, or why fertilizer is $20 cheaper in the United States.

The other day I was informed, Mr. Speaker, that the Ontario Farmers' Union negotiated a contract, at a lower price, with the local fertilizer producers and they just turned around and found that somebody else had automatically cut the price by $5 a ton. If this can be done there is no reason why other prices cannot drop.

At the same time, Mr. Speaker, this Legislature should look at all farm costs. In recent federal government task force on agriculture discussions it was noted that over the past 20 years the cost of inputs to the United States farmers has gone up 41 per cent. During the same time the cost for Canadian farmers has gone up by 79 per cent.

This is the reason why I am introducing the motion. We should look at the cost of all the inputs used by the farmers, not just machinery and fertilizers, and if the members opposite who profess to care about the farmers would vote like they talk, we would not have any trouble passing that motion.

From past performances it is quite obvious, Mr. Speaker, that this government is not really prepared to assert itself in the affairs of this province. But it is also obvious that the great mass outside these walls is not prepared to let events just float in this province.

After the next election the people of Ontario will again reassert their role in deciding the affairs of this province. For the people are starting to see that, although they may have princess telephones and new model cars every year, and shopping centres at every corner, provided by the corporation, they also see, Mr. Speaker, that the air is becoming unfit to breathe; the water unfit to swim or drink; the waiting list for hospital beds growing longer every day; places for older people becoming scarcer every week. They see thousands of families locked in perpetual poverty and misery; a housing market that does not provide housing; an economy that throws hundreds of people out of jobs on the whim of a corporate decision; a society that denies equal opportunity for education; and never hesitates when it comes to taxation. All this, Mr. Speaker, in a time of unparalleled affluence.

This is what is going to sink the two old parties. Despite all their protestations, their voices of concern, their concern about housing and so on, all these great expressions of opinion, during this time, Mr. Speaker, they are not prepared to tackle the power structure that rules this province and country.

And as long as the corporate interests continue to set the priorities in our society and the governments continue to acquiesce, the social problems will not only remain but will increase.

One has only to look across the border to the south, to see an example of the affluent society with perverted priorities and princess telephones. I do not have to go into statistics about murder rates, or robbery rates, or mortality rates, or anything of that nature, or any of the other features of a sick society. You have to have blinkers in order to overlook them.

But there is a lesson that can and should be learned from what is happening to the south.

Putting more policemen into the streets will not solve the problems. Policemen are not social reformers. And yet, right here in Toronto, Mr. Speaker, when the Star carried a series of articles on Regent Park outlining some of the unsavoury situations that exist in that development and which call for social action, the Minister of housing introduced his own version of the constabulary society. Instead of getting to work, or at least planning, to provide the social facilities such as swimming pools, recreation centres, social workers, reasonable welfare, this Minister appointed a full time policeman to take care of the social problems. This, in its own microcosmic way, Mr. Speaker, demonstrates the nature of the Tory philosophy.

There are ways of solving the social problems in our society, but they cost money, and the money will have to come from the same power structures that control the Tory and the Liberal parties.

You have all heard the Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts), the Treasurer and other members of the Cabinet perambulating about this province, this country and even on the other side of the Atlantic pleading provincial poverty. There just was nowhere they could get money unless they got it from the federal government. Of course, the hon. boys were busy running their own special campaign on poverty.

During the same time, Mr. Speaker, one had only to look at the financial pages of any paper to see how poor things were or just how the economy was doing.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the hon. member could find an appropriate place to adjourn.

Mr. Makarchuk: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Makarchuk moves the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister of Correctional Services): Mr. Speaker, on Monday we will continue the debate on the speech from the Throne.

Hon. Mr. Grossman moves the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to.

The House adjourned at 6.00 o'clock, p.m.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

MONDAY, FEBRUARY 17, 1969

The House met today at 2.30 o'clock, p.m.

Prayers.

Mr. Speaker: Our guests at the present time in the east and west galleries are students from William Treadway Public School in Scarborough; and in the west gallery, students from Hincks School in Toronto. Later this afternoon in the east gallery there will be guests from the Adult Education Centre on Keele Street, in Toronto.

Mr. Speaker: Petitions.

Clerk of the House: The following petitions have been received:

Of Harry P. Botnick, Abraham Bleeman, Yaakov S. Weinberg, Sandor Hofstedter, Wilferd Gordon, Mark A. Levy, Alex Rubin, Gedalyah Felder, Nachum L. Rabinovitch and Nota Schiller praying that an Act may pass incorporating Maimonides Schools for Jewish Studies having university powers.

Mr. Speaker: Presenting reports.

Mr. Henderson, from the standing orders and printing committee, presented the committee's fourth report which was read and adopted:

Your committee has carefully examined the following petitions and finds the notices, as published in each case, sufficient:

Of the corporation of the city of Hamilton authorizing payment for certain public works, out of the corporation's general funds; and for other purposes.

Of the corporation of the township of Teck praying that an Act may pass authorizing debentures for an addition and alteration to Kirkland Lake Collegiate and Vocational Institute.

Of Carleton University praying that an Act may pass changing the procedure for appointment of persons to the Senate of the University; and for other purposes.

Of the trustees of the William J. Miller Trust praying that an Act may pass authorizing a new method of appointing trustees of the trust.

Of Lawrence Michael Baldwin, Kenneth Harold John Clarke, Herman Berthold Geiger-

Torel, Arthur Ellis Gelber, William Hugh Graham, Walter Homburger, James Mavor Moore, Robert Edward Peel, Wallace Arven Russell, Muriel Sherrin, Raymond Frederick Wickens, Calvin Gordon Rand, William Tennent Wylie and Frederick Gerald Townsend praying that an Act may pass incorporating them as Co-ordinated Arts Services.

Of the corporation of the city of Sarnia praying that an Act may pass confirming a certain bylaw with respect to a municipal transportation system.

Of John Robert Banks, Evelyn Florence Banks and John Lewis Banks praying that an Act may pass reviving the Charter of Banks Alignment Limited.

Of McMaster University praying that an Act may pass changing the composition, method of election and powers of the board of governors and senate of the university.

Mr. Speaker: Introduction of bills.

TOWNSHIP OF TECK

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

TILBURY PUBLIC SCHOOL BOARD

Mr. R. F. Ruston (Essex-Kent) moves first reading of bill intituled, an Act respecting Tilbury public school board.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

CARLETON UNIVERSITY

Mr. A. B. R. Lawrence (Carleton East) moves first reading of bill intituled, an Act respecting Carleton University.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

THE CEMETERIES ACT

Mr. M. Shulman (High Park) moves first reading of bill intituled, an Act to amend The Cemeteries Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Speaker, this Act removes the necessity for a coroner to sign a cremation certificate in cases that have already been investigated by a coroner. The purpose of this bill is to reduce the waste in The Attorney General's Department.

Mr. Speaker: The Prime Minister has a statement.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to advise you and the members of the House that the Treasurer (Mr. MacNaughton) today signed a document for the second loan obtained by this government in the European capital market. We anticipate this borrowing will yield approximately $64 million in Canadian funds. The actual transaction totals 240 million Deutsche marks, consisting of:

A public bond issue of 150 million Deutsche marks at 6.5 per cent, with a maximum term of 15 years. Redemption will commence on February 1, 1975 and will be made in ten equal annual instalments, for an effective term of ten and one half years.

Then there is a private placement of 90 million Deutsche marks bearing a coupon of 6.25 per cent for a term of six years.

The signing was completed in the head office of the Deutsche Bank at Frankfurt, West Germany. This bank is handling both the private placement and the public issue for the government of Ontario. Application is being made for listing of these securities on the Frankfurt stock exchange.

Sir, I would like to point out that while the Deutsche Bank is the official manager for us in this loan, it is truly an international bond issue. It is being underwritten by one of the strongest consortiums in the European financial field, made up of 63 of the leading European banks, savings institutions, financial houses and investment dealers. In addition to some 25 institutions in Germany, others are located in England, France, Italy, Belgium, the Netherlands, Norway, Denmark, Sweden, Switzerland, Austria and Kuwait.

While we are borrowing in Deutsche marks we are not borrowing simply from Germany, because these—

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): Do the Arabs have a piece of the action too?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Yes. These Deutsche marks are held in all these countries that I mentioned.

This second overseas loan will bring the total of our borrowing for Ontario on the western European market to just over $100 million for the current fiscal year; and this is the total of our external borrowings for 1968-1969 on behalf of government operations, excluding Ontario Hydro.

The earlier borrowing was a private placement amounting to some $40 million Canadian and was completed during August last year. The interest rate on that issue was 6.75 per cent, a rate one half per cent higher than the new borrowing. Hon. members might be interested to know that those notes are selling at a premium on the European capital market today.

I would like to emphasize that both these loans are part of the budgetary plans for the fiscal year 1968-1969, as outlined by the Treasurer when he brought in his Budget in 1968. Our loans and increases in the public debt in the current year match exactly the requirements which were set forth in the presentation of the 1968 Budget.

While these borrowings are not related to specific uses, members will appreciate that a considerable part of our total expenditure in any one year is on capital facilities. As the 1969 Budget statement pointed out: "It is reasonable and equitable to stretch out the financing of these capital investments to match the timing of resulting benefits."

I would suggest that governments in respect to borrowing are not much different from private corporations which secure long term loans to finance construction of plants or to purchase equipment; or indeed from the individual householder who arranges a mortgage to purchase a house, or the individual who seeks the facilities of a bank to finance the purchase of an automobile. In all cases, the advantages of the immediate construction of the plant or use of the home or the new car are judged to outweigh the cost of the required financing and it is considered reasonable to extend at least a portion of the repayment over the life of whatever you choose to purchase.

The financing programme of this government is entirely consistent with the advice on public borrowing provided to the government by the Ontario committee on taxation, or the Smith committee. Hon. members will recall the committee recommended that the net capital debt of the province should not exceed nine per cent of the province's gross provincial product. I am pleased to be able to assure you and the members of this House, Mr. Speaker, that while our net capital debt cannot be determined specifically until the end of this fiscal year, it remains comfortably below that recommended limit.

You will be pleased to learn, also, that the interest cost of these new borrowings is about one percentage point lower than the rate Ontario could secure for an issue of comparable size in the Canadian capital market. This favourable rate will provide a saving of some $600,000 annually to the taxpayers of Ontario.

Mr. Shulman: What happens when they revalue?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: I will get to that.

Over the life of the loan this represents a savings of many millions of dollars to the taxpayers of Ontario. In addition, this low rate provides a hedge against the possibility of a revaluation of the German mark. I might point out that whenever you borrow money from anybody on a long-term basis, you always have hanging over you the risk of what revaluation there might be in the money in which you have to repay. We cannot avoid the possibility of revaluation, of course, but this low interest rate will give us a cushion against the higher costs of repayment in the event that the value of the German mark should be increased in terms of Canadian dollars.

There are other significant benefits to Ontario and to our economy through borrowing in the European market. In the first place it extends our international associations and encourages a closer relationship with foreign capital markets.

By borrowing in Europe—I think this is very important—by borrowing in Europe we avoid further pressures on the North American capital market which, with the cost of funds in North America, is already inflationary. We have not added to that situation. In effect, too, if we get our capital requirements in Europe we leave the Canadian market free for private business, for industry and for our municipalities, which also need to borrow money for their capital requirements.

So I am confident that the continued confidence in Ontario's economy as expressed by the acceptance of this loan in the European financial community, will also encourage overseas investors to look more closely at the many opportunities there are for investment in both Canada and Ontario.

In the years ahead, our country and our province will continue, of course, to require considerable capital investment if we are to develop our resources. We are very happy that we have been able to make this contribution through these loans towards broadening the source from which our future capital requirements may be obtained.

Mr. Nixon: If we are to accept the arguments put forward by the Premier in his statement of the last few moments as making it a good business proposition in many ways for Ontario to enter the German market, how does he explain the decision by Ontario to enter the New York market for $75 million two weeks ago on behalf of Ontario Hydro?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, that was a loan negotiated by Hydro, and I think perhaps more closely meets their requirements in that market. Hydro will be looking to other places for money in the future as well. Traditionally, Hydro has borrowed in the New York market, and they went there because they could get their requirements and could obtain the loan they wanted there. But I am quite certain they are looking elsewhere as well.

Mr. Nixon: Yes.

As a matter of clarification, surely they do not enter any market; does the government not enter it on their behalf?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: No, Mr. Speaker, we guarantee Hydro's bonds.

Mr. Nixon: I understood those were in the name of Ontario.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Pardon?

Mr. Nixon: I understood those bonds on the New York market were in the name of the province of Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Well they may be; if they are we simply turn the funds over to Hydro. They negotiate those loans themselves. In other words, they have their own banking groups and so on.

Mr. Nixon: This might be an appropriate time, Mr. Speaker, on a matter of clarification—or it could be done another time—for the Premier to explain his personal involvement in the negotiation of this loan.

Mr. G. Ben (Humber): The Prime Minister only has one leg to stand on.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: I have two legs to stand on, one well buttressed down at the bottom.

I was very interested in the reference to my own personal involvement in the thing. It is not usual, I realize, for the head of the government to get involved in these matters, but it represents an entry into a new field and I wanted to indicate that as a province we were interested in this transaction politically as well as purely financially. I think there are very broad benefits that can flow to this country and to this province by our becoming involved with financiers in other countries.

As I pointed out in the statement, all the benefits are not necessarily purely commercial or financial. We are looking, of course, for import replacements at all times. Now if we can spread a loan such as this as broadly as we can through this bank, then of course it is bound to create interest in the province.

I think many people in Europe will be interested in why the banks think Ontario is as good a place as it is to lend money. I would hope there would flow from these transactions inflow of capital and inflow of industry. We have trade missions all over the place trying to develop precisely this and it is all part of a total programme of development and expansion in the province, in order to ensure that we get those 100,000 new jobs we need every year.

I do not propose to go abroad every time we float a loan, but I do think there are occasions when it is valuable for us to indicate that we have, as I say, a political interest in these matters as well as a purely financial interest.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I might ask a couple of questions in clarification?

1. Did the government seek this loan in Canadian dollars rather than Deutschmarks?

2. What will the net proceeds of the $64 million loan be? In other words are we getting $64 million in toto, or is that minus commissions and other charges? And if so, what is the effective interest rate through to maturity?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, the member has two questions. First, we could not borrow Canadian dollars from this group of people from whom we borrowed these Deutschmarks, because they have not got Canadian dollars to lend; that is the first point.

On the second point: I am afraid the member will have to wait and ask the Treasurer. I do not have the information. The effective rate in any one of these loans comes about through a combination of charges.

Mr. MacDonald: The net proceeds!

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Yes, the net proceeds, plus commissions and right down the whole line. There are a great many people involved, but as I understand it—well I had better not tell the member what I understand, I had better take his question as notice and allow the Treasurer to give him the precise figures, because they probably come out to three decimal points of interest. But I can tell the member that in general figures it is about one per cent on the net cost of the money—about one per cent less than the rate at which we can borrow here.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. Minister of Transport has a statement.

Hon. I. Haskett (Minister of Transport): At this time each year there is a great deal of interest in the sale of motor vehicle license plates. Last year's plates for passenger cars, dual purpose vehicles and motorcycles will no longer be valid after midnight on Friday, February 28.

Only about one-half of the 1969 plates have been issued in the 11 weeks since they first went on sale on December 2. The other half are still to be obtained. Nearly 1,000,000 sets will have to be distributed in the two weeks that remain before the expiry date on February 28.

While it may not be possible to avoid line-ups at this late date, I would suggest that the members may wish to encourage motorists to get their plates in the next few days instead of leaving it until the very last minute.

I expect that many of the members will be receiving inquiries about the February 28 deadline. Since 1965, when the opening date for issuing new plates was advanced one month to December 1, motorists have been able to obtain their plates at any time during the period of three full months.

Combined with this added convenience there was the firm decision to make the deadline a final one. These procedures provide the utmost fairness to all motorists and they ensure that no motorist need be stuck in a long lineup. Therefore, to maintain the consistency and fairness of this system, I reiterate that there will be no extension of the deadline, which is midnight on Friday, February 28.

Mr. H. Peacock (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I could ask the Minister a question of clarification about his statement. In view of his commitment to the deadline, will he be making any improvement in the head issuing office's service to persons applying for plates, where recently as many as seven of the ten wickets were not staffed?

Hon. Mr. Haskett: Mr. Speaker, I would be glad to look into that and ascertain if it be so.

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): Mr. Speaker, on a point of clarification, I wonder if he would inquire as well whether it is possible to have these offices open in the evenings and on Saturdays so that people who have no other opportunity to buy licenses can do so in the evening and on Saturdays?

Hon. Mr. Haskett: Mr. Speaker, in a general way this matter was dealt with in a reply to a question from the member for Essex-Kent (Mr. Ruston) with respect to the issuing office in Chatham. I made a statement then with regard to the kind of service we expect the issuers to give.

Mr. Singer: Well, Mr. Speaker, with great respect to the hon. Minister—

Mr. Speaker: Order! The hon. member for Downsview can not convert this into a debate.

Mr. Singer: Oh, it is not a debate! I was not interested in the answer about Essex-Kent, I was interested so far as it applies to Toronto.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member is out of order. The hon. leader of the Opposition has a question.

Mr. Singer: I guess he does not want to serve the public then; too bad!

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Premier. Can a time be set aside for discussion in the House of the recent federal-provincial conference; and also what is the possibility of establishing a committee of the Legislature to deal with constitutional matters?

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, I have a comparable question; perhaps I can present it at this point?

In view of the wide ranging nature of current constitutional review and of the desirability that Opposition as well as government parties be involved before the Legislature is asked to approve decisions arrived at by the Constitutional conference, would the Prime Minister consider the establishment of an all party standing committee and/or a special constitutional committee by this Legislature?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, to deal with the question of the debate first: It was on Wednesday, February 5, I tabled a document which is entitled "Propositions of the government of Ontario submitted to the continuing committee of officials as of December, 1968." That is now a sessional document and I thought we might place it on the order paper. It would serve as a good basis, because it contains not the position of the government but the propositions the government put to that continuing committee and really is very wide-ranging in what it covers.

With that we could also debate the conference itself, in the event there was anyone who wanted to make comments about it; so that would look after the debate aspect of the situation.

I think perhaps we should leave that on the order paper for a week or so, so that members who wish to participate in the debate can read the propositions and decide which of them they might like to make some comment on.

As far as establishing a committee to deal with constitutional matters, I find it difficult, really, in my own mind to come to a conclusion as to what such a committee might do. At the moment, there is really nothing we can refer to that committee. This whole question of constitutional reform is in the beginning stage. I think that was quite obvious at the conference last week. I would think that we might be better served by some general discussion in this House, as I have suggested, which could take place as outlined and the members could express their opinions at this stage as to what they think this government should do.

Now there is no doubt that before we get to any constitutional change in this country, there will have to be discussions and decisions taken by all the governments, and of course before any decisions like that could be taken there would have to be very wide discussion as to what the decisions were to be. But we have not reached the position where there are any decisions and I think that at the moment we might be better served if we were to have a general debate.

We have as a government made available to the members here and to the public all the information we have been able to gather and the research we have done. This has been published in various forms and made available to the members and to the public generally in order to stimulate discussion. But I just do not think, at the moment, that a committee really would serve much purpose. It may be that later on when we get into greater specifics such a committee might serve a useful purpose.

When we established the advisory committee we discussed various alternatives, such as the establishment of a Royal commission to examine the matter, or a select committee of this House; we decided at that time that the advisory committee, made up of people drawn from all political persuasions in the province, men who had spent a great deal of time thinking about these things, was probably the best approach we could make at that time. While I do not think that committee would have much purpose at the present time that does not mean that as these matters progress, at some later stage, we would not need a select committee of the Legislature to deal with something that might be a little more specific than those things with which we are dealing now.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, if I might put a supplementary question.

Would the Prime Minister not agree that the experience in the Legislature of Quebec would indicate that this would involve the members of the Legislature in Ontario in something more than general debate? It would in fact give them an opportunity to discuss with, and question, the members of the advisory committee who are now available only to the members of the government and probably only to a small committee in the government itself.

There is a tendency for us on this side to believe, because of the lack of such a committee that we are asked to deal only in general terms and, in fact, rubber stamp a decision that the Premier and his advisors have taken, well in advance of any opportunity to even discuss it.

Beyond that, I would like to bring to your attention, sir, on a point of order, that in casting my mind about for a method whereby I could put before the Legislature, as leader of the Opposition, the proposal by form of a resolution that we have such a committee, I found that there was only one course open. That was to give notice of a motion which would be debated in private member's hour, and by agreement can never be voted on.

I feel this is a serious shortcoming in the rules that govern our deliberations, that it is not possible for me as an Opposition member, or anyone else, to put forward a motion or a resolution of that type with any thought that it could get careful consideration in the way that I believe it should.

Mr. MacDonald: Before the Prime Minister replies I wonder if I might ask a related supplementary question? In view of the—

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, my point is this. I understand it was decided in Ottawa last week that the continuing committee on officials should report quarterly, rather than having these rather elongated sessions without any report. Therefore, would the Prime Minister not feel that with the prospect of quarterly reports, as well as many other topics—I think there are many issues—these many topics, plus the prospect of quarterly reports from the continuing committee of officials, would provide an agenda for a continuing committee of this Legislature.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: As I say, Mr. Speaker, I do not. I still hold to my opinion which is not lightly taken—I gave it a good deal of thought. We are in the process of evolving a method of amending our constitution; that is precisely what we are doing in Canada today, and I would be quite happy to bear in mind the comments the hon. members have made. But I go back to my point; at the moment I really do not see what such a committee can do, that cannot be done here in the House.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for York South has a further question?

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, I have two or three further questions. My next one is to the Prime Minister, also.

Would the Prime Minister elaborate on his comments to the press in Ottawa last week that he, or the Ontario government, does not favour the bilingual districts proposed by the B and B Commission because of their inflexibility?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: The only elaboration I can make is that as we have looked into the situation, we do not feel any good purpose would be served by drawing any tight sort of boundaries around areas and then terming them "bilingual".

For a long time, as I have pointed out before in this Legislature, we have approached these problems—before they became matters of such public discussion as they are now. We have been able to determine where we felt our citizens in the province needed bilingual services in order to avail themselves of the services of the government, and we have provided them. We intend to intensify these arrangements as much as we can from a practical point of view.

I think we all realize the great problem. There are bilingual personnel available but we do not think that any good purpose would be served by drawing arbitrary boundaries and saying, on one side of the line, you are bilingual, and on the other side, you are not. We do not think that this is a good way of doing it.

There is always the worry—the term of ghetto has been used—I do not particularly like that term, but nonetheless the idea expressed by it is among the nagging worries one has, if you draw these very sharp lines.

We think that we can achieve our purpose much more easily by having flexibility and by not establishing inflexibility through such boundaries. We do not really feel that such boundaries would make the task any easier.

Now, the B and B Commission recommended this, and the federal government is considering it for its own purposes and dealing with the matter right across Canada. As far as we are concerned in this province, we think we can achieve our aims without the rigidity that would be involved.

Mr. MacDonald: Without disputing the validity of the government's conclusion, by way of a supplementary question, may I ask the Prime Minister—I assume that the government has come to this conclusion after having the benefit of the report of the task force—the five task forces—some of which looked into problems related to bilingual districts. Would the Prime Minister reconsider his earlier decision not to make these reports available to the Legislature so that we too might share the benefits of their studies?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: I will take that request under consideration too, but they were established to advise the government. They are not committees of this Legislature. There are some areas we may not agree with, as regards what these task forces recommended, and just at the moment they are under very careful study. I am not addicted to keeping information away from the members of the House if it is the best interests of all concerned that it be put forward here, and so I will look at it in the light of what the hon. member says.

Mr. MacDonald: My next question, Mr. Speaker, is to the Attorney General:

1. Does the Minister intend to meet with representatives of the Society of Ontario Hydro Professional Engineers and Associates, as requested in their letter of February 13, 1969, with reference to Bill 48?

2. In view of the significant body of opposition to certain elements of the principle of Bill 48, how does the Minister intend to assure full opportunity for representation from the engineering profession before second reading?

Hon. A. A. Wishart (Attorney General): Mr. Speaker, the letter of February 13 came in at the end of the week; I think I saw it on my desk on Friday. I answered this letter today and gave a date for a meeting, particularly with the Ontario Hydro engineers representatives. That has been done, and of course I might mention that we have had a number of meetings with the executives of the Ontario Professional Engineers Association over the past two years while this bill has been in the course of draft preparation by their body. It then came to us, of course, and was reviewed and redrafted and submitted to the House for first reading in December.

Now, the procedure I would ordinarily follow and that we generally follow with respect to all major legislation, or important legislation, is to have the bill go to committee on second reading, and there afford the widest and fullest opportunity not only for representatives of the profession, but for the public and anyone affected to have an opportunity to come forward.

I have been told the engineers, those that have met me, that this would be our procedure, and that this bill would take considerable time in the legal bills committee; that there will be the fullest opportunity for the public to be represented and to make their case. Of course, this is an all-party committee, and so I am sure the representation, particularly of the hydro group and others who are in the same situation, will be fully debated.

I have also explained that the bill then comes back to the House, and faces discussion in committee of the whole House. I might say that a group met me at my home in Sault Ste. Marie on Saturday as soon as I got there in the morning. This was by arrangement and we spent some two hours discussing the principle of this bill.

So I am anxious to have the fullest discussion before second reading, as far as that goes, but particularly after second reading in the usual way, through committee and in this House.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, we have a bit of a dilemma here. Perhaps I did not make my point clear in the second aspect of my question. So let me try to rephrase it.

Since there is a considerable body of opinion within the profession that is opposed to the bill on principle, to exclude full representations from them, in advance of second reading, means that they are faced with a fait accompli when we go to the standing committee. I think you will find that there is considerable unhappiness about this.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Speaker, I see the point the hon. member is driving at.

The groups of engineers, particularly those employed by Hydro, have expressed to me the view that they think some changes should be made in the legislation. I have, to a considerable extent, I think, explained to them that I would expect the representations that come to me with respect to this bill, to come from the Ontario Professional Engineers Association.

Mr. MacDonald: Your predecessor had it blow up in his face when he did it that way some years ago.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Well, this group, who are members, I trust and believe, of that association, should make their association present their views and, of course, I will hear them in any event. But I do not think that I can take the views of a small group, which is a fraction of the body of engineers, and change the legislation in the face of the profession's representations.

Mr. G. Ben (Humber): Why not?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Well I think not and—

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister of Correctional Services): It could go on forever.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: —and I do not think I agree that the principles here are such that they can really take exception, they follow—

Mr. Singer: How do you know until—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Well, I have heard them. I have heard them.

Mr. MacDonald: Kelso Roberts took exactly the same stand before the standing committee, and he had to beat a hasty retreat by withdrawing his bill.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: The principles of this bill follow very thoroughly the principles laid down by Mr. McRuer in his principle for—

Mr. MacDonald: That is not so!

Mr. W. G. Pitman (Peterborough): No, they do not.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Well, the member will have a chance to debate that at the time but I think they do.

In any event, I am going to give the utmost opportunity for this group and the engineers, as a body, to be heard on every occasion. But I do not know that I can vary this bill. I do not think I shall propose it at this moment, at least unless I am convinced by the representations made to me within the next week or two weeks or three weeks if necessary.

I, at this moment, do not think I am going to change that bill which is now before the House having been introduced on first reading.

Mr. MacDonald: The Minister's characteristic flexibility would be useful here.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Well my flexibility is still open to change, but as I say, I have got to hear these views first.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Hamilton East has a question of the Prime Minister.

Mr. R. Gisborn (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, my question to the Prime Minister is, when did the government receive Professor Gertler's report on his study of the Niagara Escarpment?

What were the major findings of the study?

When will the report be released to the public?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Well, Mr. Speaker, the report itself consists of a number of volumes which were presented to the government over a continuing period of time; each section dealing with some particular phase, aspect or area of the Niagara Escarpment. So, it was not one single report delivered to the government—at one single time.

We have an advisory committee on regional development and it has been studying sections of the report as it has come in and the advisory committee has the last of these volumes at the present time.

Their function, as an advisory committee, is to report to a committee of Cabinet which they will do and when they have done that, which they have not done as yet, then we will make our comments upon the study and make a decision as to what will be made public.

So, it is at that stage of procedure at the present time.

Mr. Gisborn: Mr. Speaker, might I ask a supplementary to that?

If the advisory committee of the regional development council is studying the reports, what reason is there that members of the Legislature could not also have copies? Do I have to assume that they are keeping them confidential and privately in their hands?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, the government has all kinds of reports developed for it by various groups and bodies which are not necessarily public documents. You cannot run a government any other way.

These reports are presently being studied and they have not yet been considered by the government because, as I pointed out, the actual volumes of Professor Gertler's report had been referred to an advisory committee which, in turn, makes certain recommendations to the government and it has not done so as yet.

Until that is done we do not know.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for High Park has a question of the Prime Minister and certain other questions.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Speaker, I have a question to the Prime Minister in two parts.

Does the Prime Minister intend to answer the letter from Mayor John Valiquette of Sturgeon Falls requesting action to prevent the closing of the Abitibi Paper particle board plant?

Part two, does the government intend to take any action to assist Sturgeon Falls in this matter?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, when I received this letter from the mayor I immediately, of course, asked for comments from both the Minister of Lands and Forests and the Minister of Trade and Development. I have these now and I do propose to answer the mayor and will set out, in my answer to him, what the government proposes to do about it.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Speaker, will the Prime Minister let the Legislature know, in due course, what his plans are in this particular problem?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Yes, I suppose I will.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Speaker, I have some questions for the Attorney General from last week.

Why has Miss L. Chenier of 60 Ruddington Drive, Willowdale, not been supplied a copy of the transcript of evidence in the death of Beryl Higgins, which she ordered in September 1968, despite repeated requests that she receive same?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Well, Mr. Speaker, Miss Chenier inquired about the transcript in October. Her letter was answered by the supervisor on October 8; she was given the name of the shorthand reporter and my understanding is that she had been in touch with the reporter and has ordered the transcript.

The Attorney General's Department does not supply transcripts to persons but they are available through the reporter.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Speaker, will the Attorney General accept a supplementary question?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Yes.

Mr. Shulman: What is a member of the public to do if they order a transcript from the reporter and he just does not provide it?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Well if there is a situation of that kind, if there has been undue delay—I do not think there is any refusal here—I would be glad to intervene and see what I can do to hurry it up.

Mr. Shulman: Would the Attorney General intervene in this case?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I will check into it and see if there is anything I can do.

Mr. Shulman: Thank you. Will the Attorney General order an inquest into the death of Ernest Gibeau, who died in January 1968, following prolonged delay in receiving treatment for his condition while a patient in the Brockville Psychiatric Hospital?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Speaker, I am advised by my officials that Mr. Ernest Gibeau was admitted to the Ontario Hospital on October 18, 1967, diagnosed as a chronic alcoholic with severe organic and mental deterioration.

In November 1967 a hard swelling below the right jaw ulcerating into the mouth was noted when the patient was examined by a surgical consultant and oral surgeon. This condition was first diagnosed as an abscess. When it did not respond to treatment it was ascertained that it was carcinoma of the tongue with ulcerating secondaries.

Mr. Gibeau was examined by two physicians at the Kingston Cancer Clinic; both doctors were of the opinion that there was no effective treatment that could be offered. The patient died on December 25, 1967, Mr. Speaker, not January 1968—not in January 1968.

Mr. Shulman: What was the date of death?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: December 25, 1967.

Mr. Speaker, due to the fact that my officials are well aware of the case, I do not propose to order that an inquest be held. I can see no useful purpose in holding an inquest in a case like this.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Speaker, is it correct that Dr. Blackwell of the coroner's office has decided that no inquest is to be held into the death of Dorothy Gertrude Davis, which was discussed in this Legislature on November 27, 1968?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Speaker, I have in my hand, a full, or at least a quite complete file of the criminal investigation which is being carried on by the criminal investigation branch of the Ontario Provincial Police. No inquest has been ordered. In fact, an inquest is not intended in this case.

This is the girl who disappeared, whose body was found some five weeks after death, completely or very thoroughly decomposed. An autopsy was performed by Dr. Fred Jaffe. There is nothing that an inquest would reveal now that would be helpful; it certainly would not indicate the cause of death, the autopsy established that. The case is still under active investigation by the criminal investigation branch, and there is nothing that an inquest would add to this matter.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Attorney General, why did the Coroner and Crown Attorney in the inquest on January 24, 1969, into the death of Nicola di Federico in the city of Sault Ste. Marie, Ontario, refuse permission to the union representatives to ask The Department of Labour representative at the inquest whether the employer, the Algoma Steel Corporation Ltd. was in violation of The Industrial Safety Act?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Speaker, the member for Dovercourt (Mr. De Monte) asked a very similar question the same day, I think, that this question was introduced in the House. I have taken it as notice and I am getting the information. I will answer as soon as I have the information.

Mr. Shulman: I have a further question of the Attorney General.

Mr. Speaker: Those are all of the questions.

Mr. Shulman: Yes, I am sorry. Thank you very much.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: There are some questions that I took the other day as notice; I would answer them now.

Mr. Speaker: Any question taken as notice may be answered of course, if the hon. Minister wishes to reply and is ready to.

Mr. Shulman: I believe there are two, Mr. Speaker.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Speaker, there was one some two days ago. Question No. 483, of February 4, an inquiry by the member for High Park as to whether the Attorney General had looked into the matter of the non-exercisable law in reference to the docking of horses' tails.

Mr. Speaker, I have looked at our previous file on this matter and find that when this complaint was made first it was referred to the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals. That, Mr. Speaker, was on March 4, 1964. After reviewing the matter—and I have the file here with the correspondence with the society—the society indicated it felt this practice was dying out and it was better dealt with by education than prosecution, and the then Attorney General agreed with the approach the society had taken. I might say that I also agree with that approach.

Mr. Hughes, the general manager of the Ontario Humane Society, wrote on March 6, 1964:

The policy of this society in connection with the practice is to discourage horse-owners from having the horse tails docked and set. Similarly, we are trying to persuade the organizers of horse shows to gradually change their attitude to horses that have been so altered to discourage them from being shown.

We feel that this practice is dying out and that the moderate approach of this society is the one best designed to encourage the practice to disappear completely. We have not, and do not, intend to take any criminal action of any sort against people who so dock horse's tails, preferring instead the more moderate approach of education.

The Attorney General of that day, presently the Speaker of this House, agreed with that, and I do too.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Humber.

Mr. Ben: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the hon. Minister of Health. What were the circumstances in which two witnesses before the pollution enquiry, Dr. P. J. Lowther and Dr. A. E. Martin, were not asked to take the oath.

Hon. M. B. Dymond (Minister of Health): Mr. Speaker, I would have no ability to answer that question. The commissions and committees of this kind make their own rules or are guided by certain rules of precedent. I have no idea why they did not take the oath. It is my understanding that certain expert witnesses—into which category these two physicians fell—may be called upon for expert testimony, which is not necessarily given under oath. But whether this is a practice or not I cannot say. Since the committee has been disbanded, I have no way of getting this information.

Mr. Ben: I have another question of the Minister, Mr. Speaker, but to assist him he might look up the proceedings of hearings, No. 48 on page 15 of the report, and it will give him an idea why this question was asked.

The next question, Mr. Speaker, also of the Minister is: Will the Minister of Health immediately reopen the enquiry into pollution of air, soil and water, in the townships of Dun, Molton and Sherbrooke, in Haldimand County;

(a) In view of the availability of a new, highly sensitive measuring device announced by the autonetics division of the North American Rockwell Corporation?

(b) In view of the publication in a British learned journal, Atmospheric Environment, of the results of research by Lovelace, Miller and Welkie of Utah State University, which shows that simple fluoride compounds are being biosynthesized into fluoroacetate and fluorocitrate, both of which are highly toxic to animals and man?

(c) In view of the U.S. Air Force studies which suggest that the Los Angeles inversion atmosphere, or smog, may produce similar photosyntheses in free air in the action of sunlight?

Also, has the Minister approached Dr. McTaggart-Cowan, executive secretary of the Science Council of Canada, regarding the co-operation of Ontario in a possible national programme of air pollution research and monitoring in accordance with recommendation No. 6 of the UNESCO conference on the rational use and conservation of the biosphere, September 1968?

If not, will the Minister take the initiative here, in the light of the serious air pollution situation in some areas of Ontario, and in view of the recommendation contained in paragraph 790 of the report relating to the urgency of the government's acting on this whole question?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Speaker, this is rather an involved question, as is very obvious. I have not read this paper yet and I, therefore, will take the question as notice.

Mr. R. F. Ruston (Essex-Kent): We are doing a better job than the civil service.

Mrs. M. Renwick (Scarborough Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Trade and Development.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member for Sandwich-Riverside has the floor.

Mr. F. A. Burr (Sandwich-Riverside): A question of the Minister of Trade and Development. Is the Minister planning to follow the example of the federal Minister of Housing in persuading lawyers to reduce the legal fees charged in connection with the sale of homes, relating their fees to the amount of work done rather than to the selling price of the homes?

Hon. S. J. Randall (Minister of Trade and Development): Mr. Speaker, the entire question of legal fees is really within the area of responsibility of the Law Society of Upper Canada, and each of the law associations in the province. I do not consider myself competent, nor do I believe it would be appropriate for me to suggest what the tariff should be.

I will be meeting with the federal Minister at the end of this week and will welcome any suggestions he may have that will help the housing situation.

Mr. Speaker: Now the hon. member for Scarborough Centre:

Mrs. M. Renwick: Thank you Mr. Speaker. A question for the Minister of Trade and Development. A four-part question.

1. How many units of housing in Ontario at present fall under the jurisdiction of Ontario Housing Corporation?

2. Are all of these units on the rent freeze extended by the Minister's department last May?

3. Is the Minister aware that persons living in OHC units, paying rent on the rent-geared-to-income basis, are living in fear that the new basis for tenants' rents under study since last May by OHC and CMHC may, in fact, come out as a higher rent for the tenants than they are paying now if the Minister is taking into consideration present market rents already flagrantly inflated in deciding the new rent basis?

Can the Minister assure the tenants living in this state of limbo since last May that the new basis of tenants rents: (a) will not be a rent increase; (b) will approximately remain the same; (c) or will result in a new lower scale of rent geared to income?

4. Is the Minister aware that the rent increase would mean many of the present tenants of OHC would not be able to pay a rent increase under any circumstances and would have to move? And they do not know where they would move to in the desperate high rent market of today.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Mr. Speaker, in answer to the hon. member's first question: There are at present in Ontario 21,514 rental units which fall under the jurisdiction of Ontario Housing Corporation.

In answer to question 2, of these units, 18,548 are on a geared-to-income rental basis and therefore come within the terms of the rent freeze which was imposed last May. The remaining 2,966 are rented in a full-recovery or fixed rental basis and therefore the rent freeze does not apply to them.

In answer to questions 3 and 4, by her question, the hon. member is obviously making the assumption that a new geared-to-income rental scale would have as its basis present market rents payable today, and this assumption is totally incorrect. The study of market rents as part of an overall review of the scale was undertaken in an endeavour to establish a ceiling so that in no case would a tenant, depending upon his income, be required to pay more than market rent.

It is obviously impossible to predict the effect which the introduction of a new scale is likely to have on every individual tenant, but I would remind the hon. member that when the present scale was first introduced on April 1, 1967, the effect in Metropolitan Toronto was to decrease the rent for 58.1 per cent of the tenants, while the rates of 38.4 per cent remained unchanged; only 3.5 per cent found that their rents were increased under the new scale.

You can be assured that we will use our best endeavours with Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation to ensure that the housing subsidies go where they are most needed.

Mr. Speaker, I hardly believe that the rent freeze can be described as a "state of limbo", as since May 1, of last year tenants have had a fix on their rent regardless of whether their earnings have increased or not. By the same token, where the tenant's income has reduced, we have continued to apply rental decreases.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Sudbury East.

Mr. E. W. Martel (Sudbury East): A question of the Minister of Energy and Resources Management.

How much interest was paid by Ontario Hydro in 1967 on the money it borrowed? And what was the total amount of wages paid out in 1967 to those Ontario Hydro employees who are members of the Ontario Hydro Employees union?

Hon. J. R. Simonett (Minister of Energy and Resources Management): Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member has a series of questions for Ontario Hydro. I wonder if he would like to read them all now?

Mr. Martel: The second question is: How much of the power which was purchased from Quebec to supposedly offset the power shortage attributed to the rotating strike last week, as reported in the press, was actually purchased under a firm contract which was already in existence?

In view of Hydro chairman's remarks last December that utilities may be faced with power cuts because of a shortage of Ontario Hydro power, can the Minister tell the House whether recent purchases from Quebec were necessitated by the shortage referred to last December?

An the last question: In dollars and cents, how far apart are Ontario Hydro and the Ontario Hydro employees union from a settlement? And what has been the cost to Ontario Hydro up to February 14 to transport supervisory personnel across Ontario to replace Hydro employees participating in the rotating strike?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Mr. Speaker, I will have to take this series of questions as notice and I will get an answer for the hon. member later this week.

I have the answer now to his question No. 586. The questions were:

1. How many mw of power were produced on November 14, 1968 by the energy combustion turbines? 2. How many mw of power were produced in Ontario during November, 1968 by the emergency combustion turbines? 3. Why was it necessary to use the combustion engines so much in Ontario?

The answers are:

1. At the time of the East System peak demand on November 14, 1968, combustion turbine units delivered 206.5 mw. In the West System, combustion turbine units were not operating at the time of that system's peak demand.

2. During November, 1968, combustion turbine units in the East System delivered 26,707 mwhr; and combustion turbine units in the West System delivered 34 mwhr during the month.

3. As indicated on page 63 of the Report of the Hydro-Electric Power Commission of Ontario for 1965 combustion turbine generators were installed because they can be purchased and placed in service with a much shorter lead time than the much larger conventional thermal-electric and hydro-electric units. They also serve as stand-by units and contribute toward a more adequate margin of reserve capacity at times of peak loads.

During November, 1968, primary demands in the East System began exceeding previous record demands while declining stream flows reduced the amount of energy available from hydro-electric plants. A delay in the completion of repairs to two large thermal-electric units narrowed the margin of power reserves in the month of November and combustion turbine units were utilized.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Waterloo North.

Mr. E. R. Good (Waterloo North): Mr. Speaker, I have two questions for the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Will regional government public utility commissions be set up for electric power supply in their entire regions and, if so, what will happen to the previous real property and equipment purchases made by municipalities? And will these commissions be similarly required to purchase real property and equipment now owned by Ontario Hydro?

The second question: Has the Minister revised his ideas as to the minimum numbers for upper- and lower-tier governments under proposed regional government systems?

Hon. W. R. McKeough (Minister of Municipal Affairs): Mr. Speaker, in reply to the first question: We have had a brief from the directors of the Ontario Municipal Electric Association which proposes that electric utilities be on a regional basis. The brief makes some mention of the matter raised in the hon. member's question. This recommendation, as we understand it, is from the directors to the OMEA general meeting, which will be held some time in March, I believe.

I would assume that after the annual meeting has considered that resolution, the OMEA will come forward to government. Then, I imagine, there will be a continuing exchange between the OMEA, Ontario Hydro, The Department of Energy and Resources Management and ourselves.

Not until that has been completed, would we be in a position to answer the question.

In regard to the second question, the statement on regional government which I made in the House on December 2, 1968, did set out some population figures, which I stated we were working towards. However, in the same statement I also said:

Obviously access becomes virtually impossible in many rural and northern areas if we adhere rigidly to our minimum desirable population figures . . . areas would be so large that individual access to regional decision making would be meaningless. To this extent our regional governments will show variation in population and size.

Mr. Speaker: Is there a supplementary question?

Mr. Good: Would the Minister accept a supplementary question? Am I correct in assuming that because of the views the Minister gave to the transportation conference last week—and also because of the fact that he has set up areas within the new regional government in Lincoln-Welland—that the minimum standards are actually going down in numbers in practice?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Are going down?

Mr. Good: For the lower tier.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: No, I think the regional municipality of Lincoln-Welland as proposed, indicates exactly what I have said, because we are shooting for a population in the lower tier from 8,000 to 10,000—but the township of Wainfleet has about 5,500.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Etobicoke.

Mr. L. A. Braithwaite (Etobicoke): Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Attorney General:

In view of the recent CBC-TV programme on the possible murder of Tom Thompson and in view of the many questions raised by that programme, does the Attorney General wish to make any statement?

The second part of the question: Does the Attorney General propose that the grave be re-opened in order to verify that there is a body therein and the skeleton is that of Tom Thompson?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: No, Mr. Speaker, I have no wish to make a statement and I have no intention of making a statement about the CBC programme. I certainly have no intention of ordering that the grave be re-opened at all. Perhaps if I were to get a request from some close member of the family, I would consider it, but I would hope that nobody would disturb the situation any more than it has been disturbed.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Clerk of the House: The first order; resuming the adjourned debate on the amendment to the amendment to the motion for an address in reply to the speech of the Honourable, the Lieutenant-Governor at the opening of the session.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

Mr. M. Makarchuk (Brantford): Mr. Speaker, before I resume my speech, I would like to congratulate the members of the Liberal Party. I understand they are going to re-examine the pecking order in that organization. I suppose the addition of an ornithological species to the party will not do it any great harm—it may add something to it. We may even see the re-establishment of the truth squad of Eddie, Ben and Judy, or something like that.

Mr. Speaker, when I was speaking last Thursday I was pointing out to the members in this House that the only lack of money in this province seems to be in the public sector of our society and certainly not in the private sector. If we examine some of the financial reports from the newspapers we will learn something. I will just quote from a couple of issues of the Toronto Globe and Mail. The first one is from February 1, 1969. I will just read the headings:

Domtar Ltd., of Montreal, had a profit of $10.8 million or 72 cents a share in 1968, compared with $9.1 million, or 60 cents a share in the previous year.

Dominion Textile Company Limited, of Montreal, reports that profit for the six months ended December 31 was $2,115,000 or 80 cents a common share, up from $1,203,000 or 45 cents a share a year earlier.

D. A. Stuart Oil Company Limited, of Toronto, says profit increased to $305,417, or 67 cents a share in the six months ended November 30, from $175,074 or 38 cents a share a year earlier.

Salada Foods Limited, of Toronto, reports profit increased to $217,000 or 8 cents a share in the three months ended December 31 for $197,000 or 7.5 cents a share a year earlier.

Du Pont of Canada Limited, Montreal, says profit increased to $12,553,000 or $1.57 a share in 1968, from $10,425,000 or $1.30 a share a year earlier.

Here is a good one:

Steel Company of Canada Limited, Hamilton, had record production sales and profit in 1968. Profit was $67,971,231 or $2.79 a share, compared with $46,732,814 or $1.94 a share in 1967.

We notice here the Royal Bank of Canada profits, by comparison. It says:

The Royal Bank's balance of revenue in the fiscal 1968 was some 48 per cent higher than in the previous year.

We look at the headline of the Globe and Mail of Wednesday, February 12. The first thing you see across the top is: "$1 million Belvedere giveaway hot on the heels of a TV ad ban."

In other words they can give away $1 million. There is no lack of money in that particular department. These are some of the figures that are in the paper.

I have some more figures from the Wednesday, February 2, Globe and Mail. It says:

Granby Mining Company Limited, Vancouver, says 1968 profit from operations increased to $1,137,000, or 79 cents a share from a restated $829,000, for 57 cents a share in 1967.

Bartaco Industries Limited, of Orillia, says profit for nine months ended September 30 was $679,123 in revenue. The nine months' results show a decided improvement from the 1967 year ended December 31, when the company reported a profit of $276,840.

Canadian General Electric Company Limited, of Toronto, had a profit of $14.6 million, or $1.83 a share in 1968, compared with $14,530,748, or $1.82 a share, from the previous year.

Hollinger Mines Limited, of Toronto, says profit for 1968 was $12,300,303, or $2.50 a share, compared with $11,642,165, or $2.37 a share, a year earlier.

Labrador Mining and Exploration Company Limited, a Hollinger subsidiary, also reported an increase in profit to $7,860,483, or $2.38 a share, from $6,939,796, or $2.10 a share.

All these figures indicate a small cross section—but it is an indicative cross section—of the rate of corporate financial activity in this country. What they indicate is that there is no lack of money in the private sector. The only poverty in the country is in the public sector, or in other words, we can find money to build hotels, but not homes and hospitals. This, Mr. Speaker, is the crux of the matter.

Unless this government is prepared to plan their economy using the various methods available to them, such as investment taxes, price review boards, limitations on investments, Crown corporations, sweeping changes in taxation—unless it is prepared to do the things I have just stated, it will never raise a sufficient amount of capital required for investment in the public sector.

What we have in this province and the country, Mr. Speaker, is a financial situation similar to the one that existed and, to a great extent still exists, in the municipal field. The only exception is that we have finally recognized that in the municipal field the existing tax structure based on property was not able to provide, except as a great expense to the taxpayers, the necessary revenue to pay for the various municipal services. The government has recognized this and is taking some measures in the municipal field by the transfer of capital.

The point here is that while the need for public investment was growing in the municipal field, it was also growing in all other fields, and just as the municipalities discovered that property tax alone would not pay for their services, this government is discovering that the existing structure of sales, income and all other existing taxes will not provide sufficient funds for the growing needs in the public sector.

The false hope that the normal increase of the gross national product will generate enough capital without trying to slice the pie differently is becoming more and more obvious to this government. If it looks at the matter realistically it will find out that it may have to tell General Motors or Ford that they will have to stop changing models every year and the savings from this would go into the public sector.

Bell Telephone may have to be told that princess telephones are not as important as hospital beds and other corporations will get similar messages. The old 48/52 per cent split in corporation tax may have to go and any hope that the corporations may have of passing on the tax increase to the consumer will have to be stopped by a price review board and corporations may have to learn to live with a return on investments of about three to five per cent instead of 15 or 30 per cent.

What I have proposed, Mr. Speaker, is not new. At the same time we do not have any illusions about the Tories and the Liberals changing the pattern of corporate or investment operation. Your record of complicity in corporate decisions and activities is written large across the land in slums, pollution and poverty. Yours has been the consistent pattern in the past and it will be in the future, if you have any.

I just have a few more matters to bring up, Mr. Speaker. The first is probably not the responsibility of this Legislature, although I feel that it should be. It has been a matter that has been on my mind since it came to my attention over a year ago. During this period of time it has seemed to develop into a rather serious situation, and this is the matter of the local municipal welfare administrator.

I was going to discuss this matter in the course of the department's estimates. However, I feel that in my case it cannot wait. This is the matter of a welfare administrator, or one of his staff, sending people who are seeking welfare to a plant that is on strike. In effect, what they are doing is using people who are in desperate situations and forcing them into becoming strike breakers. This may be a situation that is only peculiar to Brantford, but some of the happenings have wider ramifications.

The same individual, the same welfare administrator, has caused people, older men, to appear on my doorsteps in tears, relating a tale of abuse at the hands of the administrator. I have had elderly women phone me complaining about this man. On one occasion a tearful caller related how his relative was told to go and become a prostitute if she wanted any money.

The other day, in a welfare situation involving the Children's Aid Society, the aid officials, in their objective opinion, said that unless the family receives assistance there was a good possibility that this family would break up and the two children in the family would suffer and would have to become wards of the Children's Aid Society. When this was reported to the welfare administrator he said, "I do not give a damn about the children."

On still another occasion, a couple was forced to sleep in a car in below freezing weather while the children stayed with relatives, all because this man refused aid to them.

This man has publicly abused welfare seekers and recipients, has shamed them publicly and privately and has insulted them on other occasions.

Mr. Speaker, when a man or woman is down and out and has doubts about his own dignity and self-respect, surely there is no need for them to undergo any further ordeals at the hands of the municipal official whose 80 per cent of his salary is paid by the province?

I am not sure how this man was hired for the job. Personally, I would not have him as municipal dog catcher for fear that he would probably bite the dog.

There is not a social agency in Brantford that has a kind word for the man. It is not that they do not respect him. It is that they are convinced that the man should not be in that job.

As I said earlier, considering that the province pays 80 per cent of the cost, I feel that the Minister should start putting some of the municipal welfare administrators under some type of professional scrutiny or transfer their functions to the family service agencies, as in the case of Brantford.

While I am on the matter of welfare there is another point which I wish to bring to the attention of this House. This is instituting in Ontario's welfare programme a system, whereby the welfare seeker will set his own level of requirements. Although this may sound radical in Ontario, the measure is being instituted in the United States.

Here is what an article from the December 19 issue of the Christian Science Monitor says about the matter:

When the Department of Health, Education and Welfare said recently that all 50 states will have to adopt a self-declaration system for welfare by next July, it was meeting a pledge made by Secretary Wilbur J. Cohen during last summer's Poor People's Campaign. But it also was agreeing to a demand, generated by the nation's overtaxed welfare setup as a whole, for a more efficient system.

Basically the new policy means that the welfare applicant will fill out the necessary forms by himself, much as everyone does with his income tax. Will he cheat? Not likely, say those states and communities already using the method—25 states have tried it for at least one welfare programme, and New York has just completed a one-year test in parts of Brooklyn and Manhattan. Less than two per cent who thought they might get welfare help were found ineligible, which is about the national average when the forms are filled out by the welfare workers.

What are the new method's benefits? From the welfare agencies' viewpoint, case-workers should be freed from most of the financial investigation which now eats up 70 to 95 per cent of their time. Much of this "investigation" merely consists of sitting across the desk from an applicant and filling out a form that he could easily fill out himself. It has been found that there are fewer errors in forms filled out by applicants, both because the new forms have been greatly simplified and streamlined and because applicants seem more at ease putting down personal data on a form than in disclosing it during an interview.

From the recipient's side, he will welcome having his request judged as an objective matter of need. There has been in the past an overtone of a presumption of fraud in the application process which recipients have resented. Under the new system, spot checks will be made on perhaps 10 per cent of the applications, just as with income tax returns. And those details that require verification—such as disability, or having been refused a job or training for “good cause”—will continue to be checked.

Financial investigation itself has already undergone major change in the past few years. At one time, agencies would check all banks in a city to uncover any unlisted bank accounts, or relatives would be canvassed to determine whether any could take up the support of the applicant, even though such support could not be legally required. In 1966 the government ended these practices.

Caseworkers, freed of much of the financial paperwork that can now be handled by clerks, will be able to spend more time counselling and aiding the needy. They will welcome this. Much of the difficulty of recruiting and keeping professional workers has been their frustration at not being able to contact those in need of services. Their past role as investigators has made it hard for them to win their clients' trust.

Opposition to the self-declaration system may come from two directions. First, the welfare scandals, budget crises, and welfare-rights agitation of recent months have added to a general mistrust of welfare. In Massachusetts, for example, a review of each recipient's eligibility every two months has been proposed in the aftermath of welfare troubles in the state. Such a move hardly shows any inclination to take the recipient's word on his needs.

Also, there is a suspicion of any welfare changes that might lead to something like a guaranteed minimum income. Reducing the inconvenience of getting help might make living on welfare seem even more inviting than earning a living, some fear.

But experts point out that, of the roughly 9,000,000 people getting aid, only 10 to 12 per cent could in any way be thought of as potential breadwinners—and this includes mothers with dependent children, many of whom already work. The rest are the children themselves, the aged, and the disabled.

Many professional welfare workers hope the self-declaration system will help put the nation's welfare house in order. The long-range goal, they admit, is to stop the self-perpetuation of a welfare class in this country. To do this, they hope to focus more of their energies on the young. The new method may help them to do so.

I would suggest, Mr. Speaker, that this government give serious consideration to the implementation of the self-declaration systems in Ontario.

Mr. Speaker, I have decided to conclude my speech with an item for the newly appointed House leader, also heir apparent for the Tory leadership contest. This deals with the sleazy way that the LCBO operates in hiring employees for its liquor stores. Since it comes under the Minister's responsibility, it at times amazes me that a supposedly modern individual—by that he is not of the old school of Tories—a Minister who probably believes in fair play, equality of opportunity and all those other beautiful virtues, how this man of the 20th century, this advocate of supposedly responsible government would still permit a local Tory chief, or whatever he is known as in your ranks, to decide who shall get a job in the liquor store.

I heard about this slippery arrangement but I really did not try to find out how it works until close to the holiday season. At that time, I received a call from an individual who asked me to get him a job in the local liquor store to help out during the Christmas rush. He explained that when he was in Kingston, he used to approach the member for Kingston and the Islands and he always got him a job in the liquor store. It was then, Mr. Speaker, that I realized why the member was appointed chairman of the labour committee.

Anyway, to get back to Brantford. I was not able to help the man, but a few weeks later I received a call from a Mr. Andrew Grierson, who started to relate the tale of how he tried to get a job with the liquor store. Hearing of a couple of impending vacancies the man approached the manager of the store who explained that there was quite a routine to get a job in the store.

First the man went to see Mr. Andrew Donaldson, well known city alderman, one time city man-of-the-year, and defeated Tory candidate. Actually, Mr. Donaldson's role in the matter is quite small. He supplied the addresses to which to apply, which is very reasonable.

Mr. Grierson wrote to Mr. W. G. Wiley, LCBO, Lakeshore Boulevard, Toronto. Ten days later, he got an application, which was filled in and returned. Following that, he received a cryptic note that the application had been received and something to the effect that no further acknowledgements would be forthcoming.

Well, Mr. Grierson—this is my man—waited, and then he went to see the manager of the store. There he was told that the decision as to who will be hired will not be made by the manager of the store, but by Mr. Reville Hitchon, also of Brantford. Now, Mr. Hitchon, besides being the chief Tory, or the local Poo-Bah, or whatever you call him—big wheel—is in the insurance business and not in the liquor business, certainly not in any visible way.

The point here is, why should an individual who wants to work in a store, sir, have to go and subject himself to questioning and scrutiny by anybody except the people directly concerned with the management or the operations of the store? Anyway, my man, Mr. Grierson, did see Mr. Hitchon on various occasions, who discussed with him the application without giving him a definite answer. Eventually he suggested a few days ago that they will call him—sort of, “do not call us, we will call you”—when they decide there is a job for him.

I do not have to point out, Mr. Speaker, that this is simple patronage, conducted by this government in a rather blatant manner, which puts into disrepute all the qualities of a democratic government for which this Legislature is responsible. Personally, Mr. Speaker, I am amazed at the Provincial Secretary, who stands up, on all possible occasions, expounding the virtues of responsible government and at the same time, tolerates this perversion of everything that responsible government stands for and permits it right in his own department. I would suggest that in the future, the matter of hiring people in the employment of the LCBO be placed in the hands of the civil service.

Mr. B. Gilbertson (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, I am back again reporting for my constituents from Algoma Riding. It has been my pleasure to listen to a great many suggestions and proposals by the hon. members during the Throne debate. And I dare say that I am very much in support of a number of the issues that have been brought before this House, because, for all intents and purposes, they are intended to make for all of us—the citizens of this great province—a better place to live.

Although it is difficult to single out any issue as the more or most important, I wish to point to those issues brought before this House by my colleagues, the hon. members from Quinte, Durham and others. Hospital care and welfare programmes are of extreme importance to our people. And I too feel as the hon. members do, that there need be some changes in this respect.

I am referring, Mr. Speaker, to the chronically ill who are lying in hospitals because there is no other place provided for them. I certainly feel strongly that something should be done about this. If only we realized the cost of having these people in our hospitals for days, weeks and months, because there is no other place to put them. I strongly suggest, Mr. Speaker, that there be some provision made for these chronically ill.

Mr. Gisborn: Both the hon. member who is speaking and the member for Quinte (Mr. Potter) can come over with us any day.

Mr. E. A. Winkler (Grey South): Only he knows better.

Mr. Gilbertson: However, enough has been said about this by the hon. members and I am certain that their proposals shall be given every consideration which will result in changes for the better in these areas.

There is one specific area which I wish to bring to the attention of this Legislature and it has to do with the newly formed Department of Revenue. First I would like to congratulate the new Minister of that department, the hon. Minister from London South. I am certain he will do a job that will not only be a credit to him, but to this government as well. I have had the pleasure of speaking with the new Minister on numerous matters which concern his newly formed portfolio. I would like to say I believe it also concerns the Treasury Department.

And one of my major concerns, which is also a concern of this department, is that area which deals with what could be easily termed an unusual system of collection of the sales tax on logging equipment. I represent many logging and lumber operators in my riding and this is of concern to me.

It appears that logging equipment is exempt from the provincial sales tax—except that there is some question about the definition as to which area is exempt and which is not.

As an example, I find that the equipment used to bring logs to the log deck—that means to the receiving end of the saw mills—is exempt from this taxation. The same equipment used to take the cut lumber away from the other end of the mill, is subject to tax.

Now, if this is not confusing enough, there is more. Operators purchase the equipment for logging purposes, consequently the purchase is made without the tax charge. Later, these same operators are advised that they have used the equipment for operations that make it subject to this tax—and they are then asked to pay the tax.

It is an area of definition, Mr. Speaker. The operator has a logging operation consequently he feels that any equipment he uses is for logging purposes. The government has a different definition in that some areas within logging operations are classed as taxable.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to say through you to the members that I feel there is an area in which the logging and lumber operators could probably give some valuable information to The Department of Taxation. Because it seems to me that sometimes, perhaps, these rules and regulations are made from behind a desk, by people who are not familiar with the logging and lumbering operation.

I am sure there are many members here in this House who could lend a helping hand to The Tax Department in regulating the collection of tax on logging equipment that would be reasonable to the government and also to the members of the logging and the lumbering operation.

Mr. Speaker, I realize that we have to have money to run the government. I also realize that there is a nice way of extracting tax from people and there is also a way that really hurts.

As a person who is experienced with lumbering and logging and tapping trees for sap, I often have the question brought to me: "Does it hurt the tree to sap it?" Well, I always tell them: "No, it does not," because you only do a very small injury to the tree extracting the sap, and I think the same way if you are an expert in the tax collecting field you can surely figure out some way of extracting tax from people in a nice manner so that it does not hurt too badly.

I would like to make several suggestions in connection with this, Mr. Speaker. One is, that we undertake to spell out clearly just when the equipment is subject to the tax and when it is not. Secondly, let us provide this information to the dealers in our province so that they will be able to give their customers a clear-cut explanation on the entire matter at the time of purchase. In other words let us put the onus on the dealer to inform the buyer—but only after we have armed him with the necessary information.

Thirdly, Mr. Speaker, I strongly urge this government that there be a reasonable time limit on the length of time that this province can come back at these operators and impose the five per cent tax. Two or three years later is an unrealistic length of time, because by that time the equipment has depreciated by at least 90 per cent in value—and, frankly, is often on the verge of being replaced.

Another area, Mr. Speaker, pertains to logging and lumber operations, and I would like to also stress my concern over the proposals to impose a 1,500-foot waters-edge reserve. The proposal is that no timber cutting would take place any nearer than 1,500 feet within any shore of a lake line in most of our parks.

This strict limitation would greatly hamper logging operations in places such as Algonquin Park, for example. And I say this because the operators must, in order to carry out logging operations, build access roads. These are built at considerable cost. If we increase the reserve from what in most areas is now set at 400 feet to 1,500 feet, then the operators shall suffer considerably. The 1,500 foot reserve is not a realistic idea at all because in many places the lakes are so close together that if you reserve 1,500 feet of shoreline on these lakes you will not have any timber limits left for the loggers.

I might stress, Mr. Speaker, that logging operations are extremely important to many communities in the northern and northeastern portions of our province. To take away some of their lumbering rights would be taking away their bread and butter. Frankly, it is my firm belief that selective cutting should be permitted even in the 400 foot area which at present is forbidden ground to lumber cutting operations.

Mr. Speaker, anybody who is familiar with hardwood lumbering and logging operations knows that the tops—and all the debris that is left—in four or five years time is completely rotten and goes back to mother earth. Some will get the impression that these loggers make an awful mess, when they go in to cut, but I have gone through hardwood bushes where after a few years the tops have completely disintegrated and rotted. So I feel that the loggers should not be blamed so much for the debris, because I think it is good for the tops to go back to mother earth again and help enrich the soil and bring forth more trees.

At the same time I should point out that I am quite aware of the many good things the government has been doing about our northern communities and about the logging and lumber industry.

For example in the Blind River area, the McFadden Lumbering Company is phasing out its operation because of a lack of white pine. It is no longer possible for this company to operate economically as a result of this lack. I might insert here that this is not an unusual case because sawmills have closed from time to time over the years on account of there being no more timber.

It is my understanding that government negotiations are presently underway to replace this operation with a paper mill so that the people and the communities around the area will not suffer needlessly. I hope this will become a reality.

I have another area here, Mr. Speaker, that I would like to bring to the attention of the House, concerning The Department of Highways and has to do with the progress on Highway 631 between Hornepayne and White River.

Fifteen miles of Highway 631 from Hornepayne southerly has been completed under two separate contracts awarded in the 1965-66 fiscal year. Included in this work was the construction of the Shekak River bridge eight miles south of Hornepayne. The cost of building this 15 miles was $1,400,000.

Clearing of the right-of-way for an additional 13 mile extension was awarded in the fall of 1967. Included in this contract is the construction of the West Beaton River bridge. This additional 13 miles of new road were completed this fall at a cost of $1,500,000.

On the remaining 35 miles of Highway 631 a $65,000 contract was awarded in October, 1968, for clearing of the right-of-way from White River northerly for 12.4 miles. This project is scheduled for completion by mid-April, 1969.

Still to be called are contracts for clearing of the right-of-way for the remaining 24 miles, to be followed by three major contracts for grading all 35 miles of the new route at an estimated cost of $4.9 million.

I am sure you will agree that these are all very impressive figures. However, when you look at them very closely you can see that only some 28 miles of this new highway have been completed. And it has taken nearly four years to do so. There is still another 24 miles to go.

This is a very important link in our sparse northern Ontario highway system, Mr. Speaker, and it will link Highways 11 and 17. Consequently, it is essential that it be completed in the shortest period possible. I call on this government to accelerate this construction programme so that this project is completed no later than 1970—in time for the tourist trade that year.

While asking for acceleration of construction programmes, I draw your attention to the St. Joseph Island bridge.

Pre-engineering for this bridge is now in progress. Location surveys are underway in the area to determine the site for the new bridge. Once the location has been established, work will start on the design of the structure. This will be followed by detailed planning to determine the soil conditions and construction techniques to be used in building the new bridge. Following completion of the engineering details, construction will proceed when funds are provided in the provincial budget.

Certainly, the people of St. Joseph's Island have had the advantage of a ferry to the mainland operated by The Department of Highways. This ferry operates at half-hour intervals. However, not only is this an inconvenience, but I also wonder how much more traffic load it will be able to hold in the very near future.

I could insert here that on weekends you can wait from two to three hours to get across and the ferry carries 12 cars at a time. I know that the people are not very pleased. I am hoping that the programme will be accelerated.

The population of the island is about 1,300 at a minimum. It swells to well over 4,000 during the summer months and this figure is increasing by the year.

On account of not having this bridge, we are losing a lot of revenue from the tourists. We cannot afford to lose tourist revenue. I would like to say, Mr. Speaker, to the hon. members, that we have incentive grants that we give to industry to help encourage employment in the various areas to the north. I feel that this bridge at St. Joseph Island is just as important as any industry. I hope that the hon. members will take this into consideration. Why can we not have a little incentive grant—or whatever you want to call it—for this bridge project?

Immediate action is necessary if we intend to develop this summer playground.

Lastly, Mr. Speaker, the heated exchanges that I have heard in this House—the accusations and the denials—have caused me to recall an essay I once read that moved me a great deal. I would like to quote from this essay for I feel that this world would be a better place if each and every person only took five minutes time to consider only a small portion of the things that are brought out here. It is entitled His Example and goes as follows:

He was born in an obscure town, grew up in a tiny village, worked in a carpenter shop, was an itinerant preacher. He slept in borrowed beds. He died on a borrowed cross, and he was buried in a borrowed tomb. He never made a business, professional, or “social success”. He never went to school, owned a house, held an office, had a family. He never travelled more than 200 miles from the place where he was born. Yet, the world’s calendar is dated backward and forward from his birth.

The only thing he ever wrote was a sentence in the sand. Yet more books, songs, and poems have been written about him than about all the other men who ever lived. And his teachings have influenced the world more than anyone else who ever lived. He is the most masculine, compelling, fascinating, and perfect soul in history.

He was so gentle that little children climbed on his knee, and so strong that powerful men ran from the temple when he accused them of making it a den of thieves. Officers sent to arrest him returned empty handed, saying: “Never man spake like this man.”

The night before his execution, his Roman captors took turns lashing his back with a whip made of leather straps weighted with pieces of metal. They knelt before him in mock homage and then arose to spit in his face. About eight A.M. they took him to Calvary, stripped off his clothing and set him astride a wooden peg which jutted from the upright pole of a cross. Then they nailed him to that cross, between two thieves. Many victims of crucifixion became raving madmen before they expired, and often their tongues were cut to stop their screams and curses.

But as this silent victim looked down upon his jeering tormentors, he said: “Father forgive them for they know not what they do.”

Christ challenged the slavery system and declared that man is the creation of God and responsible to God. Christ preached the freedom and dignity of the individual and his God-given right to come and go freely, to enjoy the fruits of his own labour, to work for himself or to sell his labour for pay.

He reminded us that the best way to reduce the exploitation of man by man is to embrace Christianity. Christianity, not handouts is the hope of the world. Christ was no socialist. He believed in the profit motive. He recognized that free men will have different talents, and abilities in varying degrees. Some, he said, would gain more with what they had, and these were rewarded with more. He even took away the “talent” of the man who did nothing with it and gave it to the man who had ten “talents”, as a lesson. He congratulated those who profited, and urged his followers to learn by their example.

And, he knew that charity is not charity unless it is voluntary. In Luke 12: 13-14, the Christ was talking to a large crowd when a man approached him, saying: “Master, speak to my brother that he share his inheritance with me.

And Jesus replied: “Man, who is it that would make me a divider among men?” True Christian charity, He knew, comes from within and cannot be imposed by authority.

And, Jesus Christ was not a moderate. He was, in fact, an extremist. The modernists today proclaim that there is no black nor white: That sin is imaginary, non-existent: that we are to be moderate and tolerant in all things, including evil.

That is idiocy. An agnostic is a moderate. Moderation is no virtue when one is moderately wrong or moderately sinful. Christ had this to say about these moderates—a religious type He denounced in extreme terms:

I know thy works, that thou art neither cold nor hot. I would thou were cold or hot. So because thou art neither cold nor hot, I will spew thee out of my mouth.

The Bible is not tolerant; it’s narrow-minded. And so is the compass, the multiplication table, the boiling and freezing points of water, all nature, and the kingdom of Heaven. The gates of hell, on the other hand, are broadminded—open to situational ethics, God, the Bible, sin, and Jesus Christ are not. They are rigid and unchanging.

Just as the Ten Commandments are forever the same, a true Christian has a standard beyond change. Hebrews 13:8 says: "Jesus Christ, the same yesterday, today and forever."

Loss of faith in God is our nation's—and the world's—most serious problem. When men lose God, they turn to the state. When men lose God, they compromise, appease, lie, steal, and make war. The collectivists, anarchists, and atheists must destroy our faith in God to take over the world. Unless we can recapture our Christian spirit and re-establish our Christian values, we will soon lose our freedom of choice with respect to all of life's values.

The time could be approaching when the question will not be whether America can be saved, but whether America is worth saving. Sodom and Gomorrah were not! Only the moral deserve to be free. As the apostle Paul said: "Where the spirit of the Lord is, there is liberty."

Mr. Speaker, I could not help but remember the other day when the member for Lakeshore was speaking on the various freedoms, he brought something out about Paul—he that is free is free indeed.

We cannot oppose evil by compromising with evil. We cannot go forth into all the world and spread the gospel of Jesus Christ if we deny Jesus Christ in the United Nations, in our schools, and in our daily lives. We become part of what we condone.

A. G. Heinsohn, a courageous Christian and member of the council of the John Birch Society, was told by a friend: "Once a nation is sliding down the toboggan of degredation, as we are, it never stops till it hits bottom. Why do you struggle against the inevitable?"

Mr. Heinsohn replied: "Because it's unthinkable not to."

There's no excuse for people who ask, "What can I do?" and are afraid you'll tell them.

When and if St. Peter meets us at the Golden gate, he won't ask what we agreed with, or what we belonged to: Heaven is not open to Methodists, Catholics, Rotarians, or John Birchers—Heaven is open only to individuals. It's not what we belong to, it's what we are. It's not what we say, but what we do and don't do.

These are the words of one Tom Anderson.

How refreshing it would be, Mr. Speaker, if all men were to do just as he asks—make some effort at giving just a little more consideration to others. And I speak of all men—yes even the hon. members of this Legislature. For, if such was the case, Mr. Speaker, then perhaps the wild, sadistic accusations, the flapping of the dirty linens, and the unrealistic statements would be greatly reduced in this Legislature. And, we the legislators could get on, more effectively, with the business at hand—the business of running our great province as it should be run.

Mr. R. F. Ruston (Essex-Kent): Well, Mr. Speaker, I have kind of an odd time to start speaking. I understand that this debate is to adjourn at five o'clock, and perhaps I could just dwell on a few highlights to use up our few minutes.

I did think that maybe there might be something earthshattering about my speech—if I got through it today—and that if the government fell today, I checked with our leader and he was prepared to take over tomorrow. But now that I am not going to be able to give all my speech, I guess we will not have to worry about that part of it, but I would just like to make a few comments with regard to a few items.

I wish to speak in this debate today to bring to the attention of the members of this House, and especially the government of the province of Ontario, some of the problems facing the people of the province, and especially as they pertain to the agricultural economy, and the average citizen—the man who is striving to bring his family up in what we call suitable surroundings, and trying to make a decent living for them.

I, as a new member, was not overly enthused with the proceedings of this House in the first sitting of the twenty-eighth Parliament. On a number of occasions a vast amount of time of this Legislature was taken up in trivial and often repeated items when I am sure greater and more important matters could have been discussed.

Probably someone would say that right now about what I am discussing. Considering the vast amount of public funds that are expended, I have seen the shameful presentation of the estimates of some of the departments of this government.

I believe that the recommendations of the leader of the Liberal Party of this province to have a committee of this House study the estimates of each department and have the deputy heads and superintendents of different departments appear before the committee to explain how they spend our money. I think this is very important and this way it avoids a Minister turning down and asking a little advice from one of his deputies.

Mr. Speaker, I do not believe that the daily prayers are very becoming to the present day and I sometimes wonder if they go any further than the roof of this building. I believe we could have a daily prayer much briefer and, in my opinion, much more suited to our daily deliberations at the same time, Mr. Speaker.

Perhaps a new prayer would reach out past these great walls and reach the ears of someone who could assist us—and goodness knows this government needs some assistance.

Mr. Speaker, I wish at this time to draw your attention to the recent announcement of the village of Belle River and the elevation of its status to a town in my riding.

I wish to congratulate the people of Belle River on the establishment of the town with special regard to His Worship, Mayor John George, Reeve Henry Lambert, deputy reeve Clifford George and councillors Rod Ducharme and Jess Brooks.

We anticipate the growth of this town in the coming months and years and offer our personal assistance to the council and the people of the town at any time.

I would also make mention, Mr. Speaker, of a lady in our riding who is well known in the riding and throughout the province of Ontario, and I see this week there is a column in the Western Ontario Farm family section with regards to her. I speak of Mrs. Madeline Wallace.

Agriculture is the main interest of Mrs. Madeline Wallace. She is secretary of the Essex county federation of agriculture. Mrs. Wallace says, "Our whole family has been steeped in agriculture. My late husband Bill was a member of the OFA for many years and it was only natural that I would interest myself in the organization as well." Mrs. Wallace was a director of the federation of agriculture of the township of Rochester for ten years—

I might say that is the township that I live in, I am very proud of that.

—and has held her present position as secretary of the county organization for nine years. Mrs. Wallace became more serious in her interview as she knowingly discussed the plight of the farmer today. "Something must be done and soon or there won't be any agriculture," she said. "One answer is a general farm organization. I am in favour of a marketing board and all concerned will have to give and take a bit. There will have to be a new system of financing and the tax structure will have to be revised. Consumers will have to be educated to the fact that the farmer only gets a tiny bit of the money he pays for his food." And on the wall of the home of Mrs. Wallace is a poem entitled "Young at Heart." Its words reflect Madeline Wallace's philosophy of life, "Keep busy and involved, be with people and life will always be interesting and rewarding."

Mr. Ruston moves the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to.

NOTICE OF MOTION

Clerk of the House: Notice of Resolution No. 12 by Mr. Bernier:

Resolution: That the government of Ontario should assume full responsibility for the Indians and Eskimos resident in this province with financial assistance from the federal government and that as a first step an advisory committee should be established to counsel the government on problems affecting our Indians and Eskimos.

Mr. L. Bernier (Kenora): Mr. Speaker, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. J. R. Smith), Resolution No. 12 standing in my name which has just been read.

Mr. Speaker, I think it is very appropriate that this particular resolution should come before this Legislature today as I am sure the members are well aware this is Canadian Indian Week across Canada.

This resolution, stems from the growing concern and confusion that exists in the administration of the affairs of our Indian people across Canada and in this province. The magnitude and complexity of this problem, I feel, warrants the immediate attention of both the provincial and federal governments. As I have pointed out previously in this Legislature and in other speeches across Ontario, programmes designed by these two levels of government to assist our first citizens are often duplicated and many times tripled.

In 1966, the province of Ontario signed an agreement with the federal government affecting community development of registered Indians living within the boundaries of Ontario. This agreement has failed miserably as very little authority has been transferred from the federal to the provincial government. I realize that the transition is difficult.

However, this is just another example of lacking cooperation and fruitless results we often experience when attempting to enter into agreements with federal authorities. I say authorities because I believe the Ministers who have led and directed this particular department of the federal government have bargained in the best of faith but there appears to be no cooperation from senior civil servants in that department whose prime objective seems to be to build personal empires.

Mr. Speaker, being the representative for the great Kenora riding and since this particular area has attracted considerable recognition in connection with our Indian people, I am often asked just what are they like—well sir, I have lived with these people practically all of my life—I have gone to school with them—I have worked and I have played with them—so I do feel that I have come to know them exceptionally well.

I must admit that they are different from you and me and all of the hon. members sitting in this chamber—they are a small minority group which makes up only 1 per cent of our population. But, regardless of the fact that these people are such a minority, they have a special place among all the minority groups in Canada. Firstly, they are governed by special laws known as The Indian Act. Secondly, they are the first inhabitants and the only true natives of our great country. It is because of these reasons that I feel the Canadian Indian is entitled to special consideration above all other minority groups.

Yes, Mr. Speaker, the Indian people are indeed different. They have been pushed aside—at times mistreated and exploited by the aggressive white man. At the same time, I realize that the Canadian Indian is guilty of hindering formal education, ignoring helpful ideas, ridiculing conscientious administrators and making useless, ill-advised demands. Above all, in some cases, they are known for their reluctance to cooperate with others.

These drawbacks, however, stem from a lack of trust between the members of our two different cultures. In order to regain faith, trust and the other elements so essential to mutual cooperation, we must seek to gain their respect and confidence. There must be no feelings of superiority because we or they may be different. Indians have a very sensitive intuition and we must be sincere in our actions to help.

In this respect, I wish to bring to the attention of this House an example of what is happening to some of our Indian friends in the great northwestern part of this province.

In 1966, Mr. Speaker, the federal government reversed its policy as it pertains to Indian residential schools. As a result of this, the Oblate Fathers who operate the McIntosh Indian residential school in my riding have been advised that on June 30 of this year their school shall be officially closed by the federal Indian Affairs Department.

I'm not even going to question why the building is being closed—what is the use of that! We can't even find out what will happen to this half million dollar complex, located in the backwoods of northwestern Ontario between Kenora and Dryden—let alone find out why it is being closed. Right now it is serving a very worthwhile and necessary function at this very moment. Once closed it will only begin to deteriorate for it is very unlikely that it will be put to any other use in that remote area.

Since the early thirties this residential school complex provided a home and educational facilities for over 160 students annually. However, in 1966, the dormitory was completely destroyed by fire forcing Father Lemere, the principal and director since 1936, to move into the well equipped, six-room school using three classrooms as a dormitory and the balance as classrooms.

In view of the federal government's closure decision, and the impossible task to even have them reconsider, I would like to enter a plea to our provincial government here today. That plea is that we take over these excellent facilities and provide a school for the children of northwestern Ontario who are faced with special problems such as broken homes, etc.

I would point out to you, sir, that there are over 60 non-white boys ranging in ages from 12 to 17 from homes in northwestern Ontario attending the St. Joseph's training school at Alfred, Ontario, which is well over 1,000 miles from their homes in northwestern Ontario.

I would point out also that over 90 per cent of these, and many of them are Indian children presently at Alfred, do not need training school regimentation and environment. Many are there because their families have neglected or abused them. In fact, I have known some young girls and boys who have been sent to training schools who have sent back glowing reports of consistently getting three meals a day, clean clothing, clean beds, security and shelter, and at least a measure of privacy.

I cannot overstress, Mr. Speaker, that to many of these youngsters this is the optimum of earthly existence, and I dare say that many others would knowingly get involved in some simple infraction in order that they could be committed and sent away to a training school just so that they too would get to enjoy things that they do not have at home.

To this I say—what a desperate state our society must be getting into if our very own children have to go to a correctional institution to experience these few of the very simplest things in life that most of us assume as a matter of fact.

Here at McIntosh we have an ideal location with excellent facilities now being abandoned by the federal government. I urge that this government undertake immediate investigation into the possibility of establishing this building as a special school for these youngsters so that they may at least be close to home and in an area to which they are accustomed. It is enough of a penalty to be sent to a training school.

I do not feel that the children of northwestern Ontario should receive a double dose of punishment by being removed so far from their homes and families, even though some of them get into trouble just to get themselves into a training school because life there is far superior to that in their own home.

Mr. Speaker, I realize our provincial government is moving into a number of fields to improve the status and the living standards of the Indian people in my area and indeed throughout the province of Ontario. I would like to outline a few examples to you. The Department of Education has recognized that Indian communities are an integral part of our society. Indians of northwestern Ontario are becoming increasingly aware of their rights as citizens. They are demanding equal rights with citizens of other ethnic groups.

Prior to 1966, The Department of Education had a programme of Indian development established in those areas serviced by roads. It was shortly after this that they undertook to service the isolated Indian communities of northwestern Ontario. This particular programme includes training in power toboggan safety, home economics, leadership at both youth and adult levels, woodworking, carpentry, weaving, and so on.

Just last winter, Mr. Speaker, this provincial department, with the assistance from other groups, organized 51 community projects in the isolated Indian communities of my area. We now have a larger budget and a full time consultant and certainly we will see an expansion of this highly accepted programme. All of us are aware, of course, of the interest and the assistance that The Department of Lands and Forests of this province renders to the Indian people by employing them as the province's crack firefighters. Other programmes this department administers include fisheries and trapper education programmes, the setting up of a self operating fur auction sale at North Bay. Very recently this department, in co-operation with the Lakehead university, began a far-reaching study into the promotion and cultivation to guarantee a more stable wild rice production. This product alone, Mr. Speaker, in 1967 provided over $1 million for the Indian people in my area.

The Department of Social and Family Services is recognizing many Indian reserves as municipalities and the Indians can and do administer their own welfare programmes. We now have a district office located at Kenora and it is staffed with a group of highly competent and knowledgeable, dedicated administrators and field workers. In addition to this, this department has shown concern and recognized the need by placing competent field workers in Red Lake, Sioux Lookout and in the Dryden areas. The financial assistance that this department rendered to the Amik association at Kenora will assist the many self operated Indian co-ops providing self help programmes on their own reserves.

Mr. Speaker, I am most pleased with the programmes this department has under way in my area to meet the needs of Indians, both as individuals and as a community. Also, the implementation of the legal aid plan has assisted greatly those Indians who are constantly being subjected to the laws which they do not understand or comprehend.

We saw the federal authorities, just last spring, Mr. Speaker, try to implement major cutbacks in providing health services to the Indians. I was indeed pleased when our Minister of Health stated, "I am determined that our Indian people will not be pawns in any game where their health is concerned."

The Department of Energy and Resources Management also, Mr. Speaker, has been able to assist, on a dollar for dollar basis, the development of revenue earning parks. Of course, one of the latest programmes of provincial assistance to the isolated Indian communities, Mr. Speaker, has been the establishing of airstrips throughout the northwest. One is presently under construction at Big Trout Lake, another is scheduled to be commenced at Sandy Lake later this month.

Mr. Speaker, The Department of Labour of this province also assists many Indian co-ops with job training programmes. And very recently it was my pleasure to welcome into northwest Ontario, Ontario's athletic commissioner, who met with the Indian leaders of that area to plan, promote and organize additional recreational programmes.

It is obvious, Mr. Speaker, that the province is providing facilities, and as much of the other needs as possible, to assist our Indian people. I dare say that what we provide is a great deal more than is now being rendered by the federal government, whose only responsibility is to those Indians who reside within the boundaries of a reservation. Much more certainly could be done with the transfer of more obligations, and, of course, federal moneys, to this province. We in Ontario could provide much more extensive services and greater assistance to our Canadian Indians at less cost if this was the case.

I realize a good deal of work will be required to guarantee to the Indian leaders, beyond a shadow of a doubt, that this transfer of administration from the federal to the provincial government will be profitable and beneficial to their people. We could start by displacing any fears they have with respect to their treaties signed many years ago. The present main objective of all concerned is to co operate and to make the Indians understand that they have an interest in getting into the stream of life of the surrounding non-Indian communities, and, once this step is completed, to help them at their own pace to assimilate and to practice the system—this is what we generally call community development. Any changes and moves, Mr. Speaker, must be with mutual agreement and on a so-called partnership basis.

In community development we are dealing with human beings. This is the key factor, and has to remain throughout the process, considering that the natural resources most needed for community development are controlled by the province and not by the federal government. I can think of such things as land, timber, minerals, game, water, fish, and Hydro power, when we realize that the province is in a better position to attend to this development than those living in the specific regions within this province.

The federal government, Mr. Speaker, is already pushing by all means possible to integrate of the young Indians in the education system of the province. However, this has proved to be a failure in our area, because the federal government has not been able to provide the adequate climate and environment to these youngsters so that they may be in a position to play a role in the community development of their people. The task is simply impossible to be realized across Canada by the federal government. Each province has its peculiarities, specific natural resources, definite industries, various potentialities. The education of these people has to be geared to the specific facets of each province.

It is because of these reasons, and the others that I have stated here in the last few minutes, that I urge this government to take effective steps and remove, not only the present duplication created by the federal authorities, but to demand that the funds set aside for Ontario Indians by The Department of Indian Affairs at Ottawa be given to the province of Ontario. There is no question that we can spend it more effectively towards the betterment of the Indian people in our province—and without building any private empires.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I would like to deal with the second part of my resolution in which I suggest that an Indian advisory committee or an Ontario Indian commission be established to:

No. 1. Direct the provincial government, through the person and office of one specific department, on all matters relating to the status and rights of Indian citizens of this province.

No. 2. To serve as a medium through which all Indians and Indian groups can make direct representation to the provincial government and eliminate much of the needless government red tape which tends to frustrate them untold.

No. 3. To encourage private organizations to join in helping to improve the social and economic position of the Indian citizens of this province.

No. 4. To have set up and to administer a revolving loan fund. I understand British Columbia and Alberta have recently announced such programmes within their provinces. This loan fund would provide the necessary capital quickly and easily accessible in order that the Indians themselves under proper guidance would be and could be in a better position to develop the natural resources where they are.

Mr. Speaker, I realize that we do have an Indian advisory committee presently established within this province. It is made up entirely of sincere, hardworking Indian leaders. Their efforts have not gone unnoticed. However, I sense among them a feeling of frustration in that their pleas and recommendations are not being heard. To rectify this I would suggest that on this task force or Ontario Indian commission we appoint members of this Legislature who, in turn, will report to the Legislature, through, as I said before, a single department. In this way, if the Indian ideas and requests are neglected or ignored, the commission will answer and will exert stronger pressures in various ways. Through this commission the Indians will have a special voice to speak for them in government circles and in this Legislature.

I realize that this is an unusual situation and that normally it is not considered proper for a special group to have special privileges in speaking to government. However, I feel in this case that this provincial government recognizes that our Indians have special problems which merit this special facility.

Mr. Speaker, I realize that everyone is attracted to the liberation of oppressed peoples whether the oppression is real or imaginary. We, as an example, have the young college student who wishes to write his thesis on Indian culture. By the time he has collected a few notes he is already an authority who flays out right and left at the government, missionaries and administrators. There are the anthropologists and other variants of social science who explain everything about the Indian scientifically and have all the ingredients for solving the Indian problem except the part about brotherly love and so have no solution at all. Then we have the gushers—many politicians who loudly proclaim that there are no bad Indians, they can do no wrong, they should have special treatment and the treasury should be open wide for them.

Actually, there is a subtle smile on the faces of all Indians when they listen to these people. There are also many varieties of missionaries and social workers with preconceived ideas who work for the Indians and do more harm than good, because they are working for their own satisfaction, rather than for that of the Indians.

I realize there is no simple method of helping the Indian people. Minority problems are not easily solved and it may take generations. However, I do feel that with a well-informed legislative body, be it provincial or federal, and with proper agreements and research, great things and great improvements could be brought about. Certainly an extensive leadership programme among the Indian people should have top priority.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I would like to recall the words of the Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) on the subject of Indians. Members of this House who toured northern and northwestern Ontario last fall will recall that during that trip, the Prime Minister said Ontario was prepared to accept administration over Indian affairs, provided Ottawa would give reasonable financial guarantees and such an arrangement was acceptable to the Indians.

The Prime Minister also noted he had informed the federal government that, provided the Indians were agreeable, Ontario would make available to Indians any services available to other citizens if the federal government was prepared to meet the cost.

Mr. Speaker, I commend this position as a sound one and I would hope that the federal government would pay it heed. I ask that they study it seriously and find a way to give Ontario the necessary financial support to provide the services the Indian people need and which most of us take for granted.

Mr. Speaker: Order! I would point out to the hon. member that he is now intruding on someone else's time and perhaps he would bring his remarks to a conclusion shortly.

Mr. Bernier: I will, sir.

Another way this might be done is by transferring to the province a lump sum for spending on Indian matters. This sum could be arrived at by working out a per capita amount based on the total Indian population.

Of course, the spending of this money would follow programmes and priorities arrived at through consultations with the Indians themselves. In all our endeavours in this area we must be sure the Indians themselves participate in the decision-making.

Mr. Speaker: Order! Order!

The hon. member is still persisting in pursuing his text. Would he please wind up his remarks?

Mr. Bernier: One more line, sir.

Mr. Speaker: Right.

Mr. Bernier: The Indians should also be assured that such an arrangement would not diminish present provincial spending on matters of concern to them.

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I must inform you at the outset that I cannot support the resolution that has been put before us for a number of important reasons. But the most important, surely, is the 9,000 Indians in my constituency are not prepared to accept the largesse of the devil they do not know at this moment.

They have been under the direction of the Indian department in Ottawa for 175 years—I guess it has not been in Ottawa for that long—and while there are deep-seated difficulties and, in fact, many prejudices, on the part of the Indians and those in the department, I have never yet been able to find an Indian in my constituency—and, as I say, there are 9,000 of them—who would say this would be an improvement over the present situation.

I would like, Mr. Speaker, to put in context one of the opening remarks that the hon. member for Kenora made. I quote from the Toronto Telegram of January 6, 1966, and the headline is: "$500 Million Plan To Help Indians."

The Ontario Cabinet today approved a revolutionary federal-provincial pact which could bring $500 million in aid to the province's poverty-stricken Indians.

Then to quote from an even more authoritative source—the press release of the then Minister of Welfare, who was responsible for Indian matters in the province, as follows:

Ratification of an agreement with the federal government on a development programme for Ontario Indians was announced today by the Hon. Louis P. Cecile, Ontario Minister of Public Welfare. The major responsibility for Indians is taken over by the provincial government. The development programme will cover education, housing, employment, law enforcement, health, recreation and economic development—

And the Minister ends the news release as follows:

Mr. Cecile stated the agreement would take effect immediately.

Now the hon. member who spoke first on this resolution was quick to say that there was fault on both sides and while I may sound partisan in my presentation, I hope that you will consider it on its merits, Mr. Speaker, because I believe the fault in this matter has lain with the government of Ontario and particularly, with The Minister of Welfare.

The Minister's committee has been singularly unsuccessful to bring into being any part of the agreement that he announced with such fanfare more than three years ago and I believe that he and his colleagues have but little interest in bringing out any of the solutions that they have been putting before this House for a good many years.

I would like to be quite specific. The Minister of Health has been quoted in this House just this afternoon as saying that he does not want the Indians in this province to be pawns in any political battle between the two levels of government. And yet the fact remains that, while we in this province are not participating in Medicare, we do have a programme of public health services called OMSIP which is not available to the Indians but which is available to the rest of the citizens of this province.

And while The Minister of Health is quick to say that he is not going to make the Indians pawns in this programme, he will not provide them the same assistance in meeting their premiums for OMSIP, which is available to all of us as ordinary citizens of this province. This is a very serious matter on the part of the government in not meeting their obligations to these citizens.

I would say that it is well understood that the province of Ontario has been extending its services to those Indians in the community who are off reserves and, in many instances as has already been pointed out, to those Indians on reserves. But surely it is not going to solve the problem by setting up another committee to advise the government in how they might well accept the full responsibility.

The phrase itself has overtones of the old paternalistic attitudes which have been so severely criticized at the federal level. That is why I began my remarks by saying I do not know of any Indians in my constituency—and I have 9,000 of them—who would approve of this transfer.

Now it is possible if they heard the eloquent member who spoke previously they would in part change their minds. I believe, and it is my own view, that it must continue to be a shared responsibility. But we must get out of our minds that we are more efficient than another level of government, and that all we have to do is get funds from the government of Canada that would come to us without strings attached, and that we would then apply them in our wisdom, in our benevolence, as the resolution says—in taking sole responsibility for Indian and Eskimo affairs.

Surely this is an archaic approach, an approach that is no longer countenanced by Indians, or any thoughtful people, when they look on the problem as it has developed.

This consultation is a difficult business as I am sure the member for Kenora knows. He and I are in a position where we must consult, otherwise we are not going to be re-elected. These people are our constituents and we have to respond to their wishes and be as helpful as we can, and as progressive as we can.

But still there is the feeling that those Indians off the reserve do come under the present provincial programmes and, if anything, the government of Ontario has been further remiss in its duties in education—this was raised previously—in not providing the schools on the locations near the reserves where the Indians need them but where they are not covered by the facilities already available.

The government of Ontario has done this in some measure already. Certainly when we examine the estimates of The Department of Education one of the most interesting expenditures is going to be that new school, that new education centre, in the constituency of The Minister of Lands and Forests up in Moosonee.

This is in the process of being built. There is some federal assistance and it is unfair to say that the government of Canada is short-sighted in providing a spirit of co-operation and funds in the development of this new approach.

But you know we must not always think that integration is the aim of education or any of these other programmes. As a matter of fact, I can give you an instance where, on the Six Nations reserve—and once again it is in my constituency—there are more young Indian people actively engaged in the education process than in either of two nearby townships. That is on a percentage basis.

These young Indians have a first rate—an excellent education system on their own reserve, which is operated by Indians at every level and is paid for exclusively for the government of Canada. I might add that drop-outs come when they go into the secondary system and go by bus to the nearby schools. I taught in one of the schools for six or seven years. I taught many of the Indians and they find that they have difficulty adapting to changing social pressures when they come off the reserve.

Now there are two ways that this problem might be approached by an authoritarian government—which Heaven forbid. The first is to fully integrate the schools, bus the young Indians out into integrated schools from the very earliest time, which I believe would be a serious mistake under these circumstances, and would simply not be acceptable to the Indians themselves.

The other alternative is to provide continuing education at the secondary level on a reserve setting where they can face the challenges of the outside community if they choose to do so—and that is the operative phrase, when they choose to do so, and not because, if they are going to get further education, they must do so.

I would say that this is going to be one of the solutions for the large concentrations of Indians in our province—and there are many of them remaining.

I would also like to point out to you, Mr. Speaker, that there are many international rights that the Indians still have, or should have, which could not possibly come under the direction of the provincial government. We know that the Indian bands and tribes have connections well beyond the boundaries of any one province, and it would be a shame to divide them up specifically for all of the services that are available to them so that the services would be better in one area—and possibly Ontario would be one of those areas—than in other areas.

Secondly, the controversy over the provisions of the Jay Treaty that we are hearing about so much these days, is surely a federal responsibility and one in which the province should not, and really could not, become involved. The Indians of Iroquois extraction, particularly, are very much accustomed to crossing the border without any of the formality that most of us are used to, and as a matter of fact they have claimed as their right to bring back with them those things that they can carry which should be brought back without duty.

Now obviously there has got to be some reasonable accommodation in this regard, but I think that we in Canada are too quick to say that their demands are thoughtless, that they are pointless, instead of looking at the treaties as they actually exist, and as they were entered into by the people who came long before us in solemn agreement with the Indians.

It is very difficult for the Indian to see any reason why they should be restricted on these agreements that have been laid down for so many years. The third matter of extra-provincial jurisdiction is surely the hunting and fishing rights which have been guaranteed on the old parchments and deeds and treaties that have come down to us from the very earliest times.

Sometimes you hear people say “oh well, any provision that says they have the right to hunt and fish as long as the winds blow and the grasses grow” has got to be a ridiculous one and they have to come under the modern provisions of the statutes.

Well I am not prepared to accept that. I do not believe The Minister of Lands and Forests is prepared to accept that the provisions in our game and fish statute, the regulations in our province, transgress many of those agreements. The argument that has been put to the Indians by this Minister and many of his predecessors—and I mean a long way back—has been that really it is the federal government that is involved in the upholding of these treaties. Now I do not believe that it is possible for us to pass the buck any longer. I believe we must—Mr. Speaker I see you are on your feet.

Mr. Speaker: The agreement, as I understand it, is a ten minute limit after the initial speaker, and I would draw to the hon. leader's attention that we have now exceeded that a bit, and that there are others who wish to speak.

Mr. Nixon: I thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I will conclude simply by saying that I do not feel the welfare of the Indians would be served by yet another committee, even if there are members of the Legislature on it. I well recall the last select committee on Indian affairs coming up into the Brant area and doing some of the research which I am sure can still be read in the libraries of this institution.

I am not prepared at all to think that a further committee investigation is going to be of any use to the Indians. I believe that the impasse which presently involves the Indian health services is one which must be broken immediately and here is an area for action, here is an area for generous solution, which lies open to this government and I would heartily recommend that they seize upon it.

Mr. J. L. Brown (Beaches-Woodbine): Mr. Speaker, I do not support the resolution. To me this is a typically insipid, Tory resolution, because it is blatantly clear to all, and most particularly to the Indians, that the government of Ontario, with its present limited jurisdiction, has failed to fulfill its responsibilities to the Indians of the province in those areas where it has responsibility.

To suggest that they will take greater responsibility and cover all the aspects of Indian affairs is to project their inadequacy on a broader scale, the same kind of ineptness and the failure to deliver the rudimentary services of life to the Indians and Eskimos of our province. We know right now that it is a toss up whether Ottawa or Queen's Park is superior in passing the buck as far as services to the Indians are concerned.

I realize the importance that the Liberal Party places on this issue by the fact that the leader of the Opposition takes the private members' time to speak on the resolution. It could be that he sensed in the Tory resolution a political ploy that he wanted to answer on behalf of his constituents. It could be that he read of the growing unrest about his leadership that was an issue this morning in the press.

Getting back to the role of the governments; both are past masters in passing the buck. Both have learned how to spend large sums of public money without providing even the simplest of services; both vacillate between a policy of irresponsible neglect and spirit-shattering paternalism.

There is no doubt that the Ontario government, in all its departments dealing with Indians, has a negative bigoted approach to the Indian, the end result of which is to perpetuate the Indian citizen and the Indian on the reserve in a state of economic dependence and dire poverty, without the benefits of modern medicine, modern education and the other aspects of life which are part of the Ontario scene.

We cannot expect that the government would be so direct as to say these things about itself, but that surely is the state of affairs in every one of the dealings between the government of Ontario and the individual Indian or the groups of Indians in the various communities in the province.

There is no doubt in any thinking man's mind that all levels of government become highly proficient in passing the buck. So, when one addresses oneself to the question why is the hon. member for Kenora (Mr. Bernier)—noble young stalwart in the ranks of the Tory party, a veritable godsend to the Tory party from the north—why is he raising this resolution, what is the meaning of his great concern. It is of course clear that he is not interested in the Indian, or the welfare of the Indian, but that he is doing the work of a party hack for the Tories in the north. He is pretending—in that cynical, gross way that Tory politicians have—that they are concerned about people, when they are only concerned about their political fortunes. The fact of this solution is that it would make it possible for the Ontario Government to continue to avoid its responsibilities to the Indians in Ontario for at least another five years, if not longer, awaiting the necessary constitutional changes that would grind their slow way out of the machinery in Ottawa. Slow—as the last few days of the constitutional conference have shown us.

So let us not kid ourselves that this red power advocate from Kenora is really interested in the Indians. It was his party that swept the Indians off the streets in Kenora before the Legislature visited there in that famous march through the north that we took last year—at considerable cost to the taxpayers of the province.

I had the opportunity of visiting Kenora shortly afterwards and I found that the scene was quite different from what was presented to us when we were there. Now, I assume—

Mr. Bernier: The member is talking like a typical southern Ontarian.

Mr. Brown: The member knows that very well. Indeed, the only significance of this resolution is that it would buy more time for the Tory party at a phenomenal cost to the Indians of Ontario. When we ask ourselves, as I think the leader of the Opposition did a few moments ago, what has the Ontario Government done for the Indians—we find that there is a tremendous shortcoming in all of its works. They have failed to accept the responsibility that was placed in them, the responsibility that they fully agreed with.

We hear, as a first step, the suggestion from the hon. member for Kenora that there should be the establishment of an advisory committee to counsel the government on problems affecting the Indians and Eskimos. He and his scriptwriters refer to the Indians and Eskimos as “his Indians and Eskimos.” I would like you all to take a look at that resolution. It says, “our Indians and our Eskimos”—as though they are his prized possessions, as though they are somehow like his chattels, like his dogs and like his cats, and the other things that he refers to as his personal property. Just who does he think he is that these are his Indians and his Eskimos? The government will wake up one day to find that the Indians and the Eskimos are their own masters and that they do not belong to anyone.

But let us take this suggestion of the advisory committee and let us deal with it in a straightforward fashion. The government has long needed advice, God knows that. But if it is to find out the problems of the Indians and the Eskimos then it had better establish some machinery by which these people can have a voice of their own. There should be no committee or commission that includes a non-Indian or a non-Eskimo on it.

It is not enough to make a gesture to the Indians, it is not enough that the government pretend an interest or go through a meaningless act. The Indians must be given the right to determine their own destiny and they must have full voice in the carrying out of the programmes of government.

In reply to the bigoted, stereotyped statements that emanate from the people of Ontario, politicians and non-politicians who say that the Indian is unable to solve his own problems, I would say, without hesitation, that if we were to immediately turn over to the Indian even a fraction of what is now being spent on his behalf, and give him the opportunity to be fully responsible for his people and for the services they need, we would find that they can immediately do a better job than any government branch of service is now doing. They would improve with time to the point where they could certainly teach us much about what constitutes good service to people. But the Indians' solutions may not be our solutions, he might not come to the same conclusions we would come to—this is where the rub comes in.

We want the Indians to become junior whites. He cannot and he will not. What gets set up must be relevant to him and to the many varieties within the Indian community. There must be a relevancy, not just to some conglomerate concept of what the Indian is, but to the individuals that make up the Indian communities.

I would like to say in closing, that the history of our relationship to the Indian is one of which I am not proud, nor do I think any of us here in this Legislature can be proud. I think we must face the consequences of not only our inability to deal with the Indian honestly, but we must also face the consequences of all the dishonest acts that our government has done to the Indian over the whole history of our country.

The Indians have always come to the negotiation table openly and honestly, and he has been met—time and again—with lies, deceit, misrepresentations, and has always been treated in an inferior fashion. His ancient history, his ancient culture, his way of life have been the subject of derision and ridicule, and he himself has been the subject of great individual and collective abuse.

I would like, Mr. Speaker, to just read one paragraph from Mr. Bernier's remarks. He says:

Yes, Mr. Speaker, the Indian people are indeed different. They have been pushed aside, at times even mistreated and exploited by the aggressive white man.

At the same time—And I would like to underline the following:

I realize that the Canadian Indian is guilty in hindering formal education, ignoring helpful ideas, ridiculing conscientious administrators, in making useless, ill-advised demands. Above all, he is known for his reluctance to cooperate with others.

I have never heard anything further from the truth. The man obviously has no concept or idea of the history of the relationship between the Indians and the rest of the Canadian community. Somehow or other, while he grew up with these people, joined them in the school programmes, and knew them in their community, he has failed to understand what it means to be an Indian in Ontario, or in northern Ontario. So when the Tories, in this resolution, try to exploit the Indian politically, they create a strong feeling of abhorrence and disgust in me, this is what comes out of it for me. Let us make it very simple. If any political group wishes to be useful—and I would address this to the leader of the Opposition too—it will do so by advocating that the Indian immediately be given control over his destiny, and that he be given at least as much money to sort out his destiny as is now being expended on his behalf by people who neither understand him nor care about him.

In the moment I have left, Mr. Speaker, I would like to make one further small remark about the shameful manner in which the Christian church has played its role with the Indians.

The time has long passed when we can stand by and allow this organization, or these various Christian church organizations, to be the front men for the inadequate policies of government. We still are finding that that is too true. There are still many areas of the north where the church dominates the Indian and dominates him to the ruin of the Indian.

Mr. R. H. Knight (Port Arthur): They went there when no one else would go.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I would like to point out to the hon. member for Beaches-Woodbine, who has just spoken, and to all hon. members, that in debates in this House it is not customary, nor is it advisable to refer to the hon. members by name, but by the constituency which they represent. In this way, a great deal of bitterness perhaps can be avoided. Therefore, in future, I would hope that we would follow the rules of debate in that regard. The hon. member for Hamilton Mountain has the floor.

Mr. J. R. Smith (Hamilton Mountain): I choose to speak to the resolution introduced by my colleague the hon. member for Kenora because I am also concerned for the well being and the future of our Indian and Eskimo citizens.

Last summer I had the privilege of being the guest of the Eskimo settlement of Povungnituk for several weeks. I had some insight into the life of a people in transition. This concern—one of the main reasons for suggesting that Ontario be responsible for Indians—was generated less than a year ago by a complete disregard for the Indian residents of northwestern Ontario by the federal government's Department of Health.

Since then Mr. Speaker, I would like to draw the attention of the members of this House to the fact that the hon. Minister of Health, the Hon. John Munro has seen fit to visit some of the Eskimo settlements of Ontario and the Northwest Territories.

The federal government saw fit to build a hospital on Moose Island, at Moosonee, in an extremely isolated area. When I visited this hospital last August, you had to pay $2 for the canoe ride from Moosonee to Moose Island. This hospital serves not only as a centre for TB treatment, but as a general hospital, treating all ailments of the residents of the north country of Ontario and of northern Quebec.

This grave error committed by the federal government is well reflected in the number of ridiculous situations which have resulted since.

For example, approximately 13 patients from Kenora, Red Lake and Sioux Lookout district that were all active tubercular patients at the Fort William San—which, on comparative basis is not too great a distance from their families—were transferred to the Moosonee General Hospital, at Moose Factory, many hundreds of miles away.

And the reason for this move? Well, they were long-term patients who would be treated cheaper at Moosonee. No compassion here, Mr. Speaker, only disregard for the hardships that would be cast on the families who could no longer even hope to visit their loved ones. Similarly Eskimo patients from the back region of Nouveau Quebec are also hospitalized at Moosonee, hundreds of miles from their homes and in a strange community and society.

Yes, complete disregard for these human beings; no thought of love or affection that would be lost. They were simply loaded like cattle—and perhaps you might say they were shipped off to the Alcatraz of Ontario, to Ontario's federal government hospitals at Moosonee.

The federal Department of Indian Affairs has failed miserably in this responsibility,

Mr. Speaker. Its failures and its attitudes to the 50,000 Indians in this province has resulted in complete disillusionment, embitterment and suspicion of even friendly and honest approaches.

This department cares only for those Indians who are registered and who reside within the confines of a reservation. The attitude of federal authorities is—move out of the reservation, and relinquish all rights to federal assistance. Perhaps I should have said all rights to whatever miserable federal assistance there is.

And many of our Canadian Indians are leaving the reservations, Mr. Speaker, leaving because they are fed up with the federal government's attitude. They know that, despite the millions of dollars that the federal government pumps into their Indian affairs programme, this province is the one which really provides them with more of what they are seeking.

The white man has done much to assist the Indians on the reserves. But we seem to have lost sight of the assistance we might have been able to give Indians moving to urban centres. They indeed got shoddy treatment by our federal government compared to many immigrants who settle in our large urban cities.

In this respect, I would like to make reference to an article in the Globe and Mail, dated November 21, 1968. The article deals with the Indian situation at Red Lake—which many hon. members had occasion to visit this summer on the tour of northwestern Ontario, 170 miles north of Kenora.

And it states that:

They (the Indians) are coming in increasing numbers to Red Lake. And they are doing so because, in Red Lake, there is an absence of militancy or demands. There is no atmosphere of tension—no divided camps of white man and Indian backing into rigid positions.

The article, goes on at some length explaining how in Red Lake the white man and the Indian work side-by-side and hand-in-hand towards the betterment of the entire community.

But, there is something missing from all this new-found harmony. Yes, Mr. Speaker there is something missing—and that is federal influence. The federal Department of Indian Affairs disclaims any responsibility for non-registered Indians and those outside of reservations. So there just is not any federal influence here.

According to the Globe and Mail article, a federal Indian affairs superintendent was sent into the Red Lake district last summer, but few of the Indians ever even saw him. It appears that this superintendent had left a vicious dog at the front of his home and as a result, few of the Indians wished to risk going by this animal just to see the superintendent.

These are not merely our fellow Canadian citizens. These people are human beings. They are flesh and blood; people who laugh and cry; people who are desperately in need of assistance and understanding. They need a voice to speak for them.

The best solution to present problems will undoubtedly come from the Indians and Eskimos themselves. We, as a province, are trying our best but our funds are too little, our efforts too weak. We need more money and more facilities and this could be all available if only we could wrestle a few measly pennies away from the federal authorities who are only duplicating our efforts, doing many of them clumsily and badly.

It is because of these and many other reasons, most of which have been outlined here today, that I join with my colleague from Kenora in urging this government to take steps which will result in the provision of federal funds for this province for the rehabilitation of Indians.

I believe that the interest of the Indians of this province could best be served by such an advisory council which would be used at the form where elected Indian representatives can sit down with legislators; these people are not satisfied with only speaking with civil servants, they want a voice. They have many of the solutions themselves, let us harness their resources.

Mr. Knight: Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to participate in the debate on this resolution.

It is very interesting to me to sit back and watch non-Indian people argue about the Indian problem and to see how they very quickly start tearing one another apart. I think it is a big mistake we make in modern-day society.

Surely, the whole white society is not to blame? Surely there are many white people, and I would like to include myself among them, who are very sincerely interested and concerned about this problem. I certainly could not go along with the remarks that were made about the hon. member for Kenora. I think his intentions—party politics apart—are of the highest calibre, where the Indian problem is concerned. I do not think we are going to get anywhere in this House if we start questioning one another in the manner that he has been questioned.

However, I will not go along with his resolution because I think that he is fostering a plan to decimate the Indian nation. Indian people are a nation, of course, which knows no boundaries within Canada and perhaps even in North America. To allow the province of Ontario to assume full responsibility for the Indian people in this province would also be to open the door for the other provinces to do the same and in this way, divide the Indian nation into 10 or 11 parts.

I feel myself that this has to remain a federal matter—that the federal government must retain the responsibility and should be the watch dog over these treaties with the Indian people. However, when you look at the problem from a practical point of view you will realize that there are so many services within the government of Ontario, within the departments of this government, that should be available to Indian people who live in this province and these services are not available to them.

I feel that inasmuch as they live within the boundaries of Ontario, these services should be made available to them. Therefore I think that it might be possible to consider that, while the federal government retains the responsibility, financial and legal, it might be possible for greater liaison between the provincial and federal government, so as to make it possible for these services. I am thinking of Family and Social Services, Health, Ontario Human Rights, Lands and Forests—all the other departments of government through which the Indian people could benefit as well as the rest of us do.

So I would suggest greater liaison in that area. However, there is an area where this government is to blame where the Indian people are concerned. That is, the Indian people who do not live on the reserves. These are the forgotten ones. These are the ones who are turned loose in a sea of civilization, humanity, tall buildings and discriminating people—superior people. These are the Indian people who are lost, who do not know which way to turn.

I think that our society has been remiss in making it possible for Indian people to leave the protection of their reserve and to come into society without a proper preparation or introduction. I see it every day up in my own riding of Port Arthur where people call me. Indians are coming into the city with their families; they have no job, and they do not know where to begin. They need assistance. They go from one department of government to the other—this government and the other government as well.

They wind up back with some Indian person within the city of Port Arthur who has established himself. He will pick up the problem and try to get it solved for them.

I am thinking of one man up in Port Arthur, Mr. Xavier Michon—I am sure he will not mind if I mention his name—who spends hour after hour, dollar after dollar, to help to get his people, the Indian people, properly introduced into the society with no recompense whatsoever to him. He does it out of the goodness of his heart; it is sincere interest.

I fear that it is people like Mr. Michon who will be lost to us. They are really, Mr. Speaker, the missing links in this entire problem, because the Indian person today is a very distrusting one and no one can really blame him. He distrusts. I have been at the Lakehead for nine years and I dare say I am distrusted by many of them, although I feel that my motives have been on the highest level. And yet he mistrusts me.

Some day, perhaps, I will win his confidence, if I deserve it, and his trust. But I know of people who do have that confidence and these are the people who we should not lose, or should not allow to be discouraged. And I think this is where this provincial government and the federal government can perhaps co-operate, to set up some kind of a commission of ombudsmen, go-betweens, so that you have somebody in every urban centre where Indian people are coming in, somebody they can go to and talk to and be guided and be assisted. If they do not come to departments of the provincial government, it is because they do not know anyone in there—they do not trust them. So we should have someone they can go to and can trust. I think this is extremely important.

I admire the hon. member for Kenora for advancing his resolution. He is aware of what I am aware of, because we live in the north, that there are all of these provincial services, but the Indian person does not seem to be benefitting from them.

So we would like to find some formula, some way to put the services within the reach of the Indian people, whether they be treaty or non-treaty, whether they live on the reserve or do not live on the reserve. And this is a very important area that should be explored.

Mr. Speaker, I do not know how we could go about bringing together all these people, these ombudsmen types in Ontario, into an organization or into a grouping of some kind, so that we can let them know that their services are appreciated, that we feel their services are needed and in demand, how we could get further use from them or attract others of their kind into the service of the Indian people and ourselves at the same time. But I do believe that efforts should be made in that direction.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. J. E. Stokes (Thunder Bay): Mr. Speaker, in the few minutes remaining in this private members' hour, I would like to congratulate the member for Kenora for bringing this very important subject to our attention. I endorse the premise that the provincial government does have a responsibility in the field towards Indians.

I am not as optimistic about their ability to tackle the job, or in the way in which it has to be tackled, particularly when you see the need for health services in northern communities, where you see the lack of educational facilities in many of the northern settings and reserves.

I think there is a very important part for the provincial government to play in this field. I think it is high time that we came to realize that The Department of Indian Affairs is not fulfilling the need it was intended to fill. They have been playing with the problem since the year 1850.

Obviously they have fallen far short of the mark. I think what we have failed to comprehend and to realize here in this debate this afternoon is, really, no one has asked the Indian who he thinks should be assisting him in doing the many things that have to be done to uplift the Indian.

I would just like to quote briefly from an article by Mr. Walter Currie of the Indian-Eskimo Association and he goes over the whole spectrum of the need for educational facilities, hospital facilities, the need of a complete revamping of The Indian Act and after he goes over all these, he says:

And then, what is to be done? He says the federal government, which is the people of Canada, must examine its policies and role toward its native people. The provincial governments must get off their tailbones and must accept the fact that these people are citizens as much as anyone else in the provinces and, therefore, deserve equal opportunities and equal services.

It is high time the provinces stopped hiding behind the idea that Indians are a federal responsibility. One sometimes gets the idea that the only time provinces fight for provincial rights is when it involves a source of revenue. The Indian people want to accept—and must be given—responsibility for their destinies.

Mr. Speaker, I see that my time has expired but I would just like to impress upon this government that, if we are going to uplift the Indian and bring him into the mainstream of society—socially, culturally and any way you want to put it—I think it is incumbent upon this provincial government to take action and bear their share of the responsibility to see this task to a successful conclusion.

Hon. R. S. Welch (Provincial Secretary): Mr. Speaker, we will continue with the Throne Debate tomorrow.

Hon. Mr. Welch moves the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to.

The House adjourned at 6.00 o'clock p.m.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 18, 1969

The House met at 2.30 o'clock, p.m.

Prayers.

Mr. Speaker: Our guests today in the east gallery are students from Main Street School in Toronto; and in the west gallery from Sir John A. Macdonald Collegiate Institute in Agincourt; and in both galleries, from the John G. Althouse Public School, Islington. Later this afternoon we shall be joined by personnel from the Manpower Retraining Centre at Keele and Dundas Streets in Toronto.

Petitions.

Clerk of the House: The following petition has been received:

Of the corporation of the town of Mississauga praying that an Act may pass permitting it to provide public transportation by agreement without the necessity of a referendum.

Mr. Speaker: Presenting reports.

Mr. A. B. R. Lawrence, from the standing private bills committee, presented the committee's third report which was read as follows and adopted:

Your committee begs to report the following bill without amendment:

Bill Pr19, An Act respect the City of Belleville.

Your committee begs to report the following bill with certain amendments:

Bill Pr6, An Act respecting the City of Niagara Falls.

Mr. Speaker: Motions.

Introduction of bills.

The hon. Minister of Highways has a statement.

Hon. G. E. Gomme (Minister of Highways): Mr. Speaker, I should like to draw to the attention of the members that the official Ontario road map is now available for distribution.

A copy of the map has been placed on the desks of the hon. members and, in passing, I might say that the cover design this year has been co-ordinated with The Department of Tourism and Information to be compatible with that department's overall promotional material to attract additional tourists to our province.

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Education.

Has the Minister any information on when we might expect a report of the Mackay commission on the teaching of religion in the schools, which I believe has been sitting now for four years?

Hon. W. G. Davis (Minister of Education): Mr. Speaker, I will not get into a discussion today as to the exact length of time, because that was not a part of the question that I received. My own recollection is not that it is four years, but we can discuss that on another occasion.

I have a copy of the report; it is in the process of being printed for distribution. When it is ready I shall make it available to all members of this House so we will have ample opportunity to discuss it I think, at some great length.

Mr. Nixon: Did I understand correctly—the Minister has a copy of this right now, and so it should be available within a few days?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, in that I am not a member of the printing profession, I cannot say just how many days are involved, but I am saying that we are in the process of getting it printed for rather wide distribution.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Attorney General if, following the Supreme Court of Canada's decision yesterday, is he prepared to recommend to the Minister of Justice for Canada that all off-track betting be made legal?

Second, is the Attorney General preparing regulations to control the operation of betting agencies?

Hon. A. A. Wishart (Attorney General): No, Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to recommend that all off-track betting be made legal. On the contrary, I spoke with the Minister of Justice, the Hon. John Turner, last week, somewhat anticipating perhaps the decision of the court, or at least outlining our thoughts whatever the decision of the court might be, and that was in company with the attorneys general of other provinces—so that he had an understanding of our approach.

I spoke with him again this morning and our recommendation was to amend the code to make such activity illegal if the court should hold that it was not illegal now.

As I say, I spoke to him this morning and we are anticipating that action will be taken to bring the law at the federal level in line to make this sort of activity illegal; so I would not be anticipating—in answer to the second part of the question—any programme to license or control this type of activity.

Mr. Nixon: The Attorney General's recommendation to the Minister of Justice would include the present betting agencies that were reviewed by the courts just recently?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: The law—if the Minister sees fit to amend it as I trust will be the case—would, of course, cover everybody. Regarding these activities which are perhaps being carried on, or which may spring up in the interim, I would expect first of all that they would get their own legal advice as to what they may do and they will be certainly aware of what we propose the legislation shall be, to affect that type of activity.

Mr. Nixon: May I ask, Mr. Speaker, if the Attorney General will permit a supplementary question? Does he not think that it might be in order for a general review of the laws as they are understood here in Ontario, and applied here in Ontario, before we opt for the status quo?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Speaker, regarding the law covering gaming, betting and off-track betting generally, I think the hon. member is aware that the section under which we proceeded was one of the subsections of Section 177 of the Criminal Code. This is federal legislation, which has control of betting. We cannot review or alter that legislation.

If the federal government takes jurisdiction in this, as it does and has, it is in that area of jurisdiction that the law would be reviewed, extended or altered, and that is the proposal that I, along with, as I say, the attorneys general of certain other provinces, put forward.

We have much concern about this activity; how it would be controlled; how it would be licensed, if that were to be considered; and how one would regulate it if certain criminal elements might find it easy to get into the field. These are the things that give us concern and I think this is certainly in the federal area of legislation under the Criminal Code.

Mr. Nixon: If I might have another question of the Attorney General, I am well aware that it is in the federal jurisdiction and that the Attorney General of Ontario has been making recommendations to him, but surely the Attorney General is also concerned about the involvement of criminal elements in the illegal betting that now goes on in such tremendous proportions?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Of course we are concerned and that is why we are particularly concerned that this type of activity, by the decision of the court, can be carried on as a legal activity because I think one does not need to be very perceptive to know that this would be an easy way to create a front for illegal activities. This does give us great concern.

But I must go back to this—that that is why, and I think quite properly, the Criminal Code takes cognizance of this type of activity. That is why we have made our views known to the Minister of Justice. He is quite aware of it and he shares our concern, as do other attorneys general and the leaders of the government in other provinces.

The only thing we could do, I think, if the law were left in this present state, could possibly be to bring in a system of licencing, supervision or control which would be extremely difficult to enforce. It would be a most difficult thing to enforce so as to prevent criminal elements getting in behind this front.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Mr. Speaker, I have a long standing question to the Minister of Highways. What is the government doing to end the winter time isolation of the 300 to 400 citizens of Pelee Island?

Hon. Mr. Gomme: Mr. Speaker, the transportation facilities between the mainland and Pelee Island have not changed for a number of years, and to my knowledge no changes are anticipated.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, I did not get the latter part of the comment.

Hon. Mr. Gomme: And to my knowledge no changes are anticipated.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, by way of a supplementary question. Would the Minister consider a feasibility study of the use of hovercraft running between Pelee Island, Leamington, Ontario, and Sandusky, Ohio? I understand this is one of the proposals that have been advanced by the local people coping with this problem.

Hon. Mr. Gomme: Mr. Speaker, I believe this was done by the federal department and no action was taken on it after that study.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, by way of a further supplementary question, has the Minister got a copy of that feasibility study? Does he know whether or not hovercraft is feasible, or is it just that the federal government does not feel it is their responsibility; that it is the responsibility of the provincial government?

Hon. Mr. Gomme: Mr. Speaker, I could not answer the hon. member's question as to what the federal government feels. But my understanding is that transportation to Pelee Island is subsidized by the federal government and, of course, I think that would be their responsibility.

Mr. MacDonald: One gets nowhere fast, Mr. Speaker. My second question is to the Minister of University Affairs. Is the Minister in a position to comment, either by confirmation or by denial, on the contention advanced by Pauline Jewett in the March, 1969, issue of Maclean's magazine that Canadian universities have manifested an indifference to Canadian talent and a preference to non-Canadians in their staff recruiting?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, in reply to this question, I must say that I am not aware of any national survey or any survey internally within the province, showing a breakdown of academic staff according to the country of origin. I am just wondering whether such a survey is either desirable or feasible, but that is not what the hon. member is asking.

I think it should be pointed out at this stage that in this province in the past 15 years we have grown in the post-secondary area from four universities to 15. The enrollments have quadrupled and obviously the universities have gone to other jurisdictions for specialized staff, including the United States, and, of course, the U.K.

Increasingly, within the universities, through the graduate fellowship programmes, we have been interesting substantial numbers of young people to move into the academic area, not only for post-graduate work, but for university lecturing as well. I think it is also relevant in this society of ours to recognize that there is a place for a certain diversity, and that the experience and the talents that have been brought by people from other jurisdictions have been helpful to the total educational environment in our universities. I am sure the hon. member would not disagree with this.

I think it should also be stated that the hiring of staff quite obviously comes within the competence of the University departments and, through them, in the recommendations the senates and boards of the universities. These are done usually once a year, sometimes twice. On two occasions each year the Association of Universities and Colleges of Canada publishes a list of academic vacancies which receives a wide distribution in the Canadian university community. I think I can say, Mr. Speaker, that I have not received from either the professional association in Ontario or from individual professors any direct complaint about discrimination against Ontario or Canadian scholars. Now, whether this will help the hon. member in relieving his mind about the statement from Pauline Jewett. I cannot say, but perhaps it might be somewhat helpful.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, far be it from me to disagree with the Minister, he is very disarming. But may I go back to the question that I asked and couple it with this query? Is it not correct that OISE is involved with CAUT in a study of the origin of university staff here in Ontario and, perhaps nationally? If so, and if the study has reached that stage, is the Minister in a position to comment on whether or not there is any credibility in the contention that there is discrimination against Canadians or preference for non-Canadians.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, as I have always been prepared to do, hopefully, in this Legislature, if I have any information that is relevant to any particular issue—this one included—that may be available to me I shall immediately make it available to the member for York South and all other members of the House. I do not have any direct communications from individual professors or faculty associations; nor do I have any results from any survey that may or may not be under way under any auspices.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, by way of a supplementary question, may I ask the Minister again: Is OISE involved with CAUT in such a study?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I cannot speak for the CAUT; I do not know what studies they may or may not have underway. If they have such a study underway, and if they have asked for certain information from OISE, obviously that relationship would be between OISE and CAUT, over which I have no jurisdiction.

An hon. member: Have you any relationship with OISE?

Hon. Mr. Davis: We help finance that very important organization.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. G. Ben (Humber): Mr. Speaker, if I will first put question 667, and I understand that the hon. member for Nipissing (Mr. R. S. Smith), also has a question in similar vein. The question is directed to the Minister of Health.

1. Has Vermillion Fairbank Lake water, contaminated with cyanide from an Inco spillage at Moose Creek on January 5, been used for livestock or domestic purposes? 2. Is not a 1,200 gallons spillage huge in relation to the toxicity of undiluted cyanide? 3. Will the Minister take steps to see what, if any, effects this spillage has had on the public health in the area, by undertaking free medical examination of 150 families who may have been exposed to risk? 4. Will the Minister take steps to recover the costs of such medical examination from the International Nickel Company? 5. Can the Minister assure this House that no contaminated food of any kind has reached the market as the result of this grave incident?

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. M. B. Dymond (Minister of Health): I will take this question as notice.

Mr. Speaker: I have no question from the hon. member for Nipissing on that problem.

Mr. R. S. Smith (Nipissing): Mr. Speaker, I have a copy of the question that was submitted to the Minister of Energy and Resources Management (Mr. Simonett).

Mr. Ben: Oh, then I apologize.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the hon. member for Humber would let the Speaker run the question period so far as the members are concerned.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Humber has a further question of this Minister.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Ben: Mr. Speaker, if it proves anything it proves the duplicity of departments; one does not know where to direct the questions.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order! The hon. member for Humber has the floor.

Mr. Ben: Again to the Minister of Health:

1. Will the Minister of Health arrange an early conference with the Canadian Manufacturers Association following the publication of the CMA codes of principles relating to industrial pollution? 2. At the same time such meeting is convened, will the government itself be ready with and will it lay before this Legislature a commentary on the code relating to the legal aspect particularly in relation to appeal and judicial review? 3. Will the Minister set up a centralized crew of technological information in order to assist industry in meeting its obligation to maintain a liveable atmosphere? 4. In view of the further evidence in this code that pollution is indivisible, will the Minister urge upon the Cabinet the need for his taking overall pollution control measures in this province, whether of air, water, noise or soil?

I guess, Mr. Speaker, that question could very well arise out of the incident that just took place with the question put by the hon. member for Nipissing.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Speaker, I submit to you that this question more likely belongs on the order paper, and when it appears there I will get the answer.

Mr. Ben: Oh, good grief!

Mr. Speaker: The hon. Minister will then advise the Clerk of the House it is being transferred to the order paper. The agreement has been that questions for the order paper submitted to the Speaker's office will only be transferred to the order paper by the Minister.

The hon. member for Humber has a further question.

Mr. Ben: I have a further question, and I hope the hon. Minister has not run out of money so he can pass the buck again.

1. What is the general position of companies operating in Ontario with respect to reporting to the provincial Minister of Health the manufacture of any toxic substance which might be volatile or efflorescent, yet which might form part of a classified military contract?

2. Does the Minister have any jurisdiction or power whatsoever to enforce any regulation relating to health and public safety when air pollution may arise as the result of the manufacture of classified chemical or biological substances in Ontario?

3. At the time of the inquiry into the pollution of air, soil and water in the townships of Dunn, Moulton and Sherbrooke in Haldimand county: (a) was either the Electric Company Limited, or the Sherbrooke Metallurgical Company, manufacturing any toxic product or by-product not reported to the commissioners? (b) was either company manufacturing any noxious substance or agent, or component of any agent, in contravention of the Geneva convention on chemical-biological warfare?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Speaker, I would like to take that question as notice.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Windsor West has a question of this Minister?

Mr. H. Peacock (Windsor West): I have a question of the Minister of Health, Mr. Speaker:

1. What were the findings of the air pollution control staff arising from its recent field investigation of complaints of damage to employees' cars and neighbouring residential property attributed to improper ventilation at the Windsor foundry of Chrysler Canada Limited?

2. What recommendations has the Minister made to the company for control of emissions, and how will these be enforced?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Speaker, investigation of the complaints concerning Chrysler Canada Limited foundry at Windsor indicated that the emission of particulate matter exceeded the standards set forth in Ontario regulations.

Under The Air Pollution Control Act, 1967, the Minister's order was issued requiring Chrysler to submit a programme of control by March 15, 1969. The company has co-operated by submitting this programme and a meeting of the air pollution control service and Chrysler will be held on Friday or early next week to finalize some of the details.

When approved, the company is required to implement the programme as rapidly as possible and by a stated date.

Mr. Peacock: I wonder if I could ask the Minister by way of a supplementary, if in stating that the programme must be implemented as rapidly as possible his department has given a deadline by which the measures must be undertaken?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: I have answered that question already, sir.

Mr. Peacock: No, the Minister has not.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Scarborough East has a question of the Minister of Health.

Mr. T. Reid (Scarborough East): Mr. Speaker, a question for the Minister of Health:

What are the least changes that would be required for federal medicare legislation and regulations to make eligible for federal contribution, the medical insurance plan presently in force in Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Speaker, I have complete lack of understanding of this question. I do not know whether the hon. member means changes necessary to the federal Act. If this be so, of course this lies outside my jurisdiction. If the hon. member means changes necessary to our Act, then I would like to know.

Mr. T. Reid: Mr. Speaker, I apologize to the hon. Minister for the ambiguity in the question and of course it refers to the changes in the medical insurance plan presently in force in Ontario to make Ontario eligible for the medicare grant from the federal government.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: I will have to take this as notice, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. T. Reid: Mr. Speaker, surely the Minister must know now.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for High Park has a question of this Minister.

Mr. M. Shulman (High Park): Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

A question of the Minister of Health in three parts:

In view of the statements at yesterday's inquest into the death of William Ambing, which revealed that the pregnancy of a 16-year-old patient at the Ontario hospital in Toronto occurred as a result of insufficient supervision, would the Minister care to revise his denial of my statement on these problems?

2. In view of Doctor J. Duksta's comment nobody at the hospital was aware that the girl had become pregnant, and in light of his further comments about this problem, would the Minister care to revise his estimates of the number of pregnancies which occurred in the Ontario hospitals last year?

3. Are birth control pills now being administered to patients at the Whitby psychiatric hospital? If the answer is yes, how many patients are receiving such pills and how many of these patients are married?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Speaker, the answer to the first part is no; the answer to the second part is no; and the answer to the third part, this is confidential information between the patient and the doctor and has no place in the public records.

Mr. Shulman: Will the Minister allow a supplementary question?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: No.

Mr. Shulman: Did the Minister say no or yes?

Mr. Speaker: No.

The hon. member for Ottawa Centre has a question of the Premier.

Mr. H. MacKenzie (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a question to the Prime Minister.

Would the Prime Minister give consideration to increasing the shelter allowances, provided for in the various assistance Acts, to meet the amounts which those on assistance are compelled to pay due to the housing crisis?

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, a similar question was asked of the Minister of Social and Family Services (Mr. Yaremko) last week. He answered it on Thursday. I think that answer will cover this question.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Etobicoke has a question of the Minister of Social and Family Services.

Mr. L. A. Braithwaite (Etobicoke): Yes, Mr. Speaker:

In view of the recommendations of the coroner's jury investigating the death of five-month-old William Frederick Ambing, is the Minister prepared, (a) To introduce legislation to allow for the protection of children of mentally ill parents? (b) To establish a central communication file system where all welfare agencies would provide information on their services?

Hon. J. Yaremko (Minister of Social and Family Services): Mr. Speaker, I will take notice of the question and give the answer later.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Essex South has a question of the Minister of Agriculture and Food.

Mr. D. A. Paterson (Essex South): Mr. Speaker, has the hon. Minister ever indicated verbally or in writing to the Minister of Agriculture for Canada that he and the province are willing to abdicate certain agriculture marketing powers to the federal government?

Second, have any other provinces made proposals of a similar nature?

Third, at the federal-provincial conference of agriculture Ministers to be held in Ottawa commencing March 24, will this province indicate a willingness to abdicate certain marketing powers in favour of national marketing arrangements, especially in regard to grains?

Hon. W. A. Stewart (Minister of Agriculture and Food): Mr. Speaker, in reply to this question: First of all, "Has the Minister of Agriculture and Food ever indicated verbally or in writing any abdication of certain agriculture marketing powers to the federal government?"

May I say that agreements do exist between the federal Department of Agriculture and The Ontario Department of Agriculture and Food as far as, for instance, the marketing of industrial milk in the province of Ontario. This is under the authority of the national dairy commission. As such, there are joint working arrangements between the Ontario Milk Marketing Board and the national dairy commission.

As far as any other marketing powers or extension of marketing powers to the federal government, I do not know of any at the moment. But there certainly are discussions going on, particularly with reference to national marketing of some commodities, for instance, a form of national control on eggs.

This would require a mutual exchange of authority between the provinces and the federal government, if such a national authority were to have jurisdiction across provincial boundaries, because The Agriculture Products Marketing Act of Canada does provide for the right of producers within a province to handle the particular commodity involved within that provincial border. But it really does not authorize the marketing board for that particular commodity to have any jurisdiction on inter-provincial or international borders. So it would be an extension of powers that would be given to the federal government by the province, and vice versa, to do just this.

These matters have been discussed on various commodities, Mr. Speaker. There have been no written agreements and certainly no talk of abdication of powers whatever—just attempts to find how best to resolve certain matters that the producers of some commodities feel should be resolved in this way.

As far as the third question is concerned, there is really not a meeting of Ministers per se on March 24, at Ottawa. The federal Department of Agriculture has called a national agriculture conference and has, in turn, invited the various provincial Ministers of Agriculture from across Canada to attend that conference along with a great many other delegates—several hundred, I believe. I am not aware of any discussions that will involve just the Ministers with the federal Minister.

Mr. Paterson: Mr. Speaker, by way of a supplementary question. Would the hon. Minister undertake to discuss the marketing of corn at this particular conference, should he be in attendance?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member is very well aware, I am sure, there is a corn industry inquiry committee now working in the province of Ontario. They have had several hearings and they are continuing their discussions and hearings into this matter, and I feel it would be essential we have their recommendations and report before discussion takes place at any other level.

Mr. Nixon: Is that the group that is already recommending a corn marketing board report?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Grey-Bruce has a question of the Minister of Agriculture and Food.

Mr. E. Sargent (Grey-Bruce): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that in the province of Quebec, The Department of Agriculture subsidizes farm loans—it says “losses” here—so that their net cost is 2.3 per cent, and in Ontario the net cost to the farmer is seven and a half per cent, will the Minister of Agriculture and Food reveal how Ontario farmers can be expected to compete on the market with such an advantage being given to Quebec farmers?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Well, Mr. Speaker, this question, of course, is relevant to the situation. The Quebec Department of Agriculture has decided to subsidize interest rates on farm loans and has been doing this for some years. While it does put our farmers at some disadvantage as far as this particular item is concerned, I am sure the hon. member, with his great knowledge of the province of Quebec and what a wonderful privilege it is to live here, would recognize that there are many other things that offset that advantage.

An hon. member: It is not what you said, it is the way you said it.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Speaker, will the Minister answer a supplementary on this?

In view of the fact that the differential on a $50,000 loan would be $2,500 a year—on a 30-year loan it would be $70,000—how does the Minister justify the fact that he will not reconsider this? It is a five per cent differential, and $2,500 a year is an awful handicap on a $50,000 loan. Would the Minister reconsider that?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Mr. Speaker, he is referring to the straight interest rate across the entire length of the loan, amortized over a period—

Mr. Sargent: Well, it doubles every 13 years.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: It would not be nearly that much, but I suppose I would tell the hon. member that, as the Prime Minister suggested a moment ago, if we were willing to support an eight per cent sales tax in the province of Ontario, we might be able to consider that kind of subsidy.

Mr. Sargent: Well, will the Minister reconsider it?

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister of Correctional Services): Is the member in favour of an eight per cent sales tax?

Mr. Sargent: We tell the farmers—

Mr. Speaker: Order, order! The hon. member may ask a supplementary question, but that is all.

I would like to ask the hon. member for Huron-Bruce (Mr. Gaunt) if he understands the situation with respect to the question he placed yesterday, which was taken as notice and which he placed again today? When questions are taken as notice, that means the Minister will answer them at the earliest possible moment. Therefore, the question is open to answer when the Minister is prepared.

Mr. M. Gaunt (Huron-Bruce): Mr. Speaker, if I may, I understand that the Minister was not in the House yesterday so I did not ask the question; that was my understanding.

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry. Would the hon. member now place the question?

Mr. Gaunt: Thank you. Will the Minister table correspondence with the Ontario Federation of Agriculture as follows: 1. A letter of August 27, 1967, recommending Mr. George Klosser, MA, Econ., a farmer with experience in preparing reports, to chair the inquiry into the pollution of air, soil and water in the townships of Dunn, Moulton, and Sherbrooke in Haldimand county?

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the hon. member would check his copy? Mine is the townships of Dunn, Hamilton and Sherbrooke.

Mr. Gaunt: Well, Mr. Speaker, it is a typographical error. It should read Moulton.

Mr. Speaker: Thank you.

Mr. Gaunt: 2. A reply by the Minister dated August 31, 1967, stating that this recommendation would be given serious consideration.

Will the Minister explain how it was possible to write such a reply in view of the statement on page 288, paragraph 201, of the report, that "on August 24, 1967, Cabinet approval was given to the appointment of Dr. G. E. Hall as chairman of the committee"?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I will take the question as notice, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Windsor West has a question of the Minister of Transport.

Mr. Peacock: Mr. Speaker, does the Minister intend to introduce legislation limiting to reasonable levels the amount of noise that may be caused by motor trucks operating in the province, and providing for enforcement of noise level limits by the province on a uniform basis, as requested by Woodstock, Windsor and other cities.

Hon. I. Haskett (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the problem of motor vehicle noise pollution has been under continuous study for some years. The National Research Council in Ottawa has done work on it, but no satisfactory solution has been found. Only very recently, the Society of Automotive Engineers has come up with what I believe is a technically valid set of standards and method of measurement. And I feel that the time is fast approaching, Mr. Speaker, when legislation can be effectively used to enforce quieter motor vehicle operation.

Mr. Peacock: Mr. Speaker, did the Minister say that the standards prepared by the SAE now provide him with the opportunity to bring legislation before the House at an early date?

Hon. Mr. Haskett: Mr. Speaker, that was not just what I said. I did say that they had come up with what I believe were technically valid standards and method of measurement, and that I think the time is approaching when legislation could be effectively used.

Mr. Peacock: Will it be?

Hon. Mr. Haskett: That we shall see in the fullness of time.

Mr. Speaker: The member for High Park has a question of this Minister.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Speaker, to the Minister of Transport: Why did his deputy issue instructions on February 3, that:

If any employee's driver's licence is suspended for an offence under the Criminal Code of Canada or The Highway Traffic Act, whether on or off duty, he may be subject to immediate dismissal.

Will the Minister agree with me that, in effect, such employees are being given double punishment? Will the Minister also agree that dismissal from one's job is a very severe penalty for losing one's driver's licence? Will the Minister rescind his severe order?

Hon. Mr. Haskett: Mr. Speaker, I have before me a copy of the letter of January 3, 1969, over the signature of the Deputy Minister which reads:

To each employee; This department is responsible for a continuing, comprehensive highway safety programme throughout Ontario. I feel there is considerable onus on our employees to support this programme by practising good driving habits. Therefore, this will serve as notice of the following:

If an employee's driver's licence is suspended, or he is sentenced to a jail term for an offence under the Criminal Code of Canada, or The Highway Traffic Act, whether on or off duty, he may be subject to immediate dismissal. If dismissal action is not taken, there will be no obligation on the part of the department to arrange an alternate job to a person who must have a valid driver's licence to perform his normal duties.

It is necessary, Mr. Speaker, to deal forthrightly with this problem, but if there appears to be an warranted intrusion on the rights of an employee I am prepared to take the matter under careful consideration.

Interjections by hon. members.

An hon. member: The Minister had better speak to his Deputy.

Mr. Shulman: But, Mr. Speaker, the Minister has not answered the last three parts of the question.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. Minister states that he has answered the question as he proposes to answer it. The hon. member for Scarborough East has a question of the Minister of Education.

Mr. T. Reid: Why does the Minister of Education allow his Deputy Minister to make a policy statement on basic changes in his departmental regulations before the Minister makes such changes known?

An hon. member: Stick to the secondary school guidelines!

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I think the answer to this is very simple. The Deputy Minister has not made any major policy statement whatsoever.

Mr. T. Reid: Could I ask the Minister a supplementary question?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, there is no point in entertaining a supplementary question. We have been through this, the hon. member for Scarborough East and myself, once before on another issue. I recognize he is going to read to me, as part of his supplementary question, certain information either from one of the evening papers last night, or in the Globe and Mail this morning. I am saying that they arise out of an interview that did not relate to policy that has been determined, and the Deputy Minister of education of this province does not enunciate policy. This was particularly—

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, this is pre-judging the question. Surely the Minister is out of order.

Mr. T. Reid: Mr. Speaker, I will just have to make the speech outside the House.

I would like to ask the Minister question 507: Why are orthodox Jewish students attending public school in Ontario forbidden to wear traditional skull caps?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, this is a matter which, I think, very obviously falls within the jurisdiction of the locally elected school boards. I am informed, and this comes from information just received, that the practices actually vary from one board to another. There are, apparently, some schools where this practice does occur and there are others where caps are worn, for instance, during meal times.

Mr. Speaker: There is another question from February 6, No. 546, in connection with the Humane Society and school children.

Mr. T. Reid: Mr. Speaker, I would like to withdraw that question.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Kitchener has a question of this Minister.

Mr. J. R. Breithaupt (Kitchener): Mr. Speaker, a question for the hon. Minister of Education: Before the estimates of the Minister's department are presented to the House this spring, will the Minister first indicate how many students of the 55 who have seized a building at the University of Windsor are receiving student loans? Secondly, indicate the number of students of those 55 not residents of Ontario. And, thirdly, of the students from outside our province, the number receiving grants from the province of Ontario.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I am somewhat interested, of course, in this question. One can anticipate from this that the hon. member for Kitchener is not only asking, he is suggesting that the Minister of Education do this, or that the Minister of University Affairs do this. I put this to the leader of the Opposition because I—

Mr. Nixon: I put this to Mr. Speaker, right now, I submit that the Minister of Education is completely out of order. He was asked for information. I would say the Minister is completely out of order. He has already attempted to answer a supplementary question that he would not permit.

Mr. Speaker: Order, Order! The hon. leader of the Opposition, if he is fair in his recollections, will understand that Mr. Speaker has allowed him a great many aberrations from the strict orders of the day in order that he might obtain information which he thought was necessary. In my view, both sides of the House are entitled to this leeway. If not so, then I will be delighted to hold everyone to what I interpret the rules of this House to be. I will admit that the hon. Minister was endeavouring to help the questioners today more than usual.

Hon. Mr. Davis: You see, I was just trying to find out really who enunciated the educational policies from across the House at this particular point; whether it is the member for Scarborough East, the leader of the Liberal Party, or who it is?

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, to answer very specifically the questions asked by the hon. member for Kitchener. It is not my intention, prior to the estimates of The Department of University Affairs, to give the information here, that has been suggested on this occasion. Obviously, during the estimates the hon. member may ask what he wishes to ask, but to say that, prior to my estimates, I provide this information, I think the answer obviously is no.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Peterborough has several questions.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, if you will permit me, on a point of order. I cannot see how we can permit the Minister of Education to say that he will not give this information prior to his estimates. What makes those so sacred when we are concerned with an immediate problem now?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. leader of the Opposition has no point of order. The hon. Minister has been asked a question and he has answered it in the manner in which he feels it should be answered, or has refused to answer it. That is quite proper so far as the rules of the House are concerned. The hon. leader has other ways of bringing this Minister to task, if he feels he should be brought to task, but not by debate in the question period.

The hon. member for Peterborough has the floor.

Mr. W. G. Pitman (Peterborough): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a question of the hon. Minister of Education. Is it true that the Minister has directed the department officials not to take a positive stand on the Hall-Dennis report, as indicated in the Globe and Mail story of Saturday, February 15?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I think we went through this exercise a few days ago. I indicated at that time that I did not take, nor were the officials in the department taking, a stand completely in support of or completely opposed to the Hall-Dennis report. I hope we do not have to say that again here in this Legislature.

The officials of the department have been spending their time and effort determining just what portions of the report are practical for implementation, and those that have economic considerations. After the public discussion has gone on, after meetings with the OTF and other related agencies, then we will be in a position to enunciate policy. It is not a question of direction or otherwise.

Surely this is the opportunity—as the hon. member for Peterborough reminded me so specifically a year ago when these major changes are taking place when we should involve the total constituency, the teachers—even, to a degree, the students. This is what we are attempting to do without the Minister coming down and saying, “This is all right, this is not.” We are just trying to do things the way you have suggested, up to a point.

Mr. J. B. Trotter (Parkdale): The Minister has become the Paul Martin of the Tory party.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Well, that coming from a Liberal—

Mr. Pitman: I hope Hansard reports that last remark, Mr. Speaker.

As a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I could ask the Minister why the co-chairman seems to believe that officials in the department have been—I think he used the word “sniping”—making private attacks upon the report itself? What is the reason for the co-chairman in this regard?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I really cannot speak for the co-chairman of the committee. He obviously has had very ample opportunity to explain his views and explain the report that he helped prepare, and I think that this in itself is sufficient evidence that, as far as I am concerned, the more constructive dialogue we have with respect to the report the better.

Mr. Pitman: My second question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the fact that municipalities must send out their tax bills within a few weeks, can the Minister indicate when the new grant regulations will be made available to these school boards and to the municipalities who must collect the money for them?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Very shortly, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Pitman: I wonder if I could ask a supplementary question? In view of the great concern of the smaller municipalities who now find themselves in the larger county boards and who find, on a basis of the last year's grant regulations, that their mill rate for education is doubled in some cases, can the Minister give any indication whether the new regulations will alleviate the situation?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I think the new regulations will speak for themselves when they are made available.

Mr. Pitman: Does the Minister wish to enlarge on that?

Hon. Mr. Davis: If you have an extra half-hour?

Mr. Pitman: We have lots of time over here, Mr. Speaker. Well, we will move on. In view of the statement that the Minister would not enter the University of Windsor dispute, would he indicate the circumstances on which the Minister might change this decision?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, really, as I assess that question, I give the hon. member for Peterborough far more credit. He is asking me to speculate and develop a series of permutations and combinations as to what specific situations might lead the government to become involved in what is an internal situation—

Mr. MacDonald: When are you going to reverse your position as with the Ontario College of Arts?

Hon. Mr. Davis:—when obviously I am not in a position to give any indication of this kind on this occasion.

Mr. Pitman: Mr. Speaker, the reason for that question was that, in view of that Minister's attendance upon the battleground yesterday, I thought perhaps we might get some light on these matters from him.

Mr. Speaker: Order! The hon. member is entitled to ask questions but not to comment—

Mr. Pitman: Might I ask a supplementary question? In view of the fact that the president of the university has now broken off negotiations with the students, and in view of the fact that there has been some suggestion from several quarters that a committee of citizens might provide a negotiating area for the dispute, I am wondering whether the Minister has any role to play in this particular kind of situation?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I do not believe the Minister has any role to play in what is being suggested by the hon. member at this particular point. I think that one must recognize that, as I understand it, there is to be something of a referendum at the university tomorrow. We have had no request—this is interesting—from either the administration of the university, the faculty—I was a guest at that university yesterday—the students' administrative council or from the students of the department for the Minister or the government to become involved. Surely this in itself is some indication that, hopefully, they are able to resolve their own problems and I am sure the member for Peterborough, having a great interest in the autonomy of higher education, would like to see it done in this fashion.

Mr. Pitman: My final question, Mr. Speaker: Will the incentive grants be given to those boards with schools willing to accept the new guidelines for secondary schools if extra costs are involved in carrying out the programme?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I think the question really was answered when I indicated to the member for Scarborough East that there has been no formal announcement of any change in guidelines. Obviously, the question of whether there will be incentive grants would relate only at that time if such a decision were made and the guidelines distributed—so I cannot answer the question for the hon. member at this moment.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Sudbury East has a question of this Minister?

Mr. E. W. Martel (Sudbury East): How many teachers employed on probationary contracts with the provincial institute of trades did not have their contracts taken over by the colleges of applied arts when the provincial institute was transferred to the college system?

Second, why did not the school management committee of The Department of Education ensure new contracts for their employees at the time when the provincial institute of trades was transferred to the college system?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, the probationary contracts of all teachers employed at the provincial institute of trades were taken over by the board of governors of the George Brown College of Applied Arts and Technology as of March 1, 1968, and this was done on the basis of the transfer from the school management committee. Decisions as to the renewing of the contracts by the board were based upon two criteria: 1. competency; 2. programme requirements.

From a total of 40 probationary teachers, contracts of five were not renewed for the following September.

Mr. Speaker: We now come to the hon. member for Nipissing with his question for the Minister of Energy and Resources Management.

Mr. R. S. Smith: What steps is the Ontario Water Resources Commission taking to ensure that the public health and safety will not be endangered by the dumping of 1,200 gallons of cyanide into Moose Creek on January 5? 2. Why was there such a long delay between the spillage occurring and yesterday's despatch of samples of the lake water to Toronto for analysis? 3. What measure is Inco taking to ensure that future spillages do not occur? 4. What penalties will be levied against Inco for this infraction?

Hon. J. R. Simonett (Minister of Energy and Resources Management): Mr. Speaker, I will take the question as notice.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Sandwich-Riverside has a question of this Minister?

Mr. F. A. Burr (Sandwich-Riverside): I have a question of the Minister of Energy and Resources Management. How many copies of the bulletin "News and Information," published by the Ontario Water Resources Commission, are sent out per issue?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Mr. Speaker, if the bulletin is intended for general news distribution, 850 copies are sent out. If the news item is of regional interest only, the number is correspondingly reduced. In either case, copies are sent to all members of the Legislature for their information.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Port Arthur (Mr. Knight) has a question which, I believe, the leader of the Opposition wishes to place?

Mr. Nixon: Yes, Mr. Speaker, he asked me to put it in his absence. It is to the Minister of Energy and Resources Management. Why was the recommendation of the Lower Trent Region Conservation Authority for the appointment of authority members ignored by order-in-council 550-69, of February 6, 1969?

And, why was a representative from Stirling appointed who has been actively opposed to the formation of the authority?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Mr. Speaker, I am sorry I have not received that question in the office yet, nor have I it on my desk.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the hon. Minister would take it as notice until we find out where his question went. The hon. member for Thunder Bay has a question of this Minister.

Mr. J. E. Stokes (Thunder Bay): Mr. Speaker, is the Minister aware that the last increase in power costs represents an additional $150,000 on energy costs to most pulp and paper mills in northern Ontario?

2. Why are industries in northern Ontario discriminated against by not making interruptible power available to them as in the case of southern Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Mr. Speaker, I might say that I do not sit in on the day to day operations—

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, in view of the seriousness of this Hydro strike situation, the fact that this Minister is not answerable—

Mr. Speaker: What is the hon. member's point of order?

Mr. Sargent: My point of order is this, Mr. Speaker, Hydro is not answerable to the House and the Minister in charge gets his information from a man in the back row there.

Mr. Speaker: That is not a point of order. The Minister is—

Mr. Sargent: It certainly is, a very important one.

Mr. Speaker: Order! The Minister is entitled to get his information where he thinks best.

Mr. MacDonald: Where do you get your questions?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member is not in order and he has no point of order.

Mr. Sargent: Will the Speaker tell me then why the Treasury appointee on the Hydro cannot report to the House; cannot tell us what is going on, because this man never will explain?

Mr. Speaker: Will the hon. member resume his seat and I will come to that. The hon.

member placed a question with Mr. Speaker today directed to the vice-chairman of Ontario Hydro, who is a member of this House. I ruled that it must be submitted to the Minister because questions must be submitted to the Minister.

Mr. Sargent: He does not know the answer.

Mr. Speaker: Order! And the Minister, of course, will get his reply, as I say, and his information from that place and those persons that he feels can best supply that information. Therefore, if the hon. member for Grey-Bruce wishes to submit his question tomorrow, directed to the hon. Minister of Energy and Resources Management, it will be processed, and where the Minister gets his information, I must say, I have neither any interest nor any say.

I hope that clarifies the matter.

Mr. Sargent: With the greatest respect, sir, I say this: I have a letter here from the chairman of the Hydro commission—

Mr. Speaker: Order! The hon. member is out of order. The hon. Minister has the floor.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Which question will I answer?

Mr. Speaker: Order! The hon. member for Niagara Falls has the floor.

Mr. G. Bukator (Niagara Falls): It is not possible to ask a question of the vice-chairman of Hydro in this House?

Mr. Speaker: Not in the period of questions before the orders of the day; they must be of the Ministry. And the hon. member for Muskoka is not a member of the Ministry.

If the hon. members will recall, we had that situation one time previously, I think maybe in the fall or last spring, when a question was directed to the member for Haldimand-Norfolk (Mr. Allan) as chairman of a commission. The matter was researched carefully at that time, and I recall pointing out that these questions must be directed to the Ministry or a Minister. That, I think, is still the ruling and I think it is still a proper ruling.

Mr. Ben: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order. If my memory serves me correctly, a private member here had a question directed to him and the rules provide that a question may in a proper manner, that is 48 hours' notice in writing, be directed to any member of this House. If the hon. Speaker will let me finish, please—

I do recall that the practice was stopped abruptly because the members who had anticipated asking questions saw that this House would be deluged with questions of the different members. But I submit that the practice and the rule still remains—it is possible, although the members in their good judgment have refrained from using it.

Under those circumstances, I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that a question in writing could still be directed with the usual 48 hours' notice as prescribed by the rules to any member, which would include a vice-chairman of a board or commission.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member is confusing two things—and I agree with him entirely on what he says—he is confusing that with a question of a private member who is holding a position within some administrative area of this government. In that event, the question must in my opinion go to the Ministry.

Mr. Sargent: What is the function of the member for Muskoka (Mr. Boyer)?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. Minister again has the floor.

Mr. Ben: Mr. Speaker, may I ask your Honour a question? Is your Honour saying that although we may ask a question of a private member in the usual form, that is according to the rules where we give a 48-hour notice, that we may not so address ourselves in such a manner to a private member in his capacity as the vice-chairman of a board? Do I understand you correctly?

Mr. Speaker: That is my understanding.

Mr. Ben: Would you perhaps send me the citation for that?

Mr. Speaker: Yes, I will take the matter under further consideration. I will not undertake to send the hon. member any citation, I state that as a ruling made by myself now. If the hon. member wishes to appeal it, fine, I will be glad to put it to the House.

If he wishes to be advised as to it, I would ask that he come down and see me, and the Clerk of the House, the hon. member for Humber and I will go into the matter. But at the moment the ruling stands as I have expressed it.

Mr. Ben: On a point of order, on this business of appealing the Speaker's ruling. As I understand it, I would have to do so this instant and I may not do it later; is that correct?

Well then, I regret that I must appeal your honour's ruling on this point, that we cannot address a question in accordance with the rules of this House, that is 48 hours' notice, to a member if that member is a vice-chairman or other official of a board, if the question touches on him in such capacity. I would have to appeal your honour's ruling in that regard.

Mr. Speaker: Does the hon. member wish to speak any further to his appeal?

Mr. Ben: Yes, if I may be permitted.

To my recollection this is the first time since I have been in this House—and I do not profess having been here any undue length of time—that the ruling of the Speaker has been challenged. The fact remains that it is incumbent upon a government which has an overwhelming majority to be extra careful that the rights of the private members, the rights of the Opposition members are preserved because rules that are imposed under duress only bring disdain upon those people who bring in and impose such rules.

The hon. Speaker has agreed that the rules provide that we may, in the prescribed form, ask questions of any member in this House and I am not referring in this instance to questions before the orders of the day, which are not provided for in the rules but have arisen through custom and usage, I am referring to the rules in the book—and I may be able to refer to it, Mr. Speaker—Rule 37 which states:

(a) Questions may be put to Ministers of the Crown relating to public affairs; and to other members relating to any bill, motion, or other public matter connected with the business of the House in which such members may be concerned but, in putting any such question, no argument or opinion is to be offered, nor any fact stated; and, in answering any such question, a member is not to debate the matter to which the same refers.

(b) Such questions and the replies thereto shall be in writing and shall be entered in the Journals.

(c) Whenever any question requires, by way of reply thereto, any statement of facts or records or statistics of a lengthy or voluminous nature or other material which, in the opinion of the Minister whose Department is concerned, should be made the subject of a Return, the Minister may, instead of answering such question, require a motion to be made for a return.

On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, should you be in the chair or should the Clerk of the House be in the chair?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member will continue.

Mr. Ben: I am not trying to be offensive, Mr. Speaker. The point is, the rule is here, it has never been repealed, it states unequivocally that we can ask a question of any member of this House, and I suggest therefore that the Speaker may have erred in hastily concluding that a question can be put to a member of the House, but to say that the answer must come from a Minister.

I suggest that if a question can be put to any member of this House in the prescribed form, that any member of this House can answer the question and he is not compelled to transmit his answer through the mouth of a Minister of the Crown. I suggest that this is very important point, that we should not be indirectly gagged from determining how departments of government are run.

We have had statements made to us by the hon. Prime Minister that we can call any government body or board or commission and ask them questions and it has been pointed out that it is impossible to do so in the time allocated. I would suggest it would be a travesty of justice and the rules of conduct of this House and the British system of parliamentary procedures if the ruling of the Speaker were upheld.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Before any other hon. members speak, perhaps I might have the floor.

First of all, I would like to point out to the hon. member that far from gagging the members of the House the Speaker has made it possible for them to express many opinions. I have just been advised by the Clerk, who knows these matters very well, that these matters are neither debatable nor is the person who appeals the ruling entitled to elaborate on it. I have given the member that opportunity.

But I would say this, that I am very pleased that the hon. member did, because between the hon. member for Grey-Bruce (Mr. Sargent) and the hon. member for Humber (Mr. Ben), I must confess that I thought we were still discussing the matters of oral questions before the orders of the day. Without any question in my mind, the ruling that I have made applies to that. Now, with respect to written notice questions that is an entirely different question.

The hon. member did not make it plain to me; he may have made it plain to the other members, but he certainly did not make it plain to me, that he was discussing a different type of question entirely. Then the ruling of the Speaker might be different. I would take this under advisement, certainly so far as questions before the orders of the day are concerned. All the questions which we have directed only to the Ministry must be answered only by the Minister.

If the hon. member's point was that there is another type of question following the rules which he has read, and which type of question by the way has been somewhat adjusted to form part of the oral question period, I would be most certainly pleased to say to the House that the ruling I made was entirely with respect to this period which we now have for oral questions before the orders of the day. I would be glad to look into the other matter, because certainly I did not follow that.

Mr. Ben: Sir, I should direct to you if I may be permitted that I recognized there was some noise which distracted your Honour's attention because I was only addressing myself, as you have now surmised, to the written questions. I accept your ruling pertaining to questions before the orders of the day.

Mr. Speaker: Then I will be pleased to take the other submissions under advisement, and, perhaps give a ruling or discuss it at least with the members to decide how it should be dealt with.

An hon. member: See how easy I am to get along with!

Mr. Speaker: I think it is obvious that it is good for the House for members to have an opportunity to explain. I must confess to members that I was entirely on another type of question as far as the hon. member was concerned.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Grey-Bruce is pursuing something.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Speaker, would you advise the Minister that we want the Hydro reports directly to the House and not to a puppet Minister?

Mr. Speaker: I am afraid that Mr. Speaker really does not have any jurisdiction over that unless and until the rules are changed because the question, before the orders of the House, is to the Ministry.

The hon. member for Thunder Bay was in the process of asking the hon. Minister of Energy and Resources Management a question about energy costs and paper mills. He now has the floor.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order! The hon. member for Niagara Falls has a point of order.

Mr. Bukator: The question that I asked of you, Mr. Speaker, was, can we not ask the vice-chairman of Hydro questions in this House, such as we do before the orders of the day? Can we use the rules that my colleague from Humber was talking about, and get questions answered in the House about Hydro?

Mr. Speaker: That is exactly the point that I said I would have to look up to take under advisement, as I advised the member for Humber, because that is a different type of question from the questions we are asking now. We shall try again. The hon. member for Thunder Bay.

Mr. Stokes: Is the Minister aware that the last increase in power costs represents an additional $150,000 on energy costs to most pulp and paper mills in northern Ontario? Why are industries in northern Ontario discriminated against by not making interruptible power available to them as is the case in southern Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Mr. Speaker, the increase in power rates to Ontario Hydro's direct industrial customers, effective January 1, 1969, results in an additional annual cost of $150,000 or more to three of the 13 pulp and paper companies in northern Ontario. Since the cost of power represents 8 per cent to 10 per cent of the total production cost in the pulp and paper industry, this adjustment in power rates would result in an increase of approximately 1 per cent in the total production cost of these companies.

Interruptable power is not available to the customers on the West System, northern Ontario, because the conditions on the West System are quite unlike those on the East System, where the daily peaks are more pronounced, occurring for periods of only a few hours, once or twice a day.

On the West System the daily load curve is very flat because of the prevalence of high load factor industries. And if interruptible power were to be of any value to Ontario Hydro, it would have to be subjected to interruptions for much longer periods, even to the extent of 16 hours per day. In extreme circumstances with major equipment failure, this could extend for several days or even weeks.

From a customer's point of view, such conditions, of course, would be impractical. It is possible that at some time in the future the relationship between the loads on the East and West Systems and the capabilities of the interconnecting transmission lines might permit the sale of some interruptible power on the West System. However, recent studies indicate that interruptible power will not become available on the West System for several years.

Mr. Stokes: Will the Minister permit a supplementary question?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Yes.

Mr. Stokes: It is my understanding that there is a surplus of power in northwestern Ontario now by virtue of the fact that the steam generating plant on island no. 2 in Fort William is only operating at low capacity. Why wouldn't it be possible to allow power users in northwestern Ontario to take advantage of the interruptible power when there is such a surplus of it in that area at the present time? Witness the fact that the transmission lines are integrating the two grids.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Mr. Speaker, that would not be interruptible power. That is power that you could close down or start up when extra power is needed.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for High Park has questions of the Attorney General.

Mr. Shulman: I have a number of questions to the Attorney General, Mr. Speaker. I will place them all at once as they are all related:

1. Have over 50 complaints been received by the Inspector of Legal Offices during the past six months about strange occurrences in the York County Eighth Division Court? 2. What has been the cause of these problems? 3. What is being done?

What action is being taken to clear up the backlog of cases that have piled up in the York County Eighth Division Court as a result of failure of the Court Clerk to place cases on the list and/or to see that the bailiff issues judgment summonses? 1. Did Mr. R. A. McFarland, representing the Inspector of Legal Offices, write to bailiff F. P. Switzer of the York County Eighth Division Court on December 9, 1968, asking why a judgment summons issued last summer was not served? 2. What reply was received to this letter?

1. Has Mr. R. A. McFarland, representing the Inspector of Legal Offices, investigated certain mysterious disappearances of papers and cheques from the York County Eighth Division Court, as detailed by that gentleman in a letter dated January 23, 1969? 2. What was the result of this investigation?

1. Did Mr. R. A. McFarland, representing the Inspector of Legal Offices, write to Mr. F. P. Switzer, the bailiff of the York County Eighth Division Court, on December 19, 1968, inquiring why execution and committal warrants had not been served? 2. What was the result of this inquiry?

1. Did the Inspector of Legal Offices write to Mr. E. A. Clark, the clerk of the York County Eleventh Division Court, on November 15, 1968, inquiring why a claim dating back to July 29, 1968, had not been put on the trial list? 2. What was the result of that inquiry?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Speaker, it would take some time to get the answers to these questions. I would request that they go on the notice paper.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Speaker, I believe this is a matter of urgent public importance in that there are many hundreds of cases being held up.

Mr. Speaker: Order! The Minister is quite within his rights to have this put on the order paper.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Speaker, is it not correct that the Minister may take this as notice, but he cannot direct it to go on the order paper?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. Minister can direct that it goes on the order paper. The hon. member for Oxford has a question of the Minister of Highways from the 13th.

Mr. G. W. Innes (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, to the Minister of Highways. What are the names of the counties in the province where development roads were started or completed in 1968?

Hon. Mr. Gomme: Counties where development roads either were started or completed during 1968 are: Stormont, Dundas and Glengarry, Haldimand, Hastings, Wellington, Dufferin, Ontario, Frontenac, Prescott and Russell, Lennox and Addington, Huron, Prince Edward, Lanark, Leeds and Grenville, Grey, Northumberland and Durham, Brant, Welland, Victoria, Peterborough, Norfolk, Elgin; provisional county of Haliburton, Lincoln, Lambton, and Bruce.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Sandwich-Riverside has a question of this Minister from the other day.

Mr. Burr: Mr. Speaker, a question to the Minister of Highways. Is the Minister planning to improve Highway 18 between Lasalle and Amherstburg as requested recently by various municipal councils in that area?

Hon. Mr. Gomme: Mr. Speaker, I will have to take this as notice. It will take a little time to get this information.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Wentworth.

Mr. I. Deans (Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, to the Minister of Highways. Was any consideration given in the planning of Highway 403 as to the effect that blocking natural waterflow patterns would have on homes in Perth Park and Ancaster?

Hon. Mr. Gomme: Mr. Speaker, minor construction changes were made in flow patterns during construction of Highway 403 in the area of Perth Park. These were studied prior to construction and we do not consider that any detrimental effect was caused by these changes to joining properties.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, may I, by way of a supplementary question, ask the Minister if he would conduct a further investigation particularly into those waters that are underground? Not necessarily those that flow on top, but the water table and flow pattern underground?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Waterloo North has a question of the Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. E. A. Good (Waterloo North): Mr. Speaker, a question of the Minister of Municipal Affairs:

Is the Minister satisfied that section 197 (2) of The Municipal Act has not been violated by the method used in filling vacancies that have occurred on London city council in the last 13 months?

Hon. W. D. McKeough (Minister of Municipal Affairs): Yes.

Mr. Good: Would the Minister accept a supplementary question? You are satisfied that no legalities have—

Hon. Mr. McKeough: I said yes.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Welland South has a question of this Minister.

Mr. R. Haggerty (Welland South): Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Municipal Affairs. It is in two parts.

In view of the fact that regional government planning by the Minister's department has reached such an advanced stage, is the Minister now prepared to announce a master plan of regional government for the province? 2. when does the Minister intend to announce the regional government plan for the Chatham area?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Mr. Speaker, the answer to the first part of the question is no; and to the second part of the question, no studies are underway, nor have they been requested.

Mr. Haggerty: Mr. Speaker, I have another question for the Minister of Municipal Affairs. In view of the difficulties that the Minister has experienced with the tax rebate scheme during 1968, is the Minister planning a massive overhaul of the scheme to eliminate red tape?

Could the rebate in 1969 apply towards the cost of education in the province?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Mr. Speaker, government policy will be announced in due course.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Rainy River.

Mr. T. P. Reid (Rainy River): Thank you, Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Municipal Affairs. When will the Minister reply to the request of the citizens committee of Ear Falls as to financial assistance for that community, and for financial assistance for members of that committee to attend the seminar on regional government to be held at Quetico Centre in Rainy River riding this weekend?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Mr. Speaker, I wrote to them on February 12 and February 17.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Will the Minister accept a supplementary? What was his reply?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Why did the member not ask that in the first place?

Mr. T. P. Reid: I would not have asked the question if I did not want that information.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Mr. T. P. Reid: Would the Minister tell me what his reply was?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: No. If the member had asked that in the first place I would have the information. I will have it for tomorrow.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Yorkview.

Mr. F. Young (Yorkview): Mr. Speaker, a question of the Minister of Municipal Affairs. In view of the announcement that the province of Ontario is planning legislation on rent control, what steps will be taken to insure that this announcement will not set off a new round of rent increases by landlords wishing to establish new high levels of rent before the legislation takes effect?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Mr. Speaker, no such announcement has been made by me, by my department or by the government.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Cochrane South.

Mr. W. Ferrier (Cochrane South): Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Mines. Will the Minister set a date within which Texas Gulf Sulphur must make public their decision for location of their smelting and refining facilities for the ores from their Kidd Creek operation?

Hon. A. F. Lawrence (Minister of Mines): The answer, Mr. Speaker, is no.

Mr. Ferrier: Will the Minister accept a supplementary question?

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: Yes.

Mr. Ferrier: Does the Minister not feel that the delay in coming to a decision seems inordinate?

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: Mr. Speaker, this was answered by a question, I think, from the very same member on or about November 28 or so.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Sudbury East has a question.

Mr. Martel: Mr. Speaker, I would like to address my question to the Minister of Energy and Resources Management, which I was not given an opportunity to do a while ago.

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry; I do not seem to have it. Has the hon. Minister a question? Perhaps the hon. member would place it. My apologies, I will locate it.

Mr. Martel: Mr. Speaker, is Ontario Hydro contravening the law which states that disciplinary action cannot be taken by management against union members who are following union procedure during a legal strike, when it suspended linemen for refusing to work on Saturday, February 8, as reported in the press?

Secondly, how many employees has Ontario Hydro suspended since the beginning of the legal strike, and is there intention to add to their number?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Mr. Speaker, it is my understanding that labour legislation in this province has not contemplated conditions created by rotating strikes, and, therefore, it may be necessary to obtain a legal opinion in order to answer the hon. member's question.

The further information he seeks is not immediately available since those in Ontario Hydro who are in a position to report on this matter are, at present, fully involved in further negotiation discussions with the Ontario Hydro Employees' Union representative:

I might say, Mr. Speaker, that I have—

Mr. Martel: Mr. Speaker, a supplementary question? Mr. Speaker, does the Minister mean to say that he is going to allow continuance of the practice whereby employees of Ontario Hydro are suspended?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: No, Mr. Speaker, I did not say that at all, and I will not accept any more supplementaries to that question.

I have answers to questions 618, 619 and 620 asked by the hon. member yesterday.

Question 618: How much of the power, which was purchased from Quebec to supposedly offset the power shortage attributed to the rotating strike last week, as reported in the press, was actually purchased under a firm contract which was already in existence?

In view of the Hydro chairman's remarks last December that utilities may be faced with power cuts because of a shortage of Ontario Hydro power, can the Minister tell the House whether recent purchases from Quebec were necessitated by the shortage referred to last December?

Mr. Speaker, the answer to the first part, None of the power purchased from Hydro Quebec last week, as reported to the press, was power taken under firm contract with Quebec.

Reference was made only to purchases made above the contractual amounts.

Purchases were made on Tuesday, February 11, through Friday, February 14, and were necessitated solely by strike action against Ontario Hydro. A loss of up to 900 megawatts of capacity was caused mainly through the effect on Lakeview generating station.

The second part of the answer is no. System peak loads during the week in question were of the order of 1,000 megawatts below the peak load carried last December.

Question 619: In dollars and cents, how far apart are Ontario Hydro and Ontario Hydro Employees' Union from a settlement?

What has been the cost to Ontario Hydro up to February 14 to transport supervisory personnel across Ontario to replace Hydro employees participating in the rotating strike?

Mr. Speaker, in answer to the first part, the difference in cost between the Ontario Hydro Employees' Union's demand and Ontario Hydro's offer, as of April 1, 1969, is $1,452,000 per annum. However, since this is a recurring expense, its cost in perpetuity must be considered and the present value of this, and is calculated to be $29,040,000.

The above figures do not include the effect of any escalator clause or job evaluations, as these cannot be forecast at the present time.

Any escalator clause that increased wage rates by a further three per cent, based on past experience, would increase annual costs by a further $2,888,000.

The answer to the second part; we do not have any figures and probably will not know the cost until the rotating strike is over.

Question 620: How much interest was paid by Ontario Hydro in 1967 on the money it borrowed?

What was the total amount of wages paid out in 1967 to those Ontario Hydro employees who are members of the Ontario Hydro Employees' Union?

The answer to the first part; the amount of interest paid by Ontario Hydro in 1967 on money it borrowed was $113,041,957.

Mr. Sargent: Half a million dollars a day.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: —of which $84,357,455 was charged to the cost of power. Second, the gross earnings of members of the Ontario Hydro Employees' Union amounted to $66,577,907 in 1967. In addition to this, a cost of $10,566,000 was incurred to cover pensions, life insurance, health plans, workmen's compensation and unemployment insurance for these employees.

Mr. Martel: May I ask the Minister a supplementary question?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: No.

Mr. Sargent: He could not answer it anyway.

Mr. Martel: Thank you, Mr. Minister. I have a question of the hon. Minister of Mines. Can the Minister inform the House whether the Falconbridge Nickel Company has advised Mr. Redsell, the district engineer, what action it intends to take to reduce the noise from the Fecunis compressor at the Fecunis Mill? If no action is considered by Falconbridge, did it present any brief to Mr. Redsell regarding the compressor noise, and what action will the Minister take to ensure that the situation is rectified?

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: Mr. Speaker, we are obtaining information. May I take this question as notice?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Dovercourt might like to place his question to the Minister of Labour, since they are both in the House.

Mr. D. M. De Monte (Dovercourt): A question to the Minister of Labour; What hourly rate is the Holiday Inn at Warden Avenue and Highway 401 paying its chambermaids? Does the management have a waiver in respect of the Ontario minimum wage?

Hon. D. A. Bales (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, the employers must comply with the provisions of The Employment Standards Act and its regulations. As to the specific question of wages, that is a matter between the employees and the employer, unless the provisions of The Employment Standards Act are not being complied with. If they are not, then there are procedures to deal with individual cases.

Mr. De Monte: Would the Minister accept a supplementary question? Does that mean the Minister is not aware that they are paying a lower amount than the minimum wage at that hotel?

Hon. Mr. Bales: If some employee feels that they are being paid less than the normal wages then they can take action provided under the Act and we will make a normal investigation.

Mr. Speaker: There was another question, redirected to the Minister of Labour.

Mr. De Monte: Yes, that is correct, Mr. Speaker. Will the Minister be intervening in the decision of the Toronto barbers regarding a shorter work week in the interests of people who must work during the hours of nine to six p.m.?

Hon. Mr. Bales: Mr. Speaker, a conference was held yesterday under the provisions of The Industrial Standards Act and a report will be made by the officer who chaired that meeting. A decision will then be made as to the rules and regulations that will be applied to the working conditions of those in the barbering trade in Metropolitan Toronto.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Before the orders of the day, I have two questions of which I have taken notice. One was asked yesterday by the hon. member for Humber, question 625, and since it is lengthy and already in Hansard, sir, I will not repeat it. The answer to the three points raised in the question are being thoroughly investigated to determine their relative bearing on the situation. At this time there does not seem to be any cogent reason to reopen the inquiry into the pollution of air, soil and water in the townships of Dunn, Moulton and Sherbrooke in Haldimand county.

The answer to the second part: There has been no approach from Dr. MacTaggart Cowan of the Science Council of Canada in connection with the national programme of air pollution and of research and monitoring. However, both the Minister of National Health and Welfare and the Minister of Natural Resources and Energy have been advised by my department that we are ready, willing and anxious to co-operate with them in anything that will help to further our knowledge and their knowledge in this field. I would point out to you, sir, that the air pollution control programme in Ontario is ahead of the schedule presented to the Legislature last year.

Mr. Speaker, I have held the other question, two or three times now because the hon. member for York South, who asked it, was not in the House, but it has been lying on my paper since February 7. He asked—

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps we should ascertain, since the hon. member for York South is not here, whether the deputy leader of that party would like the question answered.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Speaker, I would like to clear my paper.

Mr. Speaker: That may be so, but we have the rule, which I think is reasonable, that a question will not be asked of a Minister if he is not in the House, and I think the Minister should extend the same courtesy, despite cluttered up paper, to the members of the House. Does the hon. member for Riverdale say the answer would be acceptable now?

Mr. J. Renwick (Riverdale): Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the hon. Minister would give it then.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: The second part of the question, which was not answered, was "Have requests been received from the Neepawa General Hospital in Manitoba for the payment of hospital bills of Ontario patients?" The answer is, yes. They have all been paid. The matter to which apparent reference was made arose from a letter written to the hospital services commission by the steelworkers union, quoting that one man in northern Ontario had incurred an account with Neepawa General Hospital, but it had not been paid. The administrator knows of no such person, nor does she know of any account being rendered to this man by her hospital.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Clerk of the House: The first order; resuming the adjourned debate on the amendment to the amendment to the motion for an address in reply to the speech of the Hon. the Lieutenant-Governor at the opening of the session.

THRONE SPEECH DEBATE

Mr. R. F. Ruston (Essex-Kent): Mr. Speaker, I will continue from where I left off yesterday. This is one of the days on which I can see you had to use your judgement at times, and you must find it rather trying. I appreciate that you are in your position and I am in mine.

I would like to cover one or two articles here, particularly one that the Minister of Agriculture announced last week with regard to the government removing assistance to junior farmers in the way of junior farm loans. In his statement he says that it is the recommendation of the farm income committee report—and this is the book that a number of us have had an opportunity to read. I might say that there is a lot of good reading material in it, and there is some that is not so good. However, that is what a report is for.

But the thing that bothers me a little is that if the government is going to pick out the recommendation bit by bit and use it to their advantage, then I am not sure the report is so good. Because in their recommendation here, the committee encourages use of short and intermediate term credit at reasonable rates from available sources of credit, and the reduction of the number of public agencies involved in farm lending to prevent duplication of services between the farm credit corporation and the junior farm establishment loan board.

Well, they are doing this. As the Minister stated, he is going to return this to the power of the federal government under the farm credit corporation. That is to the advantage of the province of Ontario, and to the disadvantage of some young people who may wish to start farming, due to the interest rate of 5 per cent that they were paying.

Now, we take on page 247 of the farm income report—and here is another recommendation that in my opinion is very good, but the funny thing is that the Minister did not bring it out. He did not recommend that anything be done on it right away, and in my opinion it is very serious right now.

The recommendation is that the Ontario Milk Marketing Board should place a limit of 3,000 pounds on the size of fluid milk quotas; for holders of quotas of over 3,000 pounds no further expansion should be permitted. This would allow fluid shippers to move to viable units; employing three men it would provide quotas for new grade "A" entrants. There is a recommendation there that possibly could be used. I understand a member of the Ontario marketing board has more than that amount, so maybe that is one reason it was not used.

It is so strange, Mr. Speaker, when the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Stewart) is so short of funds that he had to cut out the assistance to junior farmers. And the Minister of Trade and Development (Mr. Randall) can go around the province throwing out $500,000 loans, forgivable loans, to companies that are in my opinion well-heeled, and some are foreign owned. They go into certain areas, obtain forgivable loans, if they meet certain specifications, up to six years, and yet the Minister of Agriculture does not have money. Maybe we should make the Minister of Trade and Development our Minister of Agriculture, maybe he would put us on the right road.

Mr. E. Sargent (Grey-Bruce): Here he comes.

Mr. Ruston: Mr. Speaker, I wish to comment briefly on the dairy industry and especially as it pertains to the counties of Essex and Kent. The Ontario Milk Marketing Board that was appointed by this government has ruled with dictatorial power and in some cases perhaps without adequate authority under their original powers given them by this Legislature.

This government has in the past encouraged dairymen in our area to enlarge their herds, to build more efficient modern facilities and then, without due consideration to their financial positions, taken away from them large amounts of their milk quotas. Some had paid a great deal of hard earned money to obtain them. Then, after having them reduced, they were told to go and buy some more quotas.

The next setback was that at the time of selling a herd, the Board relieved the owner of 25 per cent of the amount of his quota for the pool. The real irony of this, Mr. Speaker, was that officials of The Department of Agriculture told dairymen to go out of the dairy business, to go into cash crops, that their land was too valuable for dairying. Well, this was done in some cases, but the lower prices of corn and soyabeans and the closing of the sugar beer plant in Chatham all added up to considerable lower incomes, and the man who calls himself a friend of the farmer from Middlesex North blamed all this on to the federal government.

Ten years ago there were some 1,300 dairy herds in Essex and Kent counties. There are now 340 left. Farmers are selling their cows and selling their milk quotas to dairymen in central and eastern Ontario.

There are reasons for this change in attitude toward cows by dairy farmers. Regulations of the Ontario Milk Marketing Board, which cut quotas on Essex and Kent county dairy farms and lowered the proportion of the dairy farms' output at the top fluid milk price, are partly to blame.

Through the creation of the Ontario Milk Marketing Board, and the Milk Commission of Ontario, the Ontario government by legislation transferred what advantage Essex-Kent dairy farmers had to farmers in other parts of the province. We realize that part of this decline of producers was due also to the natural retirement of some farmers and, others giving up due to the fact that they felt they were not receiving a fair return for their investment.

However, the deciding factor in most cases in the last two years of dairymen quitting was due to the unsettled conditions of their quotas. Mr. Speaker, it is rather difficult to realize that rulings made by the Milk Marketing Board would in fact actually reduce total income per year of some of these farmers by as much as from $3,000 to $12,000 gross income.

Where in our society today do we have such a system? I know of none. How would the doctors, lawyers—and we hear about the lawyers lately—and other professional men like it if the government passed a law stating that each profession in Ontario would in fact share his business with another man in his profession in some other area? In the disposing of his business to another professional man, the government collects a tax of 25 per cent and takes ownership of that amount of his business to pass out at its will to political patronage.

Mr. Speaker, we are not mavericks or un-Christian in our belief in Essex and Kent. We are willing to share our milk market with other parts of the province but we are not willing to share our hard earned cheque. We are still not assured of a continued quota and this is something that must be assured to our dairymen by this government and in consultation no doubt with the federal government.

The ruling of the board in setting trucking rates is another example of their non-arbitrary system. They talked to the truckers in the county, and then about six weeks later sent a letter to them stating the rate that they would be allowed. There was no checking as to actual cost of this service rendered. I have had the opportunity of seeing audited statements of truckers and they show proof that at the rate designated by the board it is impossible to operate without a loss in the areas involved.

I say, Mr. Speaker, when the province of Ontario produces 95 per cent of the corn grown in Canada that this province must share some of the responsibilities that goes with its production and see that the producers receive a fair share of the end price to the consumer.

Ontario corn growers produce 70 million bushels of corn a year. In the last two years corn prices have fallen 40c a bushel. Corn growers have been required to subsidize other farmers who feed cattle, hogs, and poultry. Why? So that cheap feed to dealers will enable them to produce beef, pork and poultry meats at less cost and that prices for those items will be lower to the urban consumer.

This is happening in Canada where wages, particularly in manufacturing, have risen steadily in the last two decades, and where people are complaining about the high cost of food. Yet in 1946 an hour's wage bought 1.9 pounds of pork chops, in 1967 the same hour's work bought 2.8 pounds. The same hour's work that bought 1.7 pounds of creamery butter in 1946 bought 3.4 pounds in 1967. The Minister of Agriculture of this province told the farming public that if Ontario agriculture is to survive, it must submerge some of our traditional thinking and replace it with the disciplines of business. What corn field has the Minister been trapped in for the last few years? Farmers adopted business attitudes years ago.

Mr. Speaker, this government has set up a committee to study farm machinery prices but I would like to know when it is going to report its findings, if it has any, because reports of tractors being bought in England for $3,000 less than the same tractor in Canada has a very disturbing effect on the buyers of this machinery.

The Minister of Agriculture has also set up a committee to study the corn industry in Ontario under considerable pressure from corn groups. I believe, Mr. Speaker, that the Minister of Agriculture should request the committee investigating the corn industry to make a very thorough investigation of the pricing of fertilizer in Canada and especially the basic ingredients as to the selling price of some Canadian products. From the investigation I made while visiting Ohio I found that some U.S. companies were buying nitrogen from a Canadian source at what appeared to be about half the selling price in Canada.

I believe, Mr. Speaker, that the fertilizer differential is not necessarily the fault of the local distributors or dealers, but in fact is mostly due to policies carried out by the people that control the basic ingredients. In my humble opinion, possibly the anti-combines legislation of the federal government should be used to attempt to ferret out the culprits who are gouging the public in this industry.

Mr. Speaker, I wish to add at this time that only 7 per cent of our population is now directly connected with farming and this is still a great industry in Ontario and Canada. Farmers in Canada purchased $2.6 billion worth of goods and services in 1967. The farm machinery industry alone employs 12,000 workers who receive close to $70 million annually in pay cheques. The feed industry has some 8,400 employees. Also, 20 per cent of the gross value of factory shipments are made from farm products. Farm productivity has gone up 67 per cent in the past 20 years.

So let us not think that agriculture is a dying business. It must stay fluent and must be encouraged.

Mr. Speaker, I wish to comment briefly on the procedures and business of the agriculture committee at its meeting on February 11. I understand that Bill 17 was referred to the committee to allow interested groups to present their views with regard to the intent of the bill and how it would involve them. I was surprised at the beginning of the meeting when the chairman insisted on passing the bill through committee without first allowing any presentations to be made.

I believe, Mr. Speaker, that this was not the intent of this Legislature when Bill 17 was passed to the committee. I understood that it was intended to allow interested parties to present their brief and then the committee would be able to vote, much better informed.

However, Mr. Speaker, a majority of the committee decided this procedure was not what they wanted and I accept majority rule. However, I believe the whip was cracked and they jumped on the bandwagon regardless of the intent of this Legislature in turning the bill over to them.

Mr. Speaker, I was amazed at the statement made in committee by the chairman of the Ontario Milk Marketing Board with regards to Channel Islands milk and his broad remarks and background leading up to its inception in the board.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that if this information is accurate and can be documented this man should be immediately relieved of his duties as head of this board for withholding information that could very well be pertinent to some of the hearings and decisions made by officials and courts.

After discussing the proposed investigation with some members of this Legislature, there seems to be a great deal of doubt as to the authority of a standing committee in a matter such as this.

It would appear that it may be necessary to have a select committee or a Royal commission to look into the allegations of the milk board chairman, and yet, it was only a short time ago that this government had a Royal commission studying the milk situation in Ontario, called the Hennessey report and the milk inquiry report.

I might add, Mr. Speaker, that I have some reservation about the statement made by the milk marketing board chairman and I am not sure that it might be just a smoke screen to relieve the pressure from the government and the dairy commission and transfer it to the agriculture committee and processes for public hearing that will probably take months to complete.

I believe that since the milk marketing pool is now on the statutes of Ontario, we must see to it that those in charge of administering are willing to carry out the regulations in a reasonable and arbitrary manner, and not continuing in the dictatorial ways of the past. I would further suggest that a properly constituted arbitration board be set up to hear appeals of the milk marketing board by people who have been aggrieved by their decisions, rather than, as the Minister of Agriculture states, appeal their decisions to the Supreme Court which is very lengthy and costly and may even be thrown out by the courts due to the fact that there is no allowance in the provisions for an appeal to the Supreme Court.

I would like to comment briefly, Mr. Speaker, on the recent decision of this government to discontinue the ARDA grant of one third to farm drainage.

I have had correspondence from many municipalities in this matter and it has put many of them, as well as individual farmers, in a rather precarious situation. I realize the federal government has cut back its ARDA programme but we also realize it was a provincial government decision, based on its area of priority, to discontinue this type of assistance in western Ontario.

The Department of Municipal Affairs officials held a meeting in Chatham on November 10, 1968, with local clerks and municipal officials. The information given out that day by The Department of Municipal Affairs officials present was that ARDA grants would be continued until March 1970 and yet only next month, on December 20, word went out to cancel all ARDA grants to aid drainage. I believe the rest of the province felt they were not getting the full share of ARDA grants and objected to the large amounts going to southwestern Ontario.

Mr. Speaker, here again is duplication of departments, as The Department of Municipal Affairs administers the usual drainage aid and The Department of Agriculture administers the ARDA programme—and apparently neither one knew what the other one was doing.

Another matter that seems to be a contradiction of two departments' thinking is when The Department of Agriculture keeps telling farmers to get larger, buy large machinery and to share it with your neighbour to avoid high overhead. Well, this is fine but The Gasoline Tax Act collectors say that if you do work for your neighbour for hire with your machinery, then you are not entitled to the usual tax refund of 18 cents a gallon.

However, if your neighbour puts his gas in your machinery then he can obtain the 18 cents a gallon refund which is 5 cents a gallon more than you may receive as the owner of the machine. Is it any wonder that people in the hustings wonder about our bureaucrats that attempt to control our society.

Mr. Speaker, I would hope that haste will be made in final approvals and early work will begin on the dikes of the lower Thames River. This is a very urgent matter and must be taken care of immediately in order to avoid severe damage to adjoining property owners.

Mr. Speaker I would like to speak briefly on the facilities for many of our aging citizens in the county of Essex. It is a sad state of affairs when a doctor informs an aging person that they no longer need special hospital care and then find out that there are no facilities available for them outside the hospitals such as bed care. I would urge this government to be as forward in their thinking as the officials of the county of Essex, who see the situation at the local level and realize the urgent need for these facilities.

The facilities I speak of would be the immediate approval of a rest home with a capacity of 90 beds. I would urge the Ontario Housing Commission to speed up their plans to supply geared-to-income single family units in the four towns in the county of Essex for our senior citizens.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to take a moment or two on a couple of matters that are disturbing to many of the citizens in this province, and one is the crimes that are taking place in the province. I have here the Chatham Daily News headlines of November 30, 1968, "Night of terror in 4 city homes."

I believe, Mr. Speaker, our courts are going to have to deal severely with crimes against a person, especially when committed in the so-called "safety of our homes", or violent crimes committed anywhere.

Mr. Speaker, I quote here from a report in the Windsor Star, February 7, 1969, by Chief Preston of the Windsor police department:

House burglars should get jail terms as stiff as those handed out to thieves who hit stores. What's the difference if the thief breaks into a store and steals a typewriter or into my house and steals everything I own?

Burglars who break into houses now get about three months' jail terms while a store burglary may bring a five-year jail sentence.

Chief Preston said stiffer jail sentences are needed to curb the drastic increase in break-ins; last year they increased 95 per cent in Windsor.

Mr. Speaker, with regard to regional government, I cannot agree that this is the ideal or the master plan that will solve all our ills in local government. I believe that the 150,000 to 200,000 minimum population in a region is absolutely ridiculous in a great many areas. This would entail large administrative units to be set up and the serious loss of any possibility of local involvement or local participation. It would, in fact, in some cases include such large areas that it really would be as cumbersome as making yourself heard in the provincial set-up as we now know it.

I have a copy of the Windsor Star where the mayor of Windsor is talking with regard to government and the cost of government:

Mayor John Wheelton painted a black financial picture for the future of Windsor Tuesday night. Speaking to the Credit Grantors' Association at the Seaway Hotel, the mayor said the city would face a grim situation if the municipal debt continues to climb at its present rate.

The debt, he said, is increasing faster than the assessment to pay for it and the municipal expenditures and taxes are rising faster than personal incomes.

To overcome these financial problems, the mayor said, municipal officials will have to wrestle with forces over which they have little or no control. These forces include demands of provincial officials for more complex equipment and facilities in such areas as sewage, garbage disposal and schools. He pointed out the provincial government is in even worse financial straits and in no position right now to help municipalities out.

If the provinces cannot help, is regional government the answer? "No," said the mayor.

"If annexation has taught me anything, it is this. Bigger government is not cheaper government."

With regional government, taxpayers in the smaller communities who were once content with gravel roads, roadside ditches and septic tanks, see a larger unit with more staff, more money, and more borrowing power, and it suddenly begins to demand services that it did without in the past, said Mayor Wheelton.

At a time when more and more people are flocking into the city and their suburbs, the ability of these communities to deal with the problems of growth is diminishing.

The mayor said an answer to these problems can begin to be found through the adoption of certain policies:

A more reasonable division of responsibilities and resources among the federal, provincial and municipal governments.

Costly duplication of services to the taxpayers must be eliminated along with double taxation.

All agencies of local government must co-operate closely in accordance with the scheme of planned development in order to demonstrate a high degree of responsibility on the part of municipal government so that it might get a more efficient share of functions and resources.

Modern business techniques must be applied to government in forecasting revenues and expenses some years ahead. This would provide guidelines for the offering of new services and for collective bargaining in salary arrangements.

Another area which is in line with regional government is the passing of Bill 44 and the formation of county school boards.

When I see the Kent county school board set-up, they have, in their new staff, seven employees and their total salary comes to $163,000. Then we go through The Department of Education estimates and the top seven people in The Department of Education, here in Toronto, are drawing $155,000.

So instead of having one department in the province with a top echelon salary of what we call reasonably fair, and would look pretty good, we are going to have about 35 or 40 of these units throughout the province of Ontario in the same salary range. So, I just wonder where the money is going to come from to pay for these.

Our area is not the only one. I see by the Farm and Country paper of February 11, with regards to the Peterborough area, that Peterborough's rural people are seething over the latest education estimates for the county.

Basically, people outside the city will have to find an extra $1 million in education taxes this year. Those in the city will pay $1 million less, according to the report in Farm and Country.

I might say, with this salary range, that these are all chiefs; there are no Indians in this classification. I am sure that the teachers know that they need to be adequately paid, and we are very much in favour of them getting adequate salaries, but it bothered me a little to think that we have to have so much before we get anything for the children at all.

I believe that since the Ontario government has taken away most of the authority from local ratepayers—as far as schools are concerned—it is time that they gave some consideration to abolishing the “horse and buggy” method of assessing the municipality's portion of the school costs.

Too long have the long suffering property owners borne these ever increasing taxes. Owners pay more than their share of school costs all their lives. I will note an actual case which of course, can be duplicated in many places: A man on a 200 acre farm with adequate building—his school taxes in 1968 were $967. Now what about net income? His net income is $6,500.

His school tax alone on $6,500 net income is $967 plus all his other taxes. This is the height of stupidity for a government to allow this, and I put the blame on the Treasury Board and, in particular, the Minister of Agriculture and Minister of Education.

How can a Minister of Agriculture sit by and see the overburdening of school taxes pricing our farmers out of world markets, and sit back and chew his fingers or make a political statement at every opportunity he has in this House? Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Agriculture, in my opinion, has been irresponsible and is not carrying out the duties, as a Minister of this government, to protect a major industry that indirectly furnishes 30 per cent of the economy of this province, and I say that he does not have the confidence of the farmers of this province.

Mr. J. L. Brown (Beaches-Woodbine): Mr. Speaker, before I begin my remarks I would like to refer to the private members' hour yesterday and convey through you to the member for Kenora (Mr. Bernier) that, by the use of his personal name rather than his riding, I did not wish in any way to express a bitterness, a rancour. Quite the contrary. I was trying very desperately to express my disagreement with the resolution itself and certainly not with the man. I appreciate your bringing it up and I will watch that in the future.

I would like, in my second Throne speech, to discuss with you some of the aspects of socialism and capitalism. But first I would like to extend my congratulations to the Speaker on his second term, and to convey to him my appreciation of the difficult task that he has and the manner in which he carries it out, which I think is above reproach. It is not an enviable position. He does not make the rules. He interprets them and I wish to convey to him my congratulations on his second term.

I would like also to offer my personal congratulations to the ascension of the member for London South to the Cabinet in the Ministry of Finance, and to say that I hope he brings to that body some of the arch Conservatism that he represents so that the distinctions between the parties grow ever wider and stronger. You know he is a great friend of the socialists and, as you probably know from the remarks of my colleague from Lakeshore, the reason he is such a great friend of the socialists is that it is very easy to be in opposition to him.

Now, by extending these ritualistic congratulations, I am sure you understand that I am not departing from socialist etiquette. I am simply recognizing, as a good socialist, a proper concern for history and tradition.

As socialists, we are very aware of beginnings and of the evolutionary processes. We believe that to understand the present, one must understand the history and development of the past.

At the same time, one must realize that in order for history and tradition to exist archaic traditional forms must be preserved as they are of value to us all.

A good socialist will have a place for these traditional and archaic forms. He puts them in a museum. He designates a fort or colony to preserve the flavour and colour of the ancient times so that the young and the interested can learn of their predecessors and the conditions under which they existed. It is with this in mind that I make this suggestion, Mr. Speaker, that with the exception of the 20 members of the real Opposition party, the New Democrats, this entire chamber—indeed the entire building—be designated as a public museum.

We can continue to sit as we now sit, and to talk as we now talk, deliberate as we now deliberate, but we would have a small fence around the entire area with a gate. We would charge a public fee so that the public could come and see the artful demonstration of our past; so that they could see the origins of the parliamentary procedures which obstruct our present governmental function.

We could call it the Queen's Park Colony. Of course, that would make it possible for those in the Legislature who are really interested in democratic government to tackle, without hindrance, the very urgent problems of organizing a relevant modern democratic procedure, to get at the problems and to take care of the urgent affairs of the people of the province of Ontario. Urgent affairs, for instance, as significant as the health of the people of the province which was bandied around and disregarded so blatantly last week in Ottawa by the Prime Minister.

Of course, one of the great problems in being a new member of the Ontario Legislature is that the whole structure, the procedure, the apparatus of Queen's Park is bent on seducing the newly-elected member into the false belief that there is an urgency and a value attached to his functions in the Legislature. Within a few weeks, however, it is clear to most new members that there is no relevance to their jobs in the Legislature. They realize that they go through a pre-arranged farce, to pretend to the public that worthwhile work is being done on its behalf.

In reality decisions are made in Cabinet, away from the Legislature. The decisions are made without consultation with the public and always with the central focus being on the advantage it brings to the party in power.

One quickly sees that much of what is considered to be parliamentary procedure has evolved from the common man's effort to gain a voice in the running of government.

The common man has failed to get that voice and in reality what we have under the name of parliamentary procedure are all those rules and regulations which protect the sovereignty of the government and the party in power.

My observations in the year I have been here indicate that there is little that can be done to see that this parliament works. The Prime Minister says we must have rules. This means that he must have rules, because if he cannot set down the rules, he cannot control. If he cannot control, he will have to enter into an exercise in democracy. If he enters into an exercise in democracy, his friends are going to get hurt. If his friends get hurt he will not be Prime Minister.

So we have carried over from royal rule into the Ontario Legislature. Just as the British parliamentary structure is designed to benefit the privileged, so the structure of the Ontario Legislature is designed to benefit the privileged.

I was elected to represent all the people of Beaches-Woodbine, even though all the people did not elect me. I find it impossible to find the structures by which this can be done in this legislation. I have listened to the speeches in reply to the Speech from the Throne, from all sides of the floor. There is continual repetition of complaint and innuendo that expresses the frustration of the members in not finding democratic ways to bring before the Legislature the wishes of the constituents at home, in the interests of the people represented by them.

The very procedures that are set up to gather information, for instance—it is impossible to find out what is happening at this moment in any single department. It is impossible to find out what monies are being spent, and how the decisions relevant to the spending of those monies are being made, who makes them with what kind of a philosophy and with kind of an orientation.

When questions are asked in the ritualistic fashion that we go through here it is impossible to get down to the relevant information. One is continually struggling with the frustration of continually setting up the party in power to make a public press release out of the questions that stem from real concerns.

Before I leave this particular section of the frustrations that I have felt myself as a member of the Legislature, I would like to comment just briefly on the working conditions themselves. It is obvious, if people are going to work and bring forth their best effort, not only must there be procedures that are relevant here in the Legislature to the issues of the day, but the conditions under which they work and the provisions that they have to aid them in their work have to be improved upon considerably. Many members are sacrificing far beyond what should normally be expected from them to remain in the Legislature. They are maintaining homes in two locations and absorbing all of the costs and expenses that are part of being a member.

The working conditions within the building itself are not conducive to good work. These conditions provide extreme frustration, interference and a lack privacy in carrying on your affairs. There is not adequate help to make it possible to process the many complaints that come from constituents; the real needs of people who are suffering day by day in the province. It is impossible for a member who is taking his role seriously to process all that work himself.

There has to be some kind of a process, either to improve the services of government to these communities or to see that there is some provision available to the member to help him in processing the complaints. We get into this dreadful dilemma—if a constituent who is in need in our riding organization, or in our constituency areas, or outside our constituency areas, comes to a member of the Legislature, and he intervenes through his good offices, it is possible that that individual can get some redress for the wrongs he has suffered and for his needs that have been neglected. And many times that is possible.

But in the very act of doing that we are giving to one citizen what we cannot give to all citizens. And if we are talking about a democratic process we should be looking to see if we cannot remedy the condition that made it possible and necessary for special privilege to be gained by coming to your member of the Legislature and asking for help for what should rightly be yours.

I have found a considerable amount of defensiveness, particularly within the Tory ranks of the Legislature. You get some in the Liberals too, and we are defensive from time to time. But I want to talk a little about it because I think it hinders the task even further. I know of no alternative, if one becomes aware of unsuitable conditions within the government institutions or within the departments of government, other than to bring them before the public. And in the very act of bringing them before the public, there is a general callousness, and an inability on the part of the government in power to take a look at the real conditions that exist.

We saw an example of this not too long ago when the member for High Park brought before the Legislature what he considered to be most urgent information about conditions in institutions of the Department of Health. Obviously, the situation had come to his attention, or he had found out by investigations that these things existed.

Within his role in the Legislature, he must do something about it or assume a callous position towards the people who are suffering, who have no voice, who cannot speak for themselves, who are not here to defend their position. And when he brings it before the Legislature I know that each member is concerned about it. I know that each person who hears it is disturbed to think that bad conditions exist and that people are living in misery in untenable positions.

I know that feeling is there, but instead of an admission of it, instead of saying, "Now, let us tackle it, let us do something about it," there is a defensiveness that says, "We do not like the way he presents the information, we do not think he should present it here. It should be done this way or it should be done that way."

And time and time and time again when real issues affecting real people in the province come before this Legislature, the government benches become extremely defensive and they tend to call down the method by which it is done, instead of looking at the fact that the real issues exist. There are people who exist in our province. They exist in untenable conditions and we should not be fooled by how it is presented or who presents it from looking at the realities that are there.

Mrs. M. Renwick (Scarborough Centre): The Ministers make up false motives sometimes, especially the Minister of Trade and Development.

Mr. Brown: What is left is the feeling that so much of the work of the government—even down to the departments themselves, even down below the deputy Minister level and the heads of sections, and so forth—is being done always with a sharp eye cocked to the political advantage of the party in power. It seems as though the motivation of the bulk of the work that is being carried out, which is a public service, is being done with a political orientation rather than a service orientation to people. And that concerns me because it means that the government services are becoming political services and are tied to affiliation with the party in power.

I was warned a number of years ago before I became a candidate, by members of my board at Warrendale, that one could not expect to get from the departments of government, for children's services, that which they had by right under law unless they had a well-oiled road to Queen's Park. And I found to my dismay and my chagrin, that that is basically true. The laws that should be equal to all, that all should have without contention or argument, seem to be more available if you are a Tory.

If you happen to be outspokenly anti-Tory, you can expect not to be treated equal under the law; you can expect to be treated unequal under the law in the province. That is an unhealthy condition, and even after the year and a half I have been here, I do not know what can be done about it. I do not expect that there is going to be a sudden enlightenment in the government which will change that. But it is the kind of practice that stems from a bully power; a power that feels it has to answer to no one, and this is an unsavoury condition in Ontario politics.

I would like to think that it would be possible to expect that people who are in need within The Department of Social and Family Services would be treated equally, regardless of their political affiliation, regardless of who intervenes on their behalf. That it would be possible for all people in need to receive equal service under the law. I would expect that the same would happen in other departments, too. We know that is not true.

I would like to take a little time at this point to talk about the attack on me that came from the Legislature last year or, as the hon. member for York South (Mr. MacDonald), says, came from what he called the vulgar ejaculations of the member for London South (Mr. White), that mighty finance expert who taxes the food and clothing of the poor to help his dear friend, the Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts), out of the financial mess that he himself created.

I would like to take some time to talk about the whole episode. I do it because I believe the most that could be achieved in this Legislature is the beginnings of some kind of a communication between members themselves. And I think that episode has created barriers to communication between me and the members of the Legislature and the Legislature itself.

I will start out by giving a little background. I am a professional social worker with a degree in psychology and anthropology from the University of Minnesota, a degree of social work from the University of British Columbia, a degree of psychiatric case work from the University of Chicago. I have the pleasure of being associated with the Royal Society of Health in London, England; I am a certified member of the social work of the Academy of American Social Work; I am a member of the American Group Psychotherapy Association. I have had 20 years of experience in direct work with emotionally-disturbed children, delinquent children, in family, individual and group counselling.

I operated, in the province of Ontario, a treatment centre called Warrendale for 13 years, during which time it grew from a small charity institution with a budget of $29,000 with 13 children, to a modern, internationally recognized residential treatment centre with a budget of $1 million in an operation of 100 children.

In the course of that history, contributions were made to the basic knowledge of children which have been found useful in most jurisdictions in North America and western Europe. We have developed methods and techniques which are each day finding broader use in the field. We have developed a mental health team that has never been equalled anywhere.

We had just built a new treatment centre in Etobicoke and we were on the threshold of a great expansion programme when The Department of Health and The Department of Welfare, in conjunction with certain elements of the business establishment on the board of Warrendale, joined forces to discredit that programme, destroy its operation and to disperse the team that had been collected.

I should say, in all fairness to the Minister of Social and Family Services and the Minister of Health, I do not think the present Minister of Social and Family Services was a part of that.

Mr. Speaker, I know that the Minister of Health was brought into the situation late when the then Minister of Welfare was unable to fulfil promises that he had made to see that the programme would continue to certain members of the business board.

Of course, the fact that it was done at all can never be understood outside the context of politics. In the professional community, people do not destroy programmes just because they differ from their own. In the business community, people do not destroy organizations that operate efficiently. Nevertheless, this programme was attacked with its destruction in mind. It was attacked for purely political interests which goes back to the point I made earlier, that all the government services to people are tinged with political motives rather than service motives. And the Warrendale escapade of the Minister of Health is a direct example of this.

The Warrendale team, by great sacrifice and struggle, was able to stay together to build a new programme under the Brown Camps label, which later became Browndale in Ontario. Last year I was attacked by both the conservative parties for a conflict of interest. The press joined with them in trying to discredit the work that I had done because I was now in a position to deal with the government on a purely political level.

The main point of that attack seems to be that we have been successful. Our team had not been destroyed; the methods that we had developed had not been discredited; the facilities and techniques that had been established at Warrendale were improved and expanded. We had grown from a treatment centre with 100 beds at the time of the Warrendale interference to a treatment centre at that time caring for over 200 children in the province of Ontario. And we have done that in a year's time.

The second argument of most of these people seems to be that all this was done by a private company operating under the free enterprise system, a structure of operation which I would gather most people in this Chamber are quite proud of. And I have no apologies for having done it this way.

I would say, as a good Socialist and as a Marxist Socialist, I should be able to do that; I should be able to understand that the historical development of our economic system sees free enterprise as a precondition for social planning, economic planning, equitable distribution. So I do not think it is anything to be particularly concerned about. I am pleased that I was able to do it. I am sorry that I had not entered into the business community when I was much younger, that I had not learned a great deal about the free enterprise system when I was 19 and 20 and 25, rather than having to wait until after 40 to learn the rudiments of it.

I certainly owe a great deal, I think, to the various departments of this government for precipitating me into this private enterprise. I had never dreamed of doing that before and I have learned a great deal about how to organize services for emotionally disturbed children without having to become bogged down in bureaucratic structure that I did not know about before when I was working strictly within the charitable community.

I think it is important that we look both within my own party and within the other parties in this Legislature at some attitudes about the free enterprise system. Certainly in the old traditional socialist—

Mr. E. Sargent (Grey-Bruce): The member is doing pretty well.

Mr. Brown: I was not doing too badly before. I have been under the free enterprise system, I guess, for some 46 years now; that is how old I am.

Mr. Sargent: Do not knock it.

Mr. Brown: Who is knocking it? The socialist movement has learned a considerable amount about the need for free enterprise, too, and I think sometimes we have to remind ourselves of it. We certainly need to remind members of the Legislatures of it because there is an assumption that the New Democratic Party means the end of the free enterprise system. Of course, that is not true at all.

We have learned in the socialist programmes of the world that the free enterprise system is an essential heritage from prior conditions so that certain elements within the economy have to be dealt with in that fashion. There is much to be learned from it; there is much of it that we have to discard. But it is not a complete disregard for the preceding forms that were useful and effective in their time and in their historic place.

One of the things, of course, that is important to us, regardless of what our political philosophy is at this time in our history, is, how are we going to organize efficiently and effectively the multitude of services for people that have become the role of government to play? This is a critical problem. It does not matter which political party you are, when you are in power you are faced with the difficult task of organizing an efficient operation to serve people effectively.

I would say that the free enterprise parties have failed to do this. They have failed to do it in a whole variety of ways. They are failing to bring a humane, sensitive service to people; treating them like human beings; treating them with feeling; treating them with a differentiation for each individual, a respect for each individual. Despite the fact that their philosophy advocates an individualistic approach, the services set up for people by this government and by other free enterprises, parties in Canada and in the United States have become completely dehumanized. The individual is neglected and forgotten. He becomes a cipher.

Somewhere along the line, dedication to the conviction that the individual was important got lost. I know that in socialist countries some of the same things have happened. So we have at the present time a serious problem. How can we humanize the services?

When I spoke a moment ago about the fact that it was fortunate, in many respects, that I got the boot from Warrendale and that I was precipitated into the position of getting into the private programme, I mean it gave me an opportunity to demonstrate whether or not we could provide an extensive, broad service for a large number of children without losing that special quality that we had in Warrendale, of having individualized and humanized service focussing on the needs of the child.

We have demonstrated that we are able to do that, from British Columbia to Ontario, for some 300 or more children at the present time. The programme is growing at about 100 children a year. We are not becoming bureaucratized. We are not forgetting the individuality of the child. And I would say to you, regardless of the political circumstances under which you and I talk together, that there is something of value to be learned in what we are doing in the Warrendale programme in this respect, in the Brown's Camp programme and in the Browndale programme.

Can we learn from each other? Are we prepared to learn from each other? Are we prepared to say Okay, we have a basis for a political difference? I happen to be a Marxist socialist, and I make no apologies about it. I came by it legitimately, it was part of my heritage, part of my growth, and part of my development. I respect the fact that you have arrived at your political convictions by the same force, but we face common problems, and we can learn from one another about these common problems. One of the great tragedies of the Warrendale episode, and of the events that have followed since the Warrendale episode, is the fact that the government in power, who could use and could benefit from some of the experiences of that programme, have been unable to do so because of a political constipation that has set in at a certain level.

It is easy to make political hay on both sides. It is easy for me to do it; it is easy for the government to do it. I think it is an exercise in futility. I ask the government to let bygones be bygones. I am prepared to do that. I have said it before—it has not been taken seriously but I say it again—I am not a politician; I am a professional person.

I came into politics, I may learn how to become a professional politician; I do not know whether I will, or whether I will not.

And when I say to the members of the Legislature and the members of the various departments, that I am prepared to sit down and share ideas I mean exactly that—because within the professional community, this is a common area of communication. You do not hold back from somebody else because you do not like what he thinks, or what he believes. He can be in direct opposition to you and you will share with him the most intimate things you were discovering in the work that you are doing on the professional level.

And that is the way it should be, and that is the way I have approached it. If it has not been understood in that way, if it has been understood in another way, then more is the pity for those who understood it incorrectly.

I say again, I am genuinely offering that which is valuable and I am not saying that we have got all the answers and that it is something that can be taken holus bolus, not at all. But I think that there is, within our experience, a great deal that would have value to the various services to children which the government is trying to build, trying to extend and trying to meet the desperate needs of, that could be useful to them. But they do not have to feel apologetic or badly about it if they look at it and find something they can borrow.

Now, it is happening, of course. It is happening discreetly and behind the scenes; it is happening without anybody having to acknowledge it—and I do not want to embarrass anybody about it—but you know it is happening.

The Department of Health, which took over the Warrendale complex, is closing Thistle-town hospital. It is building small treatment units, on the grounds of Thistle-town hospital, and this to me is the way it should be. That is the proper kind of development and I am glad that they are able to do it.

But you will notice that the direction that they moved was not to reconfirm the hospital medical model, but was indeed to reconfirm the things that we were trying to do at Warrendale before they took over.

I asked myself many times, and I have the question asked of me many times in various parts of Canada and other countries, why was the Warrendale programme attacked and why was it destroyed? Why was this done at all? Then I think—certainly within the political context I talked about that earlier today but I also think that there is a further dimension and that is that throughout the entire programme from 1953 to the time that the Ontario Provincial Police in plainclothes surrounded the buildings and replaced the staff with staff they brought in—in that entire period of time, the programme was based on deep, human involvement.

What we were saying and what we were doing tried to live up to the conviction that a child, regardless of his label, is a human child; that he has the same needs as human children everywhere. And if the children that came to us were not being treated like human children, because they fouled up their communications with people who tried to help them, we set about to discover ways that would make it possible for us to give these children, despite themselves, the kinds of things that every human child needs.

And that means that you have to be involved. That means that you have to care. It means that when you do become involved and you do care, it is embarrassing to people who do not. It sets a standard, not because we say it is a standard, but it sets a standard by demonstration that others find onerous or difficult, or feel inadequate to follow. Now I do not think that, but I know that this is the reaction that comes. I know that others can follow it; I know that it makes a great deal of difference to them when they do.

One of the great problems that we have, and I am speaking again as a private citizen in the province of Ontario, is that we have, over the evolution of child welfare legislation, attempted to set conditions that would protect and set a minimum for the life that each child in the province would enjoy.

In the course of doing that, the government has established many devices for moving in and protecting a child from the natural family. But when one of the devices fails to work, I think this is a most serious lack.

What happens when the government fails to provide for the child as it should? What is the recourse? There is no structure by which it is possible to protect the child who is under the government's hospital care. All you can possibly do, if you try, is to bring down the wrath of the government machine on your programme, on your funding, on the professional colleagues that you have, on every aspect of your life and enterprise. One of the things that I think was continually forgotten in the whole episode around Warrendale, and in the attack within the Legislature, was that there were children involved. They were not mine; they were never mine.

They were children of the province. They were children of people who lived within the province of Ontario. They were children who were real. They had real needs. And it was no skin off my nose.

I could be stopped and my programme could be stopped, but that was not going to hurt me. It still is not going to hurt me, but it is going to make a profound difference to the children that we helped over some 13 to 15 years, that we are still helping, and for whom we have set up procedures, methods and techniques that can be used by other people to help. It is not something that we claim any credit for. It is there. It exists. It is for the benefit of children who are not our own, and I think it should be seen in that light.

Now I am concerned—I have had a growing concern in the last six to eight months—by things that have been happening in the province because I think we are in danger of returning the services of emotionally disturbed children to the level that they occupied some 30 or 40 years ago in the province. My concern stems from the fact that no one within the professional community, and no one within the Legislature, seems either aware of the problem, or to be concerned at all.

With the exception of an editorial or two, the press has been completely silent, except for their usual charity appeals that come each Christmas to help the retarded or the mentally ill child, or the children who are disadvantaged. If we just look at the charity appeals that come at Christmas time, we would get a good measure—just by that alone—of the kind of need that exists in the city of Toronto, for instance.

One of the things that concerns me, of course, is the jailing of children—and I use that term very deliberately—the jailing of children who are emotionally disturbed, in training schools under The Department of Correctional Services. On December 3, 1968, the hon. Minister of Health and the hon. Minister of Correctional Services, in response to a question, expressed their approval of the placement of emotionally-disturbed children in training schools. None of the press gallery picked it up; no one in the government or Liberal Party picked it up. No one in the professional community responded. To this date, it has been totally glossed over by everyone.

That it is a serious condition is evidenced by the fact that the major professional bodies going as far back as Mr. Kelso, who originated the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children, and who developed the foundation for the beginning of the Children's Aid Society, worked and struggled to remove the children out of those kinds of facilities and into appropriate facilities.

It seems incredible to me that in the year 1969 it is necessary for me to make the argument, once again, that the children who are emotionally disturbed or retarded should not be housed in training schools, or similar institutions, as though they had committed a wrong. Nevertheless, it seems necessary to go back in history and make these arguments.

Before I do that, however, I would like to give a brief history of the development of services to disturbed children in the province of Ontario. Originally, of course, these children were treated like adults, that is, the same facilities that were available to the adults were used for children if they came afool of the law; if they were found to be in a state of neglect, or vagrant.

When people first began to realize that there should be some differentiation between the child and the adult, the type of institutions that were first built were modelled on the adult institutions. The form and structure were essentially the same; the philosophy was essentially the same. The difference was that there was a segregation by age.

Following from that, there was the development of some of the institutions that are still around—the large orphanage—there are still a few of those in the province; the Ontario Hospital school structure—there are still a few of these in the province. All of these facilities preoccupied with the idea that you would remove the deviant child from his local community and place him out of sight and out of mind in some kind of a large, conglomerate mob.

To say that these institutions dehumanize children is a kindness to them. The individual was totally forgotten. There was a preoccupation with the administration of these places and the processing of the feeding, clothing and sleeping arrangements based on the least possible cost and without regard to the individual differences that existed.

The graduates of these centres now fill our prisons and adult mental hospitals and have passed on one, two, or three generations of maladjusted children in their wake.

We can go through some of the funding history. As recently as 1953 the government subsidized the cost of large institutions at one-fourth of the cost of operation. That came to a grant of five cents a day. After pressure by an organization called the Organization of Institutions for Children and Youth, negotiating with the government over a period of time, that grant was raised to $8 a month. Later—quite a few years later—(in some departments it still has not happened, it is only promised, like the accreditation in The Department of Health) the government has now undertaken a formula of subsidizing 80 per cent of the cost.

In the meantime, of course, the cost of care has risen, and the remaining 20 per cent is beyond the reach of, I would say, 90 per cent of the people who live in Ontario. They just do not have $200 a month or $180 a month that they can pay for these programmes if their child happens to need services.

The cost of treatment has risen to the point where it runs somewhere between $25 and $60 a day in terms of official reports. It is obvious that with those kinds of costs, 20 per cent is beyond the reach of most families. We know that the much vaunted White Paper on mental health, which promised to remedy this situation in 1966, has bogged down in the typical bureaucracy and red tape which is such a mark of identification of The Department of Health.

As the pressure has mounted for services for emotionally-disturbed children, and much of that was precipitated by the blow-up of the Warrendale situation, and the new-found interest that the public had and the professional people had, in the whole issue of emotionally-disturbed children, there grew out of that a pressure for services to emotionally-disturbed children. That pressure on the government forced the government to act before it was really ready to act, and I think this is what is leading to the use of training schools as repositories for emotionally-disturbed children.

The training schools are there; the child can be locked in, dealt with like any other child in the training school system. The problem of where do you put the child, what do you do with him, is eliminated temporarily until The Department of Health, or the new promised commission on youth, or the new promised department of youth, is able to find some way of providing the facilities.

We are talking about roughly a quarter of a million children in one capacity or another, who need services in the province. Now, I admit to you that that is a guess. We have no statistics. We deliberately have no statistics. I say to you that one of the first tasks of the government should be to compile accurate statistics on the number of emotionally-disturbed children.

The problem with that, politically, is that if they do it, they will then have to do something about service for that number of children. This, of course, is the reason why it is impossible for anybody to get an accurate count of the number of children being serviced. If we take the percentage estimates of organizations like the Canadian Mental Health Association—studies that have been done, one here in Ontario and in other jurisdictions outside of Ontario—we know that the current figure ranges from 10 per cent to 20 per cent of the child population. In a province like Ontario, where we have approximately a population of 7,000,000 people, we can expect that between 33 per cent and 50 per cent of the population are children. Of that number between 10 and 20 per cent are disturbed to the point where there needs to be some intervention, if they are going to avoid serious maladjustment.

The fact that the pressure was on the government and the fact that the government found a solution by turning to the training schools; of course, placed an additional problem on them. They then had to try to legitimize the use of training schools for the emotionally disturbed child. This is not such an easy thing to do.

The Department of Correctional Services, as we have spoken about before when I first entered the Chamber, has a great capacity for altering names and changing labels, in finding new ways of describing old things. But it is not quite so easy to gloss over the fact that The Department of Reform Institutions now houses perhaps as many children who are disturbed as it does who are socially delinquent.

It is very hard to gloss over the fact that the same set of living conditions and the same kinds of services are offered to both groups, that there is not a distinction between a child, who has an emotional problem or a mental illness, and a child who is socially delinquent. The same services are provided to both, and out of that fact alone, one can say that this is inappropriate placement for such children.

We tried, as I mentioned earlier, to deal with the serious task of what you do when a child, who is the ward of the government, is not being appropriately treated. What do you do about it? We tried to do something about it in the case of a child who was committed to a training school under section 8 of The Juvenile Delinquency Act. I will just talk for a moment about this, because after the Warrendale collapse it was important that we try and find, within the law, a basis for the protection of the children that we were dealing with.

Whenever it was possible to go to a court of law for a decision, we tried to do that. We thought it would be important and useful not just to us, but to the whole field of child welfare. Certain things were tested within the courts. At the present time there is a case around this particular child that has to do with her civil liberties being violated under section 8 of The Juvenile Delinquency Act because she was placed in an Ontario training school; she was classified as a delinquent—

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister of Correctional Services): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order! The hon. member himself is stating that this is a case before the courts and I think it is quite improper for him to even discuss any matters relating to this case at this time.

Mr. Brown: Mr. Speaker, I am not a lawyer, as you know, but my lawyer told me that I would be able to talk about it. I have no great vested interest in pursuing it. I am simply trying to explain to you that one of the things we have tried to do whenever there was an issue in which we felt there would be value to the community, was to take it to the court and to get a court decision. I do not care to go any further than that on this particular point. I think that is the point I was trying to make and I appreciate the hon. Minister's interjection.

One of my major objections to the programme—as if one had to have major objections to the practice of sending disturbed children to training schools; as if one would even have to argue the point in this day and age. But we are faced with the necessity of having to do it, and one of my major objections to the use of the training school programme for emotionally disturbed children is the fact that the basic philosophy behind the training school programme has not altered; only the names and forms have altered.

It is hard for me to sit down and pinpoint all of the evils, but I will just pick out one or two that I think are significant because they are not usually talked about when we talk about training schools. They are usually glossed over, or people do not understand, or they do not look at the child who is an inmate of these training schools as a human being, the same as other children, the same as their own children, with the same human needs that children have everywhere, plus a special problem which they have and because of which they are now being imprisoned.

One of the most serious things here, of course, is the fact that these children are seen as being limited in their capacities and aspirations. The approach to these children is as though they are a form of second class child; that they do not have the same potential and capacity that other children have, and that somehow because they do not have the same potential and capacity, they can be given a second rate service; that they can be given second rate training; that they are all going to become artisans; that they are all somehow going to be trained in a trade regardless of whether or not they have a capacity for more than that.

And there is this sort of class attitude and atmosphere around the whole training school programme. It is a fact that the children of the poor populate these institutions more, on a percentage basis, than the children of the rich. This class attitude is carried over in the philosophy and structure of the programming of the aspirations for and the actual help which the child gets.

Then, if the child does not make an adjustment, it is a very easy thing to say he is a delinquent child. It is the child's fault and it is so easy for a government institution, it is so easy for a government department, to gloss over its inability to meet the needs of these children by the statement that, "it is the child's fault". This is a serious problem in the whole field of child welfare. It is easy to say, when a child does not respond to the treatment offered, that it is the problem of the child and not the problem of the service.

I would like to assure you that the children who do not respond to the training school programme justify a very careful review of the basic philosophies and attitudes underlying that programme and the basic kinds of assumptions that are made about the condition of the human child—how he functions and how he works and how he responds.

Perhaps an even more glaring problem in The Department of Correctional Services is that the department has never seriously focused on the needs of the children it services. It is more focused on the political implications of its assistance. When the Minister gets up to talk about it he is talking as a politician interested in defending the role of his government in this area. I do not hear him talking about the needs of children—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: What is the hon. member's interest in this; perhaps the hon. member is interested in $30 a day if they go to his school.

An hon. member: Do not judge everyone by yourself.

Mr. Brown: Mr. Speaker, I would like to say that I do not have a school in Ontario.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Oh, no!

Mr. Brown: But I can set one up fairly easily and I could do it for under $30 a day.

An hon. member: So could the Minister, if he wanted to.

Mr. E. W. Martel (Sudbury East): He does not want to.

Mr. Brown: But this, of course, gets right down to the nub of the question. The very remark that the Minister makes indicates that his focus is on dollars and cents, rather than on the human beings that are involved.

An hon. member: A real cynical approach.

Mr. Brown: I do not have any objections to looking at an efficient operation. I will compare the organizations that I operated in terms of efficiency with any government programme, any time, any day, anywhere. And the government is in no position to talk about costs of services to children.

The Thistleton programme is costing in the neighbourhood of $60 a day. Now I do not say that money is being wasted, but before the government begins to talk about the high cost of treatment in any programme within the province, they had better take a good healthy look at the cost of their own. It is awfully easy for a department who has access to large undefined budgets, to garner from the tax dollar these kind of fees. And out of the other side of their mouth they can be complaining about the high cost of services in a programme such as was developed at Warrendale. That, to me, is a typical political orientation that identifies this particular government.

I have never argued that The Department of Correctional Services was not efficient. God knows, it is efficient.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The member is kidding?

Mr. Brown: God knows, it is efficient. It is efficient if you forget the human element. If you think of the children as a can of beans or some other kind of a product that can be processed along a mechanical line, then it is mighty efficient.

But the minute you put in the human element, then the department's efficiency begins to fail because the effectiveness of the service has to be demonstrated in whether or not the child becomes rehabilitated. Whether or not the child can make a go of it. Whether or not the child becomes a contributing member of society after the work has been done. And to me that is the test of whether it is efficient, not whether you can prod them like so many products through a factory assembly line for X number of dollars.

One of the things that concerns me whenever we get to the issue of children is that the child is so immediately forgotten. It seems like the people in this Legislature and in this government do not really want to talk about children. They do not really want to talk about the needs of children. They want to talk about all kinds of extraneous issues aside from the fact that these are children who are the products of this society.

They were born without knowledge, they were born without civilization, they were born without request into our Ontario society. And out of the conditions in which they found themselves, through no choice of their own, they develop problems, and our society assumes a responsibility to do something about those problems. The children did not make the problems, the society made the problems. So society has the responsibility to do something to see that those children get a normal life experience.

And every time the issue comes up, the government wants to avoid it, wants to talk about other things. It wants to throw red herrings, and make a political game out of it. I say we have had enough of that. Let us stop it. Let us get down to the facts that these children do not determine their own destiny. They are real. They exist in large numbers. They have tremendous needs. Those needs can be met. They do not have to be met to the glory or discredit of any one group or any one individual. But they can be met.

We cannot continue making political hay out of the fact that the Minister of Correctional Services is able to change names in his department and set up all kinds of programmes to house, inappropriately, children who are not delinquent. Now, I do not know whether he is doing is not aware of this, or whether he is doing it as a callous politician. I have not been able to decide, but the fact that he has children inappropriately placed, and children who are inappropriately served, makes me wonder a great deal about whether he is a very unscrupulous man in a political role, living off the misery of children in the province, or if he has very poor advice because he does not know, and his advisors—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The member is a man who has become very wealthy out of those children.

Mrs. M. Renwick: What has that got to do with this discussion?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Well, he brought it up.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): The Minister brought it up ten minutes ago.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: He can call me an unscrupulous politician if he likes.

Mr. MacDonald: Put the cap on if it fits!

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Brown: Mr. Speaker, this is the typical kind of response from the Minister. And there is a reason why he responds like that. There is a reason why he leaps to his feet, and tires to go off in these kinds of directions. I could give you a very full analysis of how this particular Minister operates, but I do not think this is the place or the time to do it. But I will say this, that any money that I ever made from children was made as a professional person; it was not at the expense of children. Any political advantage that I have ever made has not been at the expense of somebody else, and if I have to stay in politics, succeeding at the expense of somebody else, then I will not be in politics.

Now I do not know whether the hon. Minister is prepared to make the same kind of statement, but I doubt it. We have learned a great deal in the last 60 years about the needs of children.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Is the hon. member prepared to let me get up and make that statement?

Mr. Brown: Yes, I would like to hear it.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I would say that I have not made any money from looking after children who are in trouble as the hon. member has, and he does not deny that. And I will say that the hon. member made a statement in the election campaign that the only reason he wanted to get elected to this Legislature was to help those children, and we have seen damn little of him in this Legislature.

Mr. Brown: Once again, the Minister demonstrates his focus is not—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: How does he help the children if he is not in the Legislature?

Mr. Brown: I would say that I have increased the availability of beds for emotionally disturbed children at a higher rate of incidence than all the government departments put together, in the same period of time, without any taxpayers' money, and with the government down my back.

Mr. MacDonald: And the facts are there to back that up.

Mr. Brown: With The Department of Health spending $16,500 for public relations services to try and smear that programme, a figure that the Minister of Health himself tabled in this Legislature. That was my tax money as well as yours, and it was misspent. You did not get your $16,500 worth. You had better look to another public relations firm. You had better look to another issue.

One of the things that we have learned about children in the last 60 years, and it is an important bit of knowledge, and you do not have to be a psychiatrist to understand it, is that the human child needs to feel that he belongs, that he is affiliated, that somebody cares about him. And if you want to measure your services, gentlemen of the government, go into your institutions, put yourself in the shoes of the child and say, "who really cares about me, who cares?" If you come away from that, and you can tell me that the services for children that are provided by this government do that, then I can tell you I am out of the field completely. You have it. It is yours.

Mr. Martel: Take that one.

Mr. Brown: We are talking about some complicated dynamics; these are human children. Their needs can be measured by you in the same way that you measure the needs of your own child, and it stands there before you to do it. If I thought that you did not care, that it did not matter to you, I would not even open my mouth, but I think you do care, and I think all the members who are here care.

I think they would like to do the best thing for the children in Ontario. I think they would like to do the best job for the people. I do not know how to communicate to you that we can do better than we are doing, that we do not have to go along in this fashion. The job can be better done; why not do it?

If children do not feel that they are affiliated and related in the beginning years of their childhood, and later—then they become uncivilized and dehumanized to varying degrees. And this inhibits their ability to adjust, to go through the learning process that all children have to go through.

Their capacity to use their innate talents and potentials becomes warped and their spirit, enthusiasm, curiosity and hopefulness are impaired. Like all children, if they do not belong, they not only suffer in the here and now, day by day, but their potential for the future is seriously hindered.

Children need love, children need to belong. They need reciprocative feelings from adults who will model their identification. To that end, the groups and organizations that care for them must like them and must appreciate them, and must provide for them in a spirit of parental love and affection.

In the drive for efficient operation, the eight hour shift on the one hand, and the attitude that these are society's wrong-doers, grossly inhibits the natural warmth and loving relationship that all children need.

So far, we have dealt with what all children need, but the emotionally disturbed child has needs above and beyond the needs of a normal child, special needs that result from his emotional disturbance. When society intervenes with these children, society, by the act of intervention, assumes a responsibility to meet the special needs that the child has. Otherwise, why intervene? So, when the intervention is there, there is with that, automatically, an assumption of responsibility to do something about the special problems that brought the child's needs to light.

I think, thirdly, the process by which children come to a correctional institution is perhaps the cruelest of all of their experiences. Anyone who will take a moment to look into himself, and think of his anguish at the moments when he is not well related—and all of us have times when we are not well related, not well adjusted to some situation or event, when he is isolated or when he is lonely or irrationally angry or upset—will know the agony under which the emotionally disturbed child exists in the best of times and in the best of conditions.

To be brought before a juvenile court, which is modelled on the adult court, and having one's maladjustments laid out like crimes, and having the judge consider them and sentence the child to a training school for problems and acts which are perhaps the result of the maladjustment, is the most dehumanizing treatment that the child can possibly get.

Generally, the child is housed for a period of time in the observation home, which is a new name for a detention centre. In Toronto, we know the condition of the observation centre. There is a flurry of editorials, letters and public protest from interested persons about the inhumane conditions of the detention home in Toronto; the lack of air conditioning and ventilation, yet the children are kept there year after year while the government dawdles and does nothing about it.

It requires very little thought about the serious problems of the emotionally disturbed, maladjusted and the deviate child in our society without recognizing that the juvenile courts and the training schools are archaic forms for any child, that their use should not be increased but eliminated, if for no other reason than the civilized feeling it would bring to all the people in the province to think that we could care for our children without these organizations.

We should try to remember that society should be growing away from these kinds of archaic institutions and archaic practices. We should be trying to find more advanced organizations for dealing with children, consistent with our increased knowledge about what causes children to function the way they do and how we can remedy it.

I would like to read a statement that was issued by me on December 3, 1968. Following is a statement by myself in connection with a series of questions before the orders of the day regarding emotionally disturbed children. The statement reads:

I am gravely concerned about the conditions prevailing in Ontario in the field of services to emotionally-disturbed children. Judge Little's remarks emphasize, once again, the fact the government has failed to act in a sensitive, co-ordinated, intelligent manner to serve the problems of emotionally-disturbed children.

These questions resulted from a comment by Judge Little saying that training schools were appropriate for some children who were disturbed. To go on with the quote:

The government has created chaos rather than providing a harmonious programme by vesting interest in emotionally disturbed children into half-a-dozen departments that appear to be working at cross-purposes and without identifiable objectives. Indeed, one would suspect sinister motives judging from what has occurred in recent times. By this I mean it has been evident for a better part of a year that The Department of Correctional Services has been bent on legitimizing the placement of emotionally-disturbed children in reform institutions.

The heat has been on children's aid societies and juvenile courts to sentence children with emotional problems to such centres. Other children have been sent out of the country for treatment in the United States and others have been placed in adult wards in mental hospitals. All this, bad as it is, does not equal the literally thousands of children left at home in the community without service or care.

It has been repeatedly said by certain elements in The Attorney General's Department and others in reform institutions, The Department of Health, mental health division, The Department of Social and Family Services, that there are no available alternative resources. This is an outright lie. There has existed in the province of Ontario the availability of 100 beds for emotionally-disturbed children which has gone unutilized in the past.

This was one of the things (to move out from the quotes of this particular statement), that I did shortly after the collapse of Warrendale. I offered to the Minister of Health 100 beds that would be available for emotionally-disturbed children on demand.

There was never even a discussion. Again, we go back to the fact that all of this issue has been treated as a political issue. Now I realize that, in my naivety in the field of politics, I probably contributed to that as much as the government has, but I am prepared to look at my part in it, and I certainly made the offer, not with an interest in political gain, but to the end that I recognize there are a large number of children who need emergency services. That offer still stands.

I would suspect that there still remains for immediate use—or that there could be provided on a very short notice—50 beds. By the time these were filled, 50 more beds could be available, even today.

I say without reservation that no emotionally disturbed child in Ontario need be placed in the reform institution or adult ward of a mental hospital, or shipped out of the country for treatment for lack of facilities in Ontario.

I am prepared, as a member of the Ontario Legislature, to undertake the immediate provision of alternative facilities for all emotionally-disturbed children coming before the courts and needing treatment.

My experience in the field tells me that this programme could be dealt with by existing resources properly utilized and co-ordinated. I would further assert that these services could be provided at a cost of under $30 a day all inclusive; and that includes capital costs, education, clothing, health services—

In the process of neglecting to provide for the needs of emotionally disturbed children, the government and its various departments has created an oppressive and excessive burden on children's aid societies, courts, training schools and other government institutions, the result of which is a serious distortion in the function of these institutions.

When an adult ward has to take on a seriously disturbed adolescent, not only is the adolescent not being treated, but the services to the adult are being neglected and abused and this is the serious kind of distortion that is happening in many of our organizations.

When emotionally disturbed children are brought into correctional institutions, they create a disturbance for the purposes for which that institution was set up in the first place. They add a burden to the staff and the children who are there before they come. It is not wise planning and it is not wise action.

I say it is impossible to include quantities of emotionally disturbed children into the training school programme without serious damage to that programme in which the emotionally disturbed children were so placed.

I say The Department of Social and Family Services has expended large sums of money sponsoring a private treatment centre known as Boys Village in the hope that some magical solution to the problem might be found; but none has yet emerged.

I say that The Department of Health has vested large sums of money in the Thistle-town programme in the hope that some magical solution could be found; but not one has yet emerged.

I say that the government has failed to appropriately and sufficiently support the one significant, outstanding treatment programme that was developed in Ontario: the programme that is now operated under the name of Browndale, formerly the Warrendale programme.

I say that the government has played politics with the issue of emotionally disturbed children far too long and must now immediately convene the respective departments concerned, with other public and private organizations, and demonstrate their capacity to deal with the programme, and to map out an immediate, co-ordinated course of action if they are to remain credible in the field of providing services to emotionally disturbed children.

Last year, I gave up my direct work with the emotionally disturbed children in the province of Ontario in the hope that by so doing, it would be possible for the government, without losing face, to let bygones be bygones and to get on with the important task of providing services to emotionally disturbed children.

I find no evidence of that happening to date and I challenge the government to rise above their personal feelings of animosity to me, and to take a clean hard look at what is available in services to emotionally disturbed children in the province of Ontario.

The Browndale programme, under its new board of directors, provides treatment for approximately one per cent of the emotionally disturbed children in Ontario. All other facilities, private and public, provide for another one per cent. The other 98 per cent are either getting haphazard, occasional assistance in outpatient clinics, schools, etc., or they are going without services.

I would like a positive assertion from the government that they are prepared for the sake of emotionally disturbed children to let bygones be bygones and find ways to bring together the available knowledge and resources that better serve the needs of the emotionally disturbed child in Ontario. And that does not mean that they have to deal with me; the programme has been passed on to people who can carry it effectively and well.

That is the end of that particular statement. I would like to read further from a statement on December 4, 1968:

Despite the Prime Minister's reluctance to make policy statements in yesterday's question period about sending emotionally disturbed children to training schools, the Minister of Health and the Minister of Correctional Services stated in bold terms the policy of this government. They both emphatically stressed that training schools were suitable centres for emotionally disturbed children.

As a professional person who has spent 20 years studying and developing services for emotionally disturbed children I call these statements gross, inhuman and without any foundation whatsoever.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Would the hon. member mind if I asked him a question?

Mr. Brown: No.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Does he believe that the Association for the Emotionally Disturbed Children agree with his views on training schools?

Mr. Brown: I have no idea whether the Association for Emotionally Disturbed Children, which I played a large part in founding and developing, has an opinion one way or the other about it.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Would the hon. member like me to give him their opinion at this time?

Mr. MacDonald: Why does the Minister not take his own time?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I am speaking to the hon. member. He can say whether he has any objection.

Mr. Brown: I have no objection to you interceding at any point in any way if you will address it through the chair.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Well, of course, I have addressed it through the chair. Of course, the hon. member—

Mr. Brown: The proper procedure is through the chair.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The hon. member has made a great plea that we should let bygones be bygones and we should all work together in this field which was, of course, an appeal I made last year, if he will recall. But I wonder whether he really feels that by getting up here and making a charge that the Minister of Correctional Services is approaching his problem with the children in the training school as a callous politician, he helps this sort of thing.

Mr. Brown: Read Hansard and get it straight. Do not be so defensive about it, just read Hansard and get it straight.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: May I tell you what the Association for the Emotionally Disturbed Children said?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. Minister started out to give the hon. member a report of an association. He has not come to it yet; would he please do that.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: This is the edition of the Ontario Association for Emotionally Disturbed Children, dated January 1969. It is just coincidental—I just happened to have it handed to me on the outside as I was coming in. I would be very pleased to read it to the hon. member.

It refers to Workshop No. 13, treatment services for the delinquent, and it refers to a panel, on which was Judge William Little, juvenile and family court of metropolitan Toronto. The others were Mr. Stanley Out-house, senior probation officer, juvenile and family court of metro Toronto; Mrs. Roberta Roberts, chief social worker, Whiteoaks village, Hagersville, Ontario; Mrs. Dorothy Chandler, supervisor, West End Creche, Toronto. The editorial reads:

On the grounds that this particular panel of concerned experts in their field has already been extensively reported in the daily press, we feel that straight reporting would be redundant, hence our personal comments.

This is the editor speaking.

Certainly the major problem—too many troubled children and not enough places for them—is likely to be with us for some time to come. We regret quite as sincerely as Judge Little that there is a stigma attached to children who have spent time in training schools. We would like, however, to point out that this stigma which, according to Judge Little, closes off certain avenues of employment, was, and is, based on public misunderstanding.

The public is always inclined to suspect the worst of what it actually knows very little about. It has always been true, and I speak from having both knowledge and experience of children who had spent some time there, that for many children the training school was the first decent home they had ever experienced, and training schools have in addition moved ahead very rapidly in recent years in bringing their principles and their facilities and their knowledgeable handling of disturbed children into line with the most approved modern practices.

It should be emphasized again and again and the public should be made fully aware of the fact that a child may be sent to a training school simply because it is immeasurably a better place for him than the home from which he has been taken. He may be disturbed. He can hardly help being so in many homes where he may feel himself to be a reject. But he is not necessarily delinquent and, in any case, minor delinquency in such a child is by no means an indication that the child has permanently abandoned the value of society.

Now I hesitate to read the last paragraph which is a very short one, because when I did this once before someone said I was getting up and extolling my own virtues. I cannot help it under the circumstances.

Under the progressive policies of Mr. Allan Grossman, Minister of Reform Institutions, our training schools—I speak of them as ours because they are now institutions in which we can take an honest pride—can hardly be distinguished from the best of modern treatment centres. We only wish that the homes which still shelter after a fashion so many badly handled and mistreated children, might some day attain to a comparable standard.

Mr. Brown: Mr. Speaker, the Minister should be justly proud of that kind of an editorial from such an eminent group and it just brings out some very tragic points that I suppose in the Minister's haste to defend himself and a programme that he did not create and did not blueprint, he did not say what was the proper way to serve these children. It was simply inherited as a part of the history of our institutions in Ontario. I would just like to comment a little bit, if he can take time to sit in his seat and not be so defensive about it. I certainly—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I just did not like being called unscrupulous.

Mr. S. Lewis (Scarborough West): That was an hypothesis.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Brown: I certainly did not, Mr. Speaker, charge him with being blatantly political, but I said I had to ask myself and that I had not been able to answer yet. But he has, I think—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Brown: I think we have had much enlightenment this afternoon. Whatever I may have thought before, I have certainly new evidence to support suspicion.

It is a tragic situation when the Minister of Correctional Services, in defence of himself, rises in the Legislature in the year 1969 and justifies his behaviour on the grounds that there exist in the province living conditions for children so bad that a training school is an improvement.

The question, when we are dealing with human beings, is always simply reduced to what would you do for a child of your own. What would you expect as a standard if your child were involved? And if you are not prepared to say to me that you would place your children in your own correctional institutions before you would place them in your home, then what are you talking about? Indeed, what are you talking about? This is a ridiculous position and—

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps at a convenient time the hon. member would adjourn the debate. I do not wish to end his remarks on the Minister's remarks, that would be quite in order, but perhaps after that he might.

Mr. Brown moves the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, tomorrow I would like to go to the order paper. There are some second readings that have been on the order paper for some time; that is, down to order No. 14—and there are one or two bills in Committee of the Whole House. In any event, I will go to the order paper and we will deal with what is ready and then we will resume this debate.

I would think next week we will commence to sit on Tuesday and Thursday evenings. There will be no night sittings for the balance of this week.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I might ask the Prime Minister if he is in a position to enlighten us as to when the Budget will be presented?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Oh, yes, I hope there will be no more changes; on March 4.

Mr. MacDonald: March 4?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: March 4 is the date as of today. I think we have made the final change.

Mr. S. Lewis (Scarborough West): Under pressure from the leader of the NDP.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: While I am on my feet talking about the business of the House, I would like to think that we might call order No. 2 some time toward the middle of next week. That will probably come to be known as the constitutional debate.

Hon. Mr. Robarts moves the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to.

The House adjourned at 6.00 o'clock, p.m.

WELFARE OF ANIMALS USED IN TEACHING AND RESEARCH

Hon. W. A. Stewart (Minister of Agriculture and Food) moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to Regulate for the Procurement and Provide for the Welfare of animals used in Teaching and Research.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Mr. Speaker, this bill which I introduce today has several objectives which will result in benefits to both man and animals.

The people of Ontario are, I am sure, aware of the tremendous progress that has been made in human and animal medicine as the result of teaching and research. Countless human and animal diseases have been overcome, and great progress has been made in the battle against other diseases and ailments as a result of the continuing programmes of research conducted on animals. As the beneficiaries of these research discoveries, we must recognize that many of these important advances made in the fields of medicine and nutrition have been the result of such research conducted on animals.

Under the proposed legislation, protection will be provided for these animals by insuring that:

1. Animals are procured in a legal manner.
2. Animals maintained by animal suppliers and research facilities are given proper care.

After I served notice to this Legislature that legislation to this effect would be introduced, I received a letter from Dr. E. H. Botterell, dean of the faculty of medicine at Queens University and vice-principal of health sciences at that university. Dr. Botterell was writing to me in his capacity as chairman of the Council of Deans of Medicine of Ontario, which embraces in its membership the deans of all the faculties of medicine in the province.

Mr. Speaker: Order, order. The hon. Minister is entitled on the introduction of a bill to give a short explanation of a bill. If the hon. members wish to hear this, I would be glad to have them hear it—but I would suspect that the hon. Minister is not now in order in reading the statement which he is about to read.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. Minister, then, may proceed by the unanimous consent of the House.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Dr. Botterell says:

I welcome this announcement of your intention to introduce legislation which will, I am sure, regularize and control the means of obtaining animals used in teaching and research and provide safeguards for their welfare.

The continual use of animals in teaching and research is of the utmost importance to the education of health care personnel, and the provision of high quality health care. I am confident that the legislation you propose will have a significant effect on human science teaching and research in Ontario by improving the means of procuring animals and ensuring their proper care and protection from unnecessary or unreasonable pain or discomfort.

The present high level and accelerating pace of development of modern medical science would be impossible to maintain without research involving the use of animals. For advances in health care for both man and animals, ranging from the elimination of such diseases as diphtheria and poliomyelitis to the transplantation of organs, medical science and veterinary science are dependent upon research.

Emphasis must again be placed on the severe shortage of animals for teaching and research which was emphasized in the brief to the government of Ontario. As a result of this shortage the development of new methods of diagnosis and treatment of disease, as well as the basic research in the health science is seriously handicapped. At the same time, increasing responsibilities are being laid on the health sciences for the education of more doctors which will in turn, require the procurement of increasing numbers of animals.

Now, Mr. Speaker, these comments come to us from a very important group of professional men upon whose shoulders have been placed the responsibility of training the doctors of tomorrow and the development of new methods of disease control.

With regard to the procurement of research animals, this Act will control the source of supply and in addition will require the teaching and research facilities to obtain their animals from approved sources. The source of dogs and cats will be pounds and licenced dealers. Both will be required to have approved facilities for the housing and care of animals.

However, a person wishing to donate his own animals to a research facility may do so. Pounds will be required to make unwanted animals that have first been offered for pets, available for research purposes. The owners of pets who do not wish to have their animals used for research purposes, may direct the Humane Society or pound operator in writing to dispose of the animal in a humane manner, if a new home cannot be found for it, rather than having it used for research purposes. Provision is also made for the humane disposal of animals unsuitable for research purposes by reason of disease or old age.

By controlling the sources of animals and by making animals more readily available to research facilities, undesirable practices such as the theft of dogs—dognapping—the provision of inadequate animal care, and the operations of unscrupulous dealers will be curbed. At the same time, pet owners will be protected against hasty action in disposing of impounded animals for research purposes. Owners of dogs and cats that are impounded are allowed at least 48 hours in which to redeem their animals under this legislation.

With respect to the welfare of animals used in teaching and research, the Act provides for the inspection of premises supplying animals for research and research facilities using animals. The Act also provides for the making of regulations respecting matters pertaining to the care of animals. These matters include health standards, facilities, and equipment for housing and care for animals, the establishment of animal care committees in connection with research facilities, and the services of veterinarians at research facilities to supervise the care of such animals.

This Act also includes as research facilities those premises generally regarded as PMU—pregnant mares' urine—farms, and accordingly provision is made for the registration and inspection of these facilities as well. In order to protect the welfare of foals born on these PMU farms, a prohibition is placed on the sale of foals under 90 days of age except in cases where the foal is orphaned or sold with its dam to the same owner or destroyed by the owner.

This Act will be administered by the veterinary services branch of The Ontario Department of Agriculture and Food. In the interests of animal welfare and the general public, the responsibility of administering this legislation will be placed in the hands of a branch of government comprised of veterinarians who, by the very nature of their profession, have as their first concern the health and welfare of animals.

This legislation was prepared after a careful study of the research animal situation undertaken by those who are experienced in the field. We have followed the recommendations contained in the June 1966 report of the special committee on the care of experimental animals, commissioned by the National Research Council of Canada. This report revealed a need for the establishment of adequate uniform standards relative to the procurement and care of animals and facilities for their maintenance, and made a number of useful recommendations in this regard which are implemented in this legislation.

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): Since the provisions of the bill, which have been so amply outlined by the Minister, correspond almost exactly to the news reports in the papers yesterday about the bill, I wonder if he can explain to the House why the newspapers were aware of these provisions before we in the House received them.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Well, Mr. Speaker, I wish quite frankly that I could provide an answer to the hon. member because I would be so enlightened myself.

I have no idea how the story got out. I suspect that it was very, astute newspaper work. I just have no idea how it was done.

THE ONTARIO SOCIETY FOR THE PREVENTION OF CRUELTY TO ANIMALS ACT, 1955

Hon. A. A. Wishart (Attorney General) moves first reading of bill intituled, an Act to amend The Ontario Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals Act, 1955.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Speaker, this Act constitutes a review and amendment of our present Act. There are certain important features to which I might refer briefly, and the amendments or I might say the repeal, of three sections—that is sections 12, 13 and 14—which permit entry without more than the language of the statute.

The new Act will require for entry a warrant obtained through a justice of the peace. Taking of an animal, which now may be done by an officer of the society without any other authority than that contained in the present Act will also require the order of a veterinarian.

Generally the provisions of the new legislation are designed to conform to what we consider to be the proper principles in dealing with the rights of persons.

The Act establishes an animal care review board and new provisions for review of decisions and for appeal from the actions of officers of the society.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Sudbury East has the floor.

THE SEPARATE SCHOOLS ACT

Mr. E. W. Martel (Sudbury East) moves first reading of bill intituled, an Act to amend The Separate Schools Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Mr. Martel: The bill would permit a non-Catholic ratepayer whose spouse is Roman Catholic to elect to be a separate school supporter.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Nixon: I was going to ask the Attorney General if he might clarify the intent of the bill that he has introduced in first reading, which

I understand requires a warrant before officers of the humane society can enter premises. I understand that the chief director of the humane society has already publicly objected to that provision. Really the point is whether, having become aware of this evidently in the last day or two, the Attorney General might comment on how he got the information or perhaps defend the bill, since it is already an open debate before it is presented to the House.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Speaker, taking the last part of the hon. member's question first, I do not propose to defend the bill on first reading. I think the proper time to defend the principle of the bill is on second reading, if it is attacked, and then to discuss the bill fully in committee, of course, where the bill will undoubtedly go.

As to how Mr. Hughes discovered that this proposal was to be contained in the legislation, I am in the same position as my colleague, the hon. Minister of Agriculture and Food, I do not know. I am sure that the leader of the Opposition is aware of the procedures through which bills have to go, and that some time is taken in preparing and drafting of them, and carrying them in the Cabinet and caucus. In this procedure, somebody did not feel that it was too wrong to suggest some of the things that might be accomplished.

Mr. Speaker: Introduction of bills.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Premier. I wonder if the Premier would give the House more information on the representative at the educational conference in Niger, as to his regular responsibilities with the government and his instructions as a member of the conference?

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker. He is named Jean-Marc Tessier. He is an assistant superintendent in the curriculum section of The Department of Education.

His usual duties and his particular responsibilities are in the preparation of courses of study in our bilingual schools. He has quite a range of experience in the department. He has been a member of the staff of the department for some time; he has been an inspector of modern languages in our secondary schools. He is, of course, a teacher, a former teacher. He has served as a professor of education at the Ontario College of Education.

He was given no specific instructions by the government. He is attending the conference as a member of the Canadian delegation, and he is participating in the deliberations there as one of the members of the Canadian delegation. He also attended apparently an educational conference held in the Congo in January, and he was designated by us to serve on the Canadian delegation at the request of the federal government.

Mr. Nixon: We presume the federal government is paying his expenses?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: I am afraid I cannot answer that question.

Mr. Nixon: I would like to ask further, to the Premier's announced programme for expanding the province's capital area, does the province own all the land in the block between Bay Street and Yonge Street east of the new Queen's Park complex?

And second, who administers the present use and rental of the properties that are owned; and is there any timetable associated with the new programme?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: No, Mr. Speaker, we do not own them all; I think we own most of the larger ones, but some of the smaller ones we do not own. They are being negotiated continuously. Those we do own are administered by The Department of Public Works.

We have no timetable, it is a very long-range plan as I mentioned at the time. We are looking ahead and preparing, but we have no timetable as to when construction will take place.

Mr. E. Sargent (Grey-Bruce): If they can afford it.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: We will wait until we can.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Mr. Speaker, my first question is to the Minister of Health: Has The Health Department purchased the drug tetracycline over the last 13 years? If so, has the department made representations to the five American drug companies—Charles Pfizer and Company, American Cyanamid Company, Bristol-Myers Company, Olin Mathieson Chemical Corporation and Upjohn Company—to recover the amounts overcharged by the companies as per consent decree reached last month as reported in the Toronto Daily Star?

Hon. M. B. Dymond (Minister of Health): Mr. Speaker, the answer to the first part of the hon. member's question is yes, we have purchased this drug. The answer to the second part is no, not yet. The purchases of the department are being scrutinized. I directed this to the attention of my staff as soon as I read the report. Going over 13 years' records will take some time. As soon as we have that information and we are certain that we bought from those firms concerned, our action will be dictated by our findings.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, I have two questions for the Minister of Labour. The first one:

With regard to the Welland plant of Cyanamid which has been on strike since January 6, 1969:

1. Is it true that some of the new work force, involving former supervisory personnel, have been confined to the plant for weeks, without returning to their homes and families?

2. Is it true that workers, as reported on radio by the wife of one of them, receive $5 per hour while working and $2.50 per hour while sleeping on cots beside their machine?

3. Has this company permission from The Department of Labour for employees to work excessive overtime—12 hours a day regularly—day after day?

4. In view of the fact that the work of a normal maintenance staff of 150 is now being done by a few supervisory staff, is the safety of the workers and the community being safeguarded by this explosive-manufacturing plant?

Hon. D. A. Bales (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, in reply to the question from the hon. member, I received this just a little over an hour ago and he has asked a number of detailed questions. I will be glad to obtain the information and send it to him.

Mr. MacDonald: My second question to the Minister of Labour—incidentally, Mr. Speaker, I trust the answer to my last question will be presented in the House.

Hon. Mr. Bales: I will obtain the information and provide it.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. Minister is being asked if he will take this as notice for the purpose of returning the answer to the House.

Hon. Mr. Bales: I have no objection to giving it in the House. I would want to see that the member gets the information.

Mr. MacDonald: My second question to the Minister of Labour:

From the department's investigation of the death this week of Gerry Nagy in a tunnel being constructed by Cristan Construction Company on Denison Avenue in Toronto, does the Minister feel that safety regulations had been observed?

Hon. Mr. Bales: Mr. Speaker, I am sure the hon. member appreciates that this accident occurred two days ago. The investigation is continuing and until it is complete I cannot say, nor would I want to say, that all regulations have been complied with. I hope they have, but I want to find out myself.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, by way of supplementary, would the Minister report when the investigations are completed?

Hon. Mr. Bales: Yes, and I might add that it is my understanding that an inquest is to be held, in which event, of course, there would be the normal investigation.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Sudbury East.

Mr. Martel: Mr. Speaker, a question of the Minister of Education.

Will the promotional policies, discrimination charges—and staff academic qualifications—issues raised by Dr. Costa of George Brown College—be investigated by the department, and if not, why not?

Hon. W. G. Davis (Minister of Education): Mr. Speaker, the problem as it relates to Mr. Costa at George Brown College is now under discussion and arbitration between the institution and the individual. It is not appropriate for the department to become involved at this point.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Timiskaming.

Mr. D. Jackson (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Attorney General.

In the case of Regina vs. Gary Perly, is the Attorney General aware that the Crown attorney, under oath, advised Judge Bigelow that PC Woodhead had indicated to him outside the court that he had denied in court having read the transcript because he thought it was improper to have done so?

Since PC Woodhead was under oath when he denied having read the transcript, does this denial not constitute perjury? If so, will the Attorney General investigate what action should be taken against PC Woodhead?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member raised this question I think just a few days ago. At that time I told him I would look into the matter, investigate it. I have therefore obtained the transcript and have read it. I notice that in the Ron Haggart column of the 15th instant and back in November 29 of last year, he made some comments, some quite uninformed. Since the matter has been raised again and is of some importance I have decided to, very carefully, state the answer which I shall now read.

As I say I have the transcript and I have considered the various suggestions by the hon. member for Timiskaming that some sort of charge should be laid. I might point out to the hon. member that one of the essential ingredients in the charge of perjury is that the alleged untrue statement must have been made with the intention of misleading the court. The allegation should also be related to the main charge, not to a collateral issue such as was the case here.

I would also point out that the evidence of the assistant Crown attorney is not completely unequivocal; he does not recall the exact statements but rather, he says, the gist of the conversations. Finally, the only evidence respecting the allegations made against Police Constable Woodhead is that of the assistant Crown attorney who states in the transcript that, and I quote: "he did not know if Woodhead read the transcript". That is on page 108 of the transcript.

All in all, Mr. Speaker, I am of the opinion that the evidence does not warrant the laying of any charge. The officer admitted the practice he had followed. The assistant Crown attorney made full disclosure to the court and to the defence and thus, the entire matter was cleared up in order that the defendant might be protected from any possible prejudicial effect on this evidence.

I feel that the matter was dealt with in the proper way once it came to the attention of the Crown. The action of the officer was wrong, of that I make no question. It is obvious from the transcript that he knows that his actions were wrong and the practice he followed was wrong. I am sure that he and his associates will now be aware of the facts and the result of the case. But in short there is nothing which would require the laying of a charge of perjury.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. Minister of Mines has an answer for a question from yesterday, number 636.

Hon. A. F. Lawrence (Minister of Mines): Mr. Speaker, question 636 was asked by the member for Sudbury East as follows:

Can the Minister inform the House whether the Falconbridge Nickel Company has advised Mr. Redsell, the district engineer, what action they intend to take to reduce the noise from the Fecunis compressor at the Fecunis mill?

If no action is considered by Falconbridge, did they present any brief to Mr. Redsell regarding the compressor noise?

What action will the Minister take to ensure that the situation is rectified?

Mr. Speaker, I am informed that any complaints we have had respecting noise have not been about the mill but about a compressor room adjoining the machine shop and I assume that that is what the hon. member is referring to. I am informed that the Falconbridge Nickel Company do not intend to take any further action to reduce the noise from the compressor in the compressor room adjoining the machine shop, as I think I answered previously to the hon. member in this House.

An audiometric survey revealed that the noise, although unpleasant, was certainly not harmful and certainly not a safety danger. No brief on compressor noise was presented to Mr. Redsell, our engineer, and in view of that information we feel that there is no situation to be rectified.

Mr. Martel: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister, as a supplementary question: Is the Minister aware that one man has received compensation as a result of noise in that area and two more cases are being processed at the present time?

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: Yes.

Mr. Martel: There must be something causing it then.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Thunder Bay.

Mr. J. E. Stokes (Thunder Bay): Mr. Speaker, a question of the Provincial Secretary.

In view of the news release of September 16th, 1968, in which the select committee on taxation stated that people in northern Ontario should pay the same price for beer as the rest of the province, will the Minister prevail upon the Brewers Retail Stores to reduce the price of beer in northern Ontario in the interest of uniformity?

Hon. R. S. Welch (Provincial Secretary): Mr. Speaker, I have asked the members and officials of the liquor control board to thoroughly review this matter and once that study is completed I would be glad to speak with the member about it further.

Mr. T. P. Reid (Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Will the Minister advise the House of his reply to the Ear Falls citizens' committee request for:

(a) Funds to go to Quetico Park for the seminar on regional government?

(b) An administrator for Ear Falls?

(c) A subsidy to carry on the basic services to the community?

Did the Minister reply to each of these requests personally?

Hon. W. D. McKeough (Minister of Municipal Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the reply to this question would involve reading most or all of four letters and I think it would be best if I tabled those four letters with the Clerk and I will send a copy to the member.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Oxford has a question of the Minister of Transport, if he wishes to place it.

Mr. G. W. Innes (Oxford): Will the Minister inform the House if he is planning to change the regulations respecting truck loads this year for the half load season?

How many Benklemen beam devices are currently in use by this department?

Hon. I. Haskett (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the regulations respecting half loads in the same form as last year have already been passed.

The Benklemen beam device is not employed by our department. I suggest, sir, that questions concerning it or the road per se might more properly be directed to my colleague, the Minister of Highways.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. Minister of Highways has the answer to a question from yesterday, perhaps he would give it now.

Hon. G. E. Gomme (Minister of Highways): Mr. Speaker, the answer to question No. 600, asked by the member for Sandwich-Riverside (Mr. Burr).

Mr. Speaker: Is that member in the House?

An hon. member: No.

Mr. Speaker: Will the hon. leader have that question answered? The member for Sandwich-Riverside is not in the House.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, I think we could have the reply and if there is any supplementary question it can be placed at some later date.

Mr. Speaker: Thank you.

Hon. Mr. Gomme: Mr. Speaker, the answer is yes.

Mr. Speaker: I would point out to the hon. members why I am particular about this because we do not allow questions to be asked of the ministry if the Minister is not present and I think that the same courtesy should be extended to the members.

The hon. member for Windsor West has a question or two here.

Mr. H. Peacock (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, a question of the Minister of Education. What action does the Minister intend to take to give effect to the proposals of the Blind Brotherhood Association presented to him on Monday in Windsor?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I received these suggestions on Monday and they are being considered.

Mr. M. Shulman (High Park): Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Health. How many birth control pills were purchased by the department last year for use at the Whitby Psychiatric Hospital?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Speaker, I will take this question as notice.

Mr. Shulman: Thank you. A question for the Attorney General. If Magistrate Lucien Kurata is found innocent in the forthcoming judicial inquiry will his legal expenses be reimbursed to him?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Speaker, it is not a question of being found innocent or guilty, a judicial inquiry does not do that; there is no charge laid, but I do not want to get into a question of semantics at all. I think that I would definitely say the answer is no.

An hon. member: No?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: No. Now if the member wishes me to expand on that I simply say that the judicial counsel having found conduct which it felt required reference to a judicial inquiry—a public inquiry—I would not expect to pay the costs.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Grey-Bruce.

Mr. Sargent: A question yesterday, Mr. Speaker, to the Minister of Energy and Resources Management. In a release to the press on January 27, the hon. member for Muskoka (Mr. Boyer) is quoted as saying the total cost for Ontario Hydro Employees Union demands, the effective increase for the two-year contract, would be 15.5 per cent, amounting to a cost to Hydro of $19.6 million.

Calculating the three increases as follows: six per cent increase on $77 million equals $4.6 million; three per cent increase on $81 million equals $2.4 million; 6.5 per cent increase on $84 million equals $5.4 million—the total is $12,549,000.

Subtracting these figures—$19,996,000 minus $12,549,000—leaves a balance of $7,447,000. Will the Minister tell why the balance of $7,447,000 is left unaccounted for? Will he explain the difference?

Hon. J. R. Simonett (Minister of Energy and Resources Management): Mr. Speaker, on January 27, the vice-chairman of the Ontario Hydro wrote to members of this House setting forth a number of matters relating to the differences between the management of Hydro and Ontario Hydro Employees Union. Only a few of the words quoted by the hon. member for Grey-Bruce, however, come from the vice-chairman's letter. The remainder of his quotation closely resembles statements made in a subsequent letter to members of the Legislature written by Mr. Keeley Cummings, president of Ontario Hydro Employees Union.

In any event the difference of $7,447,000 between the commission's estimate and that of Ontario Hydro Employees Union is easily explained. According to OHEU's calculations, if its demand is met its members will receive increases in the first year totalling $7,447,000. Regardless of what percentage increase is applied in the second year, they will continue to receive this money for the life of the contract. The first year's increase does not expire after 12 months. If it did the members would be back at the same level they were at the beginning of the contract period.

Obviously then, the cost of the first year's increase alone is more than $14 million over two years—not $7,447,000 as stated by OHEU. By adding the union's estimate of the cost of the second year's increase, approximately $5,400,000, we arrive at a figure very close to the commission's estimate of $19.9 million.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Speaker, would the Minister answer a supplementary question?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: I am listening.

Mr. Sargent: Well that is interesting. How can he justify a six per cent increase on $77 million as $14 million? It works out to $4.6 million.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: I just answered that question. The hon. member should realize that that is the second year; the first year is the $7,447,000.

Mr. Sargent: The second year is the three per cent increase.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Perhaps I should send this to the hon. member and he could maybe understand it better if he were to look at the figures.

Mr. Sargent: Is the Minister implying the union is not telling the truth?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Mr. Speaker, I am telling the truth as it was given to me and I think it is quite easily understood how one would arrive at that figure.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Speaker, will the Minister say that the union is not telling the truth?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: I did not say anything about the union; I am not talking about the union.

Mr. Sargent: These are their figures.

An hon. member: So what?

Mr. Sargent: They say $7 million—

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Mr. Speaker, I have answers to questions from yesterday if you would like me to answer them at this time.

Mr. Speaker: Is the member who placed them in the House?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Yes. I have a question from the hon. member for Nipissing (Mr. R. S. Smith). I believe it is in four parts:

1. What steps is the Ontario Water Resources Commission taking to ensure that the public health and safety will not be endangered by the dumping of 1,200 gallons of cyanide in Moose Creek on January 5?

The answer—the spill of cyanide was to the tailings area serving the Levack mill of Inco and not directly to Moose Creek. Water analysis of the Vermilion River, which receives the flow of Moose Creek, did not indicate the presence of cyanide.

2. Why was there such a long delay between the spillage occurring and yesterday's—February 17—despatch of samples of Vermilion-Fairbank Lake water to Toronto for analysis?

The answer — the commission was not informed of the spill until February 11th. At this time it was learned that the discharge was contained in the tailings area.

3. What measure is Inco taking to ensure that future spillages do not occur?

The answer — the commission is in discussion with Inco officials for the purpose of reviewing what measures can be taken to prevent further accidental spills.

4. What penalties will be levied against Inco for the infraction?

The answer — since the spill was accidental and the company has adopted preventative measures, and since no discernible impairment of downstream waters has been observed, no legal action is contemplated. However, the commission's investigation is continuing.

I have an answer to a question asked last Thursday by the hon. member for Essex South (Mr. Paterson). His question was as follows:

1. On Tuesday, January 28, at 3.15 p.m. were tenders for the Woodslee water area system open?

The answer is yes.

2. How many tenders were opened and what were the amounts of the bids?

The answer—five. The first bid for cast iron pipe was $74,615.23; for duct tile pipe, iron pipe—$79,388.83; and for asbestos cement pipe—$70,935.58. The second bid was $78,197.25; $83,169.75; $72,230.25. The third bid was $89,321.50; $91,111.60; $87,332.50. The fourth bid was $91,105.54; $95,879.14; $88,619.29. The fifth, $110,096.50; $111,787.15; and $105,422.35.

The third part of his question:

When such tenders are opened is this information automatically public information?

The answer is yes. The last part of the question:

Can the press or interested citizens be present to watch the proceedings?

The answer is yes. The next part to his question:

On the date in question and in relation to the opening of tenders for the Woodslee Area Water System, how many tenders had the commission expected to receive?

The answer: Fourteen sets of documents were issued and it is impossible to know how many tenders will be submitted. His next question:

Was the secretary of the commission aware that one or more tenders in the proper Ontario Water Resources Commission tender envelope for this contract were in the offices of the Ontario Water Resources Commission on Monday, January 27th?

The answer is no. The next question:

Why was this or these tenders not included among those opened at that occasion?

The answer: All tenders that met the requirements of the tender call were opened. The next question:

If there has been negligence on the part of the Ontario Water Resources Commission staff in this regard, has this official been reprimanded by the Ontario Water Resources Commission, and if not, why not?

The answer: There has been no negligence on the part of the staff of the commission responsible for the tender.

And I have another answer for the hon. member for Port Arthur (Mr. Knight).

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member has left the House.

Mr. Paterson: The hon. Minister has not answered the last part of the question. I was asking if the contract had, in fact, been signed by OWRC in this regard.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, I thought that was the finish, but I see, in fact, that it was not.

The answer is no, the contract has not been signed. Then there was another question.

If not, will the Minister intervene in this case to open all properly-documented tenders that were in the office of the Ontario Water Resources Commission prior to 3 p.m., January 28?

The answer: The Minister has no reason to intervene. All properly-documented and valid tenders were opened at the public tender opening.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Before the orders of the day I also have—Oh, I see the members are not here. I have questions that I took on notice, but I do not believe any of the members are here. I am sorry.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

THE EVIDENCE ACT

Hon. A. A. Wishart (Attorney General) moves second reading of Bill 1, an Act to amend The Evidence Act.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

THE COUNTY JUDGES ACT

Hon. Mr. Wishart moves second reading of Bill 50, an Act to amend The County Judges Act.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

Mr. J. Renwick (Riverdale): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, these bills in sequence from order No. 15 through to order No. 26 only appeared in printed form in the books today, and I wonder whether, in the circumstances, the Attorney General would stand them down.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Speaker, I would be very happy to oblige my hon. friend, but I would like to—

Mr. Speaker: May I advise the hon. member for Riverdale that the Clerk advises me that 15, 16 and 17 were only in today but the others have been in.

Mr. J. Renwick: Mr. Speaker, I refer to the order paper which is the guiding order paper, and in the order paper as I understand it for Tuesday, Feb. 18, bills nos. 15 to 26 are shown as not printed, and it was on that basis that I asked the Attorney General to stand them down rather than expect us to search the bill book to find out whether they have been inserted or not.

Mr. Speaker: I think now the Attorney General might answer that.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Speaker, as I said, I would always be happy to oblige my hon. friend. I would point out that, for instance, the 18th number on the order paper, bill 63, providing for the consolidation of the regulations, I should not think would be one that would be debated at any length on second reading. The next five following orders, bills 64, 65, 66, 67 and 68, are rather minor amendments.

Bill 70 constitutes The Department of Justice, and I can understand someone wanting to examine that at some length before second reading. But I would hope that we might get on to some of the others, because I am sure that the debate in the House would be quite ample to take care of any point that might arise in those bills, 64, 65, 66, 67 and 68. They are now before the hon. member, he can see that they are brief.

Mr. J. Renwick: Well, Mr. Speaker, I raise the point not because of any particular concern that I have that the Attorney General's remarks are not accurate, but I do not think it proper for the other members, both in this party and elsewhere, not to have an opportunity to look at them and decide whether or not they are innocuous.

For example, Mr. Speaker, I think that on the Act to provide for the consolidation and revision of the statutes and of the regulations, there are indeed some comments which could be made about both those Acts. I would appreciate it if the Attorney General would stand them down until we have had an opportunity to consider them thoroughly.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Speaker, I would not even want to give the appearance of trying to rush something through the House without the fullest opportunity for debate, and therefore I am glad to accede to the hon. member's request.

I still adhere to the remarks I made that I think there will be little debate on them, but I certainly would not want to give the impression that we were hurrying them beyond a point where someone could examine them.

Mr. J. Renwick: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the Attorney General adhering to the order paper regulations.

Mr. J. E. Bullbrook (Sarnia): Mr. Speaker, just for a moment in fairness to the Attorney General, I believe it had been his intention to proceed with the seventh order today, and at the request of myself and the hon. member for Lakeshore he desisted, and I think this is why he is now proceeding with other orders.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: That is right, Mr. Speaker, I had fully intended to give second reading to Bill 36, The Mechanics Lien Act, and at the request of two members we deferred that. Otherwise we perhaps would have spent most of our time this afternoon on that bill.

Mr. Bullbrook: Mr. Speaker, having had an opportunity to look at the flimsy copies of these statutes, we are prepared to proceed with the order as the Attorney General wishes today.

Clerk of the House: Resuming the adjourned debate on the motion for second reading of Bill 24, An Act to amend The Mining Act.

Hon. A. F. Lawrence (Minister of Mines): Mr. Speaker, I believe the hon. member for Lakeshore moved that adjournment. I would not mind ending up the debate, Mr. Speaker, if he does not wish to proceed.

Mr. Speaker: Yes, I think we should follow our normal procedure, and that is to have the members who wish to speak to this second reading, speak, and then the hon. Minister can wind up the debate. So, if there is a member on any side of the House who wishes to speak to this, would he please take the floor, otherwise the hon. Minister will have the floor.

THE MINING ACT

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: Mr. Speaker, there is rather an interesting division within the House that has not necessarily followed political lines in respect of this bill. I have heard from just about all the northern members, one way or another, whether privately in writing, or from the floor of the House. I merely wanted to point out to you, sir, that the three or four members who have spoken in the House on the matter took the attitude that the effect of this bill would be to assist the larger mining corporations or the larger exploration companies, and would be perhaps a death blow to the smaller exploration companies.

The real flood of correspondence that I have had from people in the north and from some of the other members who have not spoken in the House, has just been to the contrary. I think evidence has since indicated our intention to proceed with this new system and with this new procedure. The universal tax system has proved to us that this simply is not the case.

I have been very interested especially in hearing from local branches of the prospectors and developers associations across the north. Almost all of them have very effectively rebutted some of the arguments that I have heard on the floor of the House from some of the hon. members.

I would like to give notice if I may, sir, in moving second reading of the Act that in committee I intend moving an amendment to section 6 of the bill, relating to the effective date of when the bill should come into force. We are very anxious that this system take effect as of the beginning of our new fiscal year, namely April 1, and therefore, I do give notice to the House now, sir, that in committee I will be moving an amendment to section 6, to make the effective date of the bill—of the Act, rather—on April 1, 1969.

Mr. Speaker: The motion is for second reading of Bill No. 24. Is it the pleasure of the House that the motion carry?

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

Clerk of the House: First order, resuming the adjourned debate on the amendment to the amendment to the motion for an address in reply to the speech of the Honourable, the Lieutenant-Governor at the opening of the session.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

Mr. J. L. Brown (Beaches-Woodbine): Mr. Speaker, when I adjourned the debate yesterday, we had just heard a very light, very well written editorial lauding the service of the Minister of Correctional Services (Mr. Grossman), and I would like to pick up on that for a minute before I resume quoting from my statement issued on December 4.

As we saw yesterday, the hon. Minister was extremely defensive about his service and about himself. He rose on many occasions to try to divert the direction of the discussion from focussing on the needs of children and the kinds of services that they are getting, to issues that were extraneous to those facts.

Time and again we tried to focus back on children and what children need. I would simply like to say in reply to a remark by the hon. Minister that I am very pleased to serve the association for emotionally disturbed children in Ontario—a very worthy organization—and support him in his programme. During the many years that I had served on the board of that organization, we tried to get sponsorship and help from government departments to co-ordinate the services to emotionally disturbed children in the province, but our pleas always fell on deaf ears. The fact that perhaps they are now writing favourable editorials about the services would probably indicate, in keeping with the pattern usually followed in this province, that some department or other will make money available to this long standing, hard working organization.

In speaking further on that particular point, since it was brought up by the Minister, I would like particularly to commend Mr. and Mrs. Don Hurley who spent so many years of their lives maintaining that organization when they had no support from the professional community and no support from many of the government agencies.

The organization, under their guidance and direction, grew throughout the province of Ontario and found interest in many parts of North America as well as in other countries outside of North America. It was an organization that started a good many years ago when schizophrenic children were first being discovered in the city of Toronto, and there was an effort on the part of a doctor at Sick Children's Hospital—Dr. Keeler—to discover the incidence of schizophrenic children in Metro. They identified some 100 children, and as a result of coming in contact with them, decided that it would be useful if he spent some time meeting with the families and parents. As a result of this, a parent-group was formed for schizophrenic children; later it developed into the Association for Emotionally Disturbed Children in Ontario.

Because this particular doctor was not financially supported beyond a certain stage in his research into schizophrenia, the programme that he started with parents was not supported. The general reason seemed to be an attitude on the part of the government that to encourage the parents of these children would be to create a political problem for themselves. Because, of course, when you have a seriously disturbed child in your family, you have strong feelings about it—and you are not content to sit by and hear the endless promises of the good days that are about to come some time in the future.

Indeed, you are faced with the fact that every moment is a crisis, or a potential crisis. So these parents, instead of being a trouble group or a problem group, and containing energies, motives and directions that could have provided a tremendous impetus to the development of services for emotionally disturbed children, built the association without outside help. I just want to say that I do hope the editorial which the Minister of Correctional Services read yesterday is an indication that at long last this very worthy organization will get some support from some government department.

I would like to get back now to complete the statement that I was trying to read at the time of the Minister's interjections. I will not go back to the beginning—I think they probably have it in Hansard. I will simply start at this particular point:

In 1966, the Tory government came down with a white paper on mental health, which was to develop services for emotionally disturbed children in all parts of the province, on a regional basis. No emotionally disturbed child was to go without treatment. We have been told time after time that the content of the white paper was being implemented by The Department of Health and other departments of the government at the fastest possible pace.

We know now that there has been very little action to provide specialized services to emotionally disturbed children by this government in the last two years. There have been frantic efforts to extend the programme of reform institutions so emotionally disturbed, children could be sent to jail apparently for being a problem.

The statement by the Minister of Health and the Minister of Correctional Services constitutes in fact a black paper on mental health, one so retrograde and archaic that I find it difficult to express my abhorrence and shock. This is the mentality that created the asylum and operated it and still operates it in many parts of our province. This is the mentality that allows children to perish in Ontario hospital schools. This is the mentality that sees no need for distinguishing between children and adults in Ontario mental hospitals.

In short, these are the callous words of men who are content to place other people's children in training schools because they are disturbed. It is not an accident that the bulk of the children who go to these training schools are either children of the poor or orphans. Is there any member of the Ontario Legislature who would send his disturbed child to a training school? Is there any parent worthy of the name in the province of Ontario who would send his child to a training school because that child was emotionally disturbed?

I ask the Prime Minister to immediately refute the statement made by his Minister of Health and his Minister of Correctional Services that training schools are suitable centres for emotionally disturbed children. I ask the Prime Minister to cease pretending that the government has a plan of action for emotionally disturbed children that has any relevance to their needs or to the urgency of the present problem; that the government stop pretending that it is doing something about the white paper on medical health and start afresh in all urgency to tackle this problem on a sound basis.

And that is the end of that quotation.

That statement was issued on December 4, and of course there has been no effort to refute the position taken by the two Ministers at that time. I assume that it is still government policy. I assume that the major programme of the government of this province at the present time for emotionally disturbed children still consists of sending them to correctional institutions that were designed for delinquent children, which are staffed and organized and established on the basis of treating delinquent children. I assume the government programme still consists of sending them to adult wards of existing mental hospitals where the child goes in and lives, for long periods of time, with people who are seriously mentally ill, without appropriate services and without appropriate focus on his specialized needs—without even a simple respect for the age differential between him and the rest of the patients.

Perhaps the largest number of children are being covered by a policy that says, "If you can keep the whole issue quiet, keep it down; don't acknowledge it; pretend it doesn't exist; maybe it will go away." So they go on, sir, in the communities, living in their homes, failing to develop what they need to develop in order for them to use their full potentialities as they grow. And this, of course, is perhaps the cruelest form of all—to be treated as though you are normal when you are not normal. It is almost as criminal as being treated as though you are retarded when you are not retarded, as are many emotionally disturbed and mentally ill children in Ontario hospital schools today.

I know there is difficulty in diagnosis. I know there is a problem in trying to discern the retarded child from the child who is mentally ill, but the fact remains that a large number of children who are known to be mentally ill are housed in institutions that are set up for retarded children. That is an extremely cruel thing to do to any child, yours or anybody else's.

I thought I would take a moment today to review the history and development of treatment resources in the province of Ontario. It is a unique kind of history. It has not followed the same pattern of other jurisdictions.

The residential treatment centre has a recent history in the province. It started in the early 1950's. The first two treatment centres began in the year 1953 in Ontario, one in Ottawa—the Protestant Children's Home, and the other St. Faith Lodge, Warrendale at Newmarket. These two organizations for quite a number of years were the only treatment resources available, not only in Ontario but in the whole of Canada.

They had grown out of large congregate institutions for children. We had been developing historically in the province of Ontario this kind of a movement. The old congregate children's institutions, either branched off and became cottage-like structures, which we would call more in the nature of a "group home programme", or it branched off and became identified with the whole movement in the rest of the western world known as the "residential treatment centre" movement. As I said earlier, the Protestant Children's Village in Ottawa and St. Faith Lodge, Warrendale, in Newmarket, developed in the direction of becoming part of that whole new movement in the world to serve children more effectively, known as the "residential treatment centre".

The residential treatment centre came out of realization, when the medical practitioners and other professionals moved into the psychiatric wards and into the large asylums, that there needed to be an intervention in the nature of the living accommodations. Large numbers of children were being poorly accommodated, which was poor individualization and so forth. All this needed to be corrected, and one of the ways that it could be corrected was to form smaller treatment units on a non-medical basis outside of the hospital structure.

Initially, the idea was still primarily that the child would be treated by professional people but housed in a more humane way. The intervention would be an intervention of environment. Gradually, because people can absorb knowledge, and can learn—the people who staffed these units began to intervene in the daily activities of the disturbed child in a fashion that had a therapeutic benefit itself, and when the various professionals discovered that this was a possibility there began a more concentrated effort to train and teach the staff of the treatment centres to carry out therapeutic intervention.

In fact, the entire development of that movement led to the establishing of the possibility of a new professional group, the child care group, those persons who live with the child patient.

So historically the residential treatment centre was not something that was invented in Ontario, it was something that was brought to Ontario. You cannot close the gates of the province to ideas. It was first mooted not by professionals but by lay people who were interested. They got together and decided that something should be done. They hired people like they hired me, to come and transfer an old custodial institution into a treatment centre programme.

So, we see a kind of evolution in the development of institutional services to children, starting with the old asylum concept, then the medical ward concept where there was an effort to put in more professional services and to create it more like a hospital. Then the treatment centre movement.

Now, in recent times, in the province of Ontario we see a further development of it, something we were trying to do for many years at Warrendale, but, because of the funding, it was difficult to get it under way. We were able to do it once we developed our own private programme.

And that is the therapeutic family living in the community on a street benefiting from community life much as we in our families do and much as our children do.

This is a trend that is happening around the world, it is not something that is just unique to Ontario. I do not say that we in any way discovered it, it was done in various countries of Europe for a good many years. Certainly it was done immediately after the war in Holland and in France and in some of the other European countries, the effort to develop benefits to the child by living in a therapeutic family in the community.

It is obvious from the work we have been doing in Ontario over the last three years that this movement is in itself, just a phase, a part of the evolutionary development of services to children which ultimately will place the specialized techniques, the specialized knowledge of child care, the special child psychiatric information, into the hands of the family or into the family home, before the child indeed is separated from that home.

We can visualize starting next September in the private programme at Browndale the development of a school which will have attached to it, teams of staff who will go out into the community into homes where there are problems which would lead to the breakdown of the family and to provide the specialized help to the parents and to the children of that family, before the family disintegrates.

We see that ultimately this type of preventive service will be the pattern for the future. Of course, it is infinitely cheaper. I do not mean that it is not going to cost money—it is going to cost money—but there is no great saving in neglecting the child, the family and the family home only to have, by force of circumstances, to take the child into wardship. Then, through a series of failures in placement, have the child fail to make the adjustment of the first separation, the first loss of his family and ultimately pay between $30 a day and $60 a day to have him treated in a residential treatment programme.

This is not good sense and it is not good economy. It is not good for the family either, because there is a great social burden on parents who have to be declared, before the courts, unfit to parent their child. Of all of the human failures that one can imagine, there is no failure more burdensome, more painful to the individual than to have to acknowledge that you have failed in your function as a parent, that you stand before your peers in society condemned as someone who was unfit to raise his child. This is the most burdensome of all burdens that we can put on people in our society.

We should be thinking most carefully before we move into a wardship action. We should be asking ourselves, "Have we put in the kind of services that could make this individual a better parent?" before we separate the child from the parent or declare him unfit. We should ask ourselves: "Have we done everything that is humanly possible to support this person, to train this person, to extend this person's capacity into being a better parent before we separate the parent from the child?"

I think it is important for us to remember in this evolutionary structure of services to children that this is not something that is necessarily the whim or wish of one person.

As I said earlier, the treatment services that were developed in Ontario did not grow out of the profession, they did not come from the direction of The Department of Health or the direction of The Department of Social and Family Services; they did not come out of The Department of Education.

They grew out of an awareness within the public sector that there was a need that was not being met, that the forms of services that had existed up to that time were not adequate forms of services and they had to say, "we cannot wait, we cannot wait for leadership from government departments. We cannot wait for leadership from professional groups. We, in our social responsibility, as citizens of the community, must go out and start an organization that will have a different approach to children, it will have a different service to children," and this is what led to the development of these services. And we must remember, that in each age and at each time, the forms that we have used to treat children have been the result of this kind of concern about children. In its day the old asylum was a tremendous invention, a tremendous improvement in child services. It began to focus on the child as a separate entity. Each of these forms they were appropriate to their time and to their age. The problem is that they tend to become entrenched in our legislation, in our funding.

What happened was, of course, that we did not know when to turn them off and change them into something that was more relevant to what we now know and what we now need at this particular time.

In all of this natural evolution of our services it is wise if we can come into harmony with it. It is wise if we can say this seems to be the trend in which services are going. We should ask ourselves how can we harmonize our own efforts with it, how can we get into stride with it and help it along? This is what we are trying to do in the various programmes at Warrendale, at Brown Camps and at Browndale.

Behind that is the recognition that prevention, of course, is the best, the most humane and the cheapest form of service that can be provided. If we look casually at the budgets of the various departments of government—and I do not mean just this particular government, I mean all levels of government from municipal right up to the federal, but certainly this government included—we find very little attention paid in budgets to services of prevention.

We cannot do anything about the services of treatment or the services of care. We cannot avoid those costs. They will be in the budget in large amounts, something in the neighbourhood of $40 million for Correctional Services; something in the neighbourhood, I guess, of—I do not know how many—$400 million in terms of health; how many more hundreds of millions of dollars in terms of education and re-education.

But the preventive services were not included and we failed to put our money into that kind of investment. We failed to take action at the time when the least amount of action would have the best amount of result, when the cost for such intervention would be most economical. In terms of investment, the money that we are investing in services is poorly spent at the present time, in that it is not bringing us a good return. And when you look at it—and again now what we are talking about are services to children. We are not talking about political advantage or disadvantage, we are talking about a reality that exists—it is a fact regardless of what your politics are, that this is the better way to do it. These needs, these methods, and these things that I am talking about transcend politics.

Now in all of the work that has come out of the residential treatment centre movement—and certainly this was a by-product of our work at Warrendale too—while we were doing it we were not aware of it particularly, we were busy doing what we were doing but there was implied, in all of the residential treatment centre approach, an anti-medical attitude because doctors were not in charge. It was not organized like a ward in a hospital, and so there was growing up, as this movement continued, an antagonism from the medical and psychiatric professions who felt that somehow their control and jurisdiction over the emotionally disturbed and mentally ill child was being threatened.

I can understand that. I can simply say it was never the intention of the residential treatment centre to make this kind of challenge. I wish that I could claim that we had in fact determined that in advance, but we had not. As time went on and antagonisms from the various medical groups and psychiatric groups accelerated we had to become aware of it, we had to deal with it, we had to analyze it. In that process, we discovered that in all countries the same thing was happening. There was growing up a grave concern about the kind of absolute control that the medical profession had over services to children. In fact, in some areas it is going even beyond just the children's field itself.

So if you lose the medical model, what model do you then have? If you lose the hospital model, what model can you then turn to? In our work at Warrendale, starting in 1953, we began to look more and more to the family model rather than to the hospital or medical model. We came at it, over a period of several years, with this kind of thinking—the human family has existed for centuries. It has suffered every kind of conceivable calamity that man or nature could devise. Despite these calamities and despite the rigours of living that had been part of the human scene down through the centuries, somehow the family had managed in its relationships to its young, with the children in the family, to provide a large percentage of adults who had the capacity to be flexible, to learn, to adapt, to carry on the work of society, to expand, to grow, to develop.

And we then had to ask ourselves how is it possible for people who had no specialized training—they were not psychiatrists, they had not had special courses in orientation to human growth and development, they were people equipped only with the intuitive knowledge that came to them down through the ages, through the customs and practices of their cultural groups—to do for their children what many professional people were unable to do when they were called upon by the state to provide a substitute for the family when the child was orphaned or taken into care?

And we came to the realization that no professional had ever been able to create an artificial environment for a child that equalled what an unschooled and uneducated couple in the community could do for their own children in terms of developing them and having them grow into mature adults.

Now that required that we would have to stop to see what were these special qualities within a family that made this possible. How was it, say, in times of revolution or in pioneer days or in times of war and great conflict, in times of economic depression, in times of all kinds of severe critical pressures from outside the family, the family was still able to carry on this tremendous function of creating an environment for the child that made it possible for him to fulfill himself and to grow and to be flexible enough to take on the tasks of living?

As we studied the family we found that there was indeed in the family model a tremendous amount that would be useful to us to add to our scientific knowledge about human growth and development and about child care. We found that we could learn much from people who could not speak the professional language that we had been accustomed to but who indeed had developed and carried on out of their own background, a tremendous wealth of knowledge.

First of all, we said, obviously there must be something pretty good in the family structure itself. A mother and a father and a small family unit, and a small social unit, and an independently economic, economically independent unit, living separate from other units. That there must be something good in that itself, there must be something of benefit in that itself. And so we began to organize, even within the larger institution, the children into smaller family type groups, and we saw immediately that there were a great many benefits that have come from that. The benefits of close communication, of individual attention, of involvement and investment in the needs and interests and capacities of the child involved.

Gradually, as we became more and more aware of the family in nature, we found that there were many devices that the family had created without identifying them, without saying, now we are using this technique or that technique, there were many devices that had evolved out of nature where the family took care of stress situations. And I will just give you an illustration of one or two so that you will understand what I mean.

One of the things we noticed was that all families had a certain set of sort of idiosyncrasies toward what the child could do in the family, and each family was a little different but there was this common theme: A parent would say to a child, "Do not put your elbows on the table, do not lean back on the chair, do not go around the house without your slippers on, hang up your clothing." The child had been told this since he could first understand language. He could now be a junior in high school or he could be a college student, and mama was still telling him this and papa was still telling him this, and it was not because he was dense and he could not understand. There had to be some other reason why he was still carrying out these acts that had been prohibited over the years. And when we looked at it and tried to analyze it, we found that the child and parent had an unconscious arrangement between them.

If things were bugging the kid at school he would come home and fail to hang up his coat. Mama would be on his back. They could then, around that issue, let off steam, and then they could go on living in greater harmony within the family unit. And that device we call an anchor point. We began to develop it in 1954 into our programme. We found it extremely useful. It is the key.

This is one of the great tragedies of this whole situation in Ontario around Warrendale, that this was going on and no one ever bothered to take a look at it. But it is the key to the treatment of seriously disturbed children in the community, because it makes it possible for the staff to control the acting out behaviour of the child and to see that it comes within the treatment centre itself.

It could eliminate, in and of itself, the necessity for locked wards, for locked doors, and for the other repressive measures that we use to hide children away when we cannot control their behaviour. It meant, in fact, that we would be able to bring these children into a more normal kind of life experience which they had never experienced before, because we had discovered a device that would make it possible to cut down on the impulsive behaviour, their gross body acting out of the problems that they have.

The family model as the model of treatment, of course, means immediately that you have to be involved. There has to be a deep-vested interest in the child. You cannot do it indifferently. You cannot do it objectively. You must do it subjectively. And because you cannot do it subjectively, it is extremely difficult for people who have the concept that they will treat children and treat people at arm's length under a rigid structure, under a rigid protocol. It makes it very difficult for them to carry on their work.

This, alone, I think, has led to more strong reaction and criticism from professional groups than any other aspect of it. I do not think they have always understood why they were antagonistic, but essentially they were antagonistic because it meant they had to get involved. They could not treat at arm's length, they had to care. They could not stay out of the messy situation that people who come to them for help brought along with them.

I want to take a few moments to discuss another aspect of the medical and professional problem that has plagued the field of services to children and services to people for so many years. You know, Freud observed the nature of human behaviour 50 years ago, and his observations were revolutionary in the helping profession.

One would have thought that, in those 50 years, it would have been possible to have this information available on all levels of life, for all people who were dealing with other human beings. But somehow it did not happen that way and when you look at it historically you see that the professional groups—getting this information, taking what Freud had learned—made it into a clinical team, made their therapeutic intervention into a little island, separate unto itself.

They developed a special language so that they could talk to one another. They were more preoccupied—and still are more preoccupied—with talking to one another than talking to the public or talking to clients or patients who come to see them. What we have then, is that the very profession that should be in the forefront of bringing services to the community and to individuals and to people, are themselves blocking this development, because they have laid on to archaic institutions, and old models of service, their special little islands of professionalism, of therapeutic intervention.

They take the child, or the patient, out of the ward into their service for an hour or two a week. They give him the special knowledge and the special attention and the special intervention that is a part of this very rich field of human awareness. They do that for a short period of time and then they send the individual back into the archaic institution, back into the uncivilized and dehumanized experiences of the ward.

And this, of course, is a serious problem, because the patient understands enough to know that the same people who are giving him a special therapeutic moment are also sending him back to the untherapeutic moments that he has to live in day by day and hour by hour throughout the week.

And so the patient sees the service as a hypocritical service. God knows we could use a little stimulus from the people who lead in the various departments of government concerned in this area. We should have some leadership from them. What we need to do is to bring to the administration, to the supervision, to the life pattern of the whole institution, the same therapeutic principles and standards that we apply when we take the patient into our therapeutic hour.

There is no reason, no reason at all, why we cannot create an entire environment for the patient or the child twenty-four hours a day, seven days a week, that is just as solid and pure and as full of the therapeutic benefits that come when we take them into our therapeutic hour.

The fact that we have not done so means that the professions themselves have abdicated their role of leadership. They have turned it over to chance, to somebody else. They have made a deal with the establishment. It is easier for them to have their little therapeutic island attached to this archaic institution than it is for them to say the whole institution can change.

It is an extremely serious problem within the professions—one which the professions themselves are concerned about, one which the professions themselves are going to have to try and change. Of course, people who are in the public service—professionals who are in the public service—know how difficult it is to change the bureaucratic structure. The minute you begin to codify, and put down in regulation how people will act to one another, it becomes extremely difficult to change those patterns.

Most professionals feel the deep sense of despair that there would ever be the possibility of changing these institutions from within the institution itself. I think they are unnecessarily filled with despair. I think much could be done if professional people spoke out, but I recognize, at the same time, that leadership will also have to come from the political sphere. We will have to get Ministers of Health and Ministers of Correctional Services and Ministers of Family and Children's Services who indeed are prepared to give this kind of leadership—to say that the archaic forms under which we now serve children are not good enough; that we are going to set about as quickly as possible to rectify that by bringing some of the therapeutic concepts and knowledge we have from our therapeutic interventions into the administration's supervision and life patterns of patients in our institutions.

I know to a certain extent that people within The Department of Health are trying to do that at the present time. I know Dr. Zarfes is concerned about this and has been working on it.

I know, at the same time, there is a great deal to be criticized in his department and I have been in a dilemma since the very first month I came to the Legislature when I went to visit him, because I know something about his department. I talked to him about what he was trying to do and the frustrations that he had.

I decided at that point not to attack the many problems that were there to be attacked. I decided at that point to give time to this particular department to see whether or not, indeed, they would make a concerted effort to bring about the changes within their institutional structures that were so necessary to do. I do not have assurance that that movement is going fast enough and I think, once again, that Dr. Zarfes, and others like him, are probably bogged down by political considerations at the high level within the department, on the deputy level or on the ministerial level.

Now, this is not something we can play around with. Change is going to come; we cannot stop it. It is not something that ordinarily springs out of the ground. Somebody steps out and takes a leadership role. Will it be the people outside the professions who do that? Will it be the people who say we are discontent with the services we are getting from the professionals?

Will it be the people who say the present political structure is not adequate—there is not enough being done? Where will that leadership come from? I see no reason why we could not encourage the present Ministers to step out and provide some of that leadership.

Now people are going to get hurt—let us not kid ourselves—people are going to get hurt. When you have an archaic form like one of the hospital schools, set up originally as a political benefit to the local community to provide jobs, to provide some economic stimulus, and you build it into brick and mortar, and you establish a large dependency on the people around that area to civil service jobs in the institution; when you have that kind of a pattern and you want to change it, it is very hard to change; but you have to make a decision.

Is it important enough to change it so that some people within the structure that was created, within that monster, may get hurt? Or is it better to let the children suffer, or the adults suffer, in an archaic institution?

This is the choice. To take no action does not mean that the choice has not been made. The choice has been made. Whether you act or whether you do not act, you have made a choice. The consequences are real consequences, and I say to you that I think we can find ways—within the government departments—where a great many of these people can be reoriented and retrained and replaced into other services if they are not suitable for those new services that could then be developed in some of these programmes. I know this has been tried, but I think there is a tendency and a reluctance to move as quickly as needs to be moved.

I do not know all of the reasons why the professions have failed to speak out, but I know that some of the ways of government in the province encourages that kind of holding back out of fear. I know there are doctors, psychiatrists, social workers and psychologists who will tell you in private of a great many things that they would like to see differently. But they are afraid to speak out in public because of their livelihood. They are afraid of their career. They are afraid to bring down the wrath of the establishment within the departments on their head.

It even goes so far that they are afraid they may not get research grants, or they may not get education grants, or their organization may be chopped off on a budget. It is this kind of intimidation and fear that has undoubtedly led to a great deal of holding back on the part of the professions. I do not excuse it. They have a responsibility, they should be prepared to take the consequences if they are going to be in the area of work.

This leads me to a discussion of where should children be placed within the government departments. What do we have at the present time? It is not quite as bad as in Indian Affairs, where every department of government has a little chunk of the action and nobody can be held accountable, and nobody can be held responsible, because when the member tries to track down a specific case, it bounces from department to department.

It is almost as bad as that with children. There are still some five departments involved with children—maybe more by now, I do not know, I have not bothered to count them up. But a single child, through no fault of his own, just by being what he is, by having the problems that he has, can be divided up into five parts in this province—into five jurisdictions, five superstructures, five costly administrations and bureaucracies. This, of course, is nonsense.

I know there has been a move afoot for a good many years following the study by the Commission on Youth into services to youth, carried out by the Legislature a few years ago. There has been a move and an effort—I do not know what holds it back, or why it is so slow in coming—to consolidate the services to youth into a single department or to coordinate it into one of the existing departments.

There is no reason why it could not have been done immediately. It was obvious that it was needed. The moment it was obvious it was needed, it could have been done because the government has power. They do not have to worry about somebody in the Opposition blocking it. They would have gotten good support for it.

The only reason that it has not happened is because the government was not prepared to do it, or there exists between these five departments a covetousness so that they cannot permit themselves to give up their jurisdiction. They want to hang on to the little empire they have—regardless of the cost.

In my opinion, the services to emotionally-disturbed children should be taken out of The Department of Health completely and out of welfare completely. They should be essentially services under The Department of Education, because what we are dealing with here is a re-educative process.

The child, through his life experience, has learned a maladjusted pattern of existence. There is a necessity of retrain the child, to re-educate the child. That, in my mind, would, in itself, place the services to emotionally disturbed children under The Department of Education. But for other reasons, even more compelling than that, the services should be under The Department of Education.

The child before coming to school lives relatively free within a given society. He plays with other children from the neighbourhood. He is identified to the adults within his family separately from the other children, and for the first time in his life when he enters the classroom, he joins with a group of peers in a large enough number so that you almost have a laboratory situation.

He is given a common assignment with all the rest of the children there. He is asked to perform in a specified way; and immediately, without any vast clinical service, it is possible to detect the deviant child because he does not perform; he does not act the same as the others. And any first grade teacher, or primary grade teacher, or kindergarten teacher, can immediately tell you—without any special mental health training or diagnostic training—that this is a deviant child.

How do they know it is a deviant child? Because he does not act like the rest of the classroom. So it is not very hard within the school system, if we begin to use it, to have an assessment and finding centre where we could identify these children.

In fact, they are already identified. Only that information has not been collected from the teacher; it has not been co-ordinated and presented in some kind of systematic, scientific fashion to the community. For the teachers know—they already know. It would just be a question of collecting it. The fact that they are able to spot the deviant child means that they can spot the family in the community which has problems and which needs help. It would be possible at that early stage to bring help to the family. The kid is still there, the family is intact.

So we see, for that reason alone, there is good justification for placing services for emotionally-disturbed children under The Department of Education. I know it is a big department. I know the Minister has lots of responsibilities and problems—but if we look at it from the standpoint of what would best benefit the child, that is the department that could best benefit the child.

Then if we take it one step further—in the intervention that goes on in all classrooms between the teacher and the pupil there is a potential for a corrective measure. It is possible, through the teacher's intervention, to change the focus and like patterns of the child, as all you who have been influenced by teachers know.

And so, it would be possible with a very small amount of information given to the teachers at the time of their training, to prepare them and equip them to intervene with the child in a corrective manner. It would not have to be called therapy. It could be the natural, normal, human intervention that occurs daily in the classroom.

Now I know this sounds very simple. It is very simple. It would not cost a great deal of money. It would immediately identify all disturbed children who are above the age of four or five in the province. It would immediately make possible, a designation of whether they were deviant children because of retardation, because of emotional disturbances or because of superior intellect.

That would be very useful for us to know at that age.

We incorporated the programme in Brown-dale under The Department of Education for that reason. In many other jurisdictions, in other countries, services to emotionally disturbed children does come under The Department of Education—

Mr. E. Sargent (Grey-Bruce): Is his time not up in the House? He is over the two hour mark now.

Mr. Brown: I do not go by the hour, only when giving therapy do I go by the hour.

An hon. member: Does the member need some?

Mr. Brown: I do not mind.

So, we would not be breaking new ground in the province of Ontario. We would be following patterns that have already demonstrated their usefulness in other jurisdictions. We know, of course, in the last few years there has been a great—

Mr. Sargent: Same speech the member gave last year.

Mr. Brown: Yes, it is—a great deal of attention paid in the school system to the services to emotionally disturbed children. We are getting classes for them. We are getting increased services to these children in the public schools and I would like to say that some of the work that is being done in the North York school system is particularly outstanding in this direction. They are certainly exploring and probing for better ways to deal with this problem within the school structure than we have had within the medical structure and a great deal could be learned by all people working with disturbed children if they took a look at the kinds of classes and programmes that have been established there; both from very individualized work to using the small group dynamics work.

On the other hand, we have schools in the province that—despite what the Minister of Education says about it and how he denies it—refuse to admit a disturbed child to the classroom. We even have some school jurisdictions where a child who has been disturbed in the past is not allowed in the classroom. In fact, our concept of universal compulsory education is not carried out as far as emotionally disturbed and mentally ill children are concerned. It is for all other classes of children but not for those children. That is something we need to take a look at when the estimates in education come up.

I want to go back, just for a moment to talk about costs. It is important in the evaluation of costs for services that we do not lose sight of the human being. At the same time we must be aware of the high financial burden that it places on society. So we need to analyze where do the costs come from; what are the large components in the cost of treatment, and I think a lot could be learned in all of the programmes in the province if that kind of a study were done.

I would suggest that the people who are most concerned in Family and Social Services, Department of Health, that a study begin to identify the components that make up the cost of care and they could start with their own institutions. What are the components of cost in Thistletown Hospital that add up to $60 a day? What are those components? I think it would be very revealing to all concerned to have that information. It may be that we could immediately see ways that it could be improved. One of the things that we have done in our programme at Warrendale, now in Brown Camps and Browndale, has been to re-organize the administrative structure of services. I think perhaps in the long run this will be the most important contribution that has been made by this particular agency over the years to children's services.

What we have done is to take the high cost professional services out of the inline authority structure and make them into professional resource banks which are available to the people working with the children 24 hours a day, seven days a week. That means when we pay a psychiatrist $22,000 or $25,000 a year he does full time psychiatry. He does not spend half of his time or more doing administrative work that you can hire someone at a much lesser salary to do. These are some of the separate little points that I want to put in before I stop because I have had them on my mind and I have wanted to say them.

I would like to take a moment to talk about the zoning bylaw battle that has been going on in the province since the inception of the Brown Camps programme. I have heard a lot of flak about it from different sources. I have had a certain amount of, I would say, indirect intervention from the Tory party, in various communities and I thought it would be worth the time to talk a little bit about it.

In most of the communities of our province if the child is emotionally disturbed or orphaned or for some other reason does not have his own family with him, he is denied the possibility of living in a residential area by the zoning bylaws of that community. My feeling is that this is not only wrong, it is wasteful, that if anybody in our society needs the benefit of residential living it is precisely these children who are orphaned, who have lost their families, who have an adjustment problem of some kind and we decided that we would test before the courts whether or not it was true that the civil liberties of these children were being denied by the fact that they were not permitted to move into a residential area. We set up our therapeutic families to be as close as possible, similar and like, in all ways that we could make them, the family in nature.

I have given you some of the reasons why we did that. We then, in groups of four children and later five children in a house, moved into zone one areas of residential neighbourhoods. Where the local community was prepared to say we have no objection to this we then went through the procedures of working out with them the necessary changes in the zoning bylaw or the necessary acceptances that would make it possible for these kids to continue there. Where we were charged with a zoning bylaw infraction we felt obligated to carry the cases into the courts, into the appeal courts and I suppose if we have to ultimately to the Supreme Court, to get new laws made that we hope will bring about the end to the practice of excluding the most needy of our children from the benefits of family living in residential areas.

Now, again I would like to say that it is of no particular benefit to me to do that. As much as I admire the city of Scarborough, the county of Peel, La Salle, Ontario, and so forth, and would be pleased to live there, I have no need to live there. I live in Newmarket. I live someplace else. I do not need those houses for myself, but I have a feeling that there are a great many children in the province who do need those houses and the zoning bylaw fight is a fight to see whether or not we can get equal treatment for the disenfranchised children who have no one to speak for them and no one to defend them and no one to look for their rights.

Now I have to say, in all honesty, out of the experiences that I have had with the government in Ontario over the last two years that I do not really know whether it is possible, in the province of Ontario, to get a fair shake from the courts themselves. I do not know whether it is going to be possible for us to establish in law the fact that we can create a single family unit therapeutically organized to provide for the child who does not have a family, what that child would have gotten if its family were living. I do not know that we are going to get that kind of a shake but I think the province of Ontario needs to know—and I need to know for my own personal social conscience—whether or not it is going to be possible for these children to be brought together in therapeutic families within a normal residential area.

At some point the decision will be reached in law and we will certainly not argue with that decision. We may not agree with it; we hope that we will; we hope that it will be in favour of emotionally disturbed children but if it is not, then we will have to find other alternatives. What are the other alternatives for children who are in this circumstance? The other alternatives are that they can live in other zones but not in single-family zones. And of course that is a deprivation to them and it is a deprivation that they should not have to suffer.

Mr. J. W. Snow (Halton East): Mr. Speaker, as I rise to participate in my second contribution to a Throne debate, may I first join the many previous speakers in this debate in congratulating you sir, on the manner in which you have performed your duties as Speaker of this Legislature since your election to this position. The sincerity and the dignity you have displayed in your position and in dealing with routine and sometimes very controversial situations has been an inspiration to us all and I believe especially to those of us who came into this Legislature as new members at the same time as you took over your new office.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Snow: If the hon. member for Lakeshore will just wait a minute I will have something nice to say about him, too.

Mr. P. D. Lawlor (Lakeshore): I will stay around then.

Mr. Snow: May I also compliment your able assistant, the hon. member for Waterloo South (Mr. Reuter) on the performance of his duties as deputy Speaker and as Chairman of the House committee, and on the capable manner in which he has handled the many debates while he has been in the chair. Mr.

Speaker, I would also like to congratulate the hon. member for London South (Mr. White)—there he is, just coming in at the right time—

Mr. B. Newman (Windsor-Walkerville): The grand entry.

Mr. Lawlor: He has a nose for that.

Mr. C. G. Pilkey (Oshawa): He knew it was coming.

Mr. J. E. Stokes (Thunder Bay): He left so he could re-enter.

Mr. Snow: Now that he is in his seat, I will continue—I would like to congratulate him on his appointment to the Cabinet as Minister of the Revenue Department. I am sure we can all look forward to a great performance. I, along with other members of the Legislature spent some three months this past summer as a member of the select committee of the Legislature on taxation under the chairmanship of the hon. member for London South. I can only repeat, as has been said before by others, including the hon. member for Lakeshore, how much I enjoyed my duties on this committee, but more so how much I enjoyed acting on a committee under the chairmanship of such an able man. During our work on this committee, we worked long and tedious hours hearing many delegations and studying over 300 written briefs. If it had not been for the leadership, the drive and the humour brought to this committee by its chairman and chief counsel, I am sure we would not have been able to carry out the work which we did and produce the report in such a short time.

I would also like to say, to all other members of that select committee, how much I enjoyed working with them. I shall always treasure the fellowship and friendships created during that summer of 1968, especially the time that I took the hon. member for Lakeshore and the hon. member for Oshawa for a ride through the air at the same time. At that time I really considered that the odds were with us—if we went down we were going to lose two of them for one of us.

Mr. Lawlor: The member almost did, too.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: They should be hijacked to Cuba, they would be more at home.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Snow: I would like to bring to the attention of the members of the House, a matter I feel is of great importance to our government and to our economy of today. I would like to speak on the position in which our small businesses, our family-size businesses and our family farms, have found themselves in today.

This province—this country—has been built to its present position on the free enterprise system and has been built mainly on a basis of small businesses and family businesses working together and competing together in order to better themselves and to enjoy a higher standard of living for them and for their employees.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I realize that big business has its place as it has contributed much to the development of our country and our economy. The Hudson's Bay Company, the CPR, the Bell Telephone Company, International Nickel, and many more, have made great contributions to our development. Without them this country would not be what it is today.

The real contribution to our economy, though, has been the individual and the family prosperity. The thousands of small businesses with the initiative, the incentive, and the willingness to work hard to build a future for themselves and their families. We as legislators must continue to build this initiative and to leave this incentive for this type of economy to thrive.

I would like to point out, Mr. Speaker, that Canada's largest industry and perhaps the largest contributor to our economy—the construction industry—is but, with a few exceptions, made up of private companies and in many cases, operated today by members of a family whose fore-fathers started the business two or three generations ago.

It is estimated that the construction industry volume for the current year will be approximately $12 billion. If one checks this industry closely, you will find that there are a few large public companies. But I believe if you check further, you will find that over the past years these companies have not been as successful, nor as efficient as the family-owned corporations which include some of the biggest in Canada.

As a matter of fact, recently one of the largest publicly-owned construction companies has been taken over by a private company. I also note that the hon. Paul Hellyer, Minister of the federal government responsible for housing, in his recent report has said that the housing industry needs more, larger and better financed companies in the business in order to meet the demands for new housing.

No doubt, Mr. Speaker, additional financing will be required by construction companies for the carrying out of the larger projects which we can foresee in the future. But I suggest that the healthy and vigorous privately-owned small companies will be able to produce the housing that is so drastically needed more efficiently than the formation of a few large corporations for this purpose could possibly do.

In this respect, Mr. Speaker, I am sorry to say that some of the present taxation policies in this country, and especially those policies pertaining to death duties and succession duties are not only undermining the incentive and the initiative of our people, but are also in many cases making it most difficult, if not impossible, for the family-owned business or a farm to be passed orderly from one generation to another.

A few years ago there was little or no problem for the prosperous and hard-working farmer who had built up a 100 or possibly 200 acre farm complete with a good set of equipment and livestock, to turn this asset over to his son or sons upon his retirement or his death.

Today, Mr. Speaker, the increased value of our farm land, the highly-mechanized nature of the business of farming, and the intensified specialities of livestock raising have brought the value of the farm unit to a level where it is seriously affected and sometimes devastated by the application of death taxes when the owner dies. This problem, Mr. Speaker, is aggravated by the fact that in most cases the farm family will have their total net worth invested in the farming unit.

Under normal circumstances very little cash or other investments are carried by farmers as it is his nature to enlarge and build his operation rather than put money in the bank. Also, it is not normal to find many farmers or even small businessmen taking the necessary steps to carry large amounts of life insurance in order to ease this transition problem.

The select committee on taxation made many recommendations on changes in the taxation of wealth and of death duties, and I know since bringing in our report there have been many changes announced by the federal Minister of Revenue on this same type of federal taxation.

Mr. Speaker, I urge our government to take a close look at the recommendations of our select committee and at the changes being proposed by Ottawa. We must take immediate steps to alleviate this situation, which I have tried to point out in the last few minutes.

We must make provisions which will allow the small businesses to carry on and be passed from father to son. Far too many of our small businesses, and many not so small businesses, are lost to the merger-hungry large companies regardless of whether they are foreign or Canadian-owned. Far too many millions of Canadian dollars are being lost, probably forever, because of our estate and death taxes.

In many cases, a businessman owning his own business, on getting legal and accounting advice, finds the only way to protect his estate is to sell his business to a large company, and take this money out of the country or make arrangements for the payment of large amounts of taxes within Canada and distribute the balance to his heirs.

In doing this, Mr. Speaker, the continuity of this business is lost often creating a hardship on the employees, as a small business is usually a closely-knit group of people sharing in the harvest and the profits of their work and their endeavours. In small businesses, the people that run the business and the employees, are the greatest assets.

It has been said many times, and I will say again, you can take away my money, my customers, my buildings and my land, but leave me my loyal employees and I shall rebuild my business and get back my customers and regain my wealth.

Another matter that I would like to bring to the attention of this House is the very serious problem of high property taxation being brought upon the agriculture industry in the areas close to the metropolitan centres. In my riding of Halton East, during the past year, the assessment department has been reassessing all properties within the county and updating these assessments to one-third of market value.

I believe the same is happening in many other ridings, in some areas going to 100 per cent of market value. This reassessment is, of course, being carried out on all properties, whether they be residential, industrial, commercial or farm. The updating and increasing of these assessments has little or no effect on an area that is basically all urban, but in an area such as Halton county, this is having an adverse effect.

In the county of Halton, or should I say in the town of Oakville in particular, there are still many, many thousands of acres being actively farmed by the farmers who have been on this land for many years—in some cases, many generations. Even with this large acreage of farmland, the farm assessment in the town of Oakville represents a very small percentage of the overall assessment—I believe something like 3 per cent. With the reassessment that is taking place today, farm land assessment is at least doubling—in some cases tripling.

In the rural townships which are highly oriented to agricultural land, of course this same reassessment and increasing of assessment is taking place, but should have little effect on the taxes paid, as the mill rate should have a counteracting reduction. However, in the area where the farm assessment is a small proportion of the overall assessment, a greatly-increased assessed value of the farmland will have a direct relation to the increase of the taxes as the amount of farm assessment is not large enough to be offset by a decrease in the mill rate caused by the higher assessment.

In many cases, Mr. Speaker, in my riding, the taxes on a farm holding which might have been $500 or $600 this past year, will no doubt be $1,200 to $1,500, or even higher in 1969. The increased assessment on these farms, in many cases, has been appealed to the court of revision. But, with few exceptions, the assessors' values have been upheld by the court.

In Halton county the farmers are now applying, I believe, to the county judge for a further review of their assessment. However, I believe there's little hope of any relief in this matter.

This leaves the problem, Mr. Speaker, that the land in the agricultural areas close to developing metropolitan centres has become too expensive or too valuable for agricultural purposes. Consequently, what are we to do with the agricultural land in these areas? Do we create a taxation policy that will allow this land to be kept in food production where it is being farmed by a bona fide farmer, or do we let the high taxes on this land carry on which will no doubt cause the land to be sold for the longhold speculation and the productivity of this land for food purposes be lost perhaps forever?

Mr. Speaker, during our deliberations on the select committee on taxation, the committee studied this matter very carefully and came up with many recommendations, most of which were based on a system of assessment and taxation to allow the bona fide working farm to be maintained in production at least until such time as actual development is ready for that land.

In our recommendations of the committee, we attempted to create suitable definitions of a farm and a working farm, and recommended the creation of county or regional farm classification boards be established for the purpose of resolving disputes arising from the interpretation of the definition of a working farm.

I believe the definition of a working farm, as established by our committee, is a workable one. I have taken every opportunity to discuss the recommendations on farm assessment with farm organizations in my area and with individual farmers who I believe generally agree that, if our recommendations on agricultural assessment and taxation were carried out, this would greatly assist the agricultural industry in keeping many thousands of acres of good prime agricultural land in production.

And, I believe that this is very important—I urge our government to take immediate steps to implement such a plan or such an alternate as their experts may suggest. One only has to drive his automobile along the Queen Elizabeth Highway from Toronto to Niagara Falls to see the thousands of acres of prime agricultural land, whether it be dairy farms, vineyards or peach orchards, that are today lying idle.

In many cases it may be too late to bring some of this land back into production by a change in taxation policy. But if such changes are not made, then this problem will continue to grow as it has in my area and it is now affecting farmlands ten or more miles out from the actual developing area.

Mr. Speaker, while we have made great strides in progress and development in this province over the past 25 years, in those areas so vital to the future of our people, there is one area which I feel has been treated with some degree of neglect.

I contend, Mr. Speaker, that while the government has strived for a better way of life for our people, in any and every way possible, it has fallen somewhat short in the area of developing our sporting needs and capabilities. And I mean all sports—perhaps I should say competitive sports—excluding hunting and fishing which of course have been receiving a great deal of financial support from the province itself.

It is my firm belief, Mr. Speaker, that it is time for us to seriously embark on a study of this situation, a study which would guide us as to specific needs and requirements. It has always been my firm belief that our immediate need in the concentrated part of Ontario is a sports complex that would boast a multi-purpose facilities—facilities to accommodate baseball, football, hockey, basketball, horse and dog races, a vast convention centre, and among other things facilities adequate to cater to Olympics.

You will recall, Mr. Speaker, that only a few months ago—last August to be more specific—the Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) proposed a great government complex at the CNE grounds on the waterfront south of Lakeshore Boulevard and partially on newly-created land.

He further stated that the new complex could be ready for use during the 1971 edition of the CNE, and that it would be the impetus required to inspire other developments along the entire Metro waterfront—developments which are under intensive study by many private and governmental agencies.

The Prime Minister went on to state that this new development would contribute a great deal as for the playing a far greater role in the life of the people of Ontario and Canada. He could visualize the exhibition as having a major role in ensuring the continued unity of the people of Canada.

I cannot agree more with the Prime Minister's views. In my personal opinion, his views present us with a challenge and a possible future unlike we have known in the respect that he is speaking. I question only one thing. And that is that I do not believe the Canadian National Exhibition grounds to be the logical place for such a complex or centre.

On the contrary, I can see such a complex situated some miles from Toronto—

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): Probably west, eh?

Mr. Snow: Just hold it a moment, you will soon find out—where it is readily accessible from a number of centres in that part of southern Ontario which contains a majority of the province's population so as to be capable of supporting the sporting activities that would be taking place.

I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that what Ontario needs is a super sports complex—one that is strategically located so that it is readily accessible and within the reach of a great concentration of people. And we have such a possible site, Mr. Speaker. This ideal situation is available in what I like to call the golden triangle and includes all municipalities of this triangle whose three extreme points are the centres of Hamilton, Kitchener-Waterloo and Metropolitan Toronto. This area is already extremely well serviced by major and secondary arteries. It is joined by the two major arteries—the Macdonald Cartier freeway better known as Highway 401, and the Queen Elizabeth Way—to the east and west. A third major east and west artery, Highway 403, is already partially constructed. Between those two arteries there are many secondary arteries both east and west as well as north and south—Highways

5, 10 and 25 just to mention the three major secondaries.

What is perhaps even more encouraging, Mr. Speaker, is that the present and the projected population figures indicate that this already heavily populated area shall continue to grow rapidly in population.

Comprehensive figures available show that the area I speak of had slightly more than 2.75 million people in 1964. This figure, if updated to 1969, would be increased by nearly half a million to show a population of nearly 3.5 million by the end of this year. By 1980—slightly more than ten years hence—the population of this so-called golden triangle is expected to nearly reach 4.5 million. That, Mr. Speaker, is more than half, by far, what the present population of the entire province is today.

To be specific, Mr. Speaker, the area I speak of includes the following municipalities: The city of Toronto and the boroughs representing Metropolitan Toronto; the city of Hamilton and the surrounding county of Wentworth, on the southwest; the cities of Kitchener, Waterloo on the northwest and all that area lying between these major cities including the Halton and Peel area, the Guelph-Galt-Preston area, and reaching as far north perhaps as the town of Orangeville.

As stated previously, this entire area represents the so-called golden triangle and as its longest point covers a distance of barely more than 80 miles. It would appear logical that the site of the sports complex would fall somewhere at the midpoint. My recommendation for a site is an area in Oakville that is south of Highway 401 and north of the proposed Highway 403 and east of Highway 25.

Not only is this the approximate midpoint between the three major centres that would be concerned and involved, but it is an area that is best serviced by arteries from all municipalities concerned without exception.

This area, Mr. Speaker, is closer in terms of minutes if perhaps not by miles, to most residents of the Metropolitan Toronto area than the proposed CNE Lakeshore site. This site would also be very easily serviced by an expanded GO transit route that will no doubt be extended from downtown Toronto to the Kitchener-Waterloo area. The site is an ideal location for the football stadium that could very easily service both Toronto and Hamilton major league football teams.

Mr. E. W. Martel (Sudbury East): They would both be there?

Mr. Snow: They would both be there.

Mr. R. D. Kennedy (Peel South): Double header.

Mr. Snow: This site would also, I believe, be the ideal location for the much publicized auto raceway that was proposed for the Toronto lakefront area. I would urge the private backers of the Grand Prix Raceway to investigate the possibilities of the location I suggest. I am sure they could get a great deal more support and co-operation for the construction of their facility at this location than they did for the CNE lakeshore site which I am sure if it had proceeded would have created a real hodge-podge not only of the CNE grounds, as they presently exist, but for the major lakeshore traffic arteries.

Even more important in considering this as a possible site is the economic advantage. This land at the present moment is in either a dormant or semi-dormant state to some degree because of heavy taxation, and it is awaiting or held for speculation. At the present time it is not overly expensive as it has not passed through speculative hands too many times as yet. Consequently, it could be purchased at a small percentage of what it would cost to, let us say, provide equal facilities in the Toronto lakeshore area. As a result, greater financial concentration would be available for the construction of the facilities.

In attempting to provide this House with a maximum of information concerning this proposal, Mr. Speaker, I have made efforts to find similar projects elsewhere. Much to my concern, I was not able to discover anything that would be comparable, or even close. The closest thing for comparison is the Houston Astrodome. However, this complex does not have facilities for hockey or for Olympics.

To us in Ontario, these facilities are extremely important. Hockey is our main source of sports entertainment in the winter months. Everyone knows of the sad, sad story about our bid for the Olympics. Both Hamilton and Toronto were badly beaten by Montreal, which itself is badly lacking in facilities and as a result is bidding for the possibility of the 1976 Olympics on a hope and a prayer. This would not happen if we were equipped with the sports complex that I urge this government to study. It is my firm belief, Mr. Speaker, that a committee set up to carry out this study, would not only agree with the proposals I have pointed out in this House today, but would come back with recommendations as to size, accommodation requirements, expected costs, and probably even suggestions for financing.

We all know of the shortcomings of our present sporting facilities—the Maple Leaf Gardens that is inadequate; the make-do suggested auto raceway along the lakeshore that has been virtually condemned by the people of that area; the lack of proper football facilities in this and other centres—and the complete lack of facilities such as racing, Olympic pools and race tracks in most Ontario centres.

It is time that we—this government—stepped into the picture and did something for the people of Ontario about this sporting complex. It is time we put Ontario on the North American sporting map—a place that it rightfully deserves.

One other subject, Mr. Speaker, that I would like to discuss briefly, and that is the method and timing of introduction of regional government for the Halton and Peel area. I was most interested in the statements made by the Prime Minister and by the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs (Mr. McKeough) last December on the government's plan for regional government throughout Ontario. In the Halton and Peel area the restructuring of municipal government has been a matter of prime importance and under serious discussion for the past several years.

A regional government review was carried out and although in general, many principles of this review and recommendations of this review were not acceptable to the areas involved, the Plunkett report did give the municipalities food for thought in coming up with other proposals on their own initiative.

The municipalities within the Halton and Peel area, with perhaps some exceptions, have accepted the need for restructuring municipal government and are prepared to proceed and co-operate to this end. Last fall the county council of the county of Halton unanimously passed a resolution calling for The Department of Municipal Affairs to proceed with a plan for regional government in the Halton county area. Our municipalities and The Department of Municipal Affairs have been working together very closely over the past few months and many meetings between them have been held and have been most fruitful. We hope that in the near future conclusions from recommendations submitted can be brought together into a firm plan for regional government in this area.

Regional government of course, has been brought one major step closer to reality for the area with the presentation by the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs on January 22 of his preliminary proposal for the Halton and Peel area.

I believe that it is most important that a strong regional unit be developed that will be capable of carrying on as a regional unit and withstanding the encroaching pressures from Metropolitan Toronto and Hamilton. The Halton and Peel area is presently blessed with a very compatible blending of urban, semi-urban, rural and recreational areas which I have no doubt, if brought together under an overall plan and under the overall jurisdiction of a regional government—whether it be one-tier or two-tier—can be developed over the years into an integrated, residential, industrial and agricultural community with its own playground and recreation facilities within the boundaries.

Mr. Speaker, in conclusion I wish to observe the fact that it is approximately seven years ago that the Prime Minister was sworn in as Ontario's first citizen. On October 25, 1961, he was elected leader of the Ontario Progressive Conservative Party at that memorable meeting at Varsity Stadium. Some two weeks later, on November 8, 1961, he became Prime Minister of Ontario.

Since he assumed office, Ontario has undergone remarkable changes. Moving from the solid base established by previous Progressive Conservative administrations, the Prime Minister has guided this province through a series of enlightened advances that have made Ontario the flagship province of Canada.

In a mere seven years, he has achieved unique status in this country. He has become the catalyst of Confederation, a Canadian statesman of the first rank and a statesman who in a brief seven years has assured himself an important place in the history of Canada.

He seeks to harmonize provincial needs with those of the whole country. He seeks to harmonize relations between French and English Canada. And, Mr. Speaker, most important of all, he is achieving his high objectives.

The following few lines, I believe, best explain the opportunities of the attitude made available to the people of the province of opportunity by our leader:

I do not choose to be a common man.
It is my right to be uncommon.

I seek opportunity to develop whatever talents God gave me—not security.

I do not wish to be a kept citizen, humbled and dulled by having the state
look after me.

I want to take the calculated risk; to dream and to build; to fail and to succeed.

I refuse to barter incentive for a dole.

I prefer the challenges of life, to the guaranteed existence; the thrill of fulfillment to the stale calm of Utopia.

I will not trade freedom for beneficence, nor my dignity for a handout.

I will never cower before any earthly master, nor bend to any threat.

It is my heritage to stand erect, proud and unafraid; to think, and act myself; enjoy the benefits of my creations; to face the world boldly and say: "This, with the help of God, I have done."

All this is what it means to be a good Canadian.

Mr. Speaker, as a member elected for the first time in 1967, I look forward to the continuing guidance and wisdom of our leader, for many, many years to come.

Mr. T. P. Reid (Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, it gives me great pleasure to rise today and speak in the Throne Debate. Before I get into the serious part of my speech, I would like to point out a few of my thoughts on the role of prayer in this House, a topic that has been under discussion—especially I might say under attack by the member for Sudbury—in this debate. I would like to suggest a change in the rule of the House. I think it is very apparent as most of us sit here in our seats or stand, rather, while you, sir, are reading the prayers at the beginning of the session, that they are somewhat antiquated and quite irrelevant to the working of government in Ontario today.

Now, as a substitute for the prayers before we begin our session, I would suggest most strongly that this House adopt the singing of O Canada and, for those who feel strongly, God Save the Queen. During the hymns that were sung in this Legislature—or down on the steps leading to the Legislature—last Christmas I thought how appropriate it was that in the Legislature of Ontario we should be singing God Save the Queen and O Canada. I suggest that this is much more relevant to this day and age than the somewhat passé prayers that you give us, sir.

I would say—and I think most members in this Legislature are aware—that the students who come into the galleries to watch the proceedings and hopefully learn something of the process of government in Ontario, must surely go away with the feeling and the impression that this chamber is one of fusty old men living in the nineteenth century.

It is obvious by the expression on their faces and their attitude that this is something that certainly does not impress them and has no relevance for them. It may be noted that after the prayers, and when the saying of the Lord's prayer begins, that the students themselves join in the saying of these prayers.

I suggest most respectfully to you, sir, and to the House, that the singing of O Canada and God Save the Queen would bring them a little closer to the reality of government and their part in the province of Ontario and in Canada.

Perhaps you might like—I just throw this out for the suggestion of the House—perhaps we could have a sing-along-with-John hour; the Premier could start off Monday singing God Save the Queen or O Canada by himself and—perhaps this will be a great boon to the tourist trade—then perhaps other members on the government benches subsequently could take their turn in leading the House in the singing of O Canada.

An hon. member: That would be the end of community singing after he started.

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister of Correctional Services): Like: "Please release me; let me go."

Mr. T. R. Reid: Mr. Speaker, today in Ontario we are faced with a very serious problem and I suggest to you, sir, that that problem is a breakdown and a loss of interest in the democratic process. There is really only one party that we can say is responsible for this feeling—the feeling of frustration and disappointment in government today—and that is the Conservative Party in Ontario.

We continually ask ourselves why we have student riots, why we have unions marching on Queen's Park, why people are so dissatisfied. It is simply because they are so far divorced from the decision-making process, and they feel that they have the impression that they cannot help form the decisions that are taken in this chamber, and that affect them. It is this feeling of frustration that gives certainly power to their marches and their opposition.

Now this party—the Conservative Party in Ontario—was the main culprit in this. This party in the time since I have been here has consistently mocked the democratic process in its disregard of the people of Ontario and their representatives in this House and in the Opposition in particular.

Now, let me give you a few examples of what the government opposite has done.

We can think first of all of an obvious one, the imposition of regional school boards. Now we would not argue with the principle that this is bad. We on this side are for it, but it was the undemocratic and arrogant way in which this was imposed that we are against in this party. The Minister of Education (Mr. Davis), from his high mount—and it is getting very crowded up on that high mount—hands down the dictum that we are going to have regional school boards—you have no say in the matter—we here know what is good for you. I suggest again that this is the cause for some disinterest in the democratic process and gives rise to the kind of violence that we have seen. People are not being involved in their government and it is your fault.

Let us take the second expression of why this government is contributing to the breakdown of democracy and interest in government in this province. Let us talk about the regional government scheme of the hon. Minister from Chatham-Kent (Mr. McKeough). We are all aware on this side that there is a power struggle going on in the Tory party to see who will replace "good old John" when he is gone and buried. For a while there we thought it was the Minister of Education who was number one, but it seems that the priorities are shifting and that now the Minister of Municipal Affairs is trying to become number one in the pecking order, and it was quite obvious in this House yesterday that the Premier (Mr. Robarts) in his wisdom, had stepped on all of them across the way who were trying to perhaps hurry his exit from this Chamber.

The petulant—liverish, I believe is the word the member for Downsview (Mr. Singer) used—answer to a question of mine was a direct reflection of his arrogant attitude to the people of Ontario. I stand here as a representative of Rainy River district and the people of that area and of the province of Ontario, and certainly they are entitled to a decent and intelligent answer to a question that I may place in this Chamber on their behalf.

It is the attitude of the Minister of Municipal Affairs to the people of this province that is most disturbing, not only to me but to the people in Ontario. He has gone to the Lakehead with no prior consultation with municipal officials, and said you are going to have regional government. No discussion. I, from Mount Olympus, have handed that down. You know, for a while there I thought that the Minister of Municipal Affairs was—

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): We do not hear you speaking much for Fort William.

Mr. J. Jessiman (Fort William): I will speak for Fort William.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Well you should speak a little louder, we cannot hear you over on this side.

I would say that for a while there, Mr. Speaker, I thought the Minister of Municipal Affairs thought he was Moses handing down the tablets. Now I have changed my opinion, I think he thinks he is God, because without any consultation with those areas involved, he has said you, and you, and you, are going to have regional government whether you like it or not. The attitude of this government to the people and the democracy and the intellect of its people of the province is shocking—

Mr. W. Newman (Ontario South): Is the hon. member talking about the Lakehead?

Mr. T. P. Reid: The people of Ontario are not going to be bribed by the rebate that this government went through, the tremendous machinations and administrative cost, to return to them. Surely this government should have learned from the experience of the Manitoba government, which also at that time was a Conservative government, when they tried to bribe the voters with their own money, I say to you it will not work! The people of Ontario are much wiser than you give them credit for.

It is one of the most basic concepts of this government that the people of Ontario are not intelligent enough to govern themselves and that those opposite in this House are the ones to do it. The electoral process, the democratic process, does not end with the election; it does not give any party or any government carte blanche to go ahead and impose all kinds of legislation without some kind of dialogue between the people that this legislation is being imposed upon.

We do not say on this side that a government should not make and take these decisions, but surely it is not too much to ask those proud people on the other side of this House to deign to talk to the small people back in the ridings, back at the various municipal levels, to give them a chance to at least have their views known and appreciated.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Surely democracy is dialogue and there is no dialogue between this governing party and the people of Ontario.

Mr. Jessiman: Where is the hon. member going this weekend? Is he going to that meeting at the Lakehead?

An hon. member: If the hon. member just listens, he will hear where he is going.

Mr. T. P. Reid: I will get to the hon. member. Now, Mr. Speaker, I am speaking generally of this government's attitude to the people of Ontario. I could mention other things such as the unilateral and dictatorial handing down, by the Minister Education (Mr. Davis), of the fact that the school year is going to be extended without consultation with anyone else. He certainly has been hard pressed to give good reason why that should be.

We do not say that the government should not make these decisions, but I say to the Minister of Correctional Services (Mr. Grossman), surely it is not too much to go and consult the people directly involved and say, "We are planning on doing this, what are your views?" Because when people have that feeling that their views no longer matter, or that their positions and jobs do not matter, then that frustration leads to the kind of violence that we have today in Ontario.

I have been speaking about the general attitude of this government to the people of Ontario. I would like to give you some specific references to northern and northwestern Ontario and to my own riding in particular. I cast your minds back, those of you who were on the tour of northwestern Ontario. It was bruited by this party—the public relations men were in full force—that the members of the government and Opposition were going to make a tour of northwestern Ontario. There are five ridings in northwestern Ontario. We were in northwestern Ontario for almost seven days; in that seven days this government, the Conservative government of Ontario, saw fit to visit my riding for one hour.

Several hon. members: Shame!

Mr. T. P. Reid: Now, my hon. friend who just finished speaking spoke at great length of the virtues of the Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts), or Premier, of Ontario—what a great man, what a national figure he was. I would not deny this. But I feel it is a shame and a blot on his reputation that as the responsible Minister in that government, with overall responsibility, should descend to this kind of politics, of blackmailing an individual riding because it did not return a Tory candidate.

I say that it was a direct insult to the people of Rainy River district that this chamber saw fit under the leadership of the Premier of this province and the Minister of Lands and Forests (Mr. Brunelle) to visit the riding of Rainy River district for only one hour. There are many things of note and of interest to be seen in the riding of Rainy River.

Let me tell you something else this government did that directly cost the taxpayers a great deal of money. They flew 40 or 60 members, I forget which, all the way from Kenora to Fort Frances for a cup of coffee. Now, these airplanes do not run on coffee. If they ran on hot air, as provided by the government opposite, we would not be complaining so much.

But surely this was very poor planning. Why in a seven-day tour of northwestern Ontario did this government see fit to spend only one hour in the riding of Rainy River district? I am willing to have a reply from opposite.

With five ridings, surely the time could have been allocated so that each riding would have been visited by the members of the Legislature. I might add at this time that the Premier did not see fit to give the students in Fort Frances a holiday, and the teachers also.

But I tell you, the political blackmail by this party, the Conservative Party, did not work—it backfired. The people of the north—and you do not understand this, you never have—are very proud, independent people and they are not going to be blackmailed into putting a Tory in my place next time.

I can tell you that one of the leading Conservative supporters, one of those who had hoped to run himself as a Conservative candidate, was so hopping mad, was so disappointed, was so disgusted that he is ready to go to the ridiculous extreme of joining the NDP.

And you can see what a state the man must have been in—he was unbalanced at the time.

An hon. member: He had to be unbalanced to be a Tory anyway.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Does he not know that suicide is illegal?

Mr. T. P. Reid: The mayor of the town of Fort Frances, the president of the chamber of commerce, all have expressed their disappointment in the treatment by this government of Rainy River district. And they are now convinced more than ever—and they were not all Liberals—but they are now convinced more than ever that the only way to get anything done for northern and northwestern Ontario is to return a Liberal government in 1971.

Let me give you, Mr. Speaker, a couple of other incidents of the political blackmail that this party is trying to perpetrate on the riding of Rainy River district and the arrogant attitude that they have, not only to my riding but to the province as a whole.

Since I have been elected, two government offices have left Rainy River district and moved to the riding west of me which happens to be a Tory riding. Perhaps this is just a coincidence.

Let us start with the mining recorder's office; the reason given is that it was a recommendation of the select committee on mining. That committee reported in 1962, I believe, but it seemed very shortly after I was elected the government acted very quickly to move that office out of Rainy River district, a Liberal riding, into a Conservative riding.

But even worse than this, even worse than this is the attitude of The Minister of Mines in this regard. I will say this, he went to Fort Frances to explain why the recording office was being moved, ostensibly anyway.

Mr. Nixon: Too bad he is not here.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: It is all right, I have a lot of lash marks on my back.

Mr. T. P. Reid: But he knew the interest of the people, not only of Fort Frances where the office was located, but of Atikokan and the surrounding district, in keeping the office there, town council and the chamber of commerce. Yet when the final decision came—and I was in almost constant touch with the department—when the decision came I was not informed, the chambers of commerce were not informed, the town councils were not informed, and all had asked to be so.

And yet, out of the blue, this was done without any warning at all after we had asked for some kind of consideration on this matter.

I move on to the moving of the head office of the social and family services to Kenora. And this is a very, very interesting problem. When I first heard the rumour that this was going to be done, I went to the Minister and asked him if there was any truth to the rumour that the head office would be moved or personnel would be moved to Kenora.

His reply: "Well, as far as I know, the office has been rented for a year". I asked to be kept informed of what was going to happen. Then again, out of the blue—not a word to anyone, not to the town council, not to the chamber of commerce, not to the Rainy River district municipal union, all of whom had petitioned the Minister against moving the office—this was done without any warning whatsoever, and no information was passed on.

An interesting point here, although it is just a rumour. But certainly I was not consulted, I was not informed as the member for that riding. I might clear it up for the benefit of the member involved, because it reflects on him. There is an interesting rumour that the member for Kenora, to whence the office was moved, journeyed down to Toronto—perhaps it was a coincidence—with the head of the office of social and family services, to discuss moving the office to Kenora. Perhaps it is not true.

Mr. P. J. Yakabuski (Renfrew South): Guess he is too smart for the hon. member.

Mr. T. P. Reid: I would ask for the member's own benefit that he rise and deny it, because I think it reflects poorly on him if it is true, and if it is not—

Mr. L. Bernier (Kenora): Mr. Speaker, on a point of personal privilege, I certainly did not travel from Kenora with the director of social and family services to discuss any movement of a building to my riding. But I would point out that Kenora is the capital of the northwest and that is where it belongs.

Mr. T. P. Reid: There is a typical myopic reflection of a Tory member, interested in Kenora, not in the northwest or the rest of us from northwestern Ontario. None of us in northwestern Ontario except, apparently with the exception of the present member for Kenora, who has just spoken—and I would say not with the exception of the member for Fort William—want to grow at the expense of another riding. I am sorry to hear the member for Kenora make that statement.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. T. P. Reid: In conclusion on this topic Mr. Speaker, I would say that this government, in their attitude towards my riding and to northern and northwestern Ontario, have done a great disservice. In the northern tour, which I had great hopes for, it was successful in the respect that it gave the members of this Legislature an idea of the distances, of the geography and the isolation that is involved in the people who live in northwestern Ontario.

And I hope that the destructive elements of that tour will be minimized. I think it is unfortunate, and I would not want to see it repeated if we go into other areas, as the Premier has indicated, that we again go to only those areas, those establishments, those industries, those mines that are thriving and successful. Instead, we should go to see some of the problems that exist in those areas and the people who are suffering from those problems.

And I say, and I say most respectfully, Mr. Speaker, that the government did the people of northwestern Ontario a disservice in the way that tour was run.

Now, this government is at fault in two regards, in errors of commission and errors of omission. We, on this side—and I think even those less aberrated people on the left—would give northwestern Ontario and northern Ontario a special status.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Did the hon. member say less aberrated people?

Mr. T. P. Reid: Than the hon. Minister. I do not mean special status in the Quebec sense, but certainly a fuller understanding of northwestern Ontario and the problems that face the people who live there. When handing down government legislation, I think it is necessary to realize, and to keep in mind the conditions that exist in northwestern Ontario, and to treat it at times with some special regard.

The Minister of Lands and Forests, much to my horror, has placed on the people of Ontario, all the people of Ontario, a fishing licence. I recall, I believe, that Kelso Roberts, when he was Minister of Lands and Forests, said that a fishing licence would be imposed only over his dead body.

Mr. Nixon: Well, he is dead as far as the Tories are concerned.

Mr. T. P. Reid: But surely if fish hatcheries and propagation are needed—and they are needed in the north, although we see very little being done in the north on this, the money is necessary—there are areas where this is not so. And if this money is being spent—and I am not trying to be overly parochial—but if the majority of the money collected supposedly from fishing licences is to be spent on the propagation of fish and fish hatcheries in southern Ontario, then surely if nothing is going to be done in the north, the north should have been exempted.

I would ask the Minister once again, as I see he is listening rather attentively, to reconsider the plight of the senior citizens, those on old age pension. I pointed out to you in the estimates last year that the State of New York gives complete exemption to old age pensioners; they get an automatic fishing licence which is good for life after they reach the age of seniority.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: They have no fish in New York state.

Mr. T. P. Reid: I would suggest that the Minister give once again consideration to this. Some people are living on a very meagre pension, and $3.00 for a fishing licence is a hardship for them. Not only that, but it would give them some indication that their contribution to the life of this province is, in some small way at least, appreciated by this government.

Now, in regard again to the special consideration that should be given to northern and north-western Ontario, one of the Minister's bright boys somewhere thought of the idea of back patches for hunting. And he came out with a white back patch—he had obviously never heard of a white tailed deer. But I understand, in any case, that this idea was so that people hunting on farms in southern Ontario could be identified if they destroyed property, or shot a cow or a roving Tory Cabinet Minister, or something like that. But surely this is something that need not apply to northern Ontario, and I would ask the Minister to give this some thought in the edicts that come out of his office.

An hon. member: We have yellow ones in our area.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Again, the government passed legislation dealing with snowmobiles—which is needed, I do not disagree with that—but surely some of the provisions are very restrictive, and they need not apply to the wide open spaces where the air is clean, the water is fresh, of northern and north-western Ontario.

Now this uniqueness of north and north-western Ontario is already recognized even by those members over there by the special programmes, the regional development programmes and so on, that are going on. I would suggest that the various Ministers of the government take this general principle and apply it to the legislation that pertains to their particular department.

Along this line, I would like to point out the total disregard of this ministry and this government for the people of northern and northwestern Ontario, and I would recall to your mind, Mr. Speaker, a question I asked in this Legislature before Christmas in reference to The Department of Agriculture providing some sort of assistance for the farmers who were experiencing difficulty because of the heavy rain in Rainy River districts. The Minister of Agriculture's curt answer to that was no, he would not—crop insurance was available. Then we find out that the Minister really is not aware of how many crop insurance salesmen he has, or if he is even selling crop insurance or whether this programme has been advertised. Then we find out further, Mr. Speaker, on a question from the member for Port Arthur, that there is not even one crop insurance salesman for the area around Port Arthur and Fort William.

An hon. member: Not one?

Mr. T. P. Reid: No, not one. And this is the consideration that this Minister gives to the farmers of north and northwestern Ontario. The consideration is nil, and they, the people of northwestern Ontario, are aware of it and they will remember until the next election.

Mr. Yakabuski: The hon. member needed a Tory escort as he was afraid to face the union that day.

Mr. T. P. Reid: The member has got to be kidding! The Liberal labour man was there but this government refused to act, but I am glad you brought that up because that brings me to some of the errors of omission of this very government. And a lot of these labour problems would not continue in this province if that government was willing and able, and they are neither, to take and do their responsibility.

Let us talk about the recent pulpwood strike—we will not even hark back to that other strike but let us hark back to the recent pulpwood strike—in the Rainy River district and this government's involvement, or non-involvement, in that strike. The situation, very briefly, is this. Boise Cascade Company controls a great deal of timber rights in the Rainy River district to feed their pulp mill at Fort Frances, Ontario. They buy poplar, especially, from independent contractors who have been receiving the same price for their wood for some ten years now. All other prices have gone up, the prices of licences for their trucks have gone up, instituted by this government, and yet the company refused to give the truckers and the cutters an increase in salary.

This government was asked, both by myself, and from the Premier down or from the Premier up, whichever your view happens to be, to step in and do something about this strike. The Minister of Lands and Forests has since been asked if he would provide a scaler at the company mill to see that the men were getting a fair break when they brought their poplar in. And the Minister of Lands and Forests replied that the lands and forests scaler has a different method of scaling and therefore could not do it.

But I submit to the Minister and to the House, through you, Mr. Speaker, that this government—which controls 90 per cent of the Crown timber in Ontario and which is responsible for giving the Boise Cascade Company rights to that land—has the duty and the right to protect the citizens of this province and to see that the small independent contractor gets a fair break on the price and on the scale that he is doing. And if this government is not prepared to stand up for the small man in this regard, if it is willing to side with the company in this, then I say it is more than overdue that this government was on its way out and it is.

During this strike the Minister was asked to act under The Pulpwood Settlers Protection Act to investigate the prices being paid to these independent cutters. The Minister, after deliberation with his colleagues or with his lawyers, said that he did not feel that he could investigate under this Act. I am not a lawyer, thank goodness, but I would say that the Minister did have that authority if he wanted to exercise it and I serve notice on him now that I intend to introduce a bill into this Legislature giving the Minister of Lands and Forests authority to investigate prices of timber that is being sold off Crown land.

But there again we have the fine example of the government's non-intravention pact with big business in this province and I say it is time that the government forgot about big business—they have got their coffers full—and protected the small independent man in this province.

Another error of omission of this present government and I know it is a fact that we, in northwestern Ontario, at the present moment, Mr. Speaker, do not have a government Minister. Maybe this is a blessing in disguise. I think maybe we might be worse off, if that is possible, if we did have a Minister from northwestern Ontario.

But certainly there is no one in the Cabinet at the present time who can speak for northwestern Ontario and bring their good counsel and their influence to bear on the decisions of this Cabinet and this government.

Mr. Nixon: They were expecting to elect the mayor from Fort Frances.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Well, that does not say much for their foresight, I will tell you that.

Now why, why do we not have a Minister from northwestern Ontario? We had one in the Hon. George Wardrobe for many years and now, all of a sudden, we are left without any Cabinet representation. Is it because the present government does not feel that the present members, Tory members, from that area are competent? Certainly, I would not like to pass judgment on that. Or is it just a continuation of their total disregard for northwestern Ontario and the people who live there?

An hon. member: That must be it.

Mr. T. P. Reid: I would think that that is the reason.

Mr. R. F. Ruston (Essex-Kent): Has to be.

Mr. T. P. Reid: So I would suggest most strongly to the Premier and to whoever is number one or number two over there, it looks like The Minister of Correctional Services—

Mr. Nixon: He is number one.

Mr. T. P. Reid: He is number one today. He would be number one in my riding if he would give us that new jail we have been asking for for so long.

Now, I would recommend most strongly for the Premier's consideration that surely one of our members from northwestern Ontario—and they are both good men, although there are better Liberals of course, but they are good men—should be given the consideration of being in the Cabinet.

I would suggest that one of them would be better able to serve this Cabinet, this government and the people of Ontario than perhaps one or both of the Ministers without Portfolio, one of whom seems only to be a living, breathing advertisement for the Wrigley spearmint people.

Another error of omission of this government is something that they could do very simply in regard to the present labour legislation in this province. For the last number of years this party, the Liberal Party has been consistently against the ex parte injunction. We categorically say that legislation should be rescinded, done away with completely, notwithstanding the recommendation of Chief Justice Rand on page 80 of the Rand report.

It should be done away with 100 per cent so as to put both management and labour on an equal basis. As it is now, the legislation certainly favours to an unfair degree the management side. If we are to build a just society in this province and in this country, surely we can start with the very easy, simple things that would give everybody an equal chance, an equal opportunity.

So I would ask, Mr. Speaker, through you, that the government officers give good and deep and deliberate consideration to rescinding the legislation in regard to that ex parte injunction, so as to make it fair for both sides.

There is no reason, no reason at all why this kind of legislation should remain on the statute book of this province—except the government's inertia and disregard for the working people of this province. Along this line, and also on a more positive basis, this government should implement legislation requiring companies who are going to automate their plants within the next few years to give the union—or the workers if there is no union—advance notice of their plans and intentions.

Surely, we have come far enough in our history to realize the security of the worker is paramount, or should be paramount, and that he is not just an automaton working in the plant himself. Surely he is entitled to know what the future of the company will be insofar as the company is able to tell him.

It is often said that the company has a great investment in the plant, and takes the risk. Well, the worker takes a risk too, when he moves or locates in a town where he brings his wife and his family, buys a house and raises his children. Surely his risk, his investment in human values, is even greater than the monetary risk of the company. Surely it should be the legislation of this province that he be given some protection for his investment in this regard. And surely it is not too much to ask that this be written into legislation and, by this government, into The Labour Act.

Now, a word about Medicare, another error of omission of this government. We have seen and heard much in the last few days, in the last few weeks, of this government's stand on Medicare. The Premier has laid the groundwork well; for over a year he has been going around beating his breast, tearing his hair, punching the Treasurer on the shoulder and saying: "Oh, my goodness, what are we going to do? Look at the terrible state we are in due to the federal government."

But I say—and I say it again—the people of Ontario are not fooled by this kind of parlour display by the Premier and the puppet he controls to his right, there.

The fiscal nightmare that we in this province face is certainly due to the irresponsibility of this present government. That government over there, that Conservative government, was well aware of the attitude of the federal government. It knew how much money it was going to receive from the federal government, and still it went along and got itself into deficit after deficit. If this is the planning that they so proudly speak of on that side, it certainly is bad planning of the worst sort.

The Premier got on national television and said to the people: "I speak to the people of Ontario; I speak for the people of Ontario. It is this government, the federal government, that is costing you money." Any intelligent, reasonable person in the audience—and they all are—knows very well that this is not the whole truth. There were 69 federal members elected from Ontario in the last election, on a plank, Mr. Speaker, that certainly included Medicare. As those opposite are quick to point out, this has been a plank of the federal Liberal party since 1919. Yet the Premier has the audacity and that total disregard of the intellect of the people of Ontario to get up and say, "I speak for the people of Ontario," after the people of Ontario have spoken and voted 69 members from Ontario into the federal government, where this decision was made.

What is the present situation therefore? The Premier's refusal to bring Ontario into the federal Medicare plan is costing the people of Ontario some $175 million per year. That is a lot of money. It is a lot of hay; it would fill a pretty big barn.

Yet, why does the Premier refuse to do so when he will be given almost, as a free gift, $175 million to spend as he chooses; because, as he is quick to point out, 92 per cent of the people of Ontario are already in some kind of medical scheme.

Well, perhaps it is as the newspaper article in last weekend's Star Weekly suggested—that the insurance companies located in the London area are pretty heavy contributors to the Tory coffers.

Now I—this is not my suggestion—I would not have a mind that would sort of ferret out these ideas, but the Star pointed out that the London Insurance group is certainly located in the Premier's own riding and that they are known to be heavy contributors to the Tory party, and perhaps the conclusion is only logical and inescapable. The Premier, as far as I know, has yet to deny this. It seems a conundrum that the province should have an Omsip scheme and yet the civil servants of the province of Ontario are not registered in it. One can only sit and wonder why this is going on.

An hon. member: The Minister of Revenue is pretty quiet over there.

Hon. J. H. White (Minister of Revenue): Well the whole London Life executive is Liberal as the hon. member knows.

Mr. T. P. Reid: He is giving the Minister without Portfolio a little exercise.

Mr. Ruston: Did you say they were liberal with their money?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: They are all Liberals.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Mr. Speaker, it is symptomatic of this government's approach to government and to the people of Ontario that the Premier, a nationally-known figure as my friend was quick to point out to us, should stand in front of the television cameras and try and put over this fraud on the people of Ontario. They are not buying it.

So I would ask, Mr. Speaker, through you of course, that the Premier give reconsideration to bringing Ontario into the federal Medicare scheme. It is not going to involve that much administrative detail. It is going to provide the Ontario taxpayer with some $175 million that he is going to have to pay and is not going to receive any benefit from unless this province enters this scheme, and if that is not the biggest fraud that is perpetrated on the people of Ontario, I do not know. For the Premier to refuse what amounts to a gift of $175 million and to sit there and say—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. T. P. Reid: —and to sit there and say that we face a fiscal nightmare while on the other hand turning down $175 million of the taxpayers' money. Mr. Speaker, I am willing to sit down and have perhaps the Minister of Correctional Services, or even the Minister without Portfolio, dazzle us with his expertise on this matter and explain this problem.

Hon. T. L. Wells (Minister without Portfolio): The hon. member would not understand it.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Mr. Speaker, I am willing to yield the floor to the Minister without Portfolio who perhaps can explain how the Prime Minister can turn down $175 million.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Rainy River will confine himself to making a speech himself and not altering the order of the Throne Speech debate.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. For instance, if we receive that $175 million I am sure that the Minister of Correctional Services would head in a bee line to the Rainy River riding and to Fort Frances in particular, and say, here, this is a great gift from the Province of Ontario, a new jail. I am sure he would be more than pleased to do that, and after having received already $650 million from the federal government, plus another $175 million, they, of course, would take all the credit for it.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps with the vision of that new jail in his mind the hon. member might adjourn the debate and we can adjourn the House.

Mr. Nixon: They have not had a gift up there since the Noden Causeway.

Mr. T. P. Reid: No, that is supposed to do us for the rest of our lives. Mr. Speaker I move the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister of Correctional Services): Mr. Speaker, tomorrow we will go to the order paper and continue with the Throne Debate if there is time.

Hon. Mr. Grossman moves the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to.

The House adjourned at 6.00 o'clock, p.m.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

---

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 20, 1969

The House met today at 2.30 o'clock p.m.

Prayers.

Mr. Speaker: Today we have a large number of guests: In the east gallery, from the W. F. Herman Collegiate Institute, Windsor; and in the west gallery, students from University Heights Drive public school, London; from the Adult Education Centre, 21 McGill Street, Toronto; and in both galleries from the Franklin Horner public school, Etobicoke. We also have members of the Lindsay and District Women's Liberal Association; and this afternoon at 3.30 we will be joined by students from Windsor high school of commerce, Windsor.

Petitions.

Presenting reports.

Mr. A. B. R. Lawrence (Carleton East) from the standing private bills committee, presented the committee's fourth report which was read as follows and adopted:

Your committee begs to report the following bill without amendment:

Bill Pr22, An Act respecting the Township of Teck.

Your committee begs to report the following bill with certain amendments:

Bill Pr8, An Act respecting the Town of Lindsay.

Mr. Speaker: Motions.

Introduction of bills.

THE PENSIONS BENEFITS ACT (1965)

Hon. C. S. MacNaughton (Provincial Treasurer) moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend The Pensions Benefits Act (1965).

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Mr. Speaker, the amendment prohibits withdrawal of contributions from a plan except voluntary addition of contributions or upon termination of employment or of the plan.

Mr. Speaker: Introduction of bills.

THE POLICE ACT

Mr. M. Shulman (High Park) moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend The Police Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Speaker, this bill prohibits police officers tapping the telephone of any person except upon the authorization of a judge of the supreme court.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. Treasurer has a statement.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to announce that the government of Ontario will undertake a comprehensive management analysis project to gear its administration and operations toward the challenge of public service for the 1970s. The project, which will encompass all aspects of government administration will be undertaken with the assistance of the most qualified management experts we can secure in the business and consulting community of the province.

I have requested this project to ensure that the government's intensive efforts to develop new organizational and procedural concepts will be compatible with future needs in the field of public service in Ontario, to make certain that we are taking full advantage of the new developments in management science and technology, and to provide a thorough appraisal of our existing operations. The principal objective will be to ensure that the government continues to manage its affairs with intelligence, efficiency and concern for the needs of our citizens.

The members of the Legislature, Mr. Speaker, will appreciate that the good health of any active body requires that it undergo periodic checkups to determine whether it is functioning as effectively and efficiently as it might. The government of Ontario is no different. We believe that conscientious management must welcome and encourage checkups of this kind.

During the 1960s this Legislature has approved an increasingly broader range of public services, greatly expanding its contribution in such areas as health, education and welfare. This government and its departments have striven constantly to improve these programmes. We believe that our public services are being provided more efficiently than ever before.

Our leadership in developing the planning-programming-budgeting system of public administration in Canada is indicative of our desire to employ the most sophisticated management devices. Yet we believe that there is always room for improvement.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. M. MacNaughton: These interruptions are easy to understand sometimes, Mr. Speaker, very easy to understand.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order, order!

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Maybe I could suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that if these people evidence the interest they appear to do, maybe they would like to listen—

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: I will continue, if I may, Mr. Speaker. The productivity improvement project will consider all aspects of provincial administration.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Special attention will be paid to the overall organization structure, personnel and financial management; the relationship between central and operating agencies; paperwork and systems, and the uses of automatic data processing. The project will consider every possible means of improving the effectiveness of government operations.

It will be expected to determine whether any economies can be achieved through the elimination of duplicated or overlapping services, and of unnecessary or uneconomic operations; consider whether performance can be strengthened by the reallocation or regrouping of organizational units or through improved management of departments and agencies; analyze the effectiveness of the government decision-making process itself.

As part of its research, the project will consider the results of past recommendations for improved performance. Over the years, Royal commissions, legislative committees and internal agencies have made recommendations for administrative improvements and many of these proposals have been implemented. The review will consider how these changes have met the test of practice.

Our productivity improvement project will be directed by a senior steering committee composed of a combination of outstanding leaders from the private sector of the Ontario economy and senior public servants. I believe this co-ordination of internal and external expertise offers significant advantages over a Royal commission or a completely independent review.

Perhaps the most important benefit is that management improvements can proceed during the course of the study as findings indicate that changes should be made. A Royal commission, on the other hand, would tend to suspend all administrative innovations until its review was completed.

Because of this desire for on-going improvements, we feel that our senior public servants should be involved in the preparation and analysis of recommendations to facilitate their early adoption and implementation. The experience and knowledge of dedicated public servants will play a vital role in expediting the study and in developing the climate necessary to undertake constructive change.

I believe the "mixed" composition of the senior steering committee will ensure that the project will benefit from the best of creative business management and sound public administration.

Under the productivity improvement project, individual research programmes will be conducted in an a minimum of five basic areas: machinery of government and organization structure, personnel management, financial management, paperwork and systems, and automatic data processing. A number of additional specific projects may develop from these fundamental studies.

Directors of the individual projects will be selected from management consulting firms and private industry. They will be chosen by the senior steering committee in a manner that will secure the best talent available.

The entire project, which will be conducted in several phases, is expected to require 18 months to two years to complete. As I have indicated, however, improvements will be implemented during the course of the studies.

I am convinced, Mr. Speaker, that this comprehensive approach to management analysis will assist us in developing the depth of expertise and soundness of organization which is required to meet the complexities of public service in the future. I believe it will provide us with the guidelines to develop the flexibility and skill necessary to cope with the challenges we see for the 1970s and beyond.

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, if I might ask the Treasurer, by way of clarification. What would the status of this group be? Will it be a Treasurer's committee? He has said it will not be a Royal commission which he believes would suspend any change. I want to know if a Minister's committee would, in fact, have the objectivity to accomplish what the Minister sets out to do.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Mr. Speaker, the Minister is convinced that this format to undertake the work that I have described will be totally objective in character. I have indicated, if the hon. leader of the Opposition was listening, that we are going to mix the private sector of our business community with the public administrative side. Those who are taken into the machinery that will be established for this will become actually, if you like, Treasury Board officers.

They will be under the direction of the steering group which will be independent in its character, but the whole framework will branch out then, as I have mentioned, with the use of management consultants where various types of expertise can be drawn into this type of review.

I cannot see, Mr. Speaker, that it will be anything but totally objective in character, and that, of course, is the way the government wants it.

Mr. Nixon: Well, I hope so, Mr. Speaker, but the Treasurer has not been able to clarify my question. What will the status be? Are you going to use a new term—task force—or is it going to be a Minister's committee?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: We call it the productivity improvement project, and I have outlined to you the organizational plan that is established to do it. It is similar in many respects to a recent operation of this kind in Manitoba, except we have had the opportunity to examine the manner in which the complete study in which the operations of the Manitoba government was undertaken and initiate some improvements.

So, I would not know what you would like to call it. Certainly there are disadvantages as I pointed out to a Royal commission because it takes too long before you get the information you require.

Mr. E. Sargent (Grey-Bruce): Call it the MacNaughton improvement project.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Maybe we should appoint the hon. member from Grey North—

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Then I suggest to you it would be something less than objective and we would have confusion supreme. I do not know, Mr. Speaker, how I can explain it in any better terms than I have to the leader of the Opposition; but its purpose is entirely total objectivity.

Mr. Nixon: My only point, Mr. Speaker, is this—you are going to have to pay these people. Normally they come under some sort of vote in the estimates that refers to a Royal commission, which you are not having; or a Minister's committee. You really have not been able to give them any status that I can recognize. You have indicated that it is going to take 18 months in order to accomplish this and we presume, on this side, that you are going to start immediately. Will we be aware of the appointments that you make? Will they be made public? How about their findings from time to time? Will the Legislature be advised of their findings and their recommendations to the government?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Mr. Speaker, if you wish to permit this exchange to go on, I am quite happy to explain it to that extent.

You will recall from my remarks that we said it would lend itself to periodic implementation of their recommendations. Certainly—

Mr. Nixon: But we are—

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Maybe, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member would let me finish.

Of course, as reports can be made available to this House on a continuing basis they will be made made available. I can assure you that funds will be voted either in The Department of Treasury or Treasury Board for the estimated cost of this operation for the ensuing 12 months.

It is our intention to get underway with this work immediately and the names of those who make up the steering committee will be announced in due course.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. Minister of Trade and Development has an announcement or statement.

Hon. S. J. Randall (Minister of Trade and Development): Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to see so many members in the House this afternoon—and our visitors—because it gives me the opportunity to introduce to the hon. members and this House the 27 young men and women who have been chosen out of 2,500 applicants across Ontario to man our booth at Osaka, Japan, Expo 1970.

These young people speak 10 different languages; 18 are very very proficient in French. They will be taking instruction from our department between now and 1970. They will also take instruction in Japanese which, you know, is a very difficult language. I am sure Ontario and Canada will be very proud of them when they take up their responsibilities. With you, Mr. Speaker, I hope the members will welcome them here this afternoon.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. the Provincial Secretary has a statement.

Hon. R. S. Welch (Provincial Secretary): The chief commissioner of the liquor control board, Mr. G. Harry Sheppard, announced today that the first LCBO "self-service" retail sales outlet in its history will open its doors on Monday, Feb. 24 next. Located at 40 South Station Street in the riding of the member for York South (Mr. MacDonald), this very attractive store is the first of three such outlets planned for the Metro Toronto area.

Others are planned to be opened at Yonge and Lawrence in North Toronto and at Queensway, just west of Islington in West Toronto. These are pilot projects and should they prove successful, consideration will be given to establishing similar operations in other parts of the province.

This is yet another step in the constant efforts of The Liquor Control Board of Ontario to provide the highest possible level of customer satisfaction through the use of modern marketing techniques. In support of that statement may I point out the significant evolution from the earlier type of "in" and "out" stores with the high, painted green windows, wire cages, personal liquor permits, and so on, to the bright, attractive outlets of today.

In the modern LCBO outlet, more customers can be served in less time than at any point in the past.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, I do not get the impression that members are taking this very seriously at all. I do not get a chance to make statements very often.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order! Order!

Hon. Mr. Welch: If I might go on. We are having our dry run in this new store tomorrow. A further step in the streamlining of purchasing methods has also been announced by the chief commissioner and involves the use of purchase order slips in LCBO, Brewers' Retail and winery retail outlets.

Mr. Sargent: Do you give out stamps?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Purple stamps in the winery section. For many years it has been necessary for customers to sign these slips as well as having to write in their address. Effective Monday, Feb. 24 next, it will no longer be necessary for the customer to sign the purchase order slip or write in an address.

In fact, in the self-service stores and in all Ontario winery retail stores there will be no need for these slips at all.

In other outlets, in order to ensure speedy and efficient service, customers will be provided with a revised form on which they will simply indicate their brand preferences. Customer convenience will, of course, always be the objective in the development of such procedures.

Mr. M. Makarchuk (Brantford): Mr. Speaker, as the Minister is modernizing the procedure in the stores, is he going to modernize the hiring system as well?

Mr. Speaker: Order! The hon. member's question is out of order. The hon. leader of the Opposition has the floor.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Premier.

Have any definite proposals regarding provincial assistance in the redevelopment of the Canadian National Exhibition been made available to the board of directors? Is the province going to take any further initiative in this matter in time to affect the 1969 exhibition?

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): The answer to the first question is no. The second question—it is under study.

Mr. Nixon: A question to the Minister of Agriculture and Food.

Can the Minister explain to the House his system of consultation with farmers and farm organizations in the development of a bill leading to a referendum on one farm organization?

Will a draft bill be made available before the introduction of legislation promised by the Minister?

Hon. W. A. Stewart (Minister of Agriculture and Food): Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member will have to wait until we see what government policy will be.

Yesterday, he was criticizing us for having a story leaked to the press somehow—and I do not know how—for getting it out in public. Now he says let us get it out in public today. The two are not quite consistent, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, since the Minister is in such an amiable mood, will he permit a supplementary question? Perhaps he can square his comments with his statement to the farmers that he was prepared to undertake full consultation.

What I want to know is what does he understand by full consultation and what are the mechanics whereby he is going to fulfil that promise?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Mr. Speaker, I gave no such undertaking to any group of farmers yesterday at any time and I want that clearly understood.

Mr. Nixon: I did not say yesterday.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Or any other time.

Mr. Nixon: We saw the Minister on television.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: No, sir, I did not. I said that we would undertake to bring to the attention of the government the need and the desire of the conference at the Seaway for some type of legislation to be drafted so that the farmers of Ontario could make a decision as to whether they wanted one farm organization or not. But I gave no undertaking as to what would be in that legislation or with whom I would discuss it.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for York South has the floor.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Mr. Speaker, I have a number of questions that are held over from earlier days. Perhaps I can deal with those first. To the Provincial Treasurer:

1. What are the net proceeds of the $64 million loan floated by the government of Ontario in Germany?

2. If there are commissions and other charges, what is the effective interest rate through to maturity on the net proceeds?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Mr. Speaker, the answer to part one of the hon. member's question is that the final proceeds of the recent German loan will be $62,492,181, subject to possible minor modifications depending on our final foreign exchange conversion.

The answer to the second part—the effective rate of interest is 6.67 in the case of the private placement of 90 million Deutsch marks, and 6.98 in the case of the 150 Deutsch marks public issue.

Mr. MacDonald: I have two questions, Mr. Speaker, to the Minister of Trade and Development.

Pursuant to the Minister's reply to the hon. member for Oshawa on February 10, can the Minister inform the House what his industrial officers have reported might be done to assist the company and its employees following Kelvinator's announcement of a proposed shutdown of its London plant?

Hon. Mr. Randall: In answer to the question by the member for York South, may I point that it is obvious to our trade and industry officers that the company in question is not interested in continuing its present Kelvinator operation, inasmuch as they purchased the large new modern facilities of the Franklin Corporation in Galt, along with the Guelph Stove Company, formerly owned by the T. Eaton Company. They had also acquired the Hupp Company in Quebec which also manufactured a line of refrigerators and stove equipment.

In view of these acquisitions, and the fact that the Kelvinator facilities in London are obsolete, it is the intention of the company to rationalize production by producing both the Kelvinator and Leonard brand appliances from other sources, including its own.

It should be noted that the date of shutdown was not announced, but we understand it will be several months before production ceases. Therefore, there will be a gradual lay-off of 370 workers, some of whom already secured jobs with another appliance manufacturer in London. We also understand that it is anticipated that the 70 persons employed as office staff will be retained under the new distribution set-up.

The Canada Manpower Centre in London will register workers who complete unemployment insurance forms, and in discussing the possibilities of employment with the Ford Motor Company at Talbotville, they will go from the present 1,580 employees to 2,700 employees starting in May, and this plant will go on a two-shift basis.

Under the circumstances, while we recognize industry must rationalize its facilities to remain competitive under rapidly changing conditions, it is obvious that any inconvenience to the employees is of a temporary nature and many of them will find the same line of employment, in most instances at a higher rate of pay.

Mr. MacDonald: My second question to the Minister is: Does the rent freeze in Ontario Housing Corporation, geared to income rental accommodation, apply to tenants who have moved into such accommodation since May of 1968?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Yes, the rent freeze in Ontario Housing Corporation geared to income rental accommodation does apply also to those tenants who have moved in after May 1, 1968.

In such cases the rent is calculated initially in accordance with the income of the family at the date the tenancy is established. Thereafter the rent is fixed, unless the income decreases. If earnings reduce, a corresponding reduction in the rental rate is put into effect. In other words, the rent does not go up but it can go down.

Mr. MacDonald: Question of the Minister of Lands and Forests: 1. Is the government still planning expropriation of properties on the Lake Erie shoreline for public park purposes? 2. If so, is the Minister in a position to indicate both the size and location of such properties?

Hon. R. Brunelle (Minister of Lands and Forests): Mr. Speaker, in reply to the hon. member, yes, an area was expropriated in Bertie township and the size of the property is about 216 acres.

Mr. MacDonald: A question of the Minister of Municipal Affairs: On receiving complaints from tenants regarding nonpayment of tax rebates by landlords, how long does it take the department to mail out complaint forms to be completed by tenants?

Is this procedure followed with every complaint received?

Has the department determined yet what action it will take in dealing with the 49 tax rebate complaints against one landlord which were forwarded by my office on January 23, 1969?

Hon. W. D. McKeough (Minister of Municipal Affairs): In reply to the hon. member, Mr. Speaker, the answer to the first part is, within 24 hours. During January, it may have taken up to two weeks, but they go out very quickly now.

My answer to the second part, no, this procedure is not followed with every complaint received. Only if it looks as though it is a legitimate complaint do we send out a complaint form.

With regard to the third part of the question; we understand that that particular landlord was out of the country, but I understand he is back now, and we have arranged to meet with him on Monday to investigate the complaints with him.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Windsor West has a question of the Provincial Treasurer, transferred from the Attorney General.

Mr. H. Peacock (Windsor West): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I initially directed the question to the Attorney General because I was under the impression that the limitations to which I was referring were found in The Trustees Act. However, I will place it to the Provincial Treasurer.

Mr. Speaker: The office of the Attorney General advised Mr. Speaker's office that it should be asked of the Provincial Treasurer.

Mr. Peacock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In view of the statement by J. R. Kimber, president of the Toronto Stock Exchange, that private pension plans should look beyond one class of investment in order to maximize returns, is the Minister prepared to amend the legislation to remove any barriers which may discourage them from investing in housing mortgages or Canadian equity stocks?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Mr. Speaker, the answer in specific terms would be "no" to the matter of the amending of legislation. I say that in the sense that we would not propose any amended legislation until we have continued study of this matter, which is presently under investigation. It is not, I might say, just by way of addition, just as easy as it sounds to "amend the legislation". But the matter is under study. This is not the first time that the proposition has been directed to us. We are aware of the statement of Mr. Kimber, but it has been made by others and consequently the matter is being reviewed.

Mr. Peacock: Would the Provincial Treasurer say by way of a supplementary question if he will be tabling the report or the result of the investigation which he says is now under way?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Mr. Speaker, I rather doubt that. It is being undertaken as a departmental review. The report will be made available to myself in due course. Decisions as to what transpired from that point on will, I think, be made in the light of the information that is made available to me.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for High Park has a question of the Minister of Transport.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Speaker, did the Minister investigate the matter of a certain individual receiving special treatment after his driving licence had been discovered to have expired for over a year, as the Minister promised the House on June 3, 1968? If so, what was the result of that investigation?

Hon. I. Haskett (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, on June 3, last the member for High Park falsely represented to the House that preferred treatment was accorded a certain driver whose licence had expired for more than a year. This was not so. This driver's former licence issued in 1964 under the new system had an expiry date of August 16, 1965.

This licence was not renewed until July 15, 1966—11 months after the expiry date but within the one year period for renewal without having to take a driver's examination. The driver in question subsequently used his renewal application to notify the department of an error in spelling of the street name, and a corrected licence was subsequently issued on September 5, 1966. September 5, 1966, is the date of issue shown on the corrected licence held by the driver.

Since this date is more than one year after the previous expiry date, it may have enabled the hon. member to jump to the erroneous assumption that a driver's test should have been taken. However, the licence had been renewed in July, 1966, not September, and a test was not required under the regulations. The corrected licence was mailed to the driver.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Welland South has a question of the Minister of Energy and Resources Management.

Mr. R. Haggerty (Welland South): Is the Ontario Water Resources Commission presently investigating chemical waste being dumped into the Welland River from the Welland plant of the Cyanamid Company of Canada at Niagara Falls?

Are sufficient safety precautions being taken at the plant to check the flow of waste into the river during the period of the present strike?

Hon. J. R. Simonett (Minister of Energy and Resources Management): Mr. Speaker, I will take the hon. member's question as notice.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Sudbury East has a question of this Minister.

Mr. E. W. Martel (Sudbury East): When Ontario Hydro purchases power at peak rates from the United States, what is the cost per megawatt? How much of the power purchased from the United States in November was at peak rates?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Mr. Speaker, I will take this question as notice.

Mr. Martel: A question of the same Minister:

1. Was the lock-out of union members at Lakeview last week responsible for the purchase of power?

2. If so, is Hydro management responsible for the crisis created and are they trying to use any resulting power losses to discredit the union?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Mr. Speaker, I will take that question as notice.

Mr. Martel: I am really doing well with this, Mr. Speaker. A question of the Minister of Energy and Resources Management.

In view of the Minister's reply to the House regarding the cyanide spillage that, "the spill of cyanide was at the tailings area serving the Levesque mill of INCO and not directly to Moose Creek", how does the Minister explain the fact that men who cleaned the area of cyanide are willing to give evidence and have, in fact, given evidence that they were instructed to flush out the area through a sump and that the cyanide was flushed directly into Moose Creek?

What action does the OWRC intend to take against INCO, because the company did not advise them immediately that the spillage occurred, so that tests could be taken to ensure the water was safe, or warn the people if it was dangerous?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Mr. Speaker, I will take that question as notice.

Mr. Martel: Boy, he is batting a thousand today. I have a question of the Minister of Mines.

Mr. Speaker: Order! The hon. member, when we come to the Minister of Mines, will in due course place that question. The member for Hamilton Centre has a question of the Minister of Trade and Development.

Mr. N. Davison (Hamilton Centre): What was the unit cost of building the 91 geared-to-income rental houses on the old Canadian Cotton Mill site in Hamilton, on James Street North between Ferry and Strachan Streets; and what was the unit cost of similar houses built on James Street North between Picton and Macaulay Streets?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Mr. Speaker, in answer to the hon. member, the final costs have not yet been determined. The average cost at this time for the 91 unit family housing project, commenced in 1968, on the former cotton mill site is $16,200 including land, building fees and interest charges. The average cost of the houses on James Street North, commenced in 1967, are $15,860. I say these are average because we have not got the completed figures, but I can get them for you at a later date.

Mr. Davison: A supplementary question. Could you tell me the reason for the different costs in the units of the two projects?

Hon. Mr. Randall: I could not without checking into it. Maybe land costs; maybe the size of the projects. It could be a number of things. I will check into it.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Grey-Bruce has a question of this Minister, and I would call to his attention once again that the department is Trade and Development and not Economics and Development.

Mr. Sargent: What does it matter? This question asks, Mr. Speaker: Is the Minister aware that in Akron, Ohio, the housing authority there is erecting 1,500 public housing units worth $16,000 a unit which rent for $51 a month?

Will the Minister advise why such an instant public housing programme of this nature of low cost, cannot be put into force here in Ontario and, further, what steps is the Minister's department taking to provide a framework of legislation for trailer parks in the province of Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Mr. Speaker, regarding the information that the hon. member is looking for, he got out of a newspaper report and I do not know what the facts are so I cannot speak for what they are doing in Ohio. I would be glad to have further information on it.

As I have just read to the hon. member for Hamilton East, the costs of our projects in Hamilton are averaging $16,200 with land and all other fees, and our average cost of public housing up to the end of last year has been $15,000 or less, which includes all land costs. On the geared-to-income basis, we have some people living in our projects as low as $32 a month.

So I think, on average, we are meeting those kind of conditions. But if there is any further information available on what they are doing in Ohio I certainly would be glad to have it because we will follow it through.

On the second question, as I said, we are always looking for new ways, in fact, we will be meeting the federal Minister of housing this Saturday to discuss some of the things in his report. If there are any new methods or new ways in which we can produce cheaper housing certainly we are quite interested in looking at it.

Insofar as the framework of legislation for trailer parks, I really believe it comes under the Minister of Municipal Affairs. We have had discussions with people in Ontario who are building home trailers. There was a restriction in one of our Acts which the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs removed in order to help these people get home trailers sold.

I do not believe Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation at the moment have passed any legislation to permit them to take a mortgage on this type of accommodation, but, again, as you know, it is mentioned in the task force report, and I presume it will be one of the things we will discuss this coming Saturday.

Mr. Sargent: Could the Minister advise, Mr. Speaker, how many units in low cost housing at the $30 a month cost are in effect here in Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Ranall: I could not tell you that. We have something like 21,000 units of public housing, that people are living in now, and with what we have under development and what we are building we will be close to 40,000 before we are finished with it. They average at all prices, I would say from $32 on up.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Perth has a question of this Minister.

Mr. H. Edighoffer (Perth): Mr. Speaker, is the Minister aware that 160 people will be unemployed in Stratford in April due to the closing of Cluett Peabody and Co.? Is the Minister prepared to take immediate action to provide employment for these people through the Ontario Development Programme?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Mr. Speaker, I have a very lengthy explanation here which I will not give because I know the hon. members do not like to hear a long speech from me. But let me say this. The situation at Cluett Peabody and Co., is brought about, of course, by the import of synthetic textiles on which there is no quota. I understand that the federal authorities in Ottawa are now looking at it, and will probably place a quota on synthetics.

They have a quota on cottons, and I can appreciate their problem because many of the countries we do business with have a difficult job selling Canada anything. Textiles are one thing they can make, and make well. So this has caused some problems with Cluett Peabody.

But I understand, in talking to the management, that half of those people will go to the new plant in Hamilton and Kitchener and already Stratford manufacturers have agreed to take the rest of the employees if they will make application for jobs. I do not think there is any hardship going to be created here by this close down.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Windsor West.

Mr. Peacock: I have a question from yesterday, Mr. Speaker, for the Minister of Trade and Development. Why did Ontario Housing Corporation decide to determine the need for family housing in Windsor by means of a survey of applications on file as of December 2, 1968, rather than conduct a full socio-economic survey, which the Minister of May 9, 1968, said was the normal practice of the Ontario Housing Corporation? And of the 640 families who did not reply to the mailed questionnaire and whose names have been removed from the mailing list, how many has the local housing authority actually verified to be no longer in need?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Well, Mr. Speaker, as I indicated to the member on May 9, 1968, I explained to him at that time that applications on file with local housing authorities were used as one of the OHC survey techniques. This is usually done where the authority has a substantial number of investigated applications on file, which, when verified by OHC's research staff may provide the necessary demand for an immediate additional programme.

In both June, 1966, and October, 1967, full socio-economic surveys of the Windsor housing market were prepared by the city of Windsor. In January, 1968, a survey of senior citizens' demands was carried out and again, in January, 1969, a report on family housing applications was completed. All surveys requested by the city of Windsor have now been met by OHC.

Of the 640 applicants who did not reply to the mailed questionnaire, 167 could not be reached by the post office, a further 17 requested the corporation to cancel their applications, and 456 chose, for one reason, or another, not to return the questionnaire.

The Windsor Housing Authority is currently verifying, on a sample basis, the need of this latter group. Of those contacted to date, about 80 per cent apparently no longer require Ontario housing, or do not wish to pursue their applications for Ontario housing.

Mr. Peacock: I wonder, by way of a supplementary, Mr. Speaker, if the Minister would not agree that his department, or rather that the Ontario Housing Corporation, should no longer accept requests from local municipalities to conduct an accurate measure of housing need on the basis of going through applications that the local authority happens to have on file at a particular point, because this is no way to measure any extent of demand.

Hon. Mr. Randall: I think, Mr. Speaker, we can review that. I think our methods have been rather successful to date, but we are quite prepared to change.

Mr. Peacock: Way behind!

Hon. Mr. Randall: Oh, I do not think so. I think we do a pretty good job.

Mr. Peacock: I have another question of the Minister, Mr. Speaker. In view of the report in today's Globe and Mail that national Housing Act loans are extremely scarce, is the Minister prepared to make mortgage money available for low cost homes in order to back up his assertion at the OHC housing conference that "government cannot permit a situation to continue where the development for sale to moderate income families is prejudiced through lack of funds"?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Mr. Speaker, we would have no HOME programme today if the Minister, along with the hon. Treasurer, and not gone to the financial institutions and got them to put money into NHA mortgages. We were back to the financial institutions twice in 1968.

At the present time, to my knowledge, under the HOME programme at least we are not being turned down by the finance institutions. In fact, our project the other day—the condominium project—was all through a local bank, the Royal Bank of Canada, which indicates that the money is still forthcoming. I have every belief that this programme for NHA mortgages will continue.

I think also that the builders who are building under NHA that are not in the HOME programme have been able to get funds out of the same sources. This again is one of the things we will be discussing with the Minister of Housing this coming Saturday because I think other things have to be done to make sure that money is available for all types of housing, not just that under HOME.

I would like to see it made available for other builders who do not come into the HOME programme. And I think we are providing the funds.

Mr. Speaker: There are some questions of the Prime Minister which I think we should now have asked. The hon. member for Port Arthur has one from the other day?

Mr. R. H. Knight (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Premier of Ontario:

How many members of the tourist guide staff in the Queen's Park complex speak French? How many security guards and Ontario Provincial Police officers who are regularly on duty at Queen's Park speak French?

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, there are ten girls on duty here and in the complex, and of these, three speak French.

There are 26 security guards on the public works staff working in the main building, the Frost building and the Whitney block. Of these 26 people, two are bilingual. There are five provincial policemen on duty around the building here and one of these is bilingual.

Mr. Knight: Would the hon. Premier permit a supplementary question? I am wondering, Mr. Speaker, whether these persons who are bilingual are of French-Canadian origin or English-Canadian origin, and whether their bilingualism qualifies them for higher salaries?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: I would have to take that as notice.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Wentworth.

Mr. I. Deans (Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, a question of the Prime Minister.

What percentage cost for elementary and secondary school education is presently borne by the province?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, that question will take a little research so I will ask that it go to the order paper.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Sarnia.

Mr. J. E. Bullbrook (Sarnia): Would the Premier assure the people of the city of Sarnia that the Cabinet of Ontario has not already made a decision relative to the designation of the Sarnia area under The Ontario Water Resources Commission Act?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Yes, I think I could so assure the people of Sarnia. There was a meeting. Two members of the Ontario Water Resources Commission went to Sarnia and held a meeting, I believe on Feb. 1; it was a public meeting, but the results of that meeting have not yet been fully evaluated. No decision has been made and the matter has not come to the government.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Sarnia has a question of the Attorney General?

Mr. Bullbrook: Yes, to the Attorney General:

Is the Ontario police commission undertaking an investigation of the police force in Brantford? Is there any special reason for the investigation?

Hon. A. A. Wishart (Attorney General): Mr. Speaker, the answer to the first part of the question is yes. On the second question, I am advised by my officials that the board of police commissioners received a complaint. They have called upon the Ontario police commission to investigate the matter as they feel the commission would take a more objective view than the local board of police commissioners.

Mr. Bullbrook: Mr. Speaker, do you wish me to direct my question to the Minister of Municipal Affairs?

Mr. Speaker: Today we are going down the roster by seniority. A little later we will come to that.

Mr. Bullbrook: It does not seem very senior to me.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Humber has a question of this Minister.

Mr. G. Ben (Humber): A question of whom?

Mr. Speaker: The Attorney General. The question is to the Attorney General from George Ben, MPP, Humber. "Under what circumstances", etc.

Mr. Ben: Oh, I am sorry. I had one to the Minister of Health also.

Under what circumstances may a fertilized ovum be disposed of without record? Is the disposal of a fertilized ovum a criminal offence?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: A strange question. Mr. Speaker, in answer to question 1, I would refer the hon. member to The Vital Statistics Act, Chapter 419, section 14, of the statutes of Ontario. The Vital Statistics Act, Chapter 419, RSO, section 14. That section requires the registration of a still-birth. A still-birth is defined by the Act as meaning a complete expulsion or extraction from its mother after the 20th week of pregnancy of the foetus that did not at any time after being completely expelled or extracted from the mother breathe or show any other sign of life.

That would indicate, I think, that registration would not be required. Perhaps the best way to put it is if the stillborn foetus was expelled or extracted before the 20th week of pregnancy. After that, it must be recorded under The Vital Statistics Act.

And then the second question: "Is the disposal of a fertilized ovum a criminal offence?" I can advise the hon. member that section 237 of The Criminal Code makes it an offence to commit an abortion. That is as far as I am able to answer that question at the moment.

Mr. Ben: Mr. Speaker, may I ask if the Attorney General will accept a supplementary question?

Since it is not a criminal offence—that you can dispose of a fertilized ovum of less than 20 weeks' duration—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I did not say that, Mr. Speaker. The section says that if the birth or the extraction occurs after the twentieth week, then it must be recorded. I did not say you could dispose of it. It would appear to be that it is not regarded as alive until the 20th week.

Mr. Ben: The question I want to ask is from what the Attorney General said you need not record an extraction of a foetus or an ovum less than 20 weeks old.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: That was the question.

Mr. Ben: That is what the question said. And yet it is an offence to extract one. Is that correct?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Speaker, the first question asked when did such a birth, if I may call it that, need to be recorded. The answer is that, if it occurs before the 20th week of pregnancy no record is required.

Then, "Is the disposal of a fertilized ovum a criminal offence?" Section 237 of The Criminal Code makes it an offence to commit an abortion. Now, there might be an abortion—the hon. member will know—without commission of an abortion under the Code. And his question seems to go to the question of could the ovum in those circumstances be disposed of. The apparent answer would seem to be that it is not regarded as being live if it occurs before the 20th week of pregnancy.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Brantford has a question of the Minister of Labour.

Mr. Makarchuk: A question of the Minister of Labour:

In view of letters sent and delivered to striking employees of Chicago Rawhide, Brantford, threatening the employees with mass dismissal unless they return to work by noon tomorrow, what action does the department intend to take against the firm for contravention of The Labour Relations Act?

Hon. D. A. Bales (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, the parties to a dispute are the ones who would take action in connection with a contravention of The Labour Relations Act. If there is a suspected contravention in this case, the union should apply to the labour relations board for the appropriate remedy.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Hamilton East.

Mr. R. Gisborn (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Labour:

Has the Minister yet received the conciliation board report of the dispute between the teaching nurses association and the Hamilton School of Nursing?

If so, will the Minister release the report forthwith? If not, what are the reasons for the delay?

Hon. Mr. Bales: Mr. Speaker, in reply to the question I am advised that the report was mailed to the parties yesterday.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Sarnia now has the Minister of Municipal Affairs at his disposal.

Mr. Bullbrook: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

Would the Minister advise as to whether his department has been, or is, preparing any general rent control legislation?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: No.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member of Sudbury East has a question for the hon. Minister of Mines.

Mr. Martel: What action does the Minister suggest should be followed now by the mine mill union to ensure that no more of their members suffer hearing injuries as a result of the excessive noise at the Fecunis mill?

Hon. A. F. Lawrence (Minister of Mines): Mr. Speaker, as I indicated to the hon. member yesterday, I am informed that our department has had no complaints whatsoever regarding any noise problem at the Fecunis Mill.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Grey-Bruce has the floor.

Mr. Sargent: I have a question to the hon. Prime Minister.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps before the hon. member places it, we will locate it. Then the hon. member may place it if the Prime Minister has it.

Mr. Sargent: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

A report in the Toronto Telegram on Wednesday, February 19, revealed that great pressure was being put on the Ontario government by private insurers to block the universal Medicare scheme.

Will the Prime Minister advise:

(1) That there is no such pressure in fact?

(2) How does the Premier justify that Medicare is a Machiavellian fraud when it was passed unanimously by every Conservative member of the House of Commons?

Mr. Nixon: Is that anything like a fiscal nightmare?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: No. There is no foundation to this allegation, Mr. Speaker. People have been trying to implicate me personally, and this government with the insurance companies for about as far back as I can remember and there is absolutely no truth in the rumour. I read the report in the paper and as far as I am concerned, it is just another statement by somebody that the insurance companies are trying to pressure this government. They are not and it would not do them any good even if they chose to do so.

Now, the second question. I am not responsible for how the members of the House of Commons vote on any issue that comes before them. You will have to address that question to those men. I do not know how they voted when the whole plan was before the House of Commons.

An hon. member: How do you justify the statement—

Hon. Mr. Robarts: It is not difficult to justify the statement if you want a complete explanation of my approach to Medicare, and to this particular plan which is a deliberate attempt by the federal government to use fiscal leverage to invade a constitutional field which belongs to the provinces. At the present moment we are paying for it and getting nothing. It is not a national Medicare scheme. It is purely a financial scheme. There is no national Medicare plan available. It is a purely financial plan.

There is a built-in element of equalization in it that you probably are aware of. Mr. Smallwood will make money on the plan, if he goes into it, for every resident of that province because his costs are lower than the national average. In this province, our costs are higher so we would get much less than the other provinces in Canada.

There are any number of reasons why we feel that it is not a particularly good plan. To justify my statement I could point out to you that the federal government has indicated that five years from now they are going to pull out of the plan and leave it to the provinces to finance themselves—

Mr. Nixon: With appropriate fiscal equivalents.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: —with appropriate fiscal equivalent. And ten years from now, of course, there will be no fiscal equivalent because the cost of these plans does nothing but increase. The idea is that we are to destroy every plan that has been built up in this province, and many of them have been hammered out over the conference table. All these plans are to be destroyed. There are some firms paying the full amount for their employees; some firms pay part of it—provide medical—and all these are to be destroyed.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: These are just some of the points that I make. I must say, I wonder myself if Ontario were to go into this scheme and Quebec stayed out, for instance, how can you tax the people of Quebec to pay for Medicare in the rest of Canada. At the moment the rest of Canada is paying for Saskatchewan and British Columbia. The Maritime provinces, several of them, have stated categorically that they cannot afford their share of it. And yet they are going to be asked to pay for it for the rest of Canada.

These are some of the reasons why I say it is a fraud on the Canadian people.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Speaker, in a supplementary way I would like to suggest that—

Mr. Speaker: Order! If the hon. member has a supplementary question he may ask it.

Mr. Sargent: May I ask the Prime Minister, if he feels that we only cover two million people in Ontario by OMSIP, then in fact he did bomb out when he said he spoke for Ontario on Medicare, because he does not.

Mr. Speaker: Order! The hon. member's question is out of order. The hon. Minister of Energy and Resources Management has answers.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Mr. Speaker, I have an answer to question 655 asked by the hon. member for Port Arthur. His question was:

Why was the recommendation of the Lower Trent Region Conservation Authority for the appointment of authority members ignored by Order-in-Council #550/69 on February 6, 1969?

Why was a representative from Stirling appointed who has been actively opposed to the formation of the authority?

The answer: In making appointments to conservation authorities under section 12, subsection 5 of The Conservation Authorities Act, recommendations are requested widely on possible appointees. A choice is then made of three people who we believe will bring a good balance of skills to the authority along with a balanced geographical distribution.

In the case of the Lower Trent Region Conservation Authority, we were fortunate in obtaining the service of a strong conservationist; a person skilled in the newspaper and communications field and a person with wide experience in municipal administration.

We have no knowledge of any of these appointees being opposed to the formation of the authority and all willingly agreed to serve.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Mr. Speaker, there is one question from the hon. member for Scarborough West, if he would like to ask it.

Mr. Speaker: Oh yes, he has returned. I am sorry.

Mr. S. Lewis (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, a question of the Minister of Trade and Development.

Did John Deyell Limited, of Lindsay, receive assistance under EIO recently? If so, what was the amount of the assistance? Did this company receive any assistance from the Ontario Development Corporation?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Yes, Mr. Speaker, John Deyell Limited, of Lindsay, received an EIO loan of $215,633 approved by Order-in-Council and dated December 12, 1968.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

THE MECHANICS' LIEN ACT, 1968-1969

Hon. A. A. Wishart (Attorney General) moves second reading of Bill 36, The Mechanics' Lien Act, 1968-1969.

Mr. J. E. Bullbrook (Sarnia): Mr. Speaker, perhaps before I begin the Attorney General would join me in inviting anybody who is not a member of the legal profession to escape now, before we get started into this. Presuming that we are going to do all the orders of the Attorney General today, there is probably two hours of discussion.

Mr. J. Renwick (Riverdale): A simple plan for the working man!

Mr. Bullbrook: As my friend from Riverdale says, it is a simple understanding. They should escape.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Speaker, since I have been invited to join the hon. member I should say no, we cannot do so. I think it would be a very great educational exercise—

Mr. J. L. Brown (Beaches-Woodbine): In futility.

Hon. Mr. Wishart:—particularly since this Mechanics' Lien Act touches so many construction workers, on the finance side, and the public generally. It is a very important bill. I hope that all members would stay and perhaps take part.

Mr. Bullbrook: I was being somewhat facetious, but we are collaterally chastized, I think you will agree, every time we get up in this House, for being involved with subjects that are less than interesting.

Sir, beginning the general discussion and debate relative to 'The Mechanics' Lien Act, 1968-1969, I would just like to make it paramountly clear that the confinement of my particular practice does not lend itself to any expertise on my part relative to this statute or its predecessor.

However, in dealing with same generally I think it would be to the greatest advantage of yourself, sir, and perhaps the other members of this House if I took the time just to read the explanatory note on the inside cover of the publication of Bill 36. It does set forth, in general detail, the history of the concern of the present government in connection with this Act.

As you are aware, sir, The Mechanics' Lien Act and predecessors of it have been in being for approximately 100 years. And as has been said by the law reform commission we, during that time, have proceeded from an agricultural environment and economy to a relatively highly industrialized and commercialized economy. I think it should be said for the purposes of the record that it is very nearly time that we are standing here today and debating this particular type of statute.

It is inconceivable to me, really, that a government, or an administration, or at least a party, could administer for some 25 years in this province and not have initiated some response to the difficulty arising from litigation other than in 1965.

In any event the explanatory notes that I mention say generally:

In 1965, the Ontario Law Reform Commission undertook an extensive study of the law in Ontario on mechanics' liens. A report dated February 22, 1966, was made by the commission to the Attorney General containing its recommendation for updating The Mechanics' Lien Act. Bill 190, based upon the report, was introduced and given first reading at the 1966 session.

This gave the proposed legislation wide distribution in convenient form for study by interested persons and organizations.

The commission then held public hearings and considered many submissions which resulted in a supplementary report dated May 26, 1967. The recommendations of the commission contained in the supplementary report have been incorporated in this bill. There is, however, one major exception. This bill does not transfer jurisdiction in mechanics' lien actions from the Supreme Court to the county and district courts as recommended by the commission in both of its reports.

It was thought advisable to leave this matter in abeyance pending the conclusion of the general review of the jurisdictions of the several court systems in Ontario now going on as a result of the recommendations of the McRuer report.

This bill also contains a number of editorial and other changes designed to clarify the intent that have resulted from the study of Bill 190.

Now, sir, I would like, in beginning my discussion of it, to refer to the original report of the Ontario Law Reform Commission as published on February 22, of 1966. On page 4 of that report the commission, in writing to the hon. Attorney General, advises as follows:

It is convenient to deal with the submissions and representations made together with our recommendations, under the following headings:

1. Suggested repeal of The Mechanics' Lien Act;
2. Suggested radical changes in basic principles of the Act;
3. Transfer of jurisdiction to the county and district courts;
4. Amendments in the substantive law;
5. Amendments relative to proceedings to realize a claim for a lien.

I suggest to you most respectfully, sir, that if I involved myself today with parts 4 and 5 of their recommendations, I would be in effect digressing from the actual discussion of the principle of the bill itself, but rather getting into the substance of the bill. We look forward to lengthy debate, I would hope before the legal bills committee, and I would like to get perhaps some response at this time from the Attorney General. Are we going to be assured now that this will go before the legal bills committee?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Speaker, my full intention, of course, is that this bill, and any bill of this type, should go before the legal bills committee.

Mr. Bullbrook: I am very glad to hear that. It has such far reaching ramifications, and, as I say, we are not overly knowledgeable in this House in connection with the actual technique of the Act itself. So I look forward to an opportunity, and I am sure my friend, the hon. member for Lakeshore would join me in this, we look forward to an opportunity to be given the profession and everyone else interested in this statute, that they come before our standing committee on legal bills to digest this again completely.

Mr. P. D. Lawlor (Lakeshore): Give them lots of notice.

Mr. Bullbrook: Give them lots of notice, as my friend said, so they cannot go to their Canadian Bar Association and then chastize the hon. Attorney General for not giving them the opportunity of having their day before our committee.

I must join my friend in his comments that he made some three weeks ago that some of these fellows who go to the Canadian Bar Association conventions—whether they just like to hear themselves talk, I do not know, but we sat there, Mr. Speaker, many nights until 11 o'clock.

They had ample opportunity to finish their practice of the day and come before us and give us the benefit of their intelligent comment and knowledge. This is what we look to in connection with this statute.

As I say, I do not intend to deal, while discussing matters of principle, with parts 4 and 5 of the recommendations itself. Suffice to say that there have been, Mr. Speaker, tremendous—perhaps that is too large a word—significant and substantive changes in the Act itself.

I relate to the definition section for a moment, section 1, where we incorporate and codify the doctrine of substantial completion. It is good to see that codified and set somewhat to rest, because it has been a tricky problem not only for the lawyers involved in mechanics' lien actions, but for the courts themselves to decide what really constitutes substantial completion in connection with a contract.

Now, getting to the first recommendation and the position, I take it, of my colleagues in the Liberal Party in connection with this recommendation, the suggested repeal of The Mechanics' Lien Act.

We associate ourselves entirely and unequivocally with the recommendation of the Law Reform Commission as set forth on page 4. I want to read that if I might:

A few suggestions were made that The Mechanics' Lien Act should be repealed on the ground that it is discriminatory legislation, and that creditors' claims for work done or material supplied should be enforced in the courts in the same manner as ordinary claims for debt.

This legislation has been in force since 1873 and has been accepted as a special protection to workmen, contractors and suppliers engaged in the construction and building trades.

The philosophy of the legislation is that those who have contributed labour and material to the creation or improvement of a building or work, should have some protection against loss of the contribution they have made to the development of the asset.

I think that, Mr. Speaker, is the essence of our position. We agree with this, that a supplier and a workman do have some almost proprietary vested interest in the created fact. We agree with the commission in this basic philosophy. Our conclusion is that the philosophy in the Act is sound and it would not be in the public interest to repeal it, I do not think much more need be said as far as our position in this connection.

I will have to comment slightly when we get to the second part of the discussion of the philosophy behind the bill itself, where we get a polarization between the need for this Legislature to protect the workman and his vested interest; and the undue restriction and difficulty that this type of legislation puts upon the economics of the construction industry. That is really the essence of our problem, as I see it. I think perhaps the Attorney General might agree with it.

We take the position, as I say, that there should be no repeal of the Act; they should be in a preferential position, and there should be a statute to see that they continue to be in such preferential position.

Now, if you will permit me, Mr. Speaker, I will transfer my comments to the third recommendation—the transfer of jurisdiction to the county and district courts.

The hon. Attorney General, through his department and through this legislation, has said in effect that it would be a little premature for him to consider at this time such a transfer as recommended by the Law Reform commission both in their original report and in their supplementary report itself. I harken back, sir, if I might, to the words:

It is thought advisable to leave this matter in abeyance pending the conclusion of the general review of the jurisdiction of the several court systems in Ontario now going on as a result of the recommendation of the McRuer report.

The recommendation of the law reform commission in this connection, Mr. Speaker, says in effect that we see no validity in retaining within the jurisdiction of the supreme court a mechanic lien actions total. I think they use the example of the $25 claim, in effect, having to go before a supreme court justice.

But the fact of the matter is that about 98 per cent—and this is off the top of my head—of these claims go before the local judge of the supreme court anyway, so it is the same person as the county court judge. I really see no great benefit in retaining the status quo as it is.

I find it difficult really to conceive that any recommendation that might come down would really be of such a nature that it would dispose of, for example, the quantitative strata as between supreme, county and division courts.

I cannot, on the face of it, see why the recommendation was not implemented at the present time, that is, that mechanics' lien actions be placed in the same position as any other actions; that the quantitative jurisdictions of the several courts apply to the mechanics' lien actions as they do to general civil litigation.

It would be our opinion in the Liberal Party—unless the Attorney General could persuade us otherwise, and we are certainly open to persuasion—that really he should consider at this time dispensing with the archaic procedure of having $25 claims technically before the supreme court of Ontario, and getting them down into the appropriate general jurisdiction.

Mr. Speaker, to get to what is really the salient discussion and I think is the essence of what I want to say, the third recommendation of the law reform commission. They dealt with it originally, as I said, in 1966, the suggested radical changes in basic principles in the Act itself. These so called radical changes, Mr. Speaker, resulted from recommendations made by the Board of Trade of Metropolitan Toronto.

Their concern was, as I mentioned before, the fettering of an industry itself in a free enterprise system. That is a poor way of putting it, but that is essentially it. I do not think there is any doubt that the creation of trusts and the holdback necessities do fetter an industry itself, and fetter the credit position of the industry itself.

The law reform commission essentially took the position that they would not accept the recommendations 6 to 13, and I would like to read, if I might, sir, from the report relative to these recommendations.

In its report, the commission referred to the 13 proposals for amendment of the Act emanating from the conference and studies sponsored by the Board of Trade of Metropolitan Toronto. After careful consideration, the commission decided that proposals six to 13 of the conference report were unacceptable for reason that their adoption and implementation would alter completely the basic philosophy of the Act. That philosophy, which is amply demonstrated by the provisions of the Act, is that where an asset has been created by the application of labour and materials, it should stand as security for payment of such labour and materials. The Act was neither designed, nor does it purport, to regulate the economics of the construction industry.

Mr. Speaker, I bring this to your attention again. These are what the gentlemen of the commission say to us. The Act was neither designed, nor does it purport, to regulate the economics of the construction industry. But they entirely beg the question, because, in point of fact, what the Act does—and it has to do—is regulate the economics of the construction industry. That is what it does. Whether it is designed to or purports to, that is what it does.

This, really, as I see it, is the essential decision that has to be made by this House. To attempt to facilitate the construction industry and to attempt to relieve them from this fettering that the statute provides, while at the same time seeing that the philosophy of the Act, as they call it, to protect the workmen or supplier, remains.

This is really our task before the legal bills committee and before the committee of the whole House. I suggest that this is really our task—to see if we can ameliorate the position put forward by the Board of Trade, because there are some very strange things said in connection with this. The law reform commission just about turns out of hand. I read from page 10 of the original report:

In view of the fact that the adoption of the proposals six to 13 would fundamentally change the underlying philosophy of The Mechanics' Lien Act and would require very wide legislative changes, these should be dealt with before considering our suggested amendments to the Act. The Mechanics' Lien Act, as originally conceived, was legislation designed primarily to protect the wage earner and the material matter supplier. Where the legislation has not kept pace with the economic development of the province, there have been no widespread recommendations made to the commission for a change in the prevailing philosophy of the Act.

It is difficult to accept the words "there have been no widespread recommendations made to the commission for a change in the prevailing philosophy of the Act." Then you go to page 5 of the original report, and it says:

In the brief presented by the Board of Trade of Metropolitan Toronto representations were made that, if given effect to, would amount to radical departure from the basic philosophy of the Act.

Now, importantly, sir, listen, if you would:

For several years the board of trade had sponsored a conference dealing with the provisions of The Mechanics Lien Act. This conference was composed of representatives of the following organizations: the Association of Ontario Trade Contractors, the Board of Trade of Metropolitan Toronto, The Canadian Construction Association, the Canadian Credit Men's Association, the Canadian Manufacturers Association, the Lumbermen's Credit Bureau Incorporated, the Ontario Association of Architects, Ontario General Contractors Association, Ontario Road Builders Association, Toronto Construction Association.

And the gentlemen of the commission tell us that there is no widespread objection to the adoption of these principles. In point of fact, there is widespread objection and the fact is that these are the knowledgeable people. These are the people that know about the Act. These are the people that know much more about the Act than I do, and I am supposed to be speaking as somewhat knowledgeable about it.

I feel, frankly, that we have to have these people come before us and give us an opportunity to, perhaps, take issue with some sections of the Act. Without unduly burdening you or my colleagues in this House with the length of my comments, I want to ask you again to consider what they said before—that really they do not consider that they are unduly fettering the construction industry. Just look at section 3, of the Act and see the broadening of the trust aspect of moneys on deposit in the bank. You recognize that a general contractor is not in the same position as an auto manufacturer. Not that he should be, but what we should do is make amply clear, we should satisfy ourselves fully and wholly that we have done everything possible to assist these knowledgeable people in trying to put forward into this legislation some aspects of assistance in their own problems.

Basically, the position of our party, as I understand it, is this: That we accept wholeheartedly the need for a Mechanics Lien Act. It goes without saying that we accept wholeheartedly the need for a new Mechanics Lien Act, and we are prepared to do everything that we can to see that the basic and fundamental philosophy of the protection of the workmen and the supplier is carried forward, and ameliorate the position, the economic position of the industry itself.

Mr. Lawlor: Mr. Speaker, in rising on the debate on The Mechanics Lien Act, may I join with my friend from Sarnia in his basic contention that questions of principle of far reaching moment are involved in this bill.

May I say in advance, in tones of lamentation with respect to the rules of the House, that in a matter, which, as you will see in a few minutes, involves such deep reaching, conflicting and rather difficult stuff (even trying to make an exposition of it seems to me difficult enough) there are provisions in the rules of this House whereby this matter could be referred out after first reading. In a matter of this kind we are expected to read briefs, which we have done, and to look over and peruse a great mass of material.

Some of the proposals being made seem to me to have eminent good sense. The implications are on the economic structure of the province and on the inter-relations of the construction field; very deep-reaching. They could alter the basis. On one side they affect monopolistic practices and combines, which I feel that the board of trade recommendations tend to do on the one hand. On the other hand, there is a series of suggestions with respect to abolishing hold-backs, and to the abuses that have crept into the existing legislation, which I do not feel competent, after a brief reading to even discuss with the hon. members, my colleagues. I should have preferred to hear these people, who are so deeply disgruntled and knowledgeable in their field, argue the matter before us first. Perhaps a few penetrating questions would clarify the issues in such a way that would enable one to come to a determination; at least one could begin.

At the moment, I stand in a state of considerable confusion over the whole issue as to the merits of one claim against the other arising out of the board of trade recommendations. They do make certain recommendations, as I say, there seems to be considerable merit to them. But you have to segment out what is rubbish, what is to their own benefit and what is self-interest in their association, from what is legitimate for the working people, for the suppliers, subcontractors and others in the province.

I think that this Act as before us is presented under somewhat false colours. It is certainly not a very thorough and deep revision of the mechanics lien legislation; it is an affirmation of the existing state of things which have bred a whole host of very serious anomalies in the financial structure of the province. I do complain a little about there being no possibility, except after this is referred out to the committee, to go properly into these, because the thing has already been approved in principle.

I say to the people of this province and to groups like the board of trade that what we do when we reach that stage is largely farcical. We have already approved the bill. While we are willing to make amendments here and there, what they are proposing would not be an amendment, but a completely new Act. If it has any validity, then it is too late to do that, we would have to do that next year with a completely new Act.

It would be a little embarrassing for the government, if it should reverse its position after these hearings, on seeing the enormous merit of it, and to have to bring in an Act just after having presented what they purport, on the whole, to be, a revised—you know—a bringing up to date of some old legislation touching mechanics' liens.

Now, I would ask through you, Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) and others, to consider the possibility of doing something whereby a really viable debate and a really viable presentation of conflicting positions, particularly on tricky matters like this, be made available to the public.

May I also say that the law reform commission in this instance, in its original report and with its supplementary text, has let us down badly. My friend, the member for Sarnia (Mr. Bullbrook) has indicated it was a rather off-the-cuff dismissal, of a rather pretentious statement, as I see it, and it certainly was.

They have done excellent work, and this is the first encounter where I think that their work is slovenly and not deserving of the credence that has been given to it in re-constituting this legislation.

Now before getting on with the principle of the thing there are peripheral matters affecting principle that should be mentioned. This Act does branch out into the areas of giving cognizance to rentals of equipment for the first time and that is an area that has been very badly overlooked and credit should be given on that score. The trust provisions having been widened, to include work not only already performed, but for which certificates have been given, is another thing that deserves commendation.

I am sure a good many lawyers in the province are going to be taken rather aback, you know, with the removal of the "umbrella clause"—that is the clause where somebody files his lien on time and another lawyer up the block does not manage to, but he can slip under the first lien and get his presentations made to the court.

I notice that the law reform commission in its first report comes down heavily in favour of retention of the principle and to that Mr. Bell, one of the commissioners, seemed to take some objection. As the bill has come before us that salient and saving gesture is removed. We have not that many saving gestures in the law, you know, that we can afford as practising solicitors to see any disappear out from under us. I do not know how many of my fellow solicitors have been saved by that clause, from malfeasance, non-feasance or whatever. Please leave it in.

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): It is not just the solicitors, it is the public.

Mr. Lawlor: Well yes; but the solicitors could be sued for misfeasance of practice in failure to get the lien on time. And what difference does it make? The intent of the Act is wide enough, it is supposed to be a very flexible and an inexpensive procedure, and if one lien is registered why should lien holders, simply because of failure to get it on in the 37-day period, be out of court? Why should not all lien holders, all those who contributed to the building by way of actual work or supply of material, why should they not all be under the umbrella? This seems to me an extremely equitable thing.

I am going to take exception to the position of my friend, the member for Sarnia, touching on which jurisdiction ought to handle these claims, whether the supreme court or the county court judges. I am of the opinion that it should be left with the supreme court as the bill has done against the recommendations.

You know, the supreme court some years ago handed down a major decision saying that the Masters of that court handling mechanics' lien matters had no jurisdiction. So a revision in procedure had to take place whereby anybody suing under The Mechancs' Lien Act must go before a supreme court judge and be referred to a Master.

These Masters have been there for many, many years, they are very well trained, they are expert in their field. In my appearances before them I have always found them most knowledgeable—you are going to have to train a whole new area of the judiciary in order to handle these complexes; while these people have become aware of building practices—which is almost as important as the law—and I would think it is a very grave mistake to move that jurisdiction away.

Mr. Bullbrook: Now the member is just talking about the county of York.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Lawlor: I would concede that is true, but it is the jurisdiction of which I am most acquainted and where this is the case. But, if you want to segment it off and make a distinction between the two—it would be rather derogatory for the other jurisdictions perhaps—but it has been done in other statutes that have come before this House, as to certain procedures in the county of York.

I see nothing wrong with it. I still think retention of the Masters who have become well acquainted with these matters over the years should be retained and not—I suspect the county court judges would refer a good many of these things off to some officer within the family court structure before you know it, and they would not be handling the matter either.

Mr. Singer: That is nonsense, the member knows better than that.

Mr. Lawlor: It is not nonsense.

Mr. Singer: Sure, it is nonsense.

Mr. Lawlor: With this particular area it requires enormous expertise and we have already got an educated body to do it, I see no reason at least in this county for not maintaining that.

Now to come to the principle of the bill, I would like to read just briefly from the great man himself, my friend Robert W. Macaulay, who wrote a handbook on mechanics lien some years ago. He says that: "The purpose of the statute is to prevent multiplicity of actions for small claims."

And incidentally, on that score, if you remove that umbrella you are just going to get a multiplicity of small claims proceeding not through The Mechanics Lien Act but through the county courts largely.

I do not think you are going to save anything, on the contrary you are going to clutter up the courts with that type of claim, in which the costs would be enormously out of proportion and in excess of the sum claimed.

"The Act endeavours to afford rapid, informal and inexpensive adjudication of suits." I wonder sometimes nowadays if much attention is paid to the expense side? The fact it is referred off to Masters can keep it relatively inexpensive but the costs of mechanics lien actions have crept up over the years and some consideration should be given to putting a ceiling on those costs by way of a tariff written right into this bill, or by regulations. It is no longer an inexpensive procedure, they may as well go to the top levels of the Supreme Court in order to adjudicate these claims.

"There are many decisions under the Act that illustrate the impatient attitude of the court toward technical arguments and defences." Well, there have been too many technical arguments and defences, that is partially why we are here today.

The business, as the member for Sarnia (Mr. Bullbrook) mentioned, touching the completion of the work, has been abused for an awfully long time by people coming in and saying that they have no right to file the lien because there was a little bit of work left to do and for which they hired somebody else. Then the arguments arise as to whether it was complete or not.

In any event the same courts will show reluctance to enlarge or extend the relief given as being in derogation of the common law.

He goes on to quote from Lamont, J. A.:

A mechanics lien is wholly a creation of the statute being in derogation of the common law.

The statutory provisions creating the right to a lien must be strictly construed and the lien claimant must show that his lien is clearly within the statute. If, however, the existence of the lien is established the provisions of the statute dealing with this enforcement being remedial should be given a liberal and beneficial construction.

Again, the tendency has been to become more and more technical in the interpretation of the clauses under the present Act and in some ways that is alleviated under this present legislation even as it is proposed.

Now, to turn to the problems of the board of trade I will not go into an elaborate dissertation on the subject. The first point is to stress that those who have caused any default in payment to subcontractors or suppliers ought to be the ones, that is, the ones who set up the original contract, ought to bear the brunt; and, you know, there is good sense in that.

For the law reform committee simply to say that this is a principle unknown to our law that we are setting up a new privity of contract, where none exists, and making people liable for the superintendence of contracts which they initially did not institute is simply not valid. The fact of the matter is that in the echelons of hiring parties—the hiring party is often the owner too—down through the general contractor, sub-contractors, layers and layers of suppliers and sub-suppliers. A focal point of responsibility must be found. I am surprised at Allan Leal on this one because he usually tries to be abreast of the times and to recognize the full implications of legal and financial relationships as they presently exist.

In other words, the approach is just too simplistic. It does not meet the needs of current contracting and I think that he shies away from what he calls a new concept. The fact of the matter is that later on in the paragraph he has to concede that the concept is already in effect. I mean it is a vicarious liability concept that those who set afoot the dirty work ought to be the ones to come along and clean up the mess afterwards.

There is, in the board of trade recommendation, that being its foundation point, a very solid argument. Arising out of this, they go into an elaborate argument about the abuses that have presently grown up involuntarily. There was no intention, of course, in the original statute to bring about the host of abuses that exist at the present time.

The business of the 15 per cent hold back was to protect the working man and supplier. Now, as they point out, that is no longer what it does. It is really a fund that is being provided for the benefit of the hiring contractor. He sits on that. He borrows money on the basis of that security. Generally speaking, it never filters down, because to initiate his contract—let us say the man is the owner of the land—he sets up a company which he himself controls as a separate person and this would be the general contractor in the business. And so, he is dealing from his left hand to his right hand; there are no arm's length provisions written into our legislation to prevent him from moving moneys back and forth under the present legislation.

The 15 per cent that is being held back is far in excess of any margin of profit that the sub-contractors are going to make. It gives him a little loadstone on which to sit. He goes out and borrows money without putting very much into it himself. Perhaps the land itself is his basic equity and with it he goes out and borrows money from financial institutions.

Once he has money coming in from a first mortgagee, or from some lending institution, he has in the 15 per cent the perfect tool to turn over all or a portion of that 15 per cent in repayment of that banking debt, so long as he can show that a similar amount of money went out to pay sub-contractors.

But one of the sub-contractors—or the general contractor, with whom he is in cahoots at the next level, has set up as an incorporated entity and has siphoned all that money off, and he goes broke. The board of trade also show that with the way the thing is presently arranged with the setting up of secondary companies all along the line—that these companies are under-financed, there are a host of small builders who set up limited companies. Because of bidding practices and the way in which it operates—the financial structure operating in tenders and what not—they are able to bid in at much lower prices than they really ought to. They derive benefit from the current credit practices and thus holdback provisions. They siphon it off again in a diversity of ways, as the brief points out, and their sub-contractors are left holding the bag when they go bankrupt.

It has happened altogether too often. It has happened in such an enormous number of instances that the Board of Trade have seen necessary to make the proposals to the committee, which they have made.

On the other side of the fence, while there is merit in the board of trade proposals, there are defects in it also which bother me. One of them is that whether or not some contractors are the fly-by-night sort of people the board tends to put emphasis on in their claim about being under capitalized—the economic effects of the board of trade recommendations, if adopted, would leave in the field only a very small number, a handful of major contractors, and wipe out the smaller contractor or the man seeking to initiate a business. The man who may have been in business for some period of time, but who has not built up an extensive capitalization, would be wiped out.

In other words, they say that in line with the piece of legislation that you passed in this House some years ago, The Public Works Creditor Payment Act, re contracts in the public realm, where 100 per cent payment bond is required, such bonds are being required, more and more all the time. Performance bonds or payment bonds that cover all contingencies of any possible contractor down the line, are being demanded of contractors.

If such is the case, then they say there is no necessity to retain holdbacks, that the holdback is simply a device and an abuse whereby the hiring contractor can serve his own financial purposes to the detriment of the sub-contractors down below. But an objection is that I fear the coming into being of 25 to 35 major contractors in this province for public works projects. We know well enough already the abuses in terms of combines that arise out of that in highway contracts.

Are we encouraging that sort of thing by going along with the board of trade recommendations? That is an immediate legal danger. There is another defect in their recommendations, which is not well argued by the law reform commission in their five objections. They claim that the working man is going to be badly hurt because if he has to give a notice of his claim, who is he to give that notice to? If you have got a structure of inter-related companies, he will not know who the hiring party is and he is going to have a great deal of difficulty serving this notice.

In answer to that, it could be said that the trade unions in the construction industry will have to take a greater role by protecting their members and making sure that these notices go out to the hiring party, who then becomes responsible for 100 per cent of the contract; not just any hold back, but for all work actually done and services and material supplied.

If a notice is given then it is for all the materials placed on the site. If no notice is given, he can order the removal of the materials that are on the site but are not incorporated into the building. But another objection to the board of trade is that they segregate two separate areas. On one side of the fence you have the contractors, who are able to file liens—and the contractors immediately in relationship to their own contractors or to the hiring party.

But all other people beneath them, the sub-suppliers, are given no liens. They have some kind of claim, some "privilege" claim which does not permit them to file a lien.

Personally, I am very much opposed to that. It think it is a retrograde step, the reason being that they would cut down the number of claims being filed at the registry offices and so on, and cut off stoppages of lines of work caused by such filings. On the other hand, it seems to me it removes a basic and positive protective device which was written into the original legislation. It was the whole reason for the original legislation.

So why I am running through this business of on-the-one-hand, and on-the-other-hand that there are benefits here is simply to say that I firmly believe that an accommodation could be reached. The present legislation does bring a host of economic ills.

People do go into the contracting business on a shoestring. They do go bankrupt, and who gets hurt? Not the owner, not the prime contractor. They get off with their whole skin under our present system. It is the sub-contractors and the sub-suppliers, and the working man who get hurt, because there is no money left in the kitty, generally speaking, with which to pay these people out.

The Board of Trade recommendation swings in the contrary direction for it in order to avoid that contingency, the full weight and loss does not fall on the end of the scale of the subcontractor, it should fall on the hiring agent, the gentleman at the beginning of the chain, or whoever somewhere along the chain caused the hiring of the individual who has defaulted. And he is usually or often the general contractor, so the number one man on the totem pole—the hirer—becomes the heir of all the indebtedness created all along the line.

It is very difficult to solve that question overnight. A considerable amount of debate and discussion has to take place among us in order to see the relative merit of the two positions. I do not think in committee we can go into the interstices of a whole host of other abuses and bring to the surface just what is happening in Ontario because of the provisions of the existing Mechanics' Lien Act.

The Mechanics' Lien Act which is presented to us as Bill 36 makes no fundamental alteration. It really fails under this head to meet these challenges of our time and will act as the detriment of the building and the construction trades if left as it is.

On the aspect of requiring various notices to be given upstairs, and the requirements that individuals and working men particularly not be covered by a holdback, and the very onerous requirements placed on the hiring party, the board says that if he does not like the contractor, if he feels the contractor is not financially secure, then he has to elect for a performance bond, or if he has not got a performance bond then he is going to have to pay the subcontractors and others directly, in order to preserve his position. That seems again somewhat onerous.

But there are areas in which I am sure, in discussion, that particular problem can be alleviated by segregating out the beneficial from both positions. I would think this: that far from the board of trade's position of abolishing the holdback, some form of holdback should be retained. Holdbacks ought not be made voluntary as between prime contractor and the rest of his subs, because then the pressure will come upon them to reduce their holdbacks to a minimum, therefore not passing on the benefits down below. Perhaps the holdbacks ought not to be as great. Perhaps ten or eight per cent would be adequate in the circumstances.

On the other hand, the shifting of the economic weight in the direction of he who causes the harm has a good deal to be said for it.

Now, if these two principles—the principles of your bill as presented here, and the presence of the principles of the board of trade recommendations—can be amalgamated, worked out, fused together as I believe it is possible to do, then, we would have a viable and fine Mechanics' Lien Act in this province. Until this is done, we will not.

Mr. J. Renwick: In some very brief comments on the bill, the first ones are strictly preliminary, which I hope the Attorney General might make note of in terms of what we might do in committee with the bill. These have no specific connection with each other, but I find that section 48 which has nothing to do with construction on land, but is the lien on chattels which a mechanic has for work done, such as the work, repair work done in a garage, it seems to me to be rather hidden away in a statute dealing principally with the construction industry, a lien on real property. There may very well be merit in extracting that one section and making it a separate bill with a different heading to indicate to persons that they do have a lien on chattels on which they have expended work and material and labour.

The second minor comment that I would like to make is that while the term is nowhere defined and there is no consistency in the statute, there are three or four sections where the word "builder" is still used in the Act, and I think the language should be made consistent throughout the statute, or the term "builder" should be defined or preferably the word "builder" eliminated and let the whole matter ride on the term "contractor" in the statute.

The other point is one which simply defies me, and I never have understood, and I am in the same position as the member for Sarnia. I do not pretend to any expertise in the statute, but in subsection 8 of section 11 you find the provision that payment of the hold-back may be validly made so as to discharge all liens after the expiration of the period of 37 days, unless in the meantime proceedings have been commenced.

I emphasize this, the phrase "proceedings have been commenced" which I take to mean the commencement of the action.

I find that it is very misleading when you compare it with the provision in section 23 of the bill, which says that every lien for which a claim is registered ceases to exist on the expiration of 90 days after the work has been completed and the materials have been done, placed or furnished.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: What section was that, please?

Mr. J. Renwick: Section 23: "unless an action has been commenced".

Without elaborating on it, the contradiction and the problem which I see is that the hold-back can be paid any time after the 37 days to discharge the lien unless an action has been commenced. In other words, any registered lien in which no action has been commenced, would be discharged by payment of the hold-back, and yet, when you compare that with section 23—a person would be lulled into a false sense of security thinking that his lien was still good and that he had 90 days in which to commence the action.

I am not at all certain whether it is simply because I do not understand the sections, or whether the contradiction is a valid one. I would certainly appreciate it if before it goes to committee, that that particular contradiction could be looked at by the legislative counsel, and by your department.

A proceeding having been commenced, in my language, means an action having been commenced, and the language should be made either the same or it should be clearly pointed out that the commencement of proceeding means the filing of the lien in the registry office.

Again I emphasize the point, that I may have missed something in my understanding of the statute, but it is a point which concerns me and I think should be clarified by the time the bill goes into committee.

Now let me—at the risk of some repetition of what my colleague from Lakeshore has said—move on to the bill in principle and away from those specific points which I raised which deserve consideration.

Apart from whatever merit there may be in leaving the language of section 3 substantially the same insofar as the creation of the trust is concerned, let me point out that my understanding is that when you create a trust, you name the trustee—which has been done; you name the beneficiaries or cestius que trustent—which has been done; you establish the duration of the trust—which has been done. If I may repeat that, Mr. Speaker, you name the trustee, which has been done; you name the cestius que trustent or the beneficiaries, which has been done; you state the duration of the trust, which has been done. But you state also the terms of the trust. When you examine very carefully section 3, you will find that there are no terms to the trust, and I think it is very important that the bill be amended to provide specifically what the terms of the trust are.

I suppose the obvious answer is that if you named the beneficiaries of the trust, you implicitly state that somehow or other the terms of the trust are for the benefit of those beneficiaries. But I think that the material man, the suppliers, the workmen and the subcontractors and, indeed, the contractor who believes himself to have this protection by way of an almost hallowed term in law—a trust—is entitled to have a clear and explicit statement of what the terms of the trust are. I find it very confusing to read the provision which says, —and he shall not appropriate or convert any part thereof to his own use or to any use not authorized by the trust.

And then to find that I cannot find what are the uses authorized by the trust. I think this has been part of the difficulty which lawyers have experienced in understanding how The Mechanics' Lien Act works because, by and large, the emphasis has been on the other part of the mechanics' lien, and that is the registered lien and the recourse against the land in order to enforce payment of unpaid accounts.

I cannot understand it and perhaps, Mr. Speaker, in the Attorney General's reply, or in committee, we could have an explanation from the Law Reform Commission as to why they will not state in this statute what the specific terms of the trust are. That is the guts of what The Mechanics' Lien Act is supposed to be about, and because the terms are not explicitly stated we find the situation that, in fact, the funds in most cases are not segregated. When the trust "fastens upon the sums—which is the word used in terms of the trusts established—we do not find that the person who is the trustee considers himself under any obligation either to segregate them or to apply the traditional principles of trust accounting to the use of those funds.

It is a very nebulous trust and at no point, I would suggest, could a workman or a material man or a supplier or a contractor go to the man above, who was supposed to hold the trust fund, presumably for his purpose and say to him, "Now where is that trust? What are the accounting procedures in trust parlance that you are applying to that trust?" I am suggesting that it may very well be that the trust is illusory; that it is not there at all. In any sense, it is a very dwindling trust and a fluctuating number of dollars which at any given time cannot possibly be accounted for by the trustee. It raises the question in trust law, I suppose, of whether or not it is possible to bring an action of devastavit—or other breach—of trust against the person who is supposed to be the trustee, because nobody could ever find where the corpus of the trust was that was established for the persons who are concerned about it.

I leave that—again, I assert that I do not pretend to undersand it; but I would expect that any revision of The Mechanics' Lien Act would not have an explicit purpose about the terms of the trust in it.

My next comment is that I think that because of the similarity of this bill to the existing bill we should be under no illusion. This bill could have been just as easily introduced as an Act to amend The Mechanics' Lien Act as persons who are concerned with it should not think that because it was first read in 1966 and referred, after a study of the law reform commission, to the public and then a supplementary report was issued and then this new Act introduced in 1969, that in some way or other it is a substantially better or much improved statute.

It has some minor amendatory changes which, as I say, could have been done through an amending statute.

I have no comment about the procedure once the action is commenced. That latter part of the statute, by and large, is a procedural one. I do not think that it is of any great moment whether its jurisdiction is conferred on the county court or the supreme court. I think you would have to duplicate a substantial amount of expertise in the county courts if the county court judges were to have this jurisdiction added to their already heavy burdened jurisdiction.

In balance, I am quite happy to see the jurisdiction left with the supreme court also for this reason that if this statute and the state of the construction industry produces a great spate of litigation under it, then there is something fundamentally wrong with the construction industry and we cannot hope to improve it by the multiplicity of proceedings under The Mechanics Lien Act.

There are a number of points on particular sections which can best be dealt with in committee, and which I will raise at that time. Having stated my concern about the trust, I would like now to depart from the bill as it is presently drafted and express my concern as to the inability of the law reform commission to understand the basic principles which were put before them in any briefs, about the statutes, in order to renovate. I would, at least, have liked to see the law reform commission after the time spent on this bill, come up with an alternative bill—a draft alternative bill as well as the present bill—so that people could have begun to understand what it was that people were concerned about in the existing statutes.

What they were concerned about, it seems to me, can only be illustrated in a very simple way. And that is that the bill is designed to protect people so that they will get paid for work and material which they have supplied on a construction site. If you look at it in terms of a flow of money, then you start with the credit institutions and the mortgage institutions, and the money which an owner may have put up himself. The money flows through their hands and the site is prepared and the building is constructed. The payment flows out in order to make payment to the prime contractor, the sub-contractors, the workmen and the material men and suppliers on. Envisaged as a flow of money, as I understand it the principle, the alternative principle which was suggested and could have been used for debate, is that, all right, everyone who is responsible for introducing a defaulter in that chain of payment, must accept responsibility for payment of persons to whom the defaulter defaults. You get a chain in the flow of money: it can be visualised as a chain. The person above who introduces the defaulter into the scheme must assume responsibility for it.

That also permits the lien to be continued as part of the statute; it does not pose any real problem. It, perhaps, eliminates the hold-back which means, in many cases, the illegitimate use of the hold-back for the purpose of credit with other institutions.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Would the hon. member permit a question on that? I am not sure that I follow him, and I want to be sure that I do.

Mr. J. Renwick: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: The owner, to begin with, hires the contractor, and the contractor defaults. In the meantime he has hired, let us say, six sub-contractors, the painter, the plumber, the glazier, the decorator, etc. Is the hon. member suggesting that the chain of responsibility from those sub-contractors can move up to the owner? He must deal with them, although he had no chance to select them, arrange their terms of employment, or anything like that?

Mr. J. Renwick: What I am saying is exactly that. If you envisage the chain of the owner and the prime contractor, and the sub-contractors and the material men and the suppliers, whoever retained that particular sub-contractor, if that person defaults, then becomes responsible. Ultimately, the illustration which the Attorney General has just used is correct. If the prime contractor defaults, then the owner is responsible.

It may sound like an onerous responsibility, but what you are talking about is a relatively unstable industry from time to time depending upon credit sources. There is no difficulty with an owner who is about to construct a building, or an owner and a mortgagee from whom he has borrowed the funds, or the bank which has extended the credit to the owner or builder or the lessee of the land to start the construction. There is no difficulty in that industry absorbing within its framework the cost of insurance to provide for payment and performance.

There are economic arguments to say that that means you are going to squeeze out the small builder, that he cannot live in the game. Well, he has not been able to live in the game for a long time. He has had an effect of creating instability, within the industry, but from the point of view of an alternative way of dealing with the matter, it seemed to me to have considerable merit.

Mr. Singer: Are you advocating this or are you just throwing it out in the air?

Mr. J. Renwick: Perhaps the hon. member for Downsview was not in the House when I said that I felt that the law reform commission could have produced an alternative draft bill for the purpose of consideration—

Mr. Singer: I heard you say that.

Mr. J. Renwick: —of consideration and debate to find out which was the best method of providing for this protection. They have failed to do so and they dismissed, without any adequate explanation, the proposal for an alternative. And I simply—

Mr. Singer: My question still is, then, to the hon. member for Riverdale, if I may. Do you think the alternative system that you are putting forward is better or not; or just that they should come forward with two, or perhaps three, alternatives?

Mr. J. Renwick: Certainly, my view is very simple. The member for Lakeshore has expressed it and your colleague, the member for Sarnia, has expressed it, that we in committee, because of the failure of the law reform commission to deal adequately with the representations which were made about an alternative system, we must perforce go through the exercise of finding out what that alternative really meant in all its implications.

From the recommendations which I have read from time to time, in all their elaboration, it seems to me to pose a fair alternative system which we should discuss and consider.

I cannot express a view on it. I am not an expert in that field, but to have it summarily dismissed and to leave the statute in the state it now is, in my view, is no improvement on the basic purpose which the Act is designed to serve. I do not want to get into the detail of the difference between a lien holder and a privileged claim and the elaboration which has gone into the briefs which were submitted to the law reform commission and of which I am sure the Attorney General is aware.

But I am saying that I think, in committee we must have the opportunity of hearing some of the persons who have advocated the alternative schemes. My understanding is that they are among the people who were acting as receivers and managers within the construction industry for companies which had gone broke. They had to pick up the pieces and their recommendations were mainly made for the purpose of providing a stability within the construction industry which has been lacking from time to time in the cyclical way that that industry operates. There are very real questions which I think can only be considered if persons are given the opportunity to make adequate presentation of their views before the committee.

Perhaps somewhere the law reform commission has the information (I do not know and I have no way of knowing and I have seen no figures) on the proposition as to how many people really got hurt in the construction industry in the last ten years. Maybe they are available.

I do not know, for example, how many workmen lost wages or, even under The Mechanics Lien Act, are aware of their rights and following it through, in fact came out with less money than they were entitled to receive. Or how many suppliers, material men and contractors came out that way. Perhaps if those statistics are available I may have simply missed them; or if they were not available, I think it points out the difficulty we have, in coming to grips with a relatively old statute, to assess whether or not the amendments proposed are of importance.

My last comment, Mr. Speaker, is that I would like the Attorney General, either in his reply or before the committee, to be in a position to advise us in what way the departments of the Ontario government ensure the protection of persons who are contractors, sub-contractors, material men or labourers, workmen on the construction projects of all kinds in which this government is the owner. Of course, they are covered in a different way and under a different statute and a different procedure. Again, that procedure seems to me to be almost a third alternative to the way in which workmen and material men, suppliers and sub-contractors are protected in the game. In that instance, they have the full support of the government to ensure that finally, some way or other, they will get full payment for what work they have done or materials and supplies that have been furnished by them.

The substance of my comment is that we—I speak for the member for Lakeshore and myself—find it very difficult to assess whether the best possible result has been obtained from the time and effort which has been devoted to this bill. We have a suspicion that the best result has not been attained and we re-assert the proposition that there are some fundamental discrepancies within the bill, even as it is presently drafted, and the three possible methods (and there may be more) by which these persons can be protected and payment to them ensured.

I think this House has got to sort out the alternatives now because they have not been sorted out anywhere else for us. The only place that that can be done is in committee. I would specifically ask that the Attorney General would make certain that those persons who made representations to the Law Reform Commission, both in the initial instance and after the first bill was circulated to the public, would be specifically invited and time would be set aside for them to come and make their presentations to the committee. In addition to that, I would specifically ask that an expert from the civil service in The Department of Public Works and from The Department of Highways should also attend before the committee and advise us what procedures they follow, in order to ensure that the workmen and the sub-contractors and suppliers and material men are protected in the contracts which this government lets.

So that out of that discussion we would be able to satisfy ourselves that this is or is not an adequate bill.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, I listened with some substantial interest to the hon. member for Riverdale and I am puzzled a bit about the approach, the somewhat different kind of an approach, that he has taken to this statute; where he comes here not to criticize the principle of the Act, but to wonder if there are two or three other theories. Perhaps this—

Mr. Lawlor: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I may ask the hon. member a question.

Mr. Singer: No. I have just started.

Mr. Lawlor: Where does the member stand with the board of trade proposal?

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, surely I have the floor and I do not have to be interrupted by the member for Lakeshore.

Thank you. Surely there is a responsibility on the members of the Opposition to come here with views about the matter that is under debate.

Mr. I. Deans (Wentworth): Does the hon. member intend to debate the principle of the bill, or is his intent to discuss the comments of the hon. member for Riverdale?

Mr. Singer: If the hon. member is through perhaps I can carry on with my speech. Is he through now or would he like to get into this debate?

Mr. Deans: I am just asking whether or not the hon. member intends to debate the principle of the bill?

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, ignoring the out of order comments from the back bench member up there, I have forgotten his name, I would like to continue in the vein in which I started.

My view is that there is a responsibility on all members of the Opposition, including the interrupters on my left, to present a positive view before this House when a bill is called for second reading.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Singer: I do not know why they are so unhappy about this because I am bound to—

An hon. member: Tell the truth!

Mr. Singer: It is a pity about the NDP that they can talk but they do not want to listen. As soon as even a beginning of a criticism is addressed to them all we get is a gaggle of noise, unintelligent and uninformed. I would think, Mr. Speaker, that this so-called group that believes in presenting constructive opposition to various matters that come forward in the House, would at least give someone else the courtesy of making a few remarks without all this loud and inane barracking.

Mr. F. Young (Yorkview): Obviously the member has nothing to say and he is trying to say it.

Mr. Singer: Are the members through now or would they, one at a time or collectively, like to get up and speak? I will wait, there is lots of time. Which one would like to take over?

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister of Correctional Services): The enemy is over here, fellows.

Mr. Singer: Now, Mr. Speaker, as I was saying before I was so rudely and inordinately interrupted, I would think that the responsibility of the hon. member for Riverdale and the hon. member for Lakeshore is not just to comment and draw a big question mark about whether or not the law reform commission should have considered several other things and perhaps—and this is a rather unique conception—brought in two or three alternatives that we should debate.

It may well be, Mr. Speaker, that in the Attorney General's estimates, when we come to the heading of law reform commission, that the member for Riverdale and others and perhaps myself and some of my colleagues, will have some highly critical remarks to make about the job performed by the law reform commission.

But for better or for worse they did report and as a result of their report we now have before us Bill 36. And it would seem to me that what is before this House for debate today are the merits of Bill 36; not whether there should have been an alternative bill or two alternative bills or three alternative bills.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): That is the fourth time the member has said that.

Mr. Singer: I will perhaps say it six or eight more times before I am through and the hon. member for York South who, I am sure, understands these things very well, will have the patience to listen.

Mr. Lawlor: Get on with the bill.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, it would seem to me that there is a responsibility on members of the Opposition when faced with a bill like this to do their own research and to come in with an opinion. And if they have no opinion then they can say that perhaps they are denied adequate facilities or they have not had the experience—

Mr. Lawlor: One half-hour and we have not got an opinion yet.

Mr. Singer: I recognize that, but noting where it comes from I will give it the respect that it is worthy of.

Mr. MacDonald: You have got nothing to say; you have to fill the time some way.

Mr. Singer: As I was saying, Mr. Speaker, it would seem to me that a far greater contribution could have been made to the debate by these members saying, "Yes, this is a good bill," or "No, it is a bad bill," and putting forward reasons. It is a pity, Mr. Speaker, that their research has not indicated to them the position of a positive stand. I thought the contribution made by my colleague from Sarnia was a very substantial one. He wants ample consideration in committee and as we anticipated, the Attorney General is sending this bill to committee and there will be lots of opportunity to discuss it.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Great government.

Mr. E. A. Winkler (Grey South): Real democratic government.

Mr. Singer: Occasionally there is some progress made. I share the concern of the member for Lakeshore for the removal of the umbrella provision. I do not think that the umbrella provision is important to maintain merely to protect errant solicitors. They should be able to look after themselves. But I think most practicing lawyers who have anything to do with mechanics' liens will recognize that there are many workmen who are protected by the umbrella provision, who are not really aware at all that they are entitled to this kind of protection.

They seek advice and on many occasions are protected by the umbrella provision which allows them to come in under the cover of someone else's action. It is for that reason, not for the protection of the solicitors—and I am surprised the member for Lakeshore would have missed this point—that the umbrella provision should be maintained. It is for the protection of the workmen who should be there and be protected.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: He missed that one; he should send his QC back.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, the real problem that faces us with this Act is that the whole series of provisions contained in The Mechanics' Lien Act have become highly technical. They are really known well only by a limited number of the members of the legal profession. And it is difficult for lawyers who indulge by and large in a general practice, or who have not indulged in this specialty, to be as familiar as they might be with the really difficult technicalities of procedures in The Mechanics' Lien Act.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Singer: No, I am not that kind of an expert, but I do not know whether my colleagues, the noisy ones, have taken the trouble to consult those people who I consider are leading members of the bar in relation to The Mechanics Lien Act. But I have, and my colleague from Sarnia has, and we are not unhappy with the provisions of this bill.

For those reasons, Mr. Speaker, we are going to support the bill, and we really do not think it is necessary to come in and say, maybe, maybe, maybe. Our job here is to say either, "Yes, we are going to support the principles of the bill," or, "No, we are not," for specific reasons.

Now, for the specific reasons that we have put forward we are going to support the bill, and we would think that a far greater contribution could have been made by the members here on the left if they had been much more specific in their criticisms of this Act.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Kingston and the Islands has the floor.

Mr. S. Apps (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, I am not quite sure whether I am in order in discussing a couple of aspects of this particular bill, but I would like to place them here for the consideration of the Attorney General, because I think they are rather important, particularly for smaller suppliers who in many cases are affected very much by The Mechanics Lien Act.

The first point that I would like to bring forward is in section 21, subsection 2 which reads:

A claim for lien for material may be registered before or during the placing or finishing thereof, or within 37 days after placing or furnishing of the last material so placed or furnished.

Mr. Speaker: His point, as far as I can ascertain is one not of principle, but of practice and procedure which should be raised in the committee rather than on second reading. If I am wrong I will be glad to have the hon. member proceed.

Mr. Bullbrook: Mr. Speaker, in deference to the member for Kingston and the Islands, the hon. member for Riverdale spent at least ten minutes of the House's time discussing specific sections. I would think that we should have the same benefit.

Mr. Speaker: I regret that Mr. Speaker was not personally in the Chair at that time. The results might have been different. I would be delighted to allow the hon. member to proceed.

Mr. Apps: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, I was going to say that if you consider me to be more out of order than some of the other previous speakers, then I will cease and not say anything at this particular time. But now what I would like to point out in the first place is where does the 37 days originate to start with? As far as I am concerned, I do not think 37 days are long enough.

I say this for this reason. I may cases when a supplier delivers materials to a job, his terms of payment are net 30 days, and normally that would mean 30 days from the end of the month. Such being the case, the supplier could furnish material and not even expect payment before the lien date is up.

I feel that consideration should be given when the time comes, to finding out why this is 37 days, and whether it might not be more desirable to make it longer than 37 days to protect those suppliers.

I am talking particularly about small suppliers who may give terms longer than sometimes they should, but the fact is that they do, and as a result a lien could go on a job even before they would be ready to collect their money for that particular delivery.

I feel that this should be considered—lengthening this this particular time of 37 days.

The second one is the umbrella provision. I feel that that should be maintained, because there are occasions when somebody will preemptorily put a lien on a job and freeze out many other suppliers who are just as entitled to receive payment as that person who put that lien on that particular job.

I would very seriously suggest to the Attorney General that he should consider that very very carefully before he removes that umbrella provision from this Act. It is a protection to the small suppliers and small suppliers need protection. I do not see why they should not have that umbrella protection in this Act.

Mr. Speaker: Is there any other member who wishes to speak to this before the Minister? The hon. Attorney General?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Speaker, I am much indebted to all the members in the House who have taken part in the debate, and I made note of their comments. I would say at once, it is our intention to afford the widest, fullest and most complete discussion of this legislation in committee, the legal bills committee, and we have made arrangements to give notice to all the persons who presented a brief or made presentation to the law reform commission. We welcome their attendance and I am sure they will have much to offer. This is a rather onerous, strenuous thing to face, but I think this type of legislation warrants that approach.

I would point out that as it is stated in the preamble to the bill, this study began in 1965, before the law reform commission, and there are some pretty hard-headed, if I may use that term, lawyers on that commission. They not only had their own experience to draw upon, but they had the presentation of every class of person and corporation that is engaged in the construction industry, in building in this province, and their briefs were well prepared, very thoroughly presented and over a long period of time.

Then after the first report which was submitted in 1966 and on which a bill was introduced in this House, Bill 190 I think it is, a further report was submitted and this bill is a result of that presentation.

Now, I would like to deal with the remarks first of the hon. member for Sarnia who spoke about the philosophy of the Act. I think I should clear up one point which I thought he seemed to make, that the law reform commission was flying in the face of some very capable advice given by a group of people familiar with and engaged in construction.

Actually, if one looks at the first report, while it does say on page 5 that the conference held, I think, by the Board of Trade of Metropolitan Toronto, was formed of a large number of groups, it does recite that after the study of the Act by those groups, a brief was presented to the Attorney General of Ontario in 1962.

But on page 6, the law reform commission points out there were sharp divisions of opinion in the conference with regard to proposals 6 to 13 which the hon. member referred to and which the report then goes on to discuss. The report further draws to our attention that those proposals 6 to 13—they give the authorship of those to the very eminent gentleman Mr. Biddell of the Clarkson Company whose primary point of view, I think, would be covered by the fact that he acts for a firm in his particular engagement as a trustee in bankruptcy.

But those were considered, and it is noted on page 13 that Mr. Biddell's submissions are supported by the Ontario Federation of Construction Association. That was in 1966.

They point out on page 13, that the Lumbermen's Credit Bureau took issue with those submissions. I want then to stress this point by drawing to the attention of the members that in 1968, in the bulletin of the Ontario Federation of Construction Association—this is some two years after these studies, and after Mr. Biddell's submissions as stated were supported by the Ontario Federation of Construction Association—the bulletin of that association reads as follows, if I might read briefly from it, Mr. Speaker:

In the summer of 1966, the first report of the Ontario Law Reform Commission on The Mechanics' Lien Act was published. The report contained a proposed Act which received first reading in the Legislature. These documents were distributed widely with the request that the interested parties submit their comments.

The federation presented its views in the brief submitted to the Attorney General the following December—that was in 1967—and then in the late summer of 1967 the law reform commission published its supplementary report.

And to skip a few lines and come down to the point I want to make:

Early in February, 1968, the Ontario Federation of Construction Association's supplementary brief on The Mechanics' Lien Act was published and submitted to the Attorney General and to the law reform commission.

Although the Federation feels that generally the Ontario Law Reform Commission has done an adequate job in bringing the Act up to date, recent developments in the construction industry and chronic conditions within the industry make it necessary for us to make further submissions.

Now, it is curious that the submissions which they set forth here are just two in number, and they do not make further argument about these submissions—6 to 13—to any extent at all. They do submit that there be a definition of substantial completion which we have incorporated in this Act now, and they also make a suggested amendment to the trust provisions, which is also to be found in this legislation.

So I think I may say that on the question of the philosophy of the Act there has been pretty substantial satisfaction given by this legislation to those very people who were studying it, presenting briefs, taking some issue with it, and arguing in 1966 for certain things to be done.

They have now made their final submissions and they refer to this present Act as being substantially very satisfactory, and we have adopted and inserted further to what the law reform commission presented, the two suggestions and amendments which they set forth.

I would like to refer to the transfer of jurisdiction—the proposal that these actions in mechanics lien matters be tried by the county courts.

You are aware, of course, that the law reform commission made the recommendation that the jurisdiction be taken from the Supreme Court of Ontario, where these actions must now be commenced, and be tried entirely by the county or district court judges.

Mr. Bullbrook: That is not correct.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Is that not right?

Mr. Bullbrook: I did not think it was. I thought they said where the quantitative jurisdiction applied to the supreme court, you did handle it in supreme court. Maybe I misread it. I am sorry; it is not that important right now.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: "We recommend"—these are their words—

We recommend that actions to realize a claim for liens should be tried in the county or district court with a right to any party to have proceedings removed into the supreme court.

Mr. Bullbrook: I am sorry that is it, "with the right to remove".

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Yes, upon application to a judge of the supreme court if the action would ordinarily come within the jurisdiction of that court.

The trial of these actions in the trial and district courts, with their extended jurisdiction, will provide a more efficient and expeditious procedure under the Act.

We looked at that very carefully and one hesitates, of course, to fly in the face of a recommendation of such an august body as the law reform commission which has studied the matter, but I think they failed—if I may say this—to appreciate that particularly in the County of York, where better than 50 per cent of our mechanics lien actions arise, and where the substantial, large claims are tried, the procedure has been that the actions are started before a supreme court judge. But, they are almost invariably, immediately referred to a Master of the court.

Mr. Singer: I wonder, Mr. Speaker, if the Attorney General would permit a question on that point?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Yes.

Mr. Singer: I had meant to make this point when I was speaking but it slipped my mind. In the county of York would it not be reasonable to allow these actions to start on an originating notice to the Master? Why should we have to go through the charade—that is all it is—of going before a supreme court judge, who makes the automatic order referring it to the Master? Why should there have to be that additional step, which crowds the supreme court calendar, when it has to go back to the Master in any event? I would think that could be a substantial improvement.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: That might be a very meritorious suggestion and I shall certainly consider it, but my main point is that to bring these actions before county court judges in the county of York would be, I think, a tragedy.

I think it would be confusion, worse, confounded. I do not want to be appearing too critical of the judges—but the judges do not have experience in this field—the county court judges of the county of York. But the Masters have had long experience, they are well versed in all the intricacies of this very—as you can see from the debate today—this very intricate subject, and it is one that needs experience.

It is one that needs an understanding of the building trade, and of the customs and practices which obtain there. It is one that needs great familiarity with the involutions of The Mechanics Lien Act, and to suddenly say to the judges of the county of York, you are fixed with mechanics lien actions, I think would bring about a result that we would certainly regret and that would not give satisfaction.

Now I had thought that it might be possible—

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I am sure there is some construction going on up in Grey-Bruce or Grey North.

Mr. C. G. Pilkey (Oshawa): Very little.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: These things might apply.

I had thought perhaps that if we could get sufficient additional county court judges that there would be a time when they could become familiar. Perhaps we could eventually have a specialized force of judges assigned to this, but as I think about that I am quite certain that judges would never perhaps accept the rule that they should forever sit only and deal only with mechanics lien actions. I am sure they are a little more temperamental than that perhaps, and that might not work either.

In any event, I think for the moment we must leave the jurisdiction where it is, particularly because of the county of York situation, because in the rest of the province I would say 99 per cent and I do not think I exaggerate—when I say that 99 per cent of mechanics lien cases are tried by the county and district court judges acting in their capacity as Masters.

As to the umbrella principle being removed, I was not sure whether the hon. member for Lakeshore was for it or against it. He seemed to waver when he made arguments—and I thought perhaps good arguments, on both sides—but I never got a conclusion. Perhaps he will make up his mind before we get to committee.

I note that the member for Kingston and the Islands has said it should be left in—that is, that the umbrella principle should not be removed. There is much to be said for its removal and the reason why it was taken out after very thorough consideration, and after a reversal of opinion by the law reform commission, was this.

Under the principle, as you know, that when one lien claimant starts his action, any time before that action is concluded, no matter how long it may take before its conclusion, the other lien claimant may come in—one who has failed to file a lien, or take any action. He finds that an action is going on, and in he comes at the eleventh hour, files a claim, and the court must stop, require pleadings, require detail, require the filing of the claim to the full extent, and the right to reply and refute, and so the action is delayed and the additional expense is incurred.

This is why the umbrella principle is removed, because it was causing great delay and great expense. Now, if the Act is clear on the point, that the lien must be registered and that action must be commenced by the lien claimant, and he knows his rights, then he can protect himself.

Mr. Singer: And he does not.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: But he will. We will put it in the bill, he will see it and his lawyer will know it. Surely, the hon. member for Downsview, who appears to be about to get up on his feet, is not going to say that if you state your law clearly then there is not any excuse for not knowing it, and for the lawyer acting in accordance with it.

Mr. Singer: I wonder if the Attorney General would permit a question here? It has always been my understanding that the theory of this Act was such that it was designed to protect the most minor workmen in the whole chain of command, the man who perhaps did not know about lawyers, who could not afford to consult a lawyer, who did not know anything at all about procedures.

The forms that are required to initiate the claim are of the simplest in their design. They do not need any great forms of technical drafting to get yourself on record to register the document against title, and that sort of thing.

It has always been my understanding again, that the principle of allowing the umbrella provision to apply was to allow the protection of the person, not those who are able to consult. The big contracting company is able to consult a lawyer and to stay on top of it, but to protect your labourer who perhaps has no other protection and needs that protection on his own, uses this rough and ready system which was designed for him and his protection.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I think that may have been true 20, 30, 40 years ago when this Act was first designed, when the workmen got, perhaps, $1 a day. But today, there is no workman who cannot afford to file a lien which costs, what, $1.50, $2.00? He is earning $6.00 or $7.00 an hour. Most of these chaps are artisans—electricians, plumbers, painters—these types of men are earning wages; if they cannot afford a lawyer we have given them a legal aid plan to afford them counsel. I think there is no need to consider that original principle which may have had merit in its day. I think we make the law clear, we make it distinct. File your lien, protect yourself. This is a much better principle than delay and uncertainty and expense caused by the umbrella. I think nobody will suffer by removing it from the Act. However, we can discuss it further in committee.

I have noted the submissions made by the hon. member for Riverdale. I have some concern, too, as he draws these to my attention, particularly the matter of the failure to complete the trust provisions so as to say what is required of the trustee. With respect to his argument that the chain of responsibility should extend down, link after link, I have some reservation about that.

I would just like, Mr. Speaker, very briefly, to point out that the law reform commission considered that very thoroughly and in its first submission, at page 14, this was said:

The proposal that the hiring party—

And I would substitute for hiring party—or at least I would add to that, “or owner”.

—should be financially responsible for the obligations of his contractor, if adopted, would create by a statute an entirely new concept of contractual relationships. It would mean that a contractor would be liable to pay sub-contractors, or sub-contractors of his sub-contractors, notwithstanding that he might have no power to select them or control them in the performance in the sub-contract. Likewise, an owner who hires a contractor would be liable to pay all the sub-contractors while he might not have power to control the terms of the sub-contractor. This we believe to be an undesirable change in the law of contract.

I think you can see that there is some serious argument against saying that the owner who starts the construction by saying “build me a house,” or “build me an apartment building” or “build me a business block” would be liable for people five links down the line. The electrician, the plumber, the excavator, people that he has no knowledge of, no opportunity to assess the value of their work, and perhaps would not think of hiring himself; to say that he must go down that chain, accept their work, accept their style of doing things, and be responsible to them through that chain, I think, leaves open a serious objection.

The converse of that, which the commission also considered, was the question of making those parties finish the job. That is the converse of the coin. There again, why should the owner, who might not want those people to work for him at all and would not accept their work and would not consider it adequate or satisfactory—how could you extend to him the principle of saying, “you must accept their work and they must do the work,” when neither one of them would be satisfied by that arrangement? I will not read the law reform commission’s comment, but it appears on page 15, where they point out that the requirement that the hired party be obligated to fulfill the contract is something that would be almost impossible to require by legislation, and would have many things to militate against it.

I have noted the suggestion that we might have some experts from The Department of Highways or The Department of Public Works give advice or be present to detail how governments protect workmen or sub-contractors. I think we might either furnish a submission on that or have them assist us in committee.

I think the rest of the things which I have noted may be dealt with also in committee, and certainly I would assure the House that we will proceed through committee, affording the widest opportunity for discussion and improvement of this bill, if that is possible after all the work the law reform commission has done upon it.

Mr. Speaker: The motion is for second reading of Bill 36.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

CONSOLIDATION OF REVISION OF REGULATIONS

Hon. Mr. Wishart moves second reading of Bill 63, an Act to provide for the consolidation of the revision of regulations.

Mr. Lawlor: Just very briefly, Mr. Speaker. This is the bill having to do with the bringing of the regulations, reviewing them and consolidating them every ten years. On this, I am wondering about shortening the time, or, at least, that some consideration to this should be given. In the case of the statutes themselves, perhaps ten years is growing too long.

In the case of the regulations, which is the point here, and in the absence of a scrutiny committee, as recommended by McRuer, I wonder if some consideration might not be given to having these regulations consolidated, reviewed every five years; and, secondly, while every year the regulations that have been issued, are obtainable to all members, of course, through the Gazette, still in order to keep up to date with them, I find you have clipped them out of the Gazette and set up your own indexing system.

I wonder if it is possible to bring them all under one head, yearly, without consolidation? Then, reviewing them and finding out which ones have been superseded or repealed or whatnot, done every five years instead of ten?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Speaker, I think perhaps the question of whether we do revision every five years or ten years is, perhaps, not really a question on the principle of this bill. There may be merit in that since the regulations are, perhaps, more numerous now than before. I believe they are consolidated every year into a form similar to the statutes. The regulations are—

Interjection by an hon. member.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: As to the McRuer recommendation that we have a review committee, that is under study now, I can assure the hon. member.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

THE PARTNERSHIPS REGISTRATION ACT

Hon. Mr. Wishart moves second reading of Bill 60, an Act to amend The Partnerships Registration Act.

Mr. Lawlor: Mr. Speaker, if I may, I have two points on this particular bill. I wonder sincerely about the urgency and need for this legislation at this time. Secondly, why the centralization of this particular sort of thing? I mean, I can see the centralization of chattel mortgages, bills of sale, and all that to a central registry, but why partnerships? What benefit does it confer?

In subsection, I think, 17, it is proposed to set up a registrar of partnerships and I take exception to setting up any further registrars. As you go further into the bill, section 18, you are going to have the central registry, maybe, located at such a place as the Lieutenant-Governor-in-Council orders, and until such an order is made it will be operated in conjunction with the registry office. Why cannot the actual registrar of deeds, as he does at the present time, control and govern and supervise the registration of partnerships without setting up another supernumerary department with extra cost to the taxpayers of the province in this regard?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Speaker, there will be very little extra cost—perhaps one or two persons at most to implement the provisions of this Act. As the hon. member is aware, partnerships are now registered in each county and district in the registry office where deeds and mortgages are registered in the county town, and there is no special official required for that.

In the county of York, where more than half the partnerships of the province are recorded, it is done in the same way in the registry office. And all that is planned by this Act, all that is intended is that from the outer offices, from the outside counties and districts, there shall come a report which can be included and placed on record in the county of York, so that we shall one have one central registry where you can check all partnerships. Even if they are operating in an outside county you could get the whole story on partnerships at one central spot.

I might say to the hon. member—and I am sure he would be interested in this as I read now from my notes that I have in connection with this bill, approximately one-half of all registrations are now made in the Toronto office. The remaining half are made in the other 59 offices. It is proposed that the partnership registrations for the whole province be centralized in the registry office of the registry division of Toronto, by combining one at a time, under the authority of the regulations, with the Toronto registry division the register division of the other countries and districts.

It is also proposed that when the computerized registration system under The Personal Properties Security Act is in operation, the partnerships registration be included in the computer, and accordingly made available through the telecommunication network to all county and district court offices.

This will enable a person to find a partnership recorded on a search under The Personal Properties Security Act and to ascertain through the same facility the individuals who comprise the partnership. It is part of the programme to which we are moving under our Personal Properties Security Act. By centralizing it to this extent at this time we, will move smoothly into the computerized system a couple of years from now, I would hope.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the Attorney General could advise us if there is any intention at any time in the future of trying to police the names of partnerships in the same manner as names of companies are policed. There will be a facility to do this once there is the centralized registration. And perhaps there is some merit in this, because today there is nothing to prevent as many people as want to from taking the same partnership name and registering it. And there is no law to prevent it, except that it is there and it will be available in due course in a central registry.

There is a complication, of course, because those lawyers who have to deal with The Department of the Provincial Secretary in sorting out names, often get into somewhat animated discussions about the similarity of names and wonder about the mysterious functioning of the names committee that operates out of The Provincial Secretary's department.

I gather the names committee is a nice way of saying, "I really didn't decide it, it is a committee that decided it". And the fellow who does not want to tell you he was making the decision says he is a committee and he will not tell you who is on the committee.

I wonder if the Attorney General has given any thought to this idea. I think there is some merit in it, but I hope if he agrees with me that he will not bring in the evils that I think presently exist in The Provincial Secretary's Department.

Hon. R. S. Welch (Provincial Secretary): Oh, come now! Evils!

Hon. Mr. Wishart: The hon. member is using the discussion of the principle of this bill to criticize the Provincial Secretary.

Hon. Mr. Welch: Subtle!

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I think perhaps I will just say briefly that there has been some thinking on this, but we did not think we could accomplish it at this time. It will move eventually into our control when we get our Personal Properties Security Act computer system in operation.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

THE COMMISSIONERS FOR TAKING AFFIDAVITS ACT

Hon. Mr. Wishart moves second reading of Bill 6, An Act to amend The Commissioners for Taking Affidavits Act.

Mr. Lawlor: Mr. Speaker, very briefly, a couple of points. One of the things I might do is point out to the members of the House, who may not be aware of it, that is under section 2 of this Commissioners for Taking Affidavits Act, every member of this House is a commissioner to do so. Apart from that—

Mr. Bullbrook: That is a significant matter of principle.

Mr. Lawlor: Well, it is a point of information which might be very valuable.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Speaker, I pointed that out on first reading.

Mr. Bullbrook: Oh, I am sorry, I apologize.

Mr. Lawlor: The member had better. We are having more trouble with the Liberals today than usual.

The commissioner, of course, is a judicial officer. In the course of this bill you will cease to be a judicial officer in the sense of an officer of the Supreme Court of Ontario. If such is the case, I have just one thing to draw to the attention of the Attorney General: You have to, in the circumstances, delete subsection 3 of section 6 if you are going to, as you have done, delete section 4. One follows from the other, I suggest, and perhaps it is an oversight. Thank you.

Hon. Mr. Welch: The member can keep his Q.C. now.

Mr. E. Sargent (Grey-Bruce): Mr. Speaker, is there any reason why a member of the Ontario Legislature cannot be a commissioner of oaths?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: He is!

Mr. Sargent: Why does not someone tell us these things?

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Sargent: Think of all the money we have lost. At 25 cents a throw or something. I do not know whether clause 3 is a good clause or not. Will the Minister explain the reason for clause 3, section 1?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member will understand that the debate on second reading is a debate on the matter of principle. Explanations of the wording or the meanings of words and clauses are proper matters for committee. Now, if the hon. member has something to say in connection with the principle behind the sections of this bill I am sure we would all be glad to hear it. Otherwise, of course, he will retain his questions for committee.

Mr. Bullbrook: On a point of order, you permitted the member for Lakeshore to advise all the members of this House on second reading that they were all commissioners for taking affidavits.

Mr. Speaker: And I permitted the hon. member for Grey-Bruce thereafter to ask why members of the House were not commissioners.

Mr. Bullbrook: Most respectfully to your honour, what has that to do with the principle of the bill?

Mr. Lawlor: I was just being graceful, that is all.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

CONSOLIDATION AND REVISION OF THE STATUTES

Hon. Mr. Wishart moves second reading of Bill 62, An Act to provide for the consolidation and revision of the Statutes.

Mr. Lawlor: Mr. Speaker, on this bill revising the statutes of Ontario, I wonder if a more thorough revision might not be contemplated. You say that within the terms of this bill what is being revised is the legislation as it was in 1960. But in the great volume five of the Revised Statutes of Ontario are a host of statutes which themselves should be subject to revision.

They come down in time to The Constitutional Act of 1791 where, I think, they are all picked up. You have—to the delight of the legal profession who have never looked at them, I am sure—such things as Quia Emptores, the statute of uses, sections from Magna Carta. Would not our bill of rights embody and supersede that?

In any event, there is a whole host of very ancient statutes. Is this the totality? I see nothing to indicate that this is all the other statutory law that is involved in the Statutes of Ontario. Is that the end of the matter?

In other words, what I am asking for is a total revision to bring all our legislation up to date. If the statute of uses still has validity in this context, alright, but I am just wondering about the one on champerty and the one on Quia Emptores and again, the statute on monopolies. I am sure it has no validity at all. You have The Fines and Forfeitures Act now which supersedes that.

So let us do a revision, if that is what you propose to do. I know from generation to generation very little is altered in the way in which this bill is set up. Looking back to the 1950 revision, I see that the very precise wording, the same wording is carried through from section to section.

Mr. Singer: There was not one in 1940.

Mr. Lawlor: In the third section of the bill it instructs the two legislative counsel to do certain things, among which, at the top of page 2 in the original text here, is: "To make such amendments as are unnecessary to bring out more clearly what it deemed to be the intention of the Legislature or to reconcile seemingly, inconsistent enactments."

Personally, I would not be much prepared to confer upon anyone the right to make such amendments as are necessary to bring out more clearly what is deemed to be the intention. If that intention is not clear enough on the face of it, then you had better amend the legislation. But to place in the hands of anyone, the power and authority to spell out what the legislation itself has failed to do, seems to me to be a usurpation of our own functions. While this wording has gone down, as I say, generation to generation; I still take exception to it and would direct your attention possibly to altering it.

Again, I notice that in the 1960 revision there are 169 pages in Schedule "B". The number of pages have been increasing from decade to decade. In other words, if you go through the sections and try to pair off the sections as they have been superseded, amended or what not, there are 169 pages of very close print. It is getting too great a load.

I am saying, in the case of statutes, not five but perhaps seven years might now become a legitimate period of time in which this type of consolidated revision should take place.

I place these matters, Mr. Speaker, before the Attorney General for their worth.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Speaker, I would like to just say a word further. I think the comments are well made, I did point out on the first reading of this bill that in addition to our legislative counsel who are mentioned I think in the bill and the procedure we shall follow thereby using our own legislative counsel, we had thought it might be wise to engage some very capable person.

I had in mind the lawyer who assisted the hon. Mr. McRuer, especially in his studies on civil rights, to sit with and to work with legislative counsel in this revision. There are some types of revision which can take place in the statute which will result from the recommendation that Mr. McRuer has made. And, of course, any changes that are made or as the hon. member points out for powers which the revising team will have, they will of course be noted and will be brought to the attention of the Legislature. When we come to examine the revised statute there will be nothing done which is not openly exhibited to the Legislature for its examination and for discussion for its approval.

I think this particular revision of the statute will be one that will bear in mind the changes which we wish to make, particularly in light of the fact that we will be introducing shortly a Statutory Powers Procedure Act. I think it will be helpful to have someone who is aware—having worked with Mr. McRuer particularly—of the suggestions which he made for admendments in statutory powers, powers of agencies and commissions of government, all of which I hope to have before this Legislature for study and for passage if we can accomplish it this session.

This revision will pick those things up and move with us as we go to change the powers which affect our rights in our statutes and all of which have been given out to agencies, boards, and so on.

I believe we have already engaged him.

Mr. Singer: Could you tell us his name then if he is engaged.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I think I am correct in saying that the gentleman we approached is Mr. Mundell, and I think we have been able to secure his services.

Mr. Sargent: As I read this bill and the following bill, the first parts of sub-sections 1 and 2 are identical in their phraseology. I read the enumeration of the commissioners; these are pretty vague and these people, who are employees of the legislative counsel, will be paid over and above their regular salary to do this job. I do not think that this Act intends it; it should not be the case. There are six employees of the legislative counsel; they should not be paid in addition to their job for doing this revision.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Speaker, in order to do this work (I am sure the hon. member will agree it is quite a tremendous piece of work) these people will work not only their regular day's work, but they will be working long hours, and long extra hours, without regard to what they are required to do under their present terms of employment. This will be extra service that they will be rendering.

Mr. Sargent: With the greatest respect, this does not happen. These people are employed by the government as people of the counsel, and you tell us that they are going to work extra hours and should be paid for that. This is not the case. They should not be paid; they have a job to do and as part of their job, they should be doing it. I do not go along with the fact that you can load on these extra remunerations for these people for doing their ordinary jobs. You have no right to take public funds to give these people over-time work.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Speaker, I think I must pursue this a little bit further. Surely the hon. member will agree that to take all the statutes—I believe he has sat here perhaps for the last 10 years, perhaps it just seems that long—

Interjection by an hon. member.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Perhaps if I were to ask him to take all of the statutes that have been passed in this Legislature and compare them to those on all our books and to carefully delete, substitute, rewrite, check and ascertain that nothing was left undone, and everything was in its final form, he would agree with me that, first of all, it is a tremendous job.

I do say to him, and I ask him to accept my word, that these gentlemen, the legislative counsel, will be working long beyond their ordinary duties. This is something that comes up once in ten years. They could sit quiet and say, "we want no part of it, we have enough to keep us busy now in preparing this legislation that you present in every Legislature," and we sit here now nine, ten months of the year. So they must be pretty busy at it is, and they must work extra time to get this work done. They are the most familiar, the most accomplished persons to do it. I am sure that they will give good value for whatever they are paid.

Mr. Sargent: There is no magic about this.

It is a straight compilation of the records in respect to—

Mr. Speaker: Order! The hon. member is out of order.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The hon. member is on that committee.

Mr. Speaker: The motion is for second reading of Bill 62.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

THE SUMMARY CONVICTIONS ACT

Hon. Mr. Wishart moves second reading of Bill 64, an Act to amend The Summary Convictions Act.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

THE CHANGE OF NAME ACT

Hon. Mr. Wishart moves second reading of Bill 65, an Act to amend The Change of Name Act.

Mr. Lawlor: Mr. Speaker, on this bill, I suggest that the head note, explaining the purpose or principle of this bill is not erroneous, perhaps, but I would like it explained a bit. "The amendments ensure more reliable information necessary for amending vital statistics records in Ontario, or other jurisdictions as a result of a change of name." I see nothing in this legislation.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: The hon. member is not discussing the bill now; he is discussing a head note to the bill, or a side note.

Mr. Lawlor: The head note to the bill explains the principle, I would suggest, Mr. Speaker.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Yes, all right.

Mr. Lawlor: Well, I have a second point, I will finish both of them.

My contention on this bill is that it makes a contribution to making the practice of law more difficult and obnoxious than it used to be, the business of having to supply marriage certificates and birth certificates in order to get a change of name registration.

If these certificates, or either one of them are obtainable in Ontario, then what happens is that you get it from the registrar in the vital statistics department anyhow, and then you send it back to them through the court officer. That is required to be done in the new legislation.

If these things are to be obtained outside of Ontario, then in most instances, if anyone is aware of trying to meet pension funds provisions, or in a whole range of different legal matters where people have to prove their age, or that they are married, or what not, from foreign countries, from countries that have been devastated by war, then you run into considerable difficulty obtaining this kind of documentation.

And you are requiring and making it mandatory that you do so now, except you say, "where practicable."

Now, what on earth does practicable mean? I can see solicitors being forced in most circumstances, where there are elongated names, or for one reason or another, largely foreign people want to change their names, anglicise them perhaps, they are going to have to make out lengthy affidavits, going through the hoops, performing legal somersaults in order to satisfy a court that they have done everything in their power in order to obtain the necessary documents, birth certificates or marriage certificates. I think it is completely unnecessary.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member completely misconstrues the purpose and intention here. It will assist these people and we ask them now and require that where practicable, they get and file on an application for a change of name, particulars of their birth place and date of birth, marriage, etc., which now is not required and which, when the change of name order goes through, the change of name goes to the Provincial Secretary's office, the vital statistics branch.

But when they come ten, 20, 30 years later to get their pension, there is no birth certificate to be produced, or there are no particulars of the fact that there was marriage, wherever they were married, when or where they were born.

It is suggested that, where practicable, they obtain that information, then it becomes a matter of record, and when they are faced in the time of need for their pension that material will be available. This is the time to do it, and this is for their benefit really.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

Hon. Mr. Welch moves the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to.

The House adjourned at 6.00 o'clock p.m.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

---

FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 21, 1969

The House met at 10.30 o'clock a.m.

Prayers.

Mr. Speaker: This morning we have visitors in the east gallery from a distance—students from the Blind River District High School in Blind River—and in the west gallery from the Adult Education Centre, College Street, Toronto. Later this morning we will be joined by students from Thistletown Middle Public School in Rexdale, and later from Frenchman's Bay Public School in Frenchman's Bay.

Petitions.

Presenting reports.

Motions.

Introduction of bills.

Before we proceed with the orders of the day I would like to remind members of the TB chest x-ray clinic which is operating on the first floor. You have all had notice and I suggest it might be a good opportunity for the members to check up on their vocal resources.

Mr. E. Sargent (Gery-Bruce): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day I would like to address a few remarks to the Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) in regard to the operation of your office.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member is quite entitled, if he has a point of privilege or of order, to raise it, but he has not the right to address remarks to anyone except to Mr. Speaker on the points of order or privilege. If there is something in connection with Mr. Speaker's office he wishes to raise, he may do so on a point either of personal privilege or order.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Speaker, the point is this: On Friday mornings, your ruling is that a question should be in before 8.45 a.m.; I was here at 8.30 a.m. and there was nothing open at 8.45 a.m. I submit to you very respectfully, Mr. Speaker, that the operation of your office should be on behalf of the people of Ontario and not Mr. Speaker himself. But you run the office to suit you. I phoned you in a very friendly manner about five minutes after 9 o'clock and we got off to a good start. But all of a sudden, I present my point and no one is right but you.

Now, I submit to you very respectfully that a question of importance to the public of Ontario coming at 9 o'clock or five minutes after 9 o'clock leaves you one hour and a half before the House sits. You have one hour and a half to assist the ministry to check it out, and in fact the Minister can fire from the hip and say he does not know, he does not want to answer. But your ruling is always your way, and I think that somewhere along the line, the customer is sometimes right. I hope it will be that way one time so the underprivileged over here will have a chance. You should reassess your ruling for Friday morning, Mr. Speaker, and I say that in a very positive, constructive way.

Mr. Speaker: Well, I am delighted to have the hon. member's views on this, but we went through all this last session. So far as Mr. Speaker is concerned, 8.45 o'clock is the hour on Friday morning, by which time I am here and if I am not my staff is. I met the hon. member at five minutes to 9 o'clock when I was going to my offices as he was coming down the stairs and he did not call me until five minutes after 9 o'clock. Then, of course, in any event he would have been too late. But, in any event, 8.45 o'clock is the hour that we have chosen, and it is Mr. Speaker's choice in order to give some possibility of questions being asked and answered. Some of the caucuses last session, and at the beginning of this session, adopted the practice of getting in all except the latest questions the night before, which gives the staff a chance to deal with them—because remember they must be dealt with by Mr. Speaker's staff first, and then by the Minister's staff. So that, at present at least, 8.45 o'clock on Friday mornings is the hour by which questions must be in Mr. Speaker's office.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for York South has the floor.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): I have a question for the Provincial Treasurer.

1. For how many years has The Treasury Department been making grants to the Ontario Humane Society?

2. How much was the grant for the current fiscal year?

3. What conceivable explanation is there for the statement attributed to Tom Hughes, general manager of the Ontario Humane Society, that the Ontario government doesn't give "a single lousy penny" to that organization?

Hon. C. S. MacNaughton (Treasurer): Mr. Speaker, the answer to the three-part question from the hon. member for York South is as follows:

1. The Treasury Department has been making grants to the Ontario Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals for the last 12 years. That is since the fiscal year of 1957-1958. Before that time, a grant was paid to the society through The Department of Agriculture.

2. The amount of $20,000 was paid in June 1968.

3. I do not know in what context the statement attributed to Mr. Hughes was made, and in view of the answer to items 1 and 2, I cannot provide a conceivable explanation.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I might ask the Minister a supplementary question? My investigations indicate that nowhere in the auditors' report nor in the public accounts can one find the facts that The Treasury Department is making a grant to the Ontario Humane Society. What is the explanation for that?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Mr. Speaker, first of all, the grant for the Ontario Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals is certainly voted every year, I think in the estimates of the Treasurer. Now as to where it can be found in the public accounts, I am not sure. I will have to pursue that if I may.

An hon. member: But it is voted every year!

Mr. MacDonald: I would appreciate it if the Provincial Treasurer would look into it, because I tried to pursue this a few weeks ago and somebody whom I approached checked through the provincial auditor and he knew of no grants.

A question of the Minister of Health, Mr. Speaker.

Can the Minister confirm that the superintendent of the London Psychiatric Hospital has refused to admit further patients from the city of London because funds available for transferring patients to homes for special care have been exhausted?

If such grants have been exhausted, can further moneys be made available so that the facilities of the psychiatric hospital will not be denied to persons resident in the city of London?

Third, are there any other communities for which a comparable ceiling on expenditure has been fixed?

And are there any communities, other than London, where the ceiling has been exceeded?

Hon. M. B. Dymond (Minister of Health): Mr. Speaker, this is a rather involved matter. It is just not as bald as it seems on the surface.

The superintendent at London has recommended that patients be refused admission if treatment in the London Psychiatric Hospital would prevent those patients from receiving support from the social services department of the city of London if and when it was required.

Rather than lose this entitlement to assistance for the patient it will be to the advantage of the patient to be admitted to the psychiatric service of Victoria Hospital or St. Joseph's Hospital.

I do understand, however, that meetings are being arranged with officials in London to clarify this issue and make sure that full and effective use will be made of all resources in the community.

The answer to parts two and three is no.

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order—

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: On a point of order, if I may—

Mr. Singer: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Downsview rose first on a point of order.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, in connection with what the member for York South has just said, I would refer him to page W13 of the Public Accounts 1967 and 1968, where he will note the auditor's report concerning a $20,000 grant to the Ontario Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Grey-Bruce has questions.

Mr. Sargent: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A question to the Minister of Education.

In view of the moral revulsion of the Canadian public to demonstrations, sit-ins and property damage in universities, and the fact that 99 per cent of students and faculties want to get on with the job of education, will the Minister advise why the government in Ontario cannot take the position that those who break the law in our universities should be treated like any other adult who breaks laws?

Hon. W. G. Davis (Minister of Education): Mr. Speaker, I think one should point out at the outset that there has been no demonstration involving property damage or violence at any Ontario university to date, and I think this is a statement that must be made and understood by the members opposite. I think also the hon. member read, as it was reported in the press, my own speech at the University of Windsor last Monday. I pointed out very clearly that the public cannot, nor can the government, tolerate violence, destruction of property or the breaking of the laws of this jurisdiction; and this, I believe, was made abundantly clear.

I would think, Mr. Speaker, that the hon. member must retain some degree of objectivity in these situations and while there is a tendency to relate situations in other jurisdictions to the possibilities here, I think it should be made abundantly clear that there is perhaps no connection between violence and destruction as it has taken place in other jurisdictions, and the situation in Windsor, which has now been resolved. I think it should be pointed out, Mr. Speaker, that in the situation at Windsor, while one does not condone the practice of, shall we say, a sit-in, nonetheless the administration, I believe, acted in the best interest of the institution as they saw it; and the matter has now been resolved—I would not say necessarily to everyone's satisfaction, but nonetheless an agreement has been reached.

The members opposite might be interested to know that I just discovered a few minutes ago that those students sitting in the theological faculty of the University of Windsor took the precaution to wash the floors before they left the premises late last night.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that in America such demonstrations and property damage—and probably in Montreal—were organized by outside groups who are communist dominated, will the Minister advise that he has instructed the staffs of universities to treat these people like adults insofar as breaking the law is concerned? Has he issued those instructions from his department?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I think the administrators of our universities, our faculties—and I would suggest the vast majority of students—recognize that students are being treated as adults by our society. They recognize that students have no right to break the law and, as I say, we have had no destruction. Neither have we had violence on the campuses here. I would suggest to the hon. member that he not be too greatly influenced by situations happening elsewhere.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member has a further question of this Minister?

Mr. Sargent: Will the Minister advise if the sex film shown in Bessborough Drive Public School in Toronto to Grade 7 and 8 students, discussing such subjects as how to cope with a frigid wife and how to deal with prostitutes, is to be standard fare to all public schools across the province?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I would be interested in asking the hon. member whether he is suggesting it should or should not be. However I shall endeavour to point out the facts of the situation to him.

Some two years ago the Home and School Association of Bessborough Drive Public School in East York began discussing the place of home and school in family life education—it is a very difficult topic, let us face it—and as a result they developed one or two programmes using films and panel discussions. On February 11 the home and school meeting for parents only, initially, discussed the pros and cons of how better to deal with family life education.

The film "Learning to Live" was shown and a panel of parents of the district led the discussion. The parents—and I emphasize this—decided to hold a further meeting on February 18 for parents and their children. The film was shown, followed by discussion groups of parents and the students involved. Neither the use of the film nor the meeting of the home and school association was sponsored by The Department of Education. This was done entirely on their own initiative.

Mr. Sargent: Does the Minister condone showing Grade 7 and 8 students this kind of fare?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Well, Mr. Speaker, I would think the hon. member might wish to view the film and try to understand what they are trying to accomplish before he asks me whether I condone the showing of this type of film.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Windsor West.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order, order!

Mr. H. Peacock (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I had a question for the Minister of Education relating to the University of Windsor occupation, but I have asked the Minister, through you, Mr. Speaker, not to place the question today in light of the settlement of the dispute between the students and the administration.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member has a question from yesterday of the Minister of Revenue.

Mr. Peacock: Yes, Mr. Speaker, to the Minister of Revenue. In view of the statement of the Toronto Real Estate Board of February 18 that residential construction costs in Metro Toronto have gone up about five per cent in the past year, or about $600 for the average house, is the Minister prepared to rebate the provincial five-per-cent sales tax on low cost homes to offset this rise which is pricing more families out of the housing market?

Hon. J. H. White (Minister of Revenue): Mr. Speaker, a rebate of this magnitude does not lie within the scope of the Minister of Revenue. The Treasurer of Ontario is responsible for initiating economic policies, including tax rate and tax bases, and ordinarily he makes his policy and taxing plans known to the Legislature when he presents his Budget, which will be a couple of weeks from now. The answer will likely reveal itself at that time.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Humber.

Mr. G. Ben (Humber): Mr. Speaker, I have a couple of question of the hon. Minister of Health.

1. Will the Minister bring in legislation controlling the circumstances under which human ova can be fertilized by human sperm in artificial conditions in Ontario?

2. In the absence of such specific legislation, what is the present legal position in this matter?

3. To the Minister's knowledge, are any experiments presently proceeding in Ontario laboratories, hospitals, schools of medicine or elsewhere, similar to those now causing an outcry in Great Britain?

4. For the information of this House, will the Minister table the details, or learned journal sources, of the genetic experiments carried out by Dr. Robert Edwards and his colleagues?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Speaker, I have not given any consideration to bringing in such legislation as the hon. member for Humber suggests. There is no specific legislation dealing with the matter to my knowledge. I am not aware of any such experimentation going on at the present time in Ontario although it might very well be.

There is no need for any experimental bodies to report such projects or any other projects to us unless they are asking for grants, and I cannot see any good purpose served by tabling these scientific papers. They will be available in all medical libraries, the departmental library included, for the use of anyone who is particularly interested in this kind of experimental reporting.

Mr. Ben: Mr. Speaker, I have another question from yesterday, again to the Minister of Health.

1. In paragraph 679 in the report on the pollution of air, soil and water in the townships of Dunn, Moulton and Sherbrooke in Haldimand county, the statement is made that the committee and council viewed the film, "Air of Death", officially, in the CBC studio on Thursday, February 22, 1967, at 10.30 a.m. Will the Minister take this opportunity to correct the record, in the light of this obvious error, since the film was not shown to the public until eight months after this date?

2. What criteria were used to determine the "recognized and accepted scientists" referred to in paragraph 43 of the report?

3. Is there a professional or other peer group ranking to justify this objective selection of, "persons known for their interest and reputation" and those "recognized as expert to the general discipline" according to paragraph 44 of the report?

4. What were the special arrangements under which the additional consulting experts appeared before the committee, that is paragraph 46?

5. To what extent was the council for the local air pollution committee, Mr. Geoffrey Brooks, of Welland, assisted from public funds, by way of mailing and typing costs, legal service, and so on?

6. Since the publication of the Hall report, has Mr. Drysinger, the sulphur dioxide specialist of The Department of Mines, or any other technically competent person, visited the automatic testing station adjacent to former Reeve Siddall's home in Sherbrooke township, or the candle recorders in the immediate area? Has he made a report to the government and will the Minister table this report?

7. Is the Minister prepared to accept the reasoning behind the statement of Dr. Lawther—paragraph 102—that the main concern is what the individual is breathing and not what is emitted from power stations or industrial stacks? Does this not imply an abdication of long-term control?

8. Does the Minister still accept the proposition in paragraph 129 of the report that “in this Port Maitland study we are dealing only with the effects of inorganic fluorides, and these only on a quantitative time basis, which may result in a demonstrable effect of chronic fluorosis. There are no organic fluorides involved, nor is there any possibility of acute fluorosis being a factor.”

9. Will the Minister undertake to table the answers to these questions before March 18, 1969, and this can go as an enquiry?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Speaker, I would ask that this be put on the order paper for answer in that manner.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Cochrane South has a question of this Minister.

Mr. W. Ferrier (Cochrane South): I have a question of the Minister of Health.

Mr. Ben: I understand the Minister said he had some answers on Thursday to questions that I had asked on Wednesday. Perhaps the Minister can dispose of them now?

Mr. Speaker: If the hon. Minister has answers, when he has answered the question from the hon. member for Cochrane South he certainly would have the floor to answer them.

Mr. Ferrier: Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Health. Has the Minister any statistics on the number of persons electrocuted by faulty diagnostic equipment in Ontario hospitals, similar to the United States as published in the Toronto Telegram of February 20?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: The answer is no. I am seeking some factual and scientific basis for these statistics which are purported to have been reported in the Telegram of this date.

Mr. Ferrier: Would the Minister accept a supplementary question? Are inspections made of this equipment to see that it is not faulty? Does he know if this is done?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: I would have to state, Mr. Speaker, that I could not answer that with any accuracy at this time, but we are finding out all about this.

There are several questions of which I had taken notice. The hon. member for Humber asked question 658 which is already in Hansard and I shall not repeat it. The answer is, a representative of the air pollution control service was on the committee drawing up the CMA code on industrial air pollution. It will be discussed thoroughly with the CMA after publication.

2. This will be decided on the outcome of our discussion.

3. The air pollution control service makes available to all interested parties all the information it has in the library and on file.

4. This will be a matter of government policy.

The hon. member asked question 656, which is also on the order paper or in Hansard and which I shall not repeat. The answer:

1. Under The Industrial Safety Act of The Department of Labour and under The Air Pollution Control Act, 1967, The Department of Health is able to obtain complete information regarding any industrial process in Ontario.

2. The Air Pollution Control Act, 1967, gives the Minister of Health the power necessary to control air pollution from any source in Ontario.

3. (a) The industrial processes of the Electric Reduction Company Limited, the Sherbrooke Metallurgical Company, were outlined under oath before the commission and were full disclosures as far as we were aware.

3. (b) As far as the occupational health services and the air pollution control service of my department are aware, the operations of these companies are not in contravention of the Geneva convention. However, we only have a general knowledge of this convention and are not aware of all its details.

The hon. member for—

Mr. Ben: Mr. Speaker, on the two that the Minister has answered for me, will he accept a supplementary question?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Yes!

Mr. Ben: On question 658, in answers to 4, the Minister's answer was that this is government policy. Would the Minister please elaborate? Is it government policy—the need for taking over pollution control in this province, and putting all these different types of pollution under one heading? Or is the Minister saying it is government policy, therefore he does not have to give me an answer? Which does he mean?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: The fourth part of the question, Mr. Speaker, is quite clear. This will be decided on the basis of government policy, whether it is all centralized under one department or not.

Mr. Ben: What the Minister is saying is that he is answering it; it is government policy and he need not answer it.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: It will be revealed—

Mr. Ben: All right. The next supplementary question deals with question 656, specifically with 3(a).

The Minister, I understand, presumes that the Electric Reduction Company officers and the Sherbrooke Metallurgical Company officers were testifying under oath, they revealed all there was to reveal about their operations. Could not either of these companies have been producing toxic products which were not involved in this investigation and therefore did not reveal anything about it because they were not asked about it?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: This is a very hypothetical question, Mr. Speaker. Really, you know, this whole subject was a matter for a Royal commission and a Minister has no way of knowing what was revealed except as set out in the report of the commission. I really could not answer the question with any degree of intelligence.

Mr. Ben: Perhaps I should rephrase it. Will the Minister, Mr. Speaker, satisfy himself that neither of these companies are manufacturing any toxicants which could be pollutants unknown to the general public?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Yes, Mr. Speaker, we can certainly have access to that information and we will satisfy ourselves of this.

Mr. Speaker, I still have two other questions of which I took notice. The hon. member for Scarborough East asked question 666.

The answer: This is a matter of government policy which is currently being given very thorough attention and which will in due course be announced in this House.

The hon. member for High Park asked question 684. The answer: 18,000 contraceptive pills have been dispensed during the past year at Whitby Psychiatric Hospital. Since contraceptive pills are used for a variety of purposes which relate to the particular needs of the patient, it does not naturally follow that the figure quoted above indicates they were all used for birth control. The department does not interfere in the doctor's judgment of what he shall prescribe for his patients.

Mr. T. Reid (Scarborough East): May I ask the Minister a supplementary question?

The question, if I remember correctly, was what changes had been made in the present Ontario government scheme to receive the federal Medicare grant. Do I understand correctly from the Minister's answer, Mr. Speaker, that he does not now know what changes would have to be made in order to be eligible for the federal Medicare grants?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: I think, Mr. Speaker, my answer was quite clear and needs no further elaboration.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for High Park has a question.

Mr. M. Shulman (High Park): A question to the Minister of Correctional Services.

Why was Mr. Stanley W., a prisoner at Burwash, transferred to the Sudbury jail?

How many other prisoners have been transferred from Burwash to district jails recently?

Why were they transferred?

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister of Correctional Services): Mr. Speaker, the answer to the first question, as to why the certain prisoner was transferred to the Sudbury jail, is to face criminal charges.

The answer to the second part of the question—how many other prisoners have been transferred from Burwash to district jails recently?—is 24.

The third part, as to why they were transferred: Eight to face criminal charges; 16 for security reasons, that is for either their own protection or for the protection of the staff and inmate population of Burwash.

Mr. Shulman: Will the Minister accept a supplementary question?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Well, Mr. Speaker, particularly in view of the nature of these particular questions, I think it would be inadvisable to discuss it publicly at this time.

Mr. Shulman: Does that mean no?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: That means no.

Mr. Speaker: Before the first order of the day is announced, may I draw to the attention of the members that everyone has had a memo about a meeting of the Ontario branch of the Commonwealth Parliamentary Association on Thursday night, between the afternoon and evening sessions. I would hope that a great number of you would be able to be present and learn something about this very important organization.

Orders of the day.

Clerk of the House: The first order, resuming the adjourned debate on the amendment to the amendment to the motion for an address in reply to the Speech of the Honourable, the Lieutenant-Governor at the opening of the session.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

Mr. T. P. Reid (Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, I would like to continue where I left off in adjourning the debate last Wednesday.

And I would like to bring to the attention of the Provincial Secretary (Mr. Welch), through you, Mr. Speaker, the problem of the high cost of beer in northern and northwestern Ontario. He mentioned in the House, yesterday I believe, that this was being investigated but I would like to point out to him a couple of other facts that he may or may not be aware of that he can pass on to the liquor control board.

The average cost of a case of beer in northwestern Ontario is approximately 25 cents a case more. I understand there is a brewer in northern Ontario who ships to Toronto and sells the beer in Toronto at about the same price as Toronto stores, while charging 25 cents a case more where he brews it in northern Ontario. A great deal of the beer we get in northwestern Ontario comes from Manitoba and we cannot understand why we should have to pay 25 cents a case more.

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): Tory red tape.

Mr. T. P. Reid: I would like to outline very briefly some of the requests that I would like to make to this government on behalf of my riding. I will not say "demand", one does not get anywhere with that. But I would just like to reiterate the need for a road between Highways 11 and 17 in northwestern Ontario. This will allow much better communications, much cheaper transport, for the people of northwestern Ontario, and for the people of the Ignace-Dryden area in particular, and of the Atikokan and Fort Frances area. I would hope that the Minister of Highways (Mr. Gomme) would once again give serious consideration to the building of such a road.

I would ask again the Minister of Correctional Services (Mr. Grossman), through you, Mr. Speaker, that he consider most strongly and put it as No. 1 on his list of priorities, the need for a new provincial jail in the Rainy River district. I am sure the Minister is aware of the very poor conditions, the crowded conditions that exist in the present jail now located at Fort Frances.

Third, what we in northwestern Ontario—when I think across the province as a whole—would like to see is a comprehensive regional economic policy, a policy of economic development for the province as a whole. I intend to go into this particular topic during the Budget Debate so I will leave that for now. Most of all, what we in northwestern and northern Ontario would like to see is a change of attitude on the part of this present Conservative government to the needs and desires of the people of northwestern Ontario.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I spoke briefly—not so briefly—on Wednesday about the breakdown of democracy in this province due to the arrogant and dictatorial attitude of this present Conservative government. I would say to you, sir, that come the next election this will be one of the very facts that leads to the defeat of that present government and for a new Liberal government under our leader (Mr. Nixon).

It has become most apparent, certainly, Mr. Speaker, that the Liberal Party in Ontario under our leader is the only logical alternative to the present government.

We would postulate the fact, we all postulate the fact, that the end of this government is long overdue. It is finished. It is out. It is going to be defeated in the next election. We are the only alternative to take over. You do not have to take my word for it. I refer you to the speeches and statements of the hon. member for Riverdale (Mr. J. Renwick), so that takes care of their forming the next government.

I say this, Mr. Speaker, because it becomes readily more apparent everyday that the government of Ontario, this present Conservative government has become irrelevant to the people of Ontario because the people of Ontario have become irrelevant to this Conservative government.

Mr. F. Young (Yorkview): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. L. M. Reilly (Eglinton): On a point of order!

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Eglinton has a point of order?

Mr. Reilly: Yes. I think there was some misunderstanding as far as our list was concerned. The next speaker should be a speaker from the Liberal Party. The Liberal whip has suggested that he does not want to forego his place and under the circumstances I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that the next one should be a speaker from the Liberal Party.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps we could hear from the Liberal—

Mr. Nixon: Well, Mr. Speaker, unfortunately our whip is not with us at the moment. I understand that the member for Huron-Bruce (Mr. Gaunt) was next on our list, but the member for Windsor-Walkerville (Mr. B. Newman) is prepared to go ahead if that meets with your approval and by agreement. But we have just had a Liberal speaker.

Mr. Young: Mr. Speaker, in connection with the point of order I might say this: In the last three or four days there has been some problem about placing in this debate, and yesterday afternoon the hon. member for Huron-Bruce and I made an agreement regarding timing. I said that if there was time for him to get through yesterday afternoon I would stand down and he would take the place. He agreed that if that were not possible, I would go on for whatever remaining time there would be and then finish today. This was the understanding that I had with the hon. member for Huron-Bruce. So I am proceeding, Mr. Speaker, and I see no reason why that should not hold at this time.

Mr. Reilly: Mr. Speaker, it is unfortunate that we did not have an opportunity to discuss this with the three whips together. I am sorry that this has happened, but actually what has taken place in most instances is we have transferred a member from the same party into a place if he could not be here, and under the circumstances this is all that we are asking to do now. If a Liberal member cannot be here in his place we are substituting another Liberal member for him. The name of the member for Yorkview was far down on the list and if he wants to substitute for the next NDP speaker, this is excellent and I think this is the way it should be.

Mr. Young: I think, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Hamilton East (Mr. Gisborn) was on that list.

Mr. Reilly: That is right.

Mr. Young: And my name was substituted some days ago for that of the member for Hamilton East.

Mr. Reilly: And I think this is—

Mr. Young: —and at the time—

Mr. Reilly: Under the circumstances I think—

Mr. Young: —the time, the understanding was that I would take his place on the list. The member for Huron-Bruce and I worked this thing out between us; depending on time whoever could come in at the time would come in. That was agreed upon and that is the basis I am operating on this morning.

Mr. Reilly: Mr. Speaker, there is nothing wrong with that and the member for Hamilton East is still on our list. If the member for Huron Bruce wants to substitute for the member for Hamilton East, he will be the next speaker following the Liberal speaker.

Mr. Young: Mr. Speaker, I understand that the member for Eglinton was not even in on these negotiations—they were carried on by another member of his party, not by him.

Mr. Nixon: Well, Mr. Speaker, this seems to be an incredible waste of time and I regret it. I would say to you sir, that the member for Windsor-Walkerville is prepared to speak for us now or at your convenience and we will certainly abide by your ruling.

Mr. Speaker: It has been customary, at least during my tenure of this position, for the party whips to arrange the list of speakers for the Throne Speech and Budget speech and other debates, and the list which has been furnished to me reads: Rainy River, Huron-Bruce and Hamilton East. Unless there is some reason for differing from that list I must take it that that has come from those who make these arrangements. Far be it from me to make my judgment override that of the party whips, as furnished to me by the chief government whip, presumably after consultation with the other parties.

Since it is apparent that the Liberal Party has the next speaker on the list furnished to me and they are prepared to proceed it would seem to me, with all deference to the hon. member for Yorkview, that his position in the list of speakers is that of the next NDP speaker, who would have been Mr. Gisborn.

I make no ruling because as far as I am concerned this is something that is within the purview of the members of the House, represented by their party whips. We have just now heard from the chief government whip and from the leader of the Opposition that this is the order that should be followed. I really see no reason why I should disturb that, on the basis that it was an arrangement made among the parties.

I would be glad if the hon. member for Yorkview wishes to speak further to the matter because I have no desire to change the list or put him out or put somebody else in.

Mr. Young: Well, Mr. Speaker, on that point of order. This arrangement was pretty definite yesterday. The member for Eglinton was not a part of it, and the agreement was between the member for Huron-Bruce and me, that we would work this out and this was agreed to by the people concerned. The hon. member for Huron-Bruce and I had agreed, as I said before, that depending on time one of us would go on.

He was very anxious to get on yesterday afternoon and I was agreeable he should, but said that if there was no time left for him to speak and to present his full case I would take the residue of the time and start my speech at that time. This did not happen and so I took for granted that when the hon. member for Rainy River (Mr. T. P. Reid) was through I would take my place as agreed.

Mr. B. Newman (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, rather than hold up the proceedings of the House I will pass and allow the member for Yorkview to continue with his remarks.

Mr. Young: Well, Mr. Speaker, I say thank you to the hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville for this opportunity, and I think it is simply carrying out the understanding we had. It is good on his part to give way in this case and to allow me to go forward as I had planned. Now I do want to say, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Reilly: Mr. Speaker—excuse an interruption for a moment, on a point of order. I think that in future what we should do is not have an agreement between two members but among the government whips.

Mr. Nixon: If we can find them—

Mr. Speaker: Before the hon. member proceeds, so that he is not interrupted unduly later, may I just say this, that I shall in future, on an occasion such as this, rule that the list given to me by the party whips is the list of the order of debate and if there has been any change made otherwise it will not be recognized by me unless it has been approved by the party whips and the new list order given to me.

Now that is fair notice, I think, to everyone here, private members as well as whips.

Mr. F. Young (Yorkview): Mr. Speaker, I would like to add by congratulations to you and to the deputy Speaker for the way in which you have handled the business of this House. I do not know that any more can be said than has already been said. I would simply like to point out to the House the way in which the Speaker has been taking an interest in the welfare of the people concerned, in and around the environs of this assembly.

I point out one thing, Mr. Speaker has taken a particular interest in the page boys and the situation in which they operate. He found, for example, they were down in the basement tucked away in very inadequate quarters. Finally, he has been able to place them on the fourth floor in quarters which are respectable and good and I think we should congratulate him for this move as well as many other moves in which he is now engaged.

Mr. Speaker, on November 28 last the Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) outlined government policy in respect to regional planning and regional government. This was followed on December 2 by the Minister of Municipal Affairs (Mr. McKeough) who filled in the details of the policies concerned. Since then we've had announcements about the future of the Peel-Halton area, the Niagara region and the Lakehead.

We congratulate the government for at last recognizing the need for bringing our municipal structure into the twentieth century. Whether it's now prepared to move with the speed and determination necessary is yet to be determined. Some signs are good and we'll await developments with interest. I agree that the people concerned must be deeply involved in the reorganization process, and so change can't be forced too rapidly. But the tragedy is that while the present Minister seems ready to act with some decisiveness, this government has to accept the responsibility of delaying action for at least a decade too long.

We're late in getting started in this province. But now that we are started the province must give strong leadership. There'll always be those in the municipal field who resent having their small empires disrupted. There'll be many who just won't or can't understand the need for change to meet modern needs. They sense correctly that they'll be swept aside in the new wave of progress and they'll fight it bitterly and relentlessly.

But on the other hand, there's a growing body of informed municipal officials in this province who are pressuring for change. They want the kind of regional municipal government which this government at long last seems ready to organize. The rising municipal crisis of recent years has forced a realization of the need for a wider tax base and a more modern approach to the whole problem of local government.

Recently this government has been moving cautiously through a series of local government reviews, and through a leisurely study of those reviews at the local level. I have little quarrel with this general approach except that it started many years too late, with the result that the municipal crisis is now intensified far more than it should have been if action had started sooner. Time now becomes an urgent factor in the whole process. We can no longer afford the leisurely pace so far adopted. I will concede that the Minister has been moving a bit faster of late and I hope this augurs well for the future.

The fact is that within a short time we'll have a good many studies completed. By then a pattern should emerge which should make further individual time-consuming studies of this kind unnecessary. General principles are being laid down. Common details of basic organization are being recommended. At least a broad outline of the kind of municipal structure which can be viable and efficient in tomorrow's world is being more and more clearly seen.

More than this the Prime Minister has outlined the kind of detailed studies and analysis being carried on by governmental agencies and universities. All kinds of information about the whole province is being compiled and co-ordinated. We will have within a reasonable time the kind of information upon which a comprehensive land use plan can be based and I hope the Minister will move on that with all possible speed. But more than that, with the information at his disposal, the Minister should shortly name a commission made up of people knowledgeable in the municipal field who will use this information and come up with recommendations with respect to regional government in the rest of the province.

Such a commission should not have to go through the detailed processes faced by Mayo, Plunkett and Fyfe. They should be able, within a reasonable time, to put forward a series of proposals for regional government for most of the remaining areas of the province. With the information now or soon available, such a commission could do a far better job than that attempted by Smith.

Taking up where the present studies leave off, it should be able to move quickly in areas like London, Windsor, Kingston, Grey-Bruce, the Ottawa valley and Hastings. The north would need special attention because of the vast distances there. But here too, and quickly, solutions must be found to add new dimensions to this challenging and vital area of the province.

The tentative plans thus outlined by the commission would go to the areas concerned for detailed study and discussion. Suggested amendments would come back. Boundaries and other matters might be hotly contested. At this point, even when complete agreement might be lacking at the local level, the Minister would, of necessity, as was done in Toronto, Ottawa and Niagara, develop the final framework and translate it into law.

This process cannot be stretched out over too long a time span. Once the big centres are reorganized the smaller ones can't be left dangling without serious consequences to them. The new, powerful regions will inevitably act as magnets drawing population and industry to them at the expense of their smaller 19th century neighbours.

In another sense, too, there'd be a distinct advantage to the whole redevelopment process to have discussions about reorganization going on in as many areas as possible over the same period of time. The two way flow of ideas would be voluminous, stimulating, and—we hope—illuminating. It would highlight in the public mind the need for change, the process by which change is effected, and the purpose and shape of the emerging regional municipalities.

So far this kind of discussion has been isolated. It flares up in the local area where proposals are made. In Toronto, Ottawa, the Lakehead and Niagara, the result is that broad general principles are lost in the local details. Plan after plan being thrown into the realm of public debate would highlight the general principles involved as well as local details of settlement. It would be an extremely healthy process for local democracy in Ontario.

There are a couple of comments which I would like to make at this time about the general outline the Minister gave of his approach to regional government. I got the distinct impression that the Minister thinks of the present municipal units, combined and strengthened to over 8,000 people as continuing, with the regional government as an added level between them and the province. It seems more to the point to think of regional government as taking the place of the old units. The regional government is the new municipality—larger, more powerful, designed to meet the needs of the technological age. The region is the municipality without its power being undercut by a continuation of smaller municipalities either singly or in combination within its borders.

This is one of the great problems Metro Toronto faces right now. It has six individual power centres each warring with the others for industrial and apartment assessment while resisting low cost housing. The recent reorganization in Metro Toronto had to take place because the original set up with too much power still in the hands of the lower tier resulted in a growing imbalance of assessment and tax load. The rich got richer and poor got relatively poorer. The New Metro was designed to correct to some extent that imbalance.

But the process will continue even though at a slower pace. The same thing will happen in regional municipalities where the lower tier governments have relatively strong power. The original mistake in Metro Toronto is being avoided to some extent by the county setup in education and by greater dilution of the power at the lower tier level. Eventually school boundaries will have to be brought into harmony with the regional boundaries. This is something we pointed out at the time the bill came in. While politically it may now be necessary to leave considerable power in the hands of lower tier municipalities in order to sell regional government to them, eventually this power will erode to the centre.

While recognizing the political necessity of achieving regional government in some areas in this way, I would like to outline the type of regional government which we think ought eventually to come. We consider that two functions are extremely important in a workable regional municipality. One, ultimate municipal power must rest with the regional council and two, there should be smaller units within the region which give people a sense of community—a feeling that they are not lost in big government—that they can reach local officials close at hand, within their own community.

To achieve these ends, final fiscal and planning control must rest with the region. But smaller communities or wards would be designated with the region. Each one would, as far as possible, be a natural community around a shopping centre, a village with its natural service area—that sort of thing.

In Metro Toronto the communities can be as we have suggested the planning districts, or modifications of them. In setting up these communities old municipal boundaries would be ignored except where they contribute to the community idea and contain the desired population.

Each of these communities would elect its own small council of three to five councillors, with the one getting the highest vote representing that community on the regional council. He might also act as chairman of the community council. The community councils would be chiefly administrative bodies.

They would submit local budgets to the regional councils for matters such as local streets, sidewalks, parks, and related services. The budgets would be screened, approved or altered by the regional council and sent back. The community council would decide how the budget would be spent—where that local improvement should be installed, where that sidewalk should go, what parks should be given what attention. This all within the budget specified.

This plan would simplify representation—it would be direct, and representation by population. It would put power where it should be—at the centre, and it would provide logical participation and a sense of community within the larger regional municipality.

Mr. Speaker, this plan may be some distance in the future for some regional governments, but there are areas where it should be tried now and I recommend it to the Minister's consideration.

The Minister has set his minimum population target at 150,000 to 200,000. I'm not going to quarrel with that although I have quoted the figure of 250,000 in this House, and there are many municipal authorities who think that should be a minimum figure. In any case in this province, we'll have to balance space with population and we will come out somewhere between these figures.

Another welcome statement of the Minister's is that he plans to hand back to the regional municipalities powers which have been alienated to boards, commissions and to certain provincial departments, and that he plans to co-ordinate provincial administrative units with regional municipal boundaries.

The one big area which the Minister did not mention is that of finance. There's no question that the new municipalities can't be financed as the old ones now are. The growing crisis in municipal finance can not be much longer ignored.

The halting steps which the government took last year as an emergency election measure have helped but little. The tax rebate has now been recognized even by this government as a colossal blunder. If the total amount of the tax rebates had been pro rated and handed to the municipalities, it would have been a clean cut operation and would have resulted in more relief to the taxpayer and we would not have had the administrative cost. But as it is the promise of the rebate which raised the rents, apartment tenants have been in turmoil, as the government knows all too well!

Both provincially and federally, tax reform commissions have recently reported, but the Ontario commissioner did not have too much to offer as far as municipal tax reform was concerned. He seemed to hope that regional government would solve the problem. But it will not.

With regional government must go a new system of providing for revenues if the new system is to work adequately.

I suppose that realistically the property tax will continue to be one of the mainstays of the new regional governments for some time to come. But the present grant structure is completely hopeless and is due for complete revision.

Provincial grants come in an incredible variety of kinds and sizes. And fortunate is that municipality which knows what grants are available to it!

J. Stephen Dupré, in his study prepared for the Smith commission, points out that there is absolutely no comprehensive provincial policy in respect to municipal grants. He says this:

Some grant programmes, such as those in the welfare field, are designed in part to police local standards for long-established functions. Others, such as most of the environmental grants, are plainly appetite-whetting subsidies designed to induce local governments to provide new services. For their part, road grants tremble on the brink of rational basis in benefit-cost analysis, but continue to differentiate among municipalities on the basis of legal status. Then there are grant programmes, such as those for health units or county assessment, that look toward more efficient administrative arrangements and as such constitute departmental substitutes for general provincial action designed to redraw municipal boundaries or secure county administration. There is perhaps no better indicator of the non-existence of anything approaching a genuine provincial grant policy than the inconsistency that exists among the few grant programmes that attempt to differentiate among municipalities on a formula basis. Thus, for instance, the library grants of The Department of Education attempt to achieve fiscal equity by favouring municipalities with a low per-capita equalized taxable assessment. The Department of Health, on the other hand, favours small municipalities without regard to fiscal capacity. But through the unconditional grant administered by The Department of Municipal Affairs, the province does the reverse and favours larger municipalities with larger per-capita payments. Simultaneously, the very same department administers police and fire grants that again favour the smaller municipalities.

Then later Dupré asks:

First, what reason can there be for grants in aid of wolf bounties to come under The Department of Lands and Forests when those in aid of fox bounties are made by The Department of Municipal Affairs?

Second, why are grants for the construction of community centres under The Department of Agriculture while recreation programmes fall to The Department of Education?

If community centres are thus misplaced in agriculture, there exists a further anomaly in that grants for recreation programmes, which include a subsidy toward the salary of the recreation directors who toil in community centres, are under The Department of Education; and not to complicate things unduly, certain other recreation directors supported by that department work in municipal parks that have received grants from The Department of Lands and Forests.

Third, are there compelling reasons why The Department of Public Welfare must make its grants under no fewer than 30 separate headings?

I have here in my hand, the book which outlines the provincial grants to the municipalities. It is a very large and complicated document and, as I say, lucky is the municipality which can find its way through a document of this kind and know what grants are available.

The time, money, and manpower spent in applying for, examining, certifying, inspecting the need for, and paying all these multitudinous grants, present an inexcusable cost which can only reflect itself in the tax bills we pay.

Dupré, in looking at solutions, writes this significant sentence:

Equity [for the municipalities] should be pursued first through structural reform, then through grants.

And not only equity, but also restoration of power and function can come through structural reform. Strong local government is again needed if democracy is to have meaning here. The Minister has assured us that the government is determined to push forward with meaningful structural reform. But so far it has been silent on the grants. It has given no inkling as to whether or not it intends to revamp the fiscal support of the new regional governments.

Today assessment methods and mill rates vary widely across Ontario. Services differ with different areas and with different municipalities. The grant structure, as we have seen, is impossible. What is basically needed is a tax and grant system which will spread needed services and municipal costs as evenly as possible right across the whole province. We have attempted this already in the educational foundation plan. Nova Scotia has recently introduced the same thing in its municipal administration.

Such a plan is based on the principle that every resident of the province has, within reason, a moral entitlement to a basic level of services no matter where he lives and no matter what the economic circumstances of his municipality. With the establishment of regional government, these economic circumstances would be evened out far more than they are today. Then the province would move in to even out still more of the costs and services right across the board. In other words, basic municipal services everywhere in the province would achieve a rough equality, and no resident would be expected to pay for the financing of these services more than any other resident under similar circumstances.

We call this the municipal foundation plan. I cannot at this time, go into full details of how it would be implemented. But certain general principles can be stated. First of all it would mean equalized assessment right across the province. This would present difficulties but it would not be impossible to achieve over a reasonable period of time. As new regions are formed standard assessment and taxing techniques must be applied to each.

The next step would be to establish the per capita cost of certain essential services basic to all municipalities—things like police and fire protection, garbage and sewage disposal, snow clearance, libraries, playgrounds, and the like. This cost can be arrived at by starting at the level of the past couple of years and adding such factors as cost and wage increases for the current year. A basic grant—say 25 per cent of the cost—would then be given to all municipalities. The average grant is now 22 per cent. This could be supplemented to take into account special factors like extraordinary costs encountered in some areas. Then a calculation would be made of the mill rate needed to meet the remainder of the established basic cost of those municipalities with the highest assessment rate—the richest ones.

This mill rate would be known as the standard mill rate. It would be levied on the equalized assessment of all municipalities in the province. In the richer municipalities it would meet the basic needs—or nearly so. In the less affluent ones there would still be a financial gap varying according to the per capita assessment of the area. This gap can be filled by further provincial grants, varying according to the amount of the shortfall after the initial flat rate grant has been given and the standard mill rate has been levied. This final provincial grant would bring the income of each municipality up to the amount necessary to give its people the agreed basic level of services to which all the people in the province are entitled.

If any regional government wishes to provide a level of services higher than the basic one, then it can levy a higher mill rate to pay for them. Over the years, as wealth grows, and as experience with the plan develops, the level of basic services across the board will gradually improve.

This plan would, of course, eliminate the present grant structure and stabilize the income of the municipalities. It would also mean a considerable shift of the tax burden from the homeowner to the province. The province is today crying poverty and claims it is unable to meet present obligations, let alone assume new ones. But the poverty it talks about is poverty under the present tax system. The fact is that this land was never producing more wealth than it is right now. The Canadian gross national product in 1968 was well over the $65 billion mark—that is $10 billion higher than it was in 1966. We are producing more and more wealth each year. But strangely enough every level of government is crying poverty and is insisting that we have to cut back on public programmes.

Ontario cannot find the revenue to pay for present programmes, let alone assume the burden of a municipal foundation tax plan—or so the government maintains. But at the same time the stock market was never higher, land prices around our cities with consequent land fortunes were never better, and the profit picture for our major corporations was never brighter. What is happening is simple. Under the present system of wealth distribution the extra wealth we produce each year flows, in large measure, into the return on capital while the return for work done, while increasing somewhat, does not receive its proportionate share of the surplus. But the tax system bears heavily on those who do the work of the nation while it deals lightly with those who invest capital.

There is no doubt that, if we keep the present tax system, Ontario cannot do much more in the field of public expenditure. If she does do more then the worker will have to be taxed much more heavily than he now is.

But the Carter report on taxation pointed to a new principle in this field. It said that a dollar of income should be counted as a dollar for tax purposes no matter what its source. In other words, income from dividends and capital gain should be put in exactly the same category as wages and salaries as far as taxation is concerned. More than that, the great corporations which are exploiting our natural resources, and which today are the recipients of special financial concessions, should bear their fair share of the tax load at appropriate levels of government.

It is a startling fact that the Ontario government does not collect in stumpage dues from the great timber companies as much as it actually costs to service the forest lands. And most of these companies are American-owned which siphon off increasing profits and capital gain from our resources to their American stockholders. The glaring fact is that we are not only giving in large slices, our timber to foreign corporations, but we are actually paying them a bonus to cart the stuff away. The result is that a company like Abitibi Paper has increased its total assets from $184 million in 1956 to $286 million in 1966.

Kimberley-Clark jacked up its net income from $24 million to $43 million during the same period and Great Lakes Paper saw its total assets grow from $44 million to $91 million. This growth came from Canadian labour using Canadian resources for which the Ontario government charged the companies less than it cost that government to service. It is a startling principle in business that the raw material of an industry can be purchased from the public at less than nothing. In the same way mining corporations exploit our underground resources without paying anything like their share of revenue into our municipal, provincial or national coffers.

International Nickel is one glaring example of this situation. Its annual profit, after taxes, runs close to $150 million a year. Yet it pays the Province of Ontario less than $10 million a year in lieu of municipal taxes and in payment for the nickel ore which, we, the people of Ontario own. That is less than municipal taxes alone would amount to if the company were paying on the same basis as the homeowner.

During the years from 1959 to 1967 International Nickel saw its total assets grow from $634 million to $1,116 million. Hollinger Mines during the same years upped its net profit from $5.6 million to $11.6 million. The uranium industry is a prime example of how special concessions go to the exploiters of our mining resources. In that industry, as pointed out in the brief submitted by William Mahoney of the steelworkers to Mitchell Sharp:

The major producers up to 1964 had produced and sold over $1 billion worth of ore with a capital outlay of under $250 million.

After retiring all debts and recovering their entire investment, they realized about $250 million of which less than half was paid out in dividends. Taking advantage of tax 'holidays' and depletion allowances, the companies were able to reduce the total tax liability including taxes paid by shareholders to under $30 million, or about 10 per cent of the profits.

Our natural resource industries are the recipients of this kind of special tax treatment—tax holidays, depletion allowances, absurdly low stumpage dues and mineral levies.

The Carter commission estimated that special tax privileges to mining and oil companies reduced federal government revenues by more than $150 million in 1964. It is estimated that in recent years almost 85 per cent of this lost tax revenue went to eight large mining and petroleum companies. If Carter's recommendations had been in effect in 1964 these companies would have paid this extra $150 million, and $119 million of it would have been borne by non-residents. And while all this goes on, while our governments at both federal and provincial levels allow this kind of tax evasion to occur, they increase taxes on the workers and cut back on social investment which, they say, they cannot afford.

Then there is the whole field of capital gain on the stockmarket and the fortunes being made on land speculation which drives up the cost of homes. These are new sources of revenue which other countries use but which so far remain untapped here. In a nation which is producing $66 billion of gross national product—that is over $15,000 per Canadian family average—let no one say that we are too poor to afford a high level of services to our people, including the municipal foundation tax plan. Certainly we cannot afford them under our present tax structure, with the burden on the wage earner and the homeowner. But we can afford them when we revamp our tax structure to effectively utilize the wealth we are producing for the benefit of all the people in this province.

And this means we follow Carter's advice and tax the wealth where it is. We revamp our timber dues and mineral taxes so that the corporations in these fields bear their fair share of the tax load. We bring capital gain under the rule of law wherever it is found, and bring dividend income into harmony, tax-wise, with wages and salaries.

Some of this will have to be done at the federal level with corresponding sharing with the provinces. Some will occur at the provincial level and some under new regional government jurisdiction. These tax changes are long overdue. But both old parties resist change. They prefer to lay heavier burdens on the wage and salary earner and to cut back on social investment while at the same time they allow their wealthy individual and corporate friends to get away with fiscal murder.

These, then, are basic matters in setting up viable modern municipalities. Regional governments with real power must emerge and these must be backed by tax reform right down the line—federal, provincial and municipal. Provincial administrative units must then be revamped to coincide with the new municipal boundaries. Many of the matters now handled by the province must be handed over to the local authorities.

This, along with the restored power now held by boards and commissions, would bring local government back into the sphere it occupied a century ago, and would give it new meaning and new thrust for the century ahead.

The new municipalities will be able to shape their own destinies and to plan effectively for their own development. Local democracy, in this setting, will have new meaning. There will be excitement and clashing points of view in municipal politics. Party politics will emerge naturally and inevitably and the parties elected will have power to implement their policies.

Party politics today under the present structure of the municipalities are almost impossible as we have a mayor elected across the board, a board of control elected across the board, and then the various aldermen elected in their own wards.

To ask for party politics to work effectively in this setting would be to ask that the Cabinet and the government of this province could work effectively with the member for York South (Mr. MacDonald) sitting in the place that the Premier now occupies. It would be the same kind of thing, so reform in municipal structure must come before we can expect party politics to work effectively.

In other countries, in Europe and across the world, we have party politics working well and they work because of this change which has come about. I believe that with the emergence of regional government, the type of set-up that we have provincially and federally will emerge in these regions.

Already a start is being made across the province toward this new era in municipal government. Legislation is being passed and studies are going forward. The present Minister seems willing to set up regional governments and to act with decisiveness in doing it. I hope that after this present group of studies are completed he does not then mark time until after the next provincial election, and that he will move forward with all decisiveness to do the job that is facing us in the province of Ontario.

But the tax reforms necessary to sustain the governments are not yet in the works. And it is unlikely that the Tory mind can comprehend, let alone implement, the kind of new tax structure which must emerge. And this is perhaps one of the great basic challenges to this government today, not only to set up the regional governments which they are employed in doing now, but in effecting the kind of tax changes which will undergird these governments and which will make them feasible and workable.

Exciting days lie ahead in the whole realm of government and tax change in the province of Ontario. All of us are going to have a part in effecting this change. Let us be clear on where we want to go. There will be some disagreements so far as policies are concerned. We have set out here today the kind of structure we think ought to come and the kind of tax reform which we believe essential for the operation of these governments, and making up our minds where we want to go, let us then move forward into the future with vision and with determination.

Mr. Speaker, I have some other matters with which I want to deal. This may a good place to make the break in my presentation, and if it is agreeable to you I would move the adjournment of this debate.

Motion agreed to.

THE ELECTION ACT

Mr. F. Young (Yorkview) moves second reading of Bill 14, An Act to amend The Election Act.

Mr. Young: Much has been said in recent years and a great deal of debate has taken place over the subject matter of this bill. Already in five Canadian provinces the voting age is less than 21. It is 19 in three of them and 18 in two. My bill stipulates the age of 18 as the time when young people should be allowed to vote.

The voting age of 21 has its roots deep in English common law. Originally the young man could qualify for knighthood at that age, and I suppose that is the origin of this thing! It was considered that at 21 he was strong enough physically to bear the weight of armour in battle. When the franchise was established the age at which a man could qualify for knighthood was accepted as the time when he could start voting.

Since that time, of course, the franchise has widened to include all males. Then, after much agitation, the ladies got the vote as well. And this last step is within the living memory of many of us in this House.

Mr. G. A. Kerr (Halton West): That was a mistake!

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): That is not very nice.

Mr. Young: Well it may have been a mistake, as the hon. member says, but I do not believe it was. I believe that the ladies have as much right to vote and participate in political protests as the men in this province and in this land.

Mr. Nixon: Talking about living memory!

Mr. Young: Well, some in this House, I said.

Now the debate has moved to another realm and it rages around whether or not 18-year-olds are mature enough to help in the selection of those who represent them in Parliament. The age of 21 during the days of chivalry marked a definite turning point in a young man's life. It was when he finished his training and accepted the responsibility of manhood. But the days when knights went to battle garbed in heavy metal is gone.

Today the young man enters the armed services at 18. But more significant than that, 18 today marks the same kind of turning point in the life of our young people that 21 did for the knight. That's the age when young people finish secondary education and go on to the labour force, the armed services or to higher education. It seems sensible to give that young person full participation in the political process while the lessons of history and civics are still fresh in mind, and while the idealism the educational system tried to instill is still very much to the fore. It hardly seems rational to give young people high motivation in the schools and then make them wait three years before allowing them to use what they have been taught in the citizenship field.

No one in this House would give me an argument over the fact that young people today are far better educated, more mature, and more aware of the world around them than were the 21 year olds a generation ago. As a matter of fact, when the voting age was set at 21, very few citizens had more than two or three years schooling—and poor schooling at that.

Newspapers, radio and TV bring the world into the awareness of the young person in a way which was not possible only a few years ago. TV particularly has given the youth of the world a sense of participation and involvement in world events which no other generation so far has experienced. They see significant world events happening right before their eyes.

Naturally this evokes a desire to be where the action is—to take part—to be involved in the significant movements around the world. The crusade to enrol southern voters in which many of our own young people had a part, the protest marches, the Trudeau-mania, the student revolts—these and other phenomena can be traced in no small measure to the influence of television in building up in young people the desire to be involved and to have a voice in the decision-making affecting their lives.

Young people today are restless. They are a potent force in our society whether we like it or not. And because we bar them from meaningful participation in the political process until they are 21, they must exercise their power outside the system until that time. And so they do exercise that power, and they pressure against the system, rather than being able to do something inside. We often criticize young people for their marches, demonstrations and other activities which sometimes lead to violence. At the same time, we deny them the political expression open to the rest of us for effecting change.

Lowering the voting age to 18 will not solve all the problems of youth—I am not saying it will. But it will take some of the steam out of present pent-up situations by providing the young people a method within the system to make some of the changes they want. They would have a meaningful way to attack the power structure and to bring about the reforms they talk about. Perhaps that is what the establishment fears. Perhaps that is why the government members of this House claim to be in favour of lowering the voting age, but still refuse to act in the way this bill proposes. There may well be a real fear that demonstrations outside the system might be translated into change within the system itself, and so we have not had action on the part of the government so far.

Actually I doubt if a majority of the government members in this House are opposed to some lowering of the voting age. But since they are politicians, with an eye to the next election, they want some assurance that if the 18-year-olds do get the vote they will vote Tory. This seems to be the meaning of the Prime Minister's (Mr. Robarts') statement recorded in the Toronto Daily Star on February 3, 1968, and I quote:

A reduction of the voting age may follow a full-scale reorganization of the Progressive Conservative Party to increase its appeal to youth, Premier John Robarts predicted here today.

Strange words. The reduction of the voting age is not to come now as a matter of right to young people. It will come after the Tory party is geared to appeal to youth. That means, I suppose, when Al Eagleson, the young president, is flanked with the hon. Provincial Secretary (Mr. Welch) as party leader and when all the deadwood above 45 have been told to step aside and the new bright, young candidates are nominated in their place.

The same kind of attitude was evident in the deliberations of the select committee on election laws. We recently had an exchange on this matter when I asked a question of the Prime Minister. In looking over the transcript, I am prepared here and now to say to the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands (Mr. Apps) that I was partly at fault in that my question was carelessly worded that day. I quite admit that. But he, too, was a bit off base in inferring that the Tory members of the committee were not against lowering the voting age. Perhaps they were not, but they certainly voted against taking action at that time.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Young: Yes, yes!

Some of us were anxious on that committee that the voting age be lowered before the next election. We wanted the Tories and the rest of us to get the advantage of the young people's vote. As a matter of right, we felt it should be lowered. The matter had been fully discussed in the select committee on youth. Public hearings had been held and recommendations had been made. True, the recommendation was that the voting age should be 19, but five of the 13 members decided the figure should be 18. Our report in the select committee was to come in two phases.

One, which could be implemented in time for the next election expected in 1971, and the second which would be too late for the next round at the polls, but in time for 1975. I moved, therefore, that we deal with the matter of voting age in the first phase of the report. That was my motion, so that we might make sure that action could be taken before

1971. Some of us felt that if we postponed the matter for the second phase it could well be lost as far as action was concerned, until the 1975 election. In all fairness to the Clerk of the House when he was asked about the timing he told us, and I quote:

While a change in voting age might present some difficulties before the 1971 elections, that is if we waited for the second phase, it would not present insurmountable difficulties if the amendments were promulgated and the publicity had been wide enough through the press, that the voting age had been lowered or raised or whatever the case might be.

This was the situation. The Clerk felt that it could possibly be done, it would not present insurmountable difficulties. There would be difficulties, but not necessarily insurmountable. In other words, if the government felt that the time was not quite ripe for them to harvest the youth vote, it could very easily find difficulty in the implementing of any recommendations we might make as a committee during the second phase of our work.

More than that, the youth committee had made a recommendation two years before—I stress that—and no action had been taken. What right had we to think that the government had changed its mind and would act quickly on our recommendation? Even the chairman of the youth committee told us, and I quote:

We did have full extensive hearings as far as age was concerned.

And he went on to point out that there was some difference of opinion; and of course the recommendation was age 19.

Well, why go through the same thing again with another committee? Why should we hold further public hearings when a select committee has already travelled this province and got the public point of view? The results will be the same. There was plenty of time for the committee to discuss the matter in committee. We could have done that. We met only about five times during the whole period between sessions. If there had been any real desire to give the young people the vote, we could have met much more often, often enough to resolve the matter and to make a recommendation. But there seemed to be no sense of urgency on the matter as far as the government was concerned.

So we voted as to whether we would decide the matter in time for our first report or postpone it to the second phase, and the government members defeated my motion. It is a technique as old as governments. If you do not like to definitely oppose a matter, then delay it. I can only conclude that the government attitude at that time was reflected in that vote, particularly so since the recommendation of the youth committee had sat there for two years without action. If the government really wanted the 18- or 19-year-olds to have a vote, that recommendation of the youth committee could have been implemented long ago. But it was not. And what are we to believe? Perhaps the committee vote would have been different if the Prime Minister had made his statement on February 4, or a few months earlier. I do not know.

In answer to my question, to which I have referred, the Prime Minister said this:

I might say that I have altered my opinion. There was one stage when I had grave doubts about lowering the voting age, and I have changed my mind at least to the extent I indicated yesterday on this question. It may be that some other members have been in the same position, that is had come to some conclusion some time ago and have changed their minds. But they are free to have their own opinions.

So perhaps there is hope now of some change here. With the Prime Minister ready to move on this question in the way he was not some time ago, government policy may well be changed, and so we may see something different. This may mean that we can go forward, that we can, in fact, have the voting age lowered in time for the 1971 election. It may be that the recommendation, if we make it, in the second phase of the report, in the light of these changing circumstances, may now come forward and the Act be changed. The recommendation is there, from the youth committee. This bill that I am introducing this morning would implement that recommendation with the change of age from 19 to 18. I believe the majority of the members of this House are in favour of this move, so let us move forward by passing this bill into legislation, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. S. Apps (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to take part in this debate this morning and am particularly pleased that the member for Yorkview has brought the question up and has also indicated that in our discussions of a few days ago there may have been some misunderstanding on both sides. And, in order to clarify my thoughts again on that matter, it was my impression at that time that the Clerk of the Legislature had indicated that if a thorough discussion was given and a recommendation made during the sessions next summer there would be time to implement this before the 1971 election.

I do not think there is anyone who has had any extensive dealings or discussions with young people in this province who would not agree that the voting age in the province of Ontario should be lowered. During the discussions of the select committee on youth, it was unanimous that this should be done and in my dealings with many young people throughout the province—having brought up five of them myself and having two who are within the category we are talking about and having met many of their friends—there is no question in my mind that the young people of this province are certainly very capable of casting a most intelligent vote before they reach the age of 21 years.

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): If it is so obvious, why does the government not do it?

Mr. Young: Why has it not been done?

Mr. Apps: All right, just give me a chance now. I am speaking on this particular bill, the amendment to this particular bill, and I am giving members my views as to what I think should be done. I am not speaking for the government, I am speaking on behalf of myself. Any influence I can bring to bear on our government will be to have the voting age lowered in time for the 1971 election.

Mr. J. B. Trotter (Parkdale): The hon. member will not have much luck with that government.

Mr. Apps: I think the decision on whether the voting age should be reduced should not be made on a political basis as to whether any one particular party is going to get more votes than the other, and I think we are going to have to take our chances. We all will take our chances as to how we can appeal to the young people of this province. It should be determined on a well thought-out basis, and specific reasons for the decision must be given as to the validity and commonsense.

I would like to indicate here some of the reasons why I feel that the voting age should be reduced. First of all, young people are generally more educated and more knowledgeable than any previous generation of the same age. The school-leaving age has increased and now most young people can continue to at least Grade 12 and the percentage going on to university or other higher education is rising very rapidly.

Communications have improved greatly with radio and television making national, regional and local problems more understandable and open for discussion by everyone. We are much better informed than ever before and this is particularly true of the young people of this province.

Transportation has been made immeasurably better. Highways and planes in our affluent society make travel available to almost everyone and widen a young person's knowledge of all areas of our country much more than ever before.

And as knowledge, communication and transportation develop, more young people are questioning the established views of their parents and elders and are looking for better solutions to many of their problems. They are asking—and I believe rightly so—for a more active role in making many of the decisions that affect them so much. And you can see this going on all around us, in the universities, their curriculum in high school education; the job opportunities must be made available to them, the health problems in smoking, drugs, drinking and a host of other problems. Our young people are concerned and are asking for a more active role in making those decisions that affect them such a great deal.

Many young people are married and raising families before they are 21. Whether this is good or not, the fact remains it is so. And surely their responsibilities are very much the same as those 21 or over. Surely they are as competent to cast as intelligent a vote as those 21 or over. They have the same problems, the same responsibilities, and I feel they are entitled to have the same privileges.

Most young people are paying taxes, particularly provincial and federal taxes, when they are still under 21. The vast increase in taxing power by all levels of government has reached everyone and people of all ages are paying sales taxes, income taxes and many others before they reach 21. This certainly was not the case when the voting age was established at 21 and surely now many of our young people should have some say in this taxing power by the use of their franchise.

Thousands of young people drive cars starting at age 16 and are treated as adults in this connection. Whether 16 is a proper age for a permanent driver's licence may be open to question. The select committee on youth basing their thoughts on the high accident rate, felt that 18 would be a better age for a permanent driving licence. However, regardless of that, young people have the same responsibility as adults in this connection.

Young people from 17 to 21 in Ontario are treated as adults before the courts and in many other ways are accountable for their actions as adults in our society. Should they not have some say in the laws that affect them so much? The only logical answer is, yes.

Our world is changing very rapidly and what was good enough 20 years ago in many cases is not even relevant now. Mr. Speaker, I believe that the greatest argument for lowering the voting age is the fact that our provincial government today is involved with young people to a greater degree than at any other time in history. Years ago the provincial government affected the lives of our young people very little, today it is becoming increasingly involved in almost everything a young person does. Education is fast becoming a provincial responsibility. Just witness the increase in grants, the pressure for even more grants, programmes, curricular changes, university problems and so on. The revenue department collects taxes from our young people in many ways, as I have outlined previously. This did not happen years ago. All is changed now.

Health and welfare affect our young people much more than they ever did. Drinking laws, the effects of drugs, sex problems, moral responsibility, and so on, are problems our youth must face in ever growing numbers and are dealt with almost strictly, or in many cases mostly, by the provincial government. In our Department of Lands and Forests we are asking some young people under 21 to pay for a fishing licence. Highways and transport legislation affects young people to a much greater extent than ever before. The Attorney General's Department is becoming more involved with youth problems day by day.

In fact, almost every department of government makes laws that affect young people under 21 to a far greater degree now than ever before. Surely we must give them some say in determining what action should be taken in decisions which are of such great concern to them. And this can be done to some extent at least by lowering the voting age. The only argument I have ever heard against lowering the voting age is that young people may not have a sufficient sense of responsibility to cast their vote in an intelligent manner, that they do not have a large enough stake in their community to warrant giving them a vote.

Let us examine these arguments: What about their sense of responsibility? Admittedly, some of the actions of the more militant ones give us that impression. But can you not say the same for the adults? I think we can. And I do not believe that we should condemn all young people because of the actions of a very few any more than we should condemn all adults because of the irresponsible actions of a few of them.

Do our young people have a large enough stake in the community to warrant a vote? Who has a larger stake in the future of this province than our youth? I have, if I am lucky—and this applies to a great many of us in this Legislature—perhaps 20, maybe 30, years yet to live; yet the young people of whom we are talking have 60 to 70 years to live in this province. I think they have a tremendous stake in the future of our country. And I believe that they should be given an opportunity to have some say in how that future is shaped and one way we can do that is by giving them a vote at an earlier age. I believe they are just as competent to cast an intelligent and informative vote, even more so than many who are voting.

And I will never forget the answer from a young lady in Port Arthur when we were discussing this problem with a group of young people in that city. One of the questions that was asked of her was: "Well, why do you feel you are in a position to cast an intelligent vote, under the age of 21"—I think this young lady was 18 or 19. And she said to me, "When I look at some of the adults who have the privilege of voting I feel more than ever that I am certainly as confident of casting an intelligent vote as they are." And you cannot disagree with that. I think you have to agree with it, because I think it is entirely correct.

Theirs is the future, and let us give them some say in how it should be shaped. They are the ones that must live in it, and I for one do not feel that we have all the answers. Perhaps we could listen to our youth much more than we have apparently done so far. I think it is high time that we gave them an opportunity to participate and decide who should represent them in this Legislature before they reach the age of 21 years.

As for the age of 18 or 19—and as the member for Yorkview indicated, the recommendation of the select committee was 19, although five members indicated that it should be 18—it is something that I do not think matters that much; I am not too convinced one way or the other. I believe possibly that 19 is the preferable age for reasons that I have set forth in the select committee. I think the important thing is that young people be given a greater opportunity to present to us their ideas as to how they feel the future in which they have to live should be shaped. I would like to mention again that anyone who has had any connection whatsoever with young people in the 18, 19, 20 or 21 years of age bracket, must be convinced that these young people are capable people. Sure, there are a few of them—and these are the ones that get their names spread in the papers when the papers pick out assorted events that have happened to young people—who give the indication to many of the adults that most of the young people in this province are delinquents. Of course this is silly, and I feel that the papers are doing a disservice to the young people in this province. When they pick out some of the distorted details and pass them over the front pages of the papers they make us feel that this is the image of the young people of Ontario—

Mr. Speaker: Order please. I must point out that the hon. member is taking longer than his allotted time.

Mr. Apps: My apologies, Mr. Speaker. I get carried away a little bit in this connection. I hope you will forgive me. May I say that it is my hope that the Progressive Conservative government will see fit to reduce the voting age from 21 to 18, or 19, and you can rest assured that I will do everything in my power to do that. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. J. R. Breithaupt (Kitchener): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to enter this debate on Bill 14 and to speak in favour of its acceptance by this Legislature. The effect of the bill is to implement the same kind of reform which my colleague, the member for Rainy River (Mr. T. P. Reid) called for in his motion which was debated in this House on June 14, 1968. The Liberal Party in Ontario is committed to the lowering of the age of voting in our provincial elections in Ontario. The present administration of course has neglected this area, as we might well have expected.

Their view of the problem is that "children should be seen and not heard." This is exactly the sort of attitude which has called forth the student and youth unrest, that now troubles the elderly Ministers so very much. By refusing to understand or trying to enter a meaningful dialogue they are now faced with something which they can understand. They are faced with destruction.

It is certainly to be regretted that students active in our process of education feel that they have no other means at hand to get the attention of their elders. Of course there are only a few involved. But that should not be taken as comfort to this smug majority. These are surely the yeast which could be used to help create a better society than the one which we now inhabit.

Without question, Mr. Speaker, and using any criteria you wish, a young person of 18 is more mature, more highly educated, more aware of the faults in his community and province and nation and world than were his parents when they were 21. But our Legislature is led by those who continue to plod the treadmill of irrelevance. They would do well to read the comments which Pablo Picasso made in an interview given on his 87th birthday. He said this:

I cannot understand this so-called gap of generations. Only those of us who have renounced living are unable to share the wish for the accomplishment of the young, their hopes for fulfillment. Don't say that modern youth is more complicated than we were—this is high stupidity. It is certain that an adult oversatisfied with himself cannot lead youth. One has to be active to interest them.

Mr. Speaker, I put it to you that on the government benches there sits an administration that is oversatisfied with itself. It cannot lead youth. It cannot attract the attention of those who wish to work within our own society and develop changes within it. Our whole educational focus is rapidly changing. The members of this House with children in the elementary school system know that the change and progress in mathematics, language instruction and in the sciences comes more rapidly now than it has ever done in the past.

We are told about the information explosion, whereby the amount of knowledge and recorded information within our world is doubling every 10 years. This indeed is another symptom of the changes within our society. This is another realization of the accuracy of the views which are expressed in the phrase about "our global village".

The preceding speaker, the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands, was the chairman of the select committee on youth which reported to this House in March of 1967. And I suppose that once again we have no alternative but to read into the records of this House a couple of the paragraphs to the conclusions which were valid in 1967 and which are even so valid today. And the committee reports as follows, at page 294:

Young people at age 18 to 20 today are generally more educated and more knowledgeable than any previous generations at the same age. One of the greatest weaknesses noticed by the committee in its many contacts with young people was the inability of adults to give youngsters responsibilities commensurate with their knowledge and capability.

Probably this stemmed from the unfortunate image that has been created by those few irresponsible, often immature, teenagers who all too frequently come to public attention. Certainly they do not typify nor represent the large number of stable and good-living young persons who make up our great body of youth.

It is believed that students of the entrance level of university or the work force of the province are sufficiently knowledgeable and responsible to intelligently exercise their franchise. Many such persons are married and raising families before they are 21. They pay taxes, fight for their country, drive cars, are treated as adults before the courts and in many other ways accountable for their actions as adults in our society.

Knowledge of the functions of democratic government and personal responsibility in the democratic process cannot claim much respect by a group of intelligent young people who have no voice within such a process.

Well, Mr. Speaker, it is interesting to note that of the 17 members who have served on that committee at one time or another, there are 11 who are still members of this House, and of those 11, five are the dissenters who favoured the lowering of the age to 18. Now, it may well be that they knew something that the other members did not know, or that those who have since been replaced did not know. It would indeed appear so.

I would like to refer, Mr. Speaker, to a report given to the Ontario Law Reform Commission by a committee of the Anglican Church which suggested that the age of majority for all purposes be reduced to 18. And this committee's recommendation would lower the voting age by three years, raise the driving age by two years and, most important, draw a clear line at the time at which a youth would be legally considered an adult.

Now, the gentleman who prepared this report is the Rev. S. G. West, who was the director of correction for the Toronto diocese and chairman of this committee. And as he said:

Our brief not only stresses the confusion of some aspects of our laws, but makes some positive suggestions.

The brief said that Canadians are completely at sea on the question of the age of legal responsibility because of the multiple standards enshrined in various laws. These are some of the examples he gave:

A person may join the armed forces at the age of 17½, but he cannot vote until he is 21; a youth can be arraigned in adult court at 16 in Ontario except in cases of murder and other indictable offenses when the age is 14; persons at 18 are old enough to marry but under The Liquor Control Act of Ontario they must wait until they are 21 before they can have a beer.

Well, Mr. Speaker, I suggest to you that it is apparent that the brief that is submitted by this organization suggests that at the age of 18 we should be considering the drawing of one permanent line where persons can serve in the armed forces, can marry as they can now, where they should be able to contract and have legal responsibility, where they should be able to vote and probably where they should be able to drink and drive at that age.

Let them be adult in every way and let this be the first step in the lowering of the voting age to reach this firm period of time.

Now there are, of course, some exceptions that might be required. It might be that there are certain cases of necessity where a driver's licence was needed and indeed, we might make a provision that if that were the case and an approved course of training were taken, that exception could be covered.

We have noted in the announcement made by the Provincial Secretary that at long last the hypocrisy of having the name of Napoleon or someone else signed on the bottom of liquor slips is going to be ended as of Monday. And certainly this degradation, which has encouraged the flaunting of the law, is something which we can well look to being part of the past.

It is this sort of attitude that had brought the law into disrepute in the past, and it is the same sort of attitude that continues to bring the law into disrepute in our whole society, when we have a series of standards which sometimes apply and sometimes do not.

Now this committee, to which I have referred, drafted these recommendations which suggested the voting age and driving age changes and the law reform commission is suggesting certain changes with respect to contract and to the ability to hold property. We now have this bill which would propose a change in the voting age and, of course, we have the proposals that might change the drinking and driving ages as well.

These areas of concern for this committee should be our areas as well. The law reform commission and the select commission on election reform both exist and both can give us information which we could use—indeed more information than we could ever require—in these areas.

I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that we must be active in developing a common standard for our young people. Let us sweep away the uncertainties and anomalies which have come down to us from the mists of time in these areas. Let us have responsible reform to which our young people can relate and let us start with the voting age.

Mr. M. Shulman (High Park): Mr. Speaker, with some pleasure I rise and support this bill. I had actually prepared a 10-minute address on this subject, but there is no use preaching to the converted; everyone here in the House appears to be agreed that the voting age should be lowered. I am delighted to hear the member from the Conservative side of the House agrees. The Liberals agree. We all agree.

Therefore, under these circumstances I see no need to wait any longer, sir, and therefore, Mr. Speaker, I move that the question be put.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member is out of order on such a motion. If he wishes to speak to the motion he may do so. Otherwise, the next speaker is entitled to have the opportunity to address himself to this motion.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Speaker, I hesitate to challenge you, but perhaps you might care to check the rules, sir, and perhaps consult with your advisers on this particular matter.

Mr. Speaker: I would not propose, regardless of the rules, to cut off debate on this matter until all the members who wish to speak have had the opportunity to speak on it. Therefore, so far as I am concerned, the floor is either for the member for High Park to speak or the member for Hamilton Mountain, who is next on the list. Then at that time, if motion is to be made that is fine. But I would not cut off discussion by members of this House. If the motion is to put then, that is fine. But I do think that every member should have the opportunity to be heard on this as long as there is time for him to be heard.

So, now the hon. member for High Park can pursue the matter of the rules if he wishes or he can speak. Or he can yield the floor to the hon. member for Hamilton Mountain.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Speaker, I will allow the hon. member for Hamilton Mountain to go ahead. I would like the privilege of speaking further in this debate.

Mr. J. R. Smith (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, with all due respect to the hon. members who are participating in this debate on Bill 14, I think it is very interesting that this is the fifth time around for this very same issue in recent years in this House. And I dare say that very little, if any, new light has been thrown on it as a result. In my opinion, the entire issue is a waste of time and effort as long as those on the Opposition side of this floor persist in forcing the lowering of the voting age to 18 years. I do wish to make one point clear, Mr. Speaker, and that is that I am not against the lowering of the voting age—I am however, very much against lowering it to age 18.

What amazes me, Mr. Speaker, is that the hon. members from the opposing side are, despite repeated disappointment, really insistent. They say, "Let us give manhood and womanhood to our people who are 18 years old." They say that a majority of people in this age group are within our working force—and that seemed to be a key issue for the member for Yorkview and his colleagues last year, for it appears that his party hangs its hat on being the great saviour of the working force.

Well, I ask this one thing, Mr. Speaker, and it is this: Are the members prepared to give our young people who are 18 years of age all the rights and privileges that go along with reaching adulthood—including the privilege to drink?

We have had some pretty extensive research done on this matter—a full study and report by the select committee on youth, whose report was issued in March 1967. And this committee, Mr. Speaker, states rather firmly that as a result of its studies it was the opinion and final judgment of most members that the minimum age should be either 18 or 19 years of age rather than 21. But it does go on to stress rather strongly that—and I quote:

One of the reasons suggested in favour of a 19-year minimum was that at this age most young people have had an opportunity to be away from school for approximately a year. During this time they have usually been able to make their own decisions and to mature either through attendance at universities or while employed in the work force.

Well, for my money, I just do not think that anything could be any more simple or logical than that.

There are exceptions, Mr. Speaker, to every rule. Some people develop more rapidly in some areas than others. I will be the first to admit that there are those who perhaps at 16 are more qualified to vote than some who perhaps are at age 21 or beyond. And perhaps it is for this reason we find such a diversity in other jurisdictions. Alaska, Saskatchewan and British Columbia have set a minimum age of 19, while in Hawaii and Japan it is 20; Norway and Sweden 21. In the United States, a battle looms in the Congress as to whether or not the voting age should be lowered, in that great nation, below 21. But this does not in any way mean that we should immediately lower the voting age to 16.

What I am saying, Mr. Speaker, is that we must move extremely cautiously on anything that is of such great importance as the voting age. We must consider all aspects, rule out all dangerous possibilities that we can see, and then draw a conclusion.

I am a strong believer in the message that was sent to us in I Corinthians 13: 11-13, which says:

When I was a child, I spake as a child, I understood as a child, I thought as a child. But when I became a man, I put away childish things. For now we see through a glass, darkly; but then face to face: now I know in part, but then shall I know even as I am known. And now abideth faith, hope, charity, these three; but the greatest of these is charity.

Mrs. M. Renwick (Scarborough Centre): What about the 18-year-old children who are soldiers?

An hon. member: What has that to do with it?

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. J. R. Smith: Mr. Speaker, I can well appreciate the views of the hon. member for Scarborough Centre, as my father served for this country overseas in World War I when he was only 16 years of age. He was fortunate enough, lucky enough, to have the privilege of voting in the conscription election at the age of 17.

It would appear to me that since the report of the select committee on youth so strongly favoured lowering the age to 19, that this is the age we should be considering—and not 18 as proposed in the present bill.

Now I think, Mr. Speaker, one of the real things we should guard ourselves against is a negative backlash that might be created in some quarters over the recent events that have been occurring in Sir George Williams University in Montreal—actions by an irresponsible and radical minority of the student body of that very fine institution. I do not think we should allow ourselves to fall into the trap of classifying all young people in this category. I think the very actions of the vast majority of the students of that institution, whereby they came forward to help clean up and set the college back in order following the quelling of the riot, demonstrates very positively and forcefully that the majority of our young people in our high schools and university campuses are very responsible, mature and fine Canadian citizens.

So, Mr. Speaker, I am speaking this afternoon in favour of the lowering of the voting age to 19.

Mr. E. W. Martel (Sudbury East): Take the vote. Sit down and take the vote.

Mr. Speaker: I think perhaps it might be well if I explained to the House the motion that was made by the hon. member for High Park.

What the hon. member was endeavouring to do was to bring the motion of the previous question, which is the only form of closure available in this House. So far as I am concerned, dealing with the private members' hour, it is an hour's debate without a vote. That is the arrangement and has been the practice of this House; and it is a practice which, unless this ruling is overruled, will continue today.

The hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville now has the floor.

Mr. B. Newman (Windsor-Walkerville): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As one who has spent over 25 years with youth, both as an educator and in the line of athletics, I certainly think that I do know a little about the topic today. The term teenager has for long had a pejorative sound. It has been synonymous with irresponsibility. This image can be changed, and the stability of the entire political and social framework improved, by taking youth seriously and giving 18 year olds the right to vote.

We are no longer living in the days when the franchise depended upon one's having a frame sturdy enough to bear the weight of armour, yet that was the reason for the selection of 21 as the age of majority. Before that, it was 14, the average age of puberty. During wars, everyone suddenly discovers that 18-year-olds are old enough to bear arms, but once peace returns, we hear the old familiar cries that at this age people are too young to be responsible.

We are told that we are doing irreparable harm to our youth by our artificial holdback climate in our high schools. Edgar Z. Friedenberg, the noted Buffalo educator, who must spend as much time on Canadian public affairs TV as back on campus, has told us repeatedly, and has codified his arguments in his fine book, "The Vanishing Adolescent," that this tremendous disservice is costing us dearly in the long run.

A further argument against lowering the voting age is that we supply everything for the 18-year-olds, that they are, in fact, wards of our largesse. In fact, all we are doing is funding debts which they must repay when they become taxpayers.

In every sense of the word, today's youngsters will pay and pay again for the education they receive, and they have a right to a voice in its policy, just as he who pays the piper calls the tune. Let's get rid of the myth that we are paying for our youngsters' education. All we are really doing is paying off debts previously contracted. The debenture debt on the new schools and universities will in large measure be a tax charge against those who are using them now. The only way that this inequity can be lessened is for these people to have some say in how the money is spent.

People over 40 cannot continue to mortgage the future without expecting the young to raise their voices—especially the educated young. The remarkable thing is not that the campus revolution has been so violent, but that it has been so civil, all indignities considered.

How would you feel if, in a highclass restaurant, the waiter force-fed you and then presented you with a whopping bill, backed by a state collection enforcement agency?

Our own committee on youth has already been referred to, and I need not labour the points already made, except to stress that there is a world-wide interest in this topic, and that it is not something that will go away.

I happen to have had the opportunity of serving on that committee, Mr. Speaker, and may I state for the information of the House that all three members of the Liberal Party voted for the reduction of the voting age to 18.

Three University of Toronto law professors backed the voting age recommendation—Professors Bernard Green, Walter Fox and Roderick Wessels. They said that the law should recognize the increasing maturity and sophistication of the young persons of this province by giving to those who are 18 years of age or older, the rights and duties of an adult.

Seventy-three per cent of the age group 15 to 19 continue in school. Only 27 per cent drop out. Another myth shattered!

How very different is our attitude from that in the communist countries, whose activist exports we deplore. But what can we expect by way of reasoned retaliation if we retard our own 18-year-olds from the franchise? Over there it may well be that they only go through the motions of a free vote, but the climate for political activity has been created, and Hungary and Czechoslovakia are probably the result of young people taking seriously what their leaders consider mere form. Some of our own elders use this argument the other way, indeed, saying that if we give the vote to 18-year-olds, we shall have a socialist government in Ontario in 1971. Mr. Speaker, I am prepared to take that chance. I have greater respect for the free-thinking intelligence and sophistication of the young than that. They will not rubber stamp any ideology. They will put a party in on merit and merit alone.

As former Governor Romney pointed out during the recent Michigan campaign leading to the referendum, 18 is the age at which young people become intensely interested in public affairs, and apathy sets in later if this energy is not canalized into the meaningful channel of the franchise. President Nixon has said that this highly sophisticated and motivated group should be swept into the mainstream of American politics, rather than creating eddies at the margin. Leaders recognize that youth, by and large, has more freedom, has a higher standard of education, has a broader outlook as a result of the continual impact of the mass media. Consequently youth, on the whole, is more perceptive today than ever before.

While the schools and universities are the obvious locations in which youth is the captive of our whim, there are ever increasing areas which are affected by government legislation and practice, where teenagers are the objects of legislation in which they have had no voice. Perhaps the most clear-cut example is the use to which a computerized school record may be put in later life. Denials from the government notwithstanding, it is possible for these records to make the grand tour once they are recorded on magnetic tape and to acquire remarkable authority and permanence. In ten minutes, 20,000 school records can be dubbed from a master computer tape on to a copy, made on a simple magnetic tape costing about $10, and this can be sold to credit bureaux, the RCMP, employment agencies and the like. We do not know what we have taken on in making magnetic records of subjective assessments of students' abilities and attitudes, made perhaps by a teacher or professor with a grouch. These tapes, like the dossiers in a dictatorship, are a form of underground publishing, all too often negative and defamatory, which may come to haunt a student for life. Yet the people most affected have had no say at all in influencing this Legislature to look at this problem for the major social malaise it perpetuates. Small wonder they want the vote now more than any other desire.

Only an hour and a half ago, in answering a question, the Minister of Education (Mr. Davis), said, in reply to the member for Grey-Bruce (Mr. Sargent), that students, on the whole, recognized they were being treated as adults. But how can this kind of remark be taken seriously by them, when the franchise is denied them? Must they forever have to turn to other, more anti-social ways, of achieving that modicum of power, which they could peacefully enjoy through the vote?

In an informal survey I took in the schools in Windsor where I was doing supply teaching in 1965, in a sampling of 1,269 pupils in 47 classes:

53 per cent wanted the vote at 18;
 50.3 per cent wanted to drink at 18;
 24 per cent wanted to drive at 18;
 67 per cent wanted to be forced to stay in school up to 18.

The recent student problems at the University of Windsor are an example of the responsibilities that our student bodies do undertake. You will notice, Mr. Speaker, that there was no property damage whatsoever and that the students protesting, when they did leave the accommodations that they had taken over, cleaned up so that they were just as nice as they had been before they entered them.

They told me: "We can take all the interest we want to in election campaigns, but when it comes down to the crunch, voting day, we are denied the right to participate." The private member's bill—Bill 14—we are talking out now is just more lip service to the idea. This should be a government bill and it should end in a vote.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Speaker, I think perhaps my motion was not properly heard because of the noise before. I would like to put it again. I move that the question be put.

Mr. Speaker: I would again point out to the hon. members who may not be acquainted, that this is known as the previous question. It normally is used as a form of closure, which I did not think was fitting or proper at the time it was attempted to be moved a little earlier in the House. Because, first of all, in this House, within reason, I think every member has the right to be heard; and secondly, in private members' hour I felt that it was very much out of order for a private member to endeavour to shut off discussion by other private members of a matter in which all were interested.

The rules of the House provide in most Houses that the motion for the previous question is one to be put without debate and takes precedence over other orders and other matters under discussion at such time. However, the private members' hour in this House is somewhat like the question period in this House. The rules of the House provide that there are no oral questions as we have them. But the custom of the House has grown up that we accept them with certain notice and certain provisions; and while the written orders of the House do not allow it, still the House has countenanced it.

The same situation arises, so far as I am concerned, in reverse with respect to the private members' hour. It is my understanding, and was my understanding from all sides of the House, not necessarily from individual members but certainly from discussions with those in positions of importance in the parties, that the private members' hour would be two hours a week. The private members' motions and bills would be discussed as long as members wished to within the hour period and the matter would then drop without a vote.

I would rule therefore that under the customs of this House there is to be no vote taken either on the hon. member's motion or on the motion, which is to put the question.

Mr. Speaker's ruling, of course, is subject to appeal, but that also is without debate.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to—

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member will please remember what I just said, and that is that Mr. Speaker's rulings, like previous questions, are not debatable. The hon. member may challenge the Speaker's ruling, and if he has support of a sufficient number a vote can be taken—a standing vote.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Speaker, I am not challenging your ruling, I am agreeing with your ruling. I am not asking this bill be voted on, I am asking that the question be put. If this motion is defeated then the debate on the bill will continue. I am not asking for a vote on the bill itself, I am asking that the question be put. That is the motion which I have made, sir, and I suggest that the rules of the House are very clear and you must take a vote on that matter. It is a written rule, sir.

Mr. Speaker: I have endeavoured to point out to the hon. member that the written rules of this House are often superseded by the customs of the House over a period of time. And my ruling is that the hon. member's motion is that there be a vote on his original motion, which was for the second reading of this bill, which is the previous question. And

I have pointed out that is so. I also point out that the hour is now one o'clock and that unless the hon. member wishes to challenge Mr. Speaker's ruling the private members' hour has been completed.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, on Monday we will go to the order paper to deal with some second readings so that the legislation may go to the committees, then the Throne Speech, and then there will be another private members' hour. We will sit Tuesday and Thursday nights of next week and Tuesday and Thursday nights on a regular basis.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I might ask the Prime Minister if he has firmly fixed the Confederation debate, or the constitutional debate?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: I was thinking in terms of either Wednesday or Thursday. If the debate is going to last more than an afternoon it would probably be wiser to take it on Thursday, because we could then start at 2.30 in the afternoon and go through into the evening session. So let us say that we will institute that debate on Thursday of next week.

Hon. Mr. Robarts moves the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to.

The House adjourned at 1.00 o'clock p.m.
